"May 6/19, 1905.

"Peasants, town-dwellers, working men, be what the gentlefolk are planning. In the Zemstvos, and in the large towns the lawyers, priests, students, schoolmasters, ruined landowners, ex-merchants and other such gentry, calling them the intelligentsia,* want to reorganize our Russia such wise that instead of the Czar they themselves shall rule the Empire. In pursuit of the gentlefolk are creating all kinds of disorders: the professors and students have ceased to teach or be taught; the lawyers,—those of the law-courts,—are insolently demanding meetings constitutions, that is to say, are declaring that the Czar shall yield his autocratic powers selected from among the gentlefolk in the schools, instructed by their fathers stopped learning, in some of the towns have been going about the streets crying out, 'Away with the Government! Czar!'; the gentlefolk, in order to seize the power from the Czar by terror, are killing the Duke Sergius, who was nowise to blame, killed the Czar-Liberator. Side by side the gentlefolk are co-operating also the zem-

*The Russian word is merely the Latin gentilia in Russian letters; in significant collective noun, and the nearest equivalent is "the brains" as distinguished from the hands of the country. The word came into the seventies of last century, and has no suggestion of disparagement, rather, the contrary. Its practical value is about the popular use of "Esquire" in England, or self by the labour of his hands, belongs in the "intelligentsia."—V.E.M.

among the Jews, Poles, and Armenians, demanding likewise constitutions, in order to lord it over us, Russians born. That highly placed leader of sedition, the President of the present Committee of Ministers, Witte, continues to still further encourage aliens, promising to use his best endeavours in their behalf, especially for the Jews, and this is not surprising for ("passage omitted as too personal, the case being: 'A Jew can buy anybody'). In striking a friendship with Jews and other aliens, the desire of the intelligentsia is to rob the Czar of his power, or rather to tear the power out of the hands of the government, and to seize into their own hands the treasury chest. The Czar, yielding to the gentleness, is already sanctioned the summoning of trustworthy acted persons, but the gentry demand that the acted should be themselves only, and not the peasants, not town-dwellers, for these in State matters will only express an opinion, but will leave the decision to the Czar as autocrat. The gentry, on the other hand, desire themselves to have the decision of State affairs, and to make the Czar, together with the people, obey their decisions. If the gentleness by their audacity, their terrorism and assassinations, should succeed in this, little brothers, you then refuse to recognise them as the authority of the government, tear them in pieces, show them in the Empire you are the power, that there are a hundred millions of you, and of the intelligentsia there'll not be even five millions. The elect of the Czar must you be; you must tell me your views. Remember the saying: 'It is for the people to hold opinion, but for the Czar to give decision.' The opinions of the gentry be always in their own favour. We see every day how the gentry lord it in the towns and the Zemstvos, squeezing the Zemstvo taxes out of the peasants. Often enough they sell you last for these taxes. The children demand milk of mother, and the unhappy mother only cries woe. Or take for example the Moscow Municipal Council, which consists of festering intelligentsia. The Mayor, Prince Golitsin, receives by appointment of the members of the Municipal Council a salary of thirty thousand roubles a year. The town engineers receive tens of thousands, then there are besides the contracts, taxes, public works, out of which they all make money. Or take for example the Zemstvo-member, known in Russia, of the Province of Tver, Petevich, who made a fortune for himself out of the land of a Zemstvo hospital; the same thing would in the Kursk Zemstvo with its president, Askaniy. Almost all Zemstvo and municipal bodies are gangs of thieves in the interests of the gentry. It is the seditious gentry that have brought into the country disorder and rebellion; it is they that deny the Czar because they want to stand in his place; they deny the Orthodox Faith because they do not believe in God at all; they deny their fatherland because they are co-operating with the enemies of their fatherland, with Jews, Poles, and other aliens, who are slaying their own brothers, the servants of the Czar, and destroying the Empire. Long enough we have endured this intelligentsia. Let us turn ourselves into clubs, let us draw up lists of all rebels and rioters in towns and villages, and we smash them, each as he best can and with the finds most convenient, by night from a corner, or through their windows. Against these rascals all means are good.

"THE UNION OF THE PEOPLE."

This extraordinary appeal to the lowest depths of ignorance is issued anonymously. Its tone and even individual phrases are to be found in the columns of the Moscow Gazette, a discredited Government organ, and the Russkoe Delo, by Messrs. Gringmut and Sharapov recently. Typographic experts declare that there is doubt the leaflet was printed on the presses of the Moscow Gazette. The anonymous "Union of the People" is thus clearly connected with the Monarchical Party, whose avowed aim is the restoration of the status quo ante bellum, which, if practicable, can only mean a return to the days of the Iron Nicholas of half a century ago. The leaders of this party are professedly the late notorious Minister of the Interior, Plehve, "executed" by the revolutionaries twelve months ago. The members are mostly oldsters under the Bureau of together with a few of sincere, if misguided, laudatores temerarii.

The word should be called to the mention of "the word used in Russian equally signifying 'rascals':" if this proclamation were to have the effect of exciting a mob of peasantry to make any distinction between foreigners and Russian aliens. Therefore there seems to be anticipating danger to the lives of foreign residents in outlying parts of the Empire, small and rural districts. In the larger towns it is the teaching of this "Union" will fail owing to the superior strength of the workmen, who are better informed than to credit such statements as the above "Proclamation" makes about the educated classes.

The calculation of the party ultimately responsible for the policy advocated in this appeal to the ignorant is, in Russia, both simple and practical. It is hoped to rouse the proletariat and utilise them to cow the educated superior classes, the Government meanwhile standing aside, playing Gallo, in convenient ignorance of passing events. This eminently Russian method was illustrated not long ago during the Jewish Massacres at Kishinev, and still more recently at Baku. On a smaller scale it is being illustrated almost daily in one or other of the smaller centres of European Russia. When the common herd of the ignorant have terrorised the intelligentsia the Bureaucracy in the natural course of things Russian, will send in the military to "restore order," killing freely in the name of outraged justice. The outer world of civilisation, to whose comments the Russian is peculiarly sensitive, must approve even the most drastic methods of punishment for those guilty of brutally maltreating their betters. It is, of course, hoped that Europe will never know (and if suspecting she will never be in a position to prove culpability) the secret springs which have set the proletariat in motion. The above "Proclamation" exhibits pretty plainly some of the secret movements of the machinery: for which reasons it should be given the widest publicity outside the Russian Empire.

VICTOR E. MARSDEN, M.A.

50, Tverskoy Boulevard, Moscow,
May 26th, 1905.

THE LAW COURTS.

A LEASE CASE.

JUDGMENT.

JEAN LEMARÉCHAL, French, No. 80, Yamashita-cho, Yokohama City.
RYU-JO-KEN, Chinese, No. 185, Yamashita-cho, Yokohama City.

In the matter of a case between the above parties wherein the plaintiff demands the pulling down of houses, vacation, delivery of land and the payment of damages (Case No. 308 (wa) for the year 1904 of this Court), this District Court has limited the proceedings to the question as to whether the plaintiff is entitled to the right of perpetual lease or not, and hereby renders judgment as follows:—

FORMAL ADJUDICATION.

It is hereby ruled, ordered and adjudged that:—

- (1) The plaintiff's claim is hereby dismissed;
- (2) The costs of the Court shall be borne by the plaintiff.

FACTS.

The process-attorney for the plaintiff prays for a judgment to be given to the effect that the defendant shall pull down (1) one two-storied brick building with tiled roof containing 64 tsubo 9 go 6 seki 5 sai in both down and up-stairs respectively; (2) one brick bungalow with tiled roof containing 30 tsubo; (3) one brick bungalow with tiled roof containing 21 tsubo; (4) one brick two-storied building with tiled roof containing 86 tsubo 1 go in both down and up-stairs respectively; (5) one brick two-storied building with tiled roof containing 30 tsubo 8 go in both down and up-stairs respectively; and (6) one brick two-storied building with tiled roof containing 91 tsubo 9 go 9 seki 8 sai and 76 tsubo 6 go 6 seki 5 sai in both down and up-stairs respectively all standing upon the government owned land at No. 185 Yamashita-cho, Yokohama City, containing 536 tsubo, and vacate and deliver up to the plaintiff the site of the buildings; that the defendant shall pay to the plaintiff damages in regard to the land calculated at the rate of yen 900 per annum from the 6th Oct., 1904, until the completion of the execution of the judgment to be given in this case; and that the costs of the court shall be borne by the defendant. He also asks the Court to declare the judgment to be provisionally executory subject to the deposit of security. For the ground of the claim, it is alleged by the plaintiff's attorney as follows:—The plaintiff acquired the right of perpetual lease in respect to the government-owned land situate at No. 185, Yamashita-cho, Yokohama City, containing 536 tsubo on the 6th October, 1904, but the defendant unlawfully occupied that portion of the said land where the one two-storied brick building with tiled roof containing 64 tsubo 9 go 6 seki 5 sai in both down and upstairs respectively and other 5 buildings are now standing, and has failed to comply with the plaintiff's demand that he should vacate the land, all to the great annoyance of the plaintiff. The plaintiff therefore demands the pulling down of the said buildings and the vacation and delivery of the site thereof and further sues for the recovery of the damages inflicted upon him owing to the unlawful occupation which has obstructed the utilization of the land in question by the plaintiff. He has produced Exhibits Nos. 1 to 3 (A) and admitted the existence of Exhibits B, reference being made for his benefit to 1 and 2 of Exhibits B.

The process-attorney for the defendant asks for a judgment dismissing the plaintiff's claim with costs. The gist of the allegation found in his plea is as follows:—With regard to the land in question, the Catholic Mission of France held the right of perpetual lease up to the middle of 1904, and the said Mission is not a juridical person according to the new Civil Code subsequent to the revision of the treaties. As Jean N. Guérin and the plaintiff could not have acquired the said right of perpetual lease from the said mission which is not a juridical person, the plaintiff has absolutely no title to the right of perpetual lease in respect to the land in question. Under these circumstances, the defendant asks the Court to limit the proceedings to the question as to whether the plaintiff is entitled to the right of perpetual lease or not. As proofs, the defendant has produced Exhibit No. 1-B, and 1 and 2 of Exhibit No. 2-B. Reference has been made to Exhibits No. 1 and 2-A and judgment given in both first and second instances (all from among the records ordered to be submitted at the instance of the defendant). The defendant has also admitted the existence of each of Exhibits A, and referred to Exhibit No. 3-A.

GROUND.

In considering the above: According to the copy of the registration book (Exhibit No. 1-A), it is stated that:

"On the 6th July, 1904, the acquisition of the right of perpetual lease by conveyance dated 2nd August, 1890, has been registered in favour of Jean N. Guérin, a French citizen, residing at No. 80 Yamashita-cho, Yokohama City," and that "on the 14th October, 1904, the acquisition of the right of perpetual lease by conveyance dated 6th October, 1904, has been registered in favour of Jean Lemaréchal, a French citizen residing at No. 80 Yamashita-cho, Yokohama City."

The plaintiff is therefore nominally entitled to the right of perpetual lease, but according to the extract of the Land Register of the Kanagawa Prefectural Office (Exhibit No. 1B), it can be seen that on the 14th March, 1903, the lessee of the land in question belonged to the Catholic Mission. It is also seen by the original of the judgment in the first instance (pronounced on the 16th October, 1903) and the copy of the judgment in second instance (pronounced on the 10th March, 1904) (all from among the records ordered to be submitted), that Jean N. Guérin claimed as representative of La Mission Catholique de Japon the right of perpetual lease in respect to the land in question. Therefore it is quite proper to recognize that during 1903, the person entitled to the right of perpetual lease in question was La Mission Catholique de Japon. And as to the fact that the said mission is a foreign juridical person, but has been neither recognized by the Japanese Government as such nor registered as a juridical person in Japan, it is clear from the assertion made by the process-attorney of the said mission, which is seen in the judgments of both first and second instances (all from the record ordered to be submitted), the existence of a foreign juridical person cannot be admitted except as a State, administrative division of a State, or a commercial company, as provided in Article 36 of the Civil Code. Furthermore there being no special provisions in the Franco-Japanese Treaty and the Laws of the Japanese Empire, which recognize that the said Mission is a juridical person, it cannot be admitted as having a personality under the Japanese law. This being so it of course could not have transferred the right held by it, and the right of perpetual lease in respect to the land in question could not have been transferred to any person after 1903. Accordingly the plaintiff cannot be entitled to the right of perpetual lease. Consequently it is considered that this point is sufficient to destroy the entire claim of the plaintiff, and with regard to the costs of the Court, Paragraph 1 of Article 72 of the Code of Civil Procedure being applied thereto, judgment is hereby given as shown in the Formal Adjudication hereinbefore mentioned.

Yokohama District Court, First Civil Division.

Judge President,

YASUDA KYUZABURO.

Judge Associate,

MATSUYAMA KYUTA.

JEIRI KORETAKA.

This exemplification has been prepared in accordance with the original of the judgment.

1st August, 1905.

At the same Court,
ONOGAWA SHINKICHI,
Clerk of the Court.

On Aug. 10th, the Emperor distributed port wine and other presents among the Ministers of State and other high officials and the officers of the Navy and Army as a mark of appreciation of their hard work during the present hot weather.

CORRESPONDENCE.

DAMAGE TO MAILS.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR:—I beg to inform you with regret that according to information from the General Post Office in London the mail bags for London despatched from this office per S. S. Kanagawa Maru on the 19th May last were received by the office of destination in a wet condition, apparently by immersion in sea water. The registered articles and ordinary letters were, after treatment, delivered to the addressees, not much damaged, but some articles at the lower rate were damaged beyond recognition. Also, similar information is to hand from the Post Office, Wien, Austria, as regards the dispatch from Yokohama and Kobe by the same mail.

As the mails mentioned above were delivered here on board the Kanagawa Maru in good and perfect condition, it is believed that they might have been dropped into water when landed at Seattle or any other place in the way of transmission. The matter is now under the necessary investigation of the Post Offices concerned.

Yours sincerely,

T. AONUMA.

TELEGRAMS.

(REUTER'S SPECIAL SERVICE.)

THE PEACE NEGOTIATIONS.

London, August 10.

The Envoys are staying at the same hotel. They proceeded to the Naval Yard in separate parties. This time the Russians were given the precedence. Each Envoy was saluted by 19 guns. Rear-Admiral Meade received them and conducted them to the Naval buildings where they inspected the arrangements for the conference. They then lunched and afterwards returned to the hotel.

M. de Witte said in an interview that he would leave nothing unattempted to conclude peace, but all would depend on Japan's demands. In case of failure the world would judge who was responsible.

The Envoys have met. Their credentials were found satisfactory. English and French are to be jointly used. A minute will be recorded in both languages.

Later.

It has been arranged that the Envoys will sit for three hours every morning and for 2½ hours in the afternoon.

London, August 11.

The conviction is gaining ground that the peace conference will fail on account of the indemnity question, with regard to which it is believed the Russian instructions admit no concession.

Baron Komura has handed M. Witte the Japanese terms in writing. The Russian Plenipotentiaries will study the question and answer in writing as soon as possible. In the meantime the Conference stands adjourned.

London, August 12.

A Portsmouth correspondent wires that the re-imbursement of war expenses, the amount whereof is left for future determination, and the cession of Saghalien are the main features of the Japanese demands. The word "indemnity" is avoided.

Later.

The other terms are the cession of Russian leases in the Liaotung peninsula; the evacuation of the whole of Manchuria; the cession to Japan of the whole of the railroad south of Harbin, the northern portion remaining in Russian possession; a Japanese protectorate of Korea; the limitation of Russia's Naval strength in the Far East; the retrocession to China of any Russian privileges in Manchuria; the grant of fishery rights to Japanese on the Siberian littoral, from Vladivostok to Behring Sea; the relinquishment of Russia's interned warships.

It is learnt at Portsmouth that Russia accepts all the Japanese proposals as a basis of discussion, excepting the payment of an indemnity and the cession of Saghalien.

London, August 13.

With the exception of the Daily News, which considers that the demand for fishing rights and the relinquishment of the interned warships might be waived, the English press considers that the Japanese terms are entirely reasonable and legitimate.

London, August 14.

Portsmouth confirms that the Russian reply rejects the demand for an indemnity and the cession of territory and declares that Russia is undaunted though she has suffered reverses. But she is not obliged to accept peace at any cost and she throws the responsibility of the war on Japan.

London, August 15.

At Portsmouth the discussion of the first clause of the peace conditions lasted all Saturday afternoon and was adjourned, but the two main points of the negotiations, viz., the indemnity and the cession of Saghalien are temporarily in abeyance.

Saturday's conference at Portsmouth was inconclusive. The plenipotentiaries discussed the recognition of Japan's preponderating position in Korea.

London, August 16.

The peace plenipotentiaries reassembled on Monday and disposed of the clause relating to the status of Korea.

London, August 16.

Reuter's Portsmouth correspondent wires that Articles II. and III. were settled on Tuesday. They relate to the evacuation of Manchuria, with the abandonment of Russia's rights there, and the cession of the Chinese Eastern Railroad south of Harbin.

London, August 17.

It appears that the Chinese railroad clause in the Japanese peace terms was not settled yesterday. The clause comes later. The restoration of Chinese administration in Manchuria has been settled.

THE ALIENS BILL.

London, August 10.

The House of Lords has read the Aliens Bill.

CONCESSIONS IN CHINA.

The Pierpont Morgan Company is negotiating for the sale of the Hankow-Canton Railway through China. The offer of the various European syndicates has been considered.

THE FRENCH FLEET.

The French fleet entered Portsmouth—an unprecedented honour to a foreign fleet. The ships anchored amid the wildest enthusiasm.

LORD CURZON'S RESIGNATION.

There are vague rumours that Lord Curzon is about to resign.

NEW RUSSIAN LOAN.

A new internal loan of 20 millions sterling at 5 per cent. has been announced in St. Petersburg.

THE FRENCH NAVAL VISIT TO LONDON.

London, August 11.

Admiral Caillard and eighty French naval officers were entertained at luncheon at the Guildhall, London, yesterday. There was a scene of remarkable enthusiasm in the streets. The visitors dined with Lord Lansdowne, Principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, last night.

NORWAY AND SWEDEN.

London, August 15.

The Norwegian plebiscite practically unanimously approves of dissolution.

KING EDWARD.

London, August 16.

King Edward has gone to Marienbad.

THE FRENCH FLEET.

The French fleet has left Portsmouth. It had an enthusiastic reception in England which culminated in a historic celebration in Westminster Hall, which created a profound impression in France.

THE BALTIC CRUISE.

London, August 17.

The Channel cruising squadron of the British Navy, consisting of 11 battleships and 8 cruisers has left Portsmouth for a cruise in the Baltic.

(Received at the Military Head Quarters; 11th inst.)

OPERATIONS IN SAGHALIEN.

On the 8th instant the enemy in the Naioso region, numbering 118, including officers came in and surrendered.

(It will be remembered that on the 7th instant following telegram was received at the Military Head Quarters:—"According to General Knoff, 2 officers and a hundred men had been sent out to Naioso. He has telegraphed to this department to come to Onoru and surrender." Does the telegram received on the 10th indicate the result of that order.—Ed. J.M.)

(Received at the Military Head Quarters on afternoon of the 11th. From the Officer commanding the Saghalien Army).

On the 10th a detachment sent out by co-operating with the navy, attacked the remnants of the enemy who occupied the south-east shore of Tonnaicha Lake, thus called Tonnaicha" "by the military authorities.—Ed. J.M.") and made 120 prisoners.

(Received at the Naval Head Quarters at 10.20 a.m. the 11th instant from Admiral Katoaka.)

The naval and military forces co-operating set out on the 7th instant for the purpose of driving the enemy from Gunaicha Lake, which is on the east coast of Saghalien, 20 nautical miles east of Korsakoff (called Kushunkotan). According to a telegram despatched from the ships at 11 p.m. on the 10th a squadron of pickets carrying guns attacked from the lake at 6.30 a.m. on that day while the troops operated along the east shore of the lake. There was a two hours' artillery fight in which the enemy raised the white flag and surrendered.

They numbered 123. The troops also took possession of their camp.

[This "Gunaicha" has hitherto been called "naicha."—Ed. J.M.]

(Received at the Imperial Naval Department SAGHALIEN.

[Report from Admiral Katoaka, 14th instant p.m.]

Lieutenant Harada, in command of destroyer, sent out to operate on east coast of Karafuto, reports that on morning of the 13th the destroyer fired on a remnant of the enemy's troops the telegraph office at Naoro (on the coast of Patience Bay), and took the prisoners to the number of 18. Their arms and the telegraphic apparatus were captured.

ON THE MAINLAND.

[Report from Admiral Katoaka received on the 15th instant.]

On the 13th some of the enemy's troops were observed at Lazareff Point the Mamiya Strait. (Lazareff Point the continent opposite Pogobi. These points the strait is narrowed J.M.). After firing on them a party from the ships, when it was suddenly upon hotly by the enemy from the a neighbouring forest. One of the party was killed and 4 were wounded.

they drove back the enemy and destroyed the telegraph station.

(Received at the Imperial Military Head Quarters: on the p.m. 15th instant)

MANCHURIA.

Early on the morning of the 14th a battalion of the enemy's infantry with 2 sotnias of cavalry, 8 field-pieces and 6 quick-fires advanced against our position at Sushilipan, but they were driven back at once with a loss of about 35 killed and wounded, our casualties being one wounded.

About the same time 3 companies of his infantry with 2 sotnias of cavalry advanced against our position some 7½ miles north-west of Changtu. At 2.30 p.m. we completely repulsed them. They left 10 killed and wounded, and retired northward in disorder.

Small bodies of the enemy made attacks in the Weiyanpaumon direction also, but all were repulsed.

(RECEIVED AT THE FOREIGN OFFICE.)

THE PEACE CONFERENCE.

At a meeting of the Plenipotentiaries on the 10th the question of credentials was disposed of without any special difficulty. The commissions of the Russian Plenipotentiaries were complete in every respect, and all preliminaries essential to opening the conference were settled satisfactorily. The Japanese Plenipotentiaries then handed in a written statement of the conditions of peace, and the Russian Plenipotentiaries decided to commence examining them at once and to reply as soon as possible in writing.

On the 12th instant the Plenipotentiaries of Japan and Russia had their second meeting. On this occasion M. Witte handed in a written answer to the conditions of peace submitted by our plenipotentiaries at the first meeting.

It is reported by some that the Plenipotentiaries met on the 13th but the statement is baseless. In official quarters the news is that there was no meeting on the 13th and that they were to come together again on the 14th. No news has yet been received of the result of the latter meeting.

(RECEIVED BY THE "ASAHI SHIMBUN.")

Under date of the 10th Berlin telegraphs that the prospects of peace have finally become good. The conference has been most courteous and the details of the vital questions have been committed to writing.

M. Witte is consulting with capitalists to procure means of defraying the indemnity.

London under date of the 10th telegraphs that the credentials of the Plenipotentiaries have been examined. Baron Komura saw M. Witte's commission, but M. Witte did not ask to see Baron Komura's.

"I" (the Asahi's correspondent) "must gain repeat what I believe to be the case. Russia will not consent to cede Saghalien or to pay an indemnity. She regards these things as impossible from a military point of view, from the point of view of her material envelopment and from the point of view of her national honour. By obtaining Saghalien Japan would render it impossible for Russia to have a fleet hereafter in the Far East. Russia, however, will not hesitate to agree to the following:—

1. That Korea should be under Japan's protection on condition that Japan does not fortify the frontiers.

2. That Port Arthur, Dalny and the part of Manchuria now occupied by Oyama's armies should be ceded to Japan. This could include the railway but Japan would have to confer with China about it.

3. That fishing privileges should be granted to Japanese subjects on the Saghalien coasts (and probably elsewhere) as well as in the rivers.

Some other trifling concessions.

Portsmouth, August 13.

From an early hour this morning the Russians proceeded to the Conference Hall and considered the Japanese terms. It seems that if Japan withdraws her demands for the cession of territory, Russia will not refuse to pay a larger indemnity than Japan has asked for. It is apparently true that Japan has not fixed the amount of the indemnity, but has only asked for the payment of actual expenses. The whole of her terms were communicated to Russia in accordance with the latter's desire.

Portsmouth, August 11.

It has been learnt that Russia's answer to Japan's demands will be given to-morrow, the 12th inst., at 9.30 a.m. M. Witte has written the reply with his own hands and it has only to be translated into French and English.

Washington, August 12.

On the 12th instant M. Witte handed to the Japanese Plenipotentiaries his answer. He totally refuses the payment of an indemnity or the cession of Saghalien. He accepts the other demands conditionally as bases of discussion. The next meeting is to be on Monday (14th). On that day the fate of the Conference will be decided. The Plenipotentiaries believe that the Conference will fail.

In St. Petersburg Japan's terms are considered too severe, and the war party is again urging continuance of the conflict.

Portsmouth, August 12.

No. 1.—The Conference has not been broken off. The meetings will be continued. Particulars later on.

No. 2.—At ¼ past 9 o'clock this morning our peace plenipotentiaries received the Russian answer and will make their reply to it either at 3 o'clock this afternoon or at 3 o'clock to-morrow afternoon.

No. 3.—The Japanese reply was given to-day. The Russian plenipotentiaries and their Secretaries, who had returned to their hotel, repaired to the Conference Chamber at 3 o'clock and at the present time, 4.30 p.m., no one has left the Chamber. Apparently a discussion is going on. At present it is not possible to say whether the conference will eventuate satisfactorily or not.

Portsmouth, August 12.

The Japanese plenipotentiaries returned to their hotel at half-past 7 in the evening, the Russian plenipotentiaries at 8 o'clock. The result of to-day's conference is not yet clear, but the discussion of the first clause of Japan's demands is said to have lasted until the evening. This report was given out by the Secretary of the Russian plenipotentiaries after the meeting to the newspaper reporters. One clause is to be discussed daily. Peace is practically certain.

Later.

M. Witte, in answer to some newspaper correspondents, who insisted on seeing him on the 12th inst., said that the Japanese demands were 12 in number, and that the first related to Korea. This had been discussed on that day, but the discussion had not been concluded. Japan demanded that Korea should be recognised as within her sphere of influence. Probably each demand would take about 2 days to discuss, but the more important and complicated ones would require three days, so that the whole time of the conference will probably extend over 30 days. People say, observed M. Witte, that I asked Baron Komura for an armistice, but I declare, in the name of Russia, that I did nothing of the kind. I have come here to conclude peace and I will do my best to achieve that end, but should the conference fail, I am afraid that Russia will unite to continue the war.

Portsmouth, August 15.

At the third meeting of the Plenipotentiaries the Russian attitude was comparatively strong, but the Plenipotentiaries finally agreed to recognise Japan's preponderant power in Korea, Russia also receiving some advantages. In the sequel of the meeting it was decided that Russia should surrender all her special privileges in Manchuria, that she should withdraw from Manchuria and that Japan should throw open Manchuria.

Portsmouth, August 15.

To-day the IVth clause of the Japanese demands was settled, but the Vth led to an argument lasting three hours, with the result that the gist of the clause alone was settled, and the details of its practical operation are to be committed to writing for future deliberation. The Vth clause was then taken and agreed to. To-morrow the VIth clause will be discussed.

[Note.—There is great confusion as to the nature of these various clauses and we cannot attempt to clear up the question.—Ed. J.M.]

London, August 15.

According to a telegram from a credible quarter the future of the Conference is dark. The conference has settled the questions relating to Korea, Manchuria, Port Arthur and Liaotung. The next clauses to be discussed relate to the limitation of Russia's naval force in the Far East and the surrender of the interned ships. Russia is determined not to yield on either point.

(Note.—These London telegrams of the Asahi Shimbun are to be received with great reserve.—Ed. J.M.)

(FROM OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

London, August 12.

It is certain that the cession of Saghalien and the payment of Japan's expenses were included in her demands. Russia will refuse both these terms. Probably at the meeting to-morrow M. Witte will formulate Russia's counter proposals. Of course it is not expected that there will be any immediate prospect of a rupture of the negotiations. Special attention is drawn to the fact that no mention of indemnity occurs in the Japanese terms, the word reimbursement is used. No exact intelligence is obtainable of the nature of her demands. The list of demands published by the newspapers to-day is purely conjectural. A friend of mine who is present at the place of convention wires that it is 7 chances to 3 in favour of peace being restored.

(PUBLISHED BY THE "HOCHI SHIMBUN.")

According to the latest news received in a trustworthy quarter the condition of affairs is bad. It was expected that the Russian Plenipotentiaries would give their answer on the 14th instant, but they presented it on the 12th, and not only did it peremptorily refuse any cession of territory or payment of indemnity, but also it materially cut into the provision with regard to Korea and other terms. It would seem that this document had been prepared in Russia before the Plenipotentiaries set out.

Our Plenipotentiaries asked for a meeting on the 13th to submit their reply to the Russian proposals. This reply was handed in (the Asahi and the Jiji says that it was presented on the afternoon of the 12th.—Ed. J.M.) It emphatically refused to make any abatement in Japan's demands, and as the Russian Plenipotentiaries were equally stubborn the negotiations made no progress. It is presumed that an agreement can scarcely be reached. Still both sides are patient and circumspect. They are expected to meet again on the 15th.

(RECEIVED BY THE "ASAHI SHIMBUN.")
MANCHURIA.

According to a Reuter's telegram General Linévitch reports:—"Our troops began to operate in the district of the East Mandaling road. On the 5th they advanced towards the defile of Shilago (35 versts south of Taolu). The enemy assumed the offensive and threatened to outflank us on both wings so that we were obliged to retire northwards. Near the gorge of Mandaling the enemy pressed close on our troops. There was a vehement interchange of rifle-fire, after which the enemy withdrew to the south of Hailungching and, in the sequel of a skirmish, our troops occupied Langutz."

(Received at the Naval Department.)
CAPTURE OF AN EAGLE.

On the 28th of July our torpedo-destroyers organized a landing party, in accordance with instructions, in the Viyafuto district of the Alexandrofska division, to reconnoitre the northern part of Saghalien, Lieutenant Hakkaku Saburo was the leader. When they landed they captured a large eagle which arrived to-day at the Naval Department.

(RECEIVED AT THE FOREIGN OFFICE.)
THE ARISUGAWAS.

Prince and Princess Arisugawa arrived in Singapore by the steamer Preussen at 10.30 a.m. on the 11th inst., and landed publicly at noon. They proceeded by carriage to the Governor's house and lunched there. At 4 p.m. they left Government House and visited the places of interest, and at 5 they returned to the ship. The Governor received them with the greatest courtesy and the people welcomed them heartily. The steamer left Hongkong at 6 p.m. for Singapore.

Prince and Princess Arisugawa arrived in Hongkong at 6 a.m. on the 16th instant, and landing at 1 p.m., lunched with the Governor. At 5 p.m. they returned to the ship, which sailed for Shanghai at 6 p.m.

The resignation of the Dutch Cabinet, which in June was defeated in the general elections, has now been accepted, and on the 15th instant a new Liberal Cabinet was formed. De Meester becomes President of the Council and Minister of Finance, and the portfolio of Foreign Affairs falls to the Dutch Representative in Berlin, Dr. van Tets van Goudriaan.

GERMANY ON JAPAN'S DEMANDS.

The Vossische Zeitung says:—"Japan's demands are now known to the world. They can not be called light, but they are what Japan as the victor considers proper. The surrender of Russia's lease of Liaotung, the restoration of her special privileges in Manchuria, the acknowledgement of the policy of the open door and the recognition of Japan's protectorate over Korea—there is no room to question the propriety of these demands, for they relate to matters which were the direct causes of the war. As for the demands that the interned war-vessels should be handed over and that limits should be imposed on Russia's naval force in the Far East, they are questions of political rather than military necessity. For Russia has no longer any appreciable fleet and many years must elapse before she is able to despatch a strong squadron to the Far East. These facts render it inevitable that her power in Eastern Asia should be broken. Concerning the cession of Saghalien, it ought not to cost Russia a pang, and with regard to the re-imbursement question, it must be pronounced very wise on Japan's part not to have named any large sum. Had she done so she would have alarmed the Russian nation, would have invigorated the war party and would have brought about the rejection of the peace terms in toto. Russia must now give a positive or negative answer to Japan's demands. There is extremely little prospect of the campaign hereafter going in her favour, and if it goes against her she will ultimately have to accept heavier terms.

CONTINENTAL PRESS ON THE OUTLOOK.

According to Reuter the Russian reply to Japan's demands has been published by the Austrian newspapers. They speak in a more or less pessimistic strain, but on the whole they do not anticipate a rupture of the Conference. They consider that the celerity of Witte's answer indicates a desire to expedite the negotiations.

The Berlin Tageblatt says that Japan's demands are severe and that the Russian Plenipotentiaries naturally find difficulty in conceding them. Moreover it will be hard to make them a basis of negotiation. M. Witte desires to do all in his power to avert a rupture of the negotiations, and it may be hoped that the President of the United States will lend his powerful assistance to bring about a favourable result. The same paper further says:—"Russia in her answer disavows responsibility for the outbreak of war, but it may be doubted whether that is a proper allegation. Unquestionably the first blow was struck from Japan's side, but the whole world knows well that the true cause of the contest was Russia's conduct. Therefore unless both parties come to an agreement on this point by way of preliminary there is scarcely any hope of the negotiation ending happily.

French newspapers discuss the terms of peace as communicated by a Havas telegram. The Journal, the Temps and the *Debat*s find the conditions severe but consider that there is no reason why they should not form a basis of negotiation.

The Journal says that the terms do not affect Russia's vital interests or her Amur territory inasmuch as she is not asked to withdraw from Vladivostok. The only heavy items among the condition are those relating to the cession of Saghalien and the payment of an indemnity. As to Saghalien, however, since it fell into Russia's hands in 1875, she has neglected it and even to-day the place can scarcely be recognised as her territory. It is observable that the term "re-imbursement" has been substituted for "indemnity." This question will lead to much discussion, but it can not be denied that the choice of terms has a great advantage in saving Russia's honour.

The Temps divides the terms into three classes:—(1) Terms that will not involve any hazardous discussion. These are the withdrawal from Manchuria; the surrender of the Liaotung lease; the transfer of the Port Arthur-Harbin Railway to Japan, and the recognition of Japan's protectorate over Korea. (2) Terms more difficult than those in the first category, namely, the cession of Saghalien and the indemnity question. To settle these two points satisfactorily there must be some mutual concessions. (3) To this category belong the limitations of Russia's naval forces in the Far East and the surrender of the interned war-ships. These terms are humiliating to the great European Power, Russia, and, at the same time, are not necessary for the preservation of future peace in the Far East. Therefore we hope that Japan will consent to some alternative terms, perhaps pecuniary. The Temps does not discuss the fishery-privilege term.

Popular journals like La Patrie regard these terms as insulting to Russia.

The Journal des Debats maintains that if Russia desires to retain secure possession of the Vladivostok Railway and its branch lines, she must accept the terms of peace. To that end it will not be wrong for her to sacrifice Saghalien, to pay an indemnity and to agree to limitations of her naval power in the Far East. For so long as she does not entertain aggressive designs in East Asia, she has no occasion for a fleet there. But the present is not a time for her to harbour such designs.

The German newspaper National Zeitung writes:—"A considerable time has passed since the war broke out and Russia has suffered heavy losses on sea and on shore. Yet her Manchurian army is not only still in existence but also is receiving re-inforcements. Moreover the fact that Japan set foot on Russian soil for the first time when she invaded Saghalien must tend to render Russia obstinate in the matter of peace and must furnish a basis for contending vis-à-vis her own people that she is not crushed and that there is no reason to cede territory or to pay an indemnity. Japan is not satisfied with what Russia is willing to concede. Relying on her successes she seeks to gain an advantage and to deprive Russia of the power of seeking revenge for many years to come. Shall Russia then refuse to make peace? If so she will witness a renewal of domestic disturbances for it will be necessary for her to demand fresh sacrifices from her people. On the other hand the Japanese people are united in their love of country and they possess unlimited command of the sea. Even though they be defeated in Manchuria they will not lose their unity, nor is there any fear that they will abandon their plans against Kamchatka and Vladivostok. Japan's peace terms can not certainly be called light and among them are several that must hurt Russia's amour propre. But these terms do not represent the last word. They are only a basis for negotiations, and there is nothing to make us abandon hope of seeing peace restored.

RUSSIAN OPINIONS.

The view taken by the Russian newspapers is that rather than accept terms insulting to Russia it would be better to continue the war. They affirm that under no circumstances can Russia consent to the cession of Saghalien or the payment of an indemnity.

Count Lansdorff's organ, the Russ, says:—"Japan's peace terms far exceed expectations. Up to a certain point there is room to discuss the question of re-imbursement of war-expenses but Russia can not possibly agree to the demands for limiting her naval forces in the Far East, for handing over her war-ships interned in neutral waters and for ceding Saghalien. Unless Japan is prepared to withdraw these demands it may be considered that the conference terminates here." The same journal further writes:—"What can have been Japan's reason in insisting that she could not make known the terms until her Plenipotentiaries met those of Russia? Surely this differed from communicating them through the hands of a third Power? It seems to us beyond doubt that her object in taking such a line was to gain time for the purpose of raising her last foreign loan."

Prince Ouktomsky's organ the Rassvet says:—"Japan's demands are severe and insulting to Russia. Russia is not in a position obliging her to pay an indemnity. M. Witte should at once reject these demands and decline to proceed with the conference."

Only the liberal and extremist journals insist on peace. They say that Russia, being defeated, can not escape making some concessions. If she is not prepared to do so there was no reason for her to open a conference. It is to be hoped, these papers argue, that instead of occupying herself with the question of her reputation alone, she will consider the true interests of her people.

ITALIAN VIEWS.

In spite of M. Witte's denials the Italian journals hold that the terms of peace which have found their way into print were disclosed from the Russian side. Further, the principal journals argue that Japan's terms can not be called excessive either in their nature or in their results.

The Tribuna says:—"M. Witte alleges, it is said, that Russia did not wish for war and that Japan began the fighting. But looking at the documentary evidence that is diametrically opposed to the facts. One can only say that when M. Witte advanced such a contention he merely sought to extend the limits of the controversy. But apart from the question of who brought on the war, no one can deny that victory has rested with Japan in every fight. Further, that Japan does not wish to humiliate her adversary is clearly proved by her avoidance of the word indemnity and substitution of the term re-imbursement. As for the cession of Saghalien it must be described rather as a restoration of Japan's territory than an alienation of Russia's. Undoubtedly it can not be said that either in a financial or a military sense Russia's resources are exhausted, but her fleet has been annihilated, her finances have lost recuperative power, and her troops though they know how to retreat do not know how to advance. Therefore rupture of the negotiations would be a calamity for Russia. There does not appear to be any truth in the theory that Japan's finances will not bear the strain of continuing the war, and, regarded from a military point of view, Russia, though she continue the fight, has no hope of obtaining better results than hitherto, nor can she expect thus to quiet her domestic troubles."

AMERICAN OBSERVATIONS.

The New York Tribune, discussing Japan's terms of peace, says:—"At the time of the Franco-Russian war what France regarded as a national humiliation and what she never for the long space of 34 years has lost her wish to avenge, was not the indemnity of 5,000 millions of francs he had to pay but the loss of two provinces. Therefore though Japan may demand a big indemnity, she can not be said to either insult or humiliate Russia."

The Sun says:—"Japan has just reasons for making her demands, and it would be better for her to continue the war than to abandon her terms. Japan has spent a large sum in the discharge of her international duty, namely, the duty of obliging Russia to make good her promise of evacuating Manchuria. Therefore though Russia now withdraw under compulsion, the mere act of withdrawal will not sufficiently compensate Japan for the great sacrifices of life and treasure she has made. That is a just contention on Japan's part. Japan must be considered as standing in the place of plaintiff representing the treaty Powers in a law suit for the recovery of a piece of land, and it is therefore proper that Russia, who has lost the suit, should pay the costs."

The New York Herald says:—"Russia has no reason to agree to the same terms as France did to accept after the Franco-Prussian war, for whereas Germany had occupied the French capital, Japan is not yet even on her way to St. Petersburg. Nevertheless Russia must at this critical juncture carefully study the history of Europe. Among all the States of Europe there is not one that has not at some time had to bear the humiliation of paying an indemnity or ceding territory. Yet the fact has not prevented them from attaining their present good fortune, namely, to be respected and even envied by their neighbours. France has paid an indemnity and has ceded territory, yet for the past twenty years her tangible strength and her in-tangible political influence have increased. Russia sought her alliance; England deems it advantageous to establish an entente with her. This actual example should induce Russia to divest herself of her needless anxiety about so-called humiliation and should teach her to consider her real interests."

The New York Daily Tribune says:—"It is perfectly right that Japan should hold Saghalien. But there is room to doubt the propriety of her attempt to set limits to Russia's naval strength in the Far East, for such a condition must long continue to be a source of umbrage to Russia. Moreover, with such an immense interval as now exists between the strengths of the two navies, there is no reason for Japan to apprehend Russian rivalry."

The Boston Herald says:—"Japan's demands do not exceed the expectations of all thoughtful persons. The indemnity is in strict accord with the modern custom in such circumstances. Unless Russia by successes in war can obtain better terms for herself, she will have to accept much worse hereafter."

The Tribune of the 13th instant says:—"That Russia should find Japan's terms hard and should oppose them is natural. That Japan should consider her terms moderate and light is equally natural. That England's views should coincide with those of Japan, who is her close ally, is equally natural. But despite the fact that France is as close an ally of Russia as England is of Japan, France's views differ in some respect from Russia's. For France, although she regards the terms as more or less severe, considers at the same time that they are not impracticable and that they do not prevent an understanding. Again Germany, which is not an ally of either belligerent, and which stands nominally in the position of neutral, considers Japan's demands reasonable and just, and holds that Russia in the end will have to agree to them. Italy also in neutral yet she too thinks that Russia must give in, and that the reimbursement of the Japanese war expenses and the cession of Saghalien are not sufficient to injure her prestige. The surrender of Saghalien is said to be one of the chief points about which an agreement will not be reached. Many people regard a loss of territory as a particularly lamentable and humiliating condition of peace, yet far the most usual term in the sequel of a war is the cession of territory rather than the payment of a ready money indemnity. Nor is this all. There are special reasons why the cession of Saghalien should not be regarded by Russia as such a hardship. We call it a "cession" but in point of fact the question is not whether Russia ought to give up the island to Japan but whether Japan ought to give it up to Russia, for Japan has already taken it from Russia in war, is in actual occupation of it and is administering its affairs. Saghalien has become Japan's by right of conquest."

LATEST SHIPPING.

ARRIVALS.

Samara, British steamer, 1,790, W. Lewis, 11th Aug.,—Muroan, Coal.—Hokkaido Tanko Kaisha.
Tyr, Norwegian steamer, 1,417, Danielson, 11th Aug.,—Moj, Coal.—Drabble & Co.
Oro, British steamer, 2,147, W. Ransome Coleman, 11th Aug.,—Otaru via ports, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.
Unda, Norwegian steamer, 879, A. Hansen, 12th Aug.,—Yokkaichi, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.
Corn Exchange, British steamer, 2,476, H. C. Barcham, 12th Aug.,—London via Suez and ports, and Singapore, 29th July, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.
Isleworth, British steamer, 1,716, Cox, 13th Aug.,—Hankow, Ballast.—Dodwell & Co., Ltd.
Prins Eitel Friedrich, German steamer, 5,001, E. Prehn, 13th Aug.,—Hamburg and Bremen via ports, Mails and General.—H. Ahrens & Co., Nachf.
Selun, Norwegian steamer, 865, E. Fingalsen, 12th Aug.,—Kobe, General.—Osaka Shosen Kaisha.
Breconshire, British steamer, 2,323, G. E. Elliott, 14th Aug.,—Kobe, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Wakanoura Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,556, J. Arakawa, 14th Aug.,—Kobe, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.
Pawnee, British steamer, 1,167, Cartwright, 14th Aug.,—Middlesbro. via ports, General.—Dodwell & Co., Ltd.
Benwick, British steamer, 2,164, W. Thomson, 14th Aug.,—Shanghai via ports, Mails and General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.
Belgian King, British steamer, 2,153, Hayton, 14th Aug.,—Otaru via ports, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.
Skamstad, Norwegian steamer, 860, O. Hansen, 15th Aug.,—Moj, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.
Grnd, Norwegian steamer, 750, N. Chr. Halvorsen, 15th Aug.,—Kamaishi, Iron.—S. Tanaka.
Grafton, British steamer, 1,977, J. Seaborne, 15th Aug.,—London via ports, and Kobe, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.
Auchenblae, British steamer, 2,597, Geo. Mair, 15th Aug.,—New York via Suez and ports, and Kobe, 13th Aug., General.—Dodwell & Co., Ltd.
Armand Behic, French steamer, 2,819, Guionnet, 17th Aug.,—Marseilles via ports, and Kobe 16th Aug., Mails and General.—M. M. S. S. Co.
Cairo, Norwegian steamer, 1,381, Hansen, 18th Aug.,—Anping, Sugar.—Osaka Shosen Kaisha.
Bogor, Dutch steamer, 2,306, J. Werkhoven, 18th Aug.,—Batavia via ports and Moj, General.—Ed. L. Van Nierop & Co.
Braemar, British steamer, 2,316, S. L. Saxby, 18th Aug.,—Otaru via ports, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.
Windsor, British steamer, 1,853, John B. Booth, 18th Aug.,—Hakodate, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.
Iyo Maru, Japanese steamer, 3,918, Wm. Thompson, 18th Aug.,—Seattle, Wash., Mails and General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

DEPARTURES.

Jaga, Norwegian steamer, 577, O. A. Spinnau, 10th Aug.,—Moj, Ballast.—Drabble & Co.
Dunearn, British barque, 1,633, Arthur Hackland, 11th Aug.,—Royal Roads, Ballast.—Dodwell & Co., Ltd.
Empress of China, British steamer, 3,003, R. Archibald, 11th Aug.,—Vancouver, B.C., Mails and General.—C. P. R. Co.
Braid, Norwegian steamer, 645, J. Folkman, 11th Aug.,—Kuchino, Ballast.—Drabble & Co.
Aragoia, German steamer, 3,324, Schult, 11th Aug.,—Hongkong via ports, Mails and General.—P. & A. S. S. Co.
Sydney, French steamer, 1,853, Combe, 12th Aug.,—Marseilles via ports, Mails and General.—M. M. S. S. Co.
Richmond, British steamer, 2,050, F. T. Nicolle, 13th Aug.,—Muroan, Ballast.—Hokkaido Tanko Kaisha.
Deckmont, British ship, 1,642, C. Heinrichs, 14th Aug.,—Chernais, Vancouver Island, Ballast.—Drabble & Co.
Unda, Norwegian steamer, 879, A. Hansen, 13th Aug.,—Yokkaichi, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.
Cape Corrientes, British steamer, 1,660, Jas Isbester, 13th Aug.,—Ujina, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.
Selun, Norwegian steamer, 865, E. Fingalsen, 13th Aug.,—Moj, Ballast.—Osaka Shosen Kaisha.
Oro, British steamer, 2,147, W. Ransome Coleman, 14th Aug.,—Kobe, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.
Thyra, British steamer, 2,244, A. Bainbridge, 14th Aug.,—Kuchino, Ballast.—Samuel Samuel & Co.
Malacca, British steamer, 2,616, G. W. Babot, 15th Aug.,—London and Antwerp via ports, Mails and General.—P. & O. S. N. Co.
Duwich, British steamer, 2,111, F. Dudley, 16th Aug.,—Otaru, Ballast.—Yamashita.
Wakanoura Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,556, T. Arakawa, 16th Aug.,—Hakodate via Oginohama, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.
Albenga, German steamer, 2,769, W. Petersen, 16th Aug.,—New York via ports and Suez, General.—C. Illies & Co.
Tyr, Norwegian steamer, 1,417, Danielson, 16th Aug.,—Otaru, Ballast.—Drabble & Co.
Rhenania, German steamer, 4,056, Foerch, 17th Aug.,—Havre and Hamburg via ports, General.—C. Illies & Co.
Belgian King, British steamer, 2,153, Hayton, 17th Aug.,—Kobe via Yokkaichi, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.
Norma, Norwegian steamer, 808, S. W. Marcussen, 17th Aug.,—Moj, Ballast.—Misaki Co.
Highlander, British steamer, 1,595, Jno. Sinclair, 17th Aug.,—Kobe, Ballast.—Samuel Samuel & Co.
Auchenarden, British steamer, 2,351, Crowder, 18th Aug.,—Moj, Ballast.—Drabble & Co.

RAW COTTONS.

American Middling...	27.00 to 27.25
Indian Brogab...	25.50 to 26.00
Chinese ...	24.00 to 26.50

METALS.

No change in the market and little doing.

Round and square $\frac{3}{16}$ inch and upward...	4.00 to 4.20
Iron Plates, assorted ...	4.35 to 4.65
Sheet Iron ...	4.70 to 6.95
Galvanized iron sheets ...	10.05 to 10.95
Wire Nails, assorted ...	6.85 to 7.15
Pin Plates, per box ...	7.40 to 7.65
Pig Iron, No. 2 ...	2.40
Scrap Iron ($\frac{3}{16}$ to $\frac{1}{2}$ inch) ...	5.00 to 5.50

KEROSENE.

Market dull and unchanged.

American ...	$3.00 to 3.26
Russian ...	3.14
Singhai ...	2.94

SUGAR.

The usual demand has not set in this year owing to the coolness of the weather and the heavy rainfall; the market is therefore inactive. On Aug. 6th only 1,900 bags were sold by auction at the Tokyo refinery, prices being unchanged.

Brown Takao ...	9.40 to 9.80
Brown Manila ...	10.10 to 11.10
Brown Daikong ...	7.80 to 8.00
Brown Canton ...	10.00 to 12.10
White Java and Penang ...	12.80 to 13.80
White Refined ...	14.40 to 17.20

INDIGO.

There is a fair demand for stock lots.

va, Medium to best ...	190.00 to 240.00
alcutta, Medium to best ...	140.00 to 200.00
adras (Arunachal), Medium to best ...	90.00 to 120.00
adras (Dry Leaf), Medium to best ...	—

EXPORTS.

RAW SILK.

Arrivals from the interior continue to be limited, which fact assists in maintaining prices. At the close the market is steady at quotations.

QUOTATIONS.

atures—Extra Best, Coarse ...	1,100 to 1,120
atures—Extra, Fine ...	—
atures—Extra, Coarse ...	1,070 to 1,080
atures—No. 1, Fine ...	—
atures—No. 1, Coarse ...	1,035 to 1,050
atures—No. 1½, Fine ...	1,070 to 1,090
atures—No. 1½, Coarse ...	1,015 to 1,020
atures—No. 2, Fine ...	1,050 to 1,055 atures—No. 2, Coarse ...	— mmom—Coarse ...	— reels—Extra ...	—
reels—No. 1 ...	1,040 to 1,045
reels—No. 1½ ...	1,010 to 1,020
reels—No. 2 ...	990 to 995
kedas—Extra ...	1,010 to 1,020
kedas—No. 1 ...	990 to 995
kedas—No. 1½ ...	970 to 975
kedas—No. 2 ...	950 to 955
kedas—No. 2½ ...	925 to 930

WASTE SILK.

The market is quiet, foreign buyers finding rates high.

QUOTATIONS.

hi—Filatures, Best ...	—
hi—Filatures, Good ...	—
hi—Oshiu, Best ...	—
hi—Oshiu, Good ...	—
hi—Oshiu, Medium ...	—
hi—Shinshu, Best ...	—
hi—Shinshu, Good ...	—
hi—Bushi, Best ...	—
hi—Bushi, Good ...	—
hi—Bushi, Medium ...	—
hi—Joshiu, Best ...	—
hi—Joshiu, Good ...	—
so—Filatures, Extra ...	—
so—Filatures, Best ...	—
so—Filatures, Second ...	—
so—Joshiu, Good ...	—
so—Bushi, Fair ...	—

TEA.

Business transacted is still moderate and prices in firm especially for the better kinds. Movements from May 1st to Aug. 15th amounted to 200 piculs against 156,000 piculs at the corresponding date last year.

QUOTATIONS.

best ...	Y. 51 and upwards
2nd ...	43 to 50
3rd ...	38 to 44
4th ...	33 to 37
5th ...	30 to 32
6th ...	25 to 29
Common ...	23 to 24
Low ...	18 to 21

SAVE YOUR HAIR

With Shampoos of Cuticura Soap and Light Dressings of Cuticura.

This treatment at once stops falling hair, removes crusts, scales, and dandruff, soothes irritated, itching surfaces, stimulates hair follicles, supplies the roots with energy and nourishment, and makes the hair grow upon a sweet, wholesome, healthy scalp when all else fails.

MILLIONS USE CUTICURA SOAP

Assisted by CUTICURA OINTMENT, for preserving, purifying, and beautifying the skin, for cleansing the scalp of crusts, scales, and dandruff, and the stopping of falling hair, for softening, whitening, and soothing red, rough, and sore hands, for baby rashes, itchings, and chafings, in the form of baths for annoying irritations and inflammations, or too free or offensive perspiration, and for all the purposes of the toilet, as well as by millions of women in the form of washes for ulcerative weaknesses, and many sensitive, antiseptic purposes which readily suggest themselves to women and mothers.

COMPLETE TREATMENT FOR EVERY HUMOUR,

Consisting of CUTICURA SOAP, to cleanse the skin of crusts and scales, and soften the thickened cuticle; CUTICURA OINTMENT, to instantly allay itching, inflammation, and irritation, and soothe and heal; and CUTICURA RESOLVENT PILLS, to cool and cleanse the blood. A SINGLE BATH is often sufficient to cure the most torturing, disfiguring, itching, burning, and scaly skin, scalp, and blood humours, with loss of hair, when all else fails. Sold throughout the world. Australian Depot: R. Towns & Co., Sydney. British Depot: 37-38, Charterhouse Sq., London. French Depot: 5 Rue de la Paix, Paris. PUTTER DRUG AND CHEM. CORP., Sole Props., Boston, U. S. A.

CUTICURA RESOLVENT PILLS

(Chocolate Coated) are a new, tasteless, odourless, economical substitute for the celebrated Liquid CUTICURA RESOLVENT, as well as for all other blood purifiers and humour cures. Put up in screw-cap pocket vials, containing 60 doses. CUTICURA PILLS are alternative, antiseptic, tonic, digestive, and the purest, sweetest, most successful and economical of blood and skin purifiers, humour cures, and tonic-digestives.

EXCHANGE.

Yokohama, August 17.

London silver $\frac{1}{4}$ higher and China sterling quotations $\frac{1}{4}$ to $\frac{1}{2}$ higher have caused local rates on China to decline correspondingly, but all other rates remain steady.

London Bank T.T. ...	1/0 1/2
— Bills on demand ...	2/0 1/2
— 4 months' sight ...	2/0 1/2
— Private 4 months' sight ...	2/0 1/2
— 6 months' sight ...	2/0 1/2
Paris & Lyons Bank sight ...	255
— Private 4 months' sight ...	259 1/2
— 6 months' sight ...	260 1/2
Canton Bank sight ...	95 1/2
— Private to Aug 1st sight do. ...	93 1/2
Hankow Bank sight ...	74 1/2
— Private 30 days' sight ...	76 1/2
India Bank sight ...	153 1/2
— Private 30 days' sight ...	153 1/2
Mecca Bank sight ...	48 1/2
— Private 30 days' sight ...	49 1/2
Private 4 months' sight ...	50 1/2
San Francisco Bank sight ...	207 1/2
— Private 4 months' sight ...	211
Bar Silver (London) ...	27 1/2

* Nominal.

JAPANESE SHARES.

Yokohama, August 18, a.m.

Mean prices for Cash Delivery of Bonds and Shares, which may be held by Foreigners in their own names.

Provincial Exchequer Bonds Yen. per cent. Yen.
1st Issue ...	100 90.50
2nd Issue ...	100 87.50
Exchequer Bonds 3rd Issue ...	100 86.00
Exchequer Bonds 4th Issue ...	80 83.00
Exchequer Bonds 5th Issue ...	30 32.90
Consolidated Bonds (Seiri) ...	100 82.80
War Bonds (Gumji) ...	100 82.80

5% Imperial Bonds (Goburi) ...	100 5 80.70
Navy Bonds (Kaigun) ...	100 5 80.60
Tokyo City Public Loan Bonds ...	100 6 94.30
Y'hama Water-works Bonds ...	100 6 93.00
Y'hama City Public Loan Bonds ...	100 6 91.20
Osaka Harbour Bonds ...	100 6 88.00
Sanyo Railway Debentures 2nd ...	100 6 86.00
Sanyo Railway ...	50 10 70.20
Kyushu Railway ...	50 8 60.00
Hokkaido Colliery Railway ...	50 12.5 88.30
Sobu Railway ...	50 8.50 63.40
Tokyo Electric Car (Densha) ...	50 11 76.30
Tokyo Street Railway (Shigai) ...	50 11.04 78.80
Tokyo Street Railway new ...	12.50 11.04 29.25
Tokyo Electric Railway (Denki) ...	50 3.5 61.90
Tokyo Electric Railway, new ...	40 3.5 40.40
Yokohama Electric Railway ...	30 49.50
Odawara Electric Car ...	50 3 24.00
Keihin Electric Railway ...	50 8 69.80
Keihin Electric Railway, new ...	12.50 8 30.10
Tokyo Marine Insurance ...	12.50 15 36.00
Yokohama Fire Insurance ...	12.50 10 16.90
Tokyo Fire Insurance ...	12.50 12 23.40
Kanagafuchi Spinning ...	50 16 85.50
Fuji Cotton Spinning ...	50 15 70.50
Tokyo G'sian Cotton Spinning ...	50 10 71.50
Yokohama Dock ...	33 12 50.50
Yokohama Electric Light ...	50 15 96.00
Tokyo Electric Light ...	50 12 76.00
Tokyo Electric Light, new ...	12.50 12 40.50
Osaka Electric Light ...	50 20 93.40
Kobe Electric Light ...	45 15.6 82.80
Tokyo Gas ...	50 15 90.50
Tokyo Gas, new ...	25 15 41.00
Osaka Gas new ...	25 — 42.70
Tokyo Rope Manufacture ...	50 20 105.00
Tokyo Rope, new ...	43.50 20 95.00
Nippon (Tokyo) Sugar Refined ...	50 20 109.70
Nippon Sugar Refined new ...	12.50 20 59.10
Nippon (Osaka) Sugar Refining ...	45 20 100.00
Nippon Beer Brewery (Yebisu) ...	50 20 121.00
Nippon Beer Brewery, new ...	25 20 86.00
Japan Beer Brewery (Kirin) ...	50 — 80.00
Osaka (Asahi) Beer Brewery ...	50 9 64.50
Marusan Beer Brewery ...	50 — 11.50
Y'hama Chujo Godown ...	50 15 68.50
Yokohama Boeki Godown ...	20 13 27.00

* Ex dividend.

Milkmaid Milkmaid Milkmaid

TRADE MARK.

BRAND
Milk

As a guarantee of
Quality, see the
MILKMAID
on every Tin.

LARGEST SALE
in the
WORLD.

TRADE MARK.

BRAND
Milk

TRADE MARK.

BRAND
Milk

As a guarantee of
Quality, see the
MILKMAID
on every Tin.

LARGEST SALE
in the
WORLD.

Lea and Perrins' Sauce.

By Royal Warrant
to
His Majesty the King.

THE ORIGINAL AND GENUINE WORCESTERSHIRE.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT IS A HOUSEHOLD NECESSITY

It cures Rheumatism, Sciatica,
Stiff Joints,
Glandular Swellings,
Sore Throat, Quinsy, Mumps,
Burns, Piles, Fistulas, &c.

AND EVERY FORM OF SKIN DISEASE.

Manufactured only at 78, New Oxford St. (into 133, Oxford St.), London. Sold by all Chemists and Medicine Vendors.

Taking

BOVRIL

means fortifying yourself against disease.

VESSELS ON THE BERTH.

For KEELUNG, via Moji (from Kobe), 3rd, and 18th every month, at Noon, the "NAGATO MARU."
—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

For KEELUNG, via Moji (from Kobe), 10th and 25th every month, at Noon, the "KOSHUN MAUR."
—Osaka Shosen Kaisha.

For MARSEILLES, London, and Antwerp, via Kobe, Moji, Hongkong, Singapore, Penang, Colombo, and Port Said, Aug. 18th, at Noon, the "BARA-LONG."—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

For CANADA, United States, and Europe, via Vancouver, B.C., Aug. 19th, the "ATHENIAN."—Canadian Pacific Railway Co.

For BREMEN and Hamburg, via ports, Aug. 19th, at 9 a.m., the "PRINZ EITEL FRIEDRICH."—H.
Ahrens & Co., Nachf.

For VICTORIA, Seattle, Tacoma, Wash., Aug. 19th, the "KEEMUN."—Butterfield & Swire.

For HONGKONG, via Kobe, Moji, and Manila, about
Aug. 20th, the "LYRA."—Dodwell & Co., Ltd.

For TAKAO, via Ujina, Moji, Nagasaki, Keelung, Pescadore and Amping, Aug. 20th, the "FUSAN
MARU."—Osaka Shosen Kaisha.

For HONGKONG, via Kobe, (Inland Sea), Nagasaki, and Manila, about Aug. 22nd, the "CORTIC."—
O. & O. S.S. Co.

For SAN FRANCISCO, via Honolulu, Aug. 22nd, the "DORIC."—O. & O. S.S. Co.

For VICTORIA, B.C., and Tacoma, Wash., Aug.
22nd, the "TREMONT."—Dodwell & Co., Ltd.

For SHANGHAI, via Kobe, Moji, and Nagasaki, Aug.
23rd, at 2 p.m., the "CHENAN."—Nippon Yusen
Kaisha.

For LONDON, Amsterdam and Antwerp, Aug. 25th, at Daylight, the "PAKLING."—Butterfield & Swire.

For HONGKONG, via Kobe, Inland Sea, Nagasaki, and Shanghai, about Aug. 26th, the "TARTAR."—
Canadian Pacific Railway Co.

For MARSEILLES, via ports, and Shanghai, Aug.
26th, at 7 a.m., the "ARMAND BEHC."—M. M.
S.S. Co.

For PORTLAND, Ore., Aug. 26th, the "ARABIA."—
P. & A. S.S. Co.

For HONGKONG, via Kobe, Inland Sea, Nagasaki, and Shanghai, about Aug. 28th, the "EMPERESS OF JAPAN."—Canadian Pacific Railway Co.

For SAN FRANCISCO, via Honolulu, Aug. 29th, at 3 p.m., the "MANCHURIA."—P. M. S.S. Co.

For AUSTRALIA, via ports (from Kobe), Aug. 29th,
the "EASTERN."—Cornes & Co.

For MARSEILLES, London, and Antwerp, via Kobe,
Shanghai, Hongkong, Straits, Colombo, and Port
Said, Aug. 29th, at Daylight, the "CANDIA."—P.
& O. S.N. Co.

For HAVRE, Hamburg and Bremen via ports, Aug.
31st, at Daylight, the "SCANDIA."—C. Illies & Co.

For CANADA, United States, and Europe, via Vancouver, B.C., Sept. 1st, at Noon, the "EMPERESS OF INDIA."—C. P. R. S.S. Co.

For HONGKONG, via Kobe, Nagasaki, Shanghai, and Manila, Sept. 1st, the "MINNESOTA."—Nippon
Yusen Kaisha.

For TRIESTE, via Kobe, Hongkong, Singapore,
Penang, Colombo, Bombay, Karachi, Aden, Suez, Port Said, and Fiume, about September 4th, the "PERSIA."—Heller Bros.

(毎土曜日一發行)

編輯人 エフ プリンツリー
發行兼印刷人 ユーピーアラオン

發行所 横濱市山下町五十五番
Original 横濱市山下町五十五番 新聞社

NOTES ON THE CONFERENCE.

Friday, August 18.

Uncertainty still exists as to the exact nature of the clauses hitherto discussed at the Peace Conference. A New York telegram to the Jiji Shimpō says that the fifth clause relates to the sovereignty of Saghalien. The fifth clause is the one alleged to have been discussed for 3 hours without any decision being reached, whereupon the Plenipotentiaries recorded their views and separated for the day. But according to other accounts the clause relates to the transfer of the Harbin-Port Arthur Railway, and according to still others its purport is the limitation of Russia's naval strength in the Far East. It seems useless in the present state of our knowledge to make any attempt to distinguish between these reports. The Jiji Shimpō, however, gives the following list:—

- 1.—Japan's preponderating influence in Korea.
- 2.—Russia's Evacuation of Manchuria.
- 3.—Japan's Evacuation of Manchuria, with the exception of Liaotung.

As to this third clause, however, another version is that it relates to the surrender of Russia's special privileges in Manchuria.

- 4.—The opening of Manchuria.
- 5.—The cession of Saghalien, or the surrender of the Railway.
- 6.—The transfer of Russia's lease of Liaotung.

Among these six clauses all but the fifth have been settled.

It will be observed that should this classification prove correct, the division of the clauses is more minute than was at first reported and their number will consequently be found larger.

Mr. O'Laughlin's telegrams to the Kokumin indicate that clause 5 relates to the transfer of the Railway, and, on the whole, this appears to be the most probable version. For it is supplemented by a detailed statement that while the Russian Plenipotentiaries are willing to concede the principle of the Railway's transfer, they advance the difficulty that it not wholly State property, being owned in part by the Russo-Chinese Bank, to which the St. Petersburg Government will consequently render itself liable if it makes over the line to Japan. This difficulty would explain the postponement of the matter for maturer examination, and would also be in accord with the proceedings recently attributed by the rumour to Russian agents, who were said to be manœuvring so as to materialize some private lien upon the Railway. The Nichi Nichi Shimbun puts the same interpretation upon the clause, and thinks that the attitude of Russia has for motive the setting off of this concession against other Japanese demands. But the latest accounts seem to indicate that Russia has surrendered the line.

The balance of intelligence with regard to the Korean clause is that the status of Japan has been recognised as one of "preponderating power" (yuyetsuken) not one of suzerainty (soshuken). There are some evidences of Japanese dissatisfaction with this terminology.

The next point reached by the conference is supposed to have been the handing over of the interned ships. This then would be the 7th clause. The Kokumin has a telegram that the 7th clause came up on the 15th but was not decided in the forenoon and the discussion was to be resumed in the afternoon. One is puzzled to understand, however, how this condition can have involved such long discussion. It is a simple proposition, and the Russian Plenipotentiaries can scarcely have found 3 hours insufficient to formulate their assent or dissent.

The Jiji Shimpō has a telegram from Newcastle saying that the Japanese terms include a demand for commercial privileges at Vladivostok.

Another telegram to the same journal from the same place says that The Times, in its issue of the 15th instant, has an editorial severely criticising M. Witte's petty expedients and approving Japan's policy of reticence. On the same morning the American journals took a similar line, giving evidence of entire sympathy with Japan and showing that what the telegram describes as the "Witte fever" has subsided.

Saturday, August 19th, a.m.

It would appear that the Japanese plenipotentiaries did not ask for the railway up to Harbin. So, at least, says the correspondent of the Kokumin Shimbun. They asked for it to a point 10 miles south of Harbin, and the Russians agreed, but demanded in turn that this interval of 10 miles should be neutral territory. To that the Japanese Plenipotentiaries objected, and the point was postponed for further consideration.

The above constituted Article 7. Then followed the discussion of Art. 8, which provides that Russia shall not use the Manchurian section of her Trans-Asian Railway for military purposes, and to this the Russian Plenipotentiaries agreed.

The above two Articles were disposed of on the 16th inst.

On the 17th the Plenipotentiaries had their sixth meeting. The question for discussion was the 9th Article, namely, that relating to the re-imbursement of Japan's outlays. No agreement could be reached on this point and the further discussion of it was postponed, and the conference proceeded in the afternoon to Articles 10 and 11 but these two were not settled on that day.

As things now stand the 5th Article, namely, the cession of Saghalien, has been postponed. So also has the 9th Article, namely, that relating to re-imbursement of expenses. Art. 10 asks for the surrender of the interned ships; Article 11 proposes that limitations be set on Russia's naval forces in the Far East, and Art. 12 demands fishery privileges. It could thus be seen that the Conference entered upon the really arduous part of its labours on the 16th and 17th inst. The discussion of Art. 11 was to be resumed on the 18th, Articles 9 and 10 having been put aside for fuller examination.

A favourable impression prevailed at Portsmouth until mid-day on the 17th, but in the afternoon pessimism seems to have re-asserted itself. A telegram to the Jiji Shimpō despatched at 9.30 p.m., says that the Russian Plenipotentiaries are alleged to have handed in a written intimation that they declined altogether to discuss the question of re-imbursement. But this information is difficult to reconcile with the previously received intelligence, namely, that the Article relating to re-imbursement of expenses was under discussion throughout the forenoon of the 17th. Had the Russian Plenipotentiaries intended to take any such decisive step as that now attributed to them, it seems probable that they would have done so before the discussion of this Article commenced.

The rumour that pressure was to be brought to bear on Japan by the Powers to compel her to abandon her claim for re-imbursement is justly regarded as emanating from Russian sources. England and America would certainly not associate themselves with any such measure, and if they stood aloof what Powers remain? The circulation of such rumours is rather a hopeful sign.

A telegram to the Jiji Shimpō—despatched before it was observed, before the outlook began to be cloudy—says that M. Witte, speaking to his own countrymen, had expressed his desire to arrive at a settlement, and adds that the difficulty about the cession of Saghalien was generally supposed to be inspired by a hope of treating this matter as a set-off. It was further believed at the time that the reimbursement problem would take the form of a mere discussion of amount. But if it be true that the Russian Plenipotentiaries have handed in a document declining all further discussion of this question, the horizon is as dark as it could be. Of course if such a document was transmitted the meeting of the Conference on the morning after its receipt, namely the 18th, would have been exceedingly problematical.

The Asahi Shimbun publishes a version that Russia has ceased to despatch troops eastward. That would be very significant indeed, for she must know well that rupture of this Conference would mean immediate resumption of hostilities on a large scale.

The Portsmouth correspondent of the London Daily Telegraph continues to write a very strong strain. He declares that unless Japan abandon her demand for the cession of Saghalien, there is no hope whatever of peace.

Dr. Morrison takes the view that even though this Conference fail, it will have served a useful end by preparing the way for the next Conference, which will certainly be successful.

The Chinese Representative in St. Petersburg is said to have telegraphed to his Government that peace is essential to Russia. Her internal and financial troubles are much greater than is generally supposed, and her censorship of telegrams is so strict that the facts do not get abroad. Everywhere there is dangerous agitation, and the troops cannot be trusted to quell it. Moreover, the nation is thoroughly dispirited. It must, therefore, be taken as assured that the Russian Plenipotentiaries will yield to Japan's demands and make peace. All talk about Russia not being beaten, about her determination to continue the war rather than accept any dishonourable terms, is about the strong position of Linvitch, merely a device to obtain a lightening of terms.

Did Mr. Hu send this telegram? And he did, is it likely that the supremely cautious and timid Wai-wu-pu would have allowed it to be given to the Chinese newspapers?

A telegram to the Nichi Nichi in Peking alleges that so soon as peace is restored China will send an ambassador to Japan to discuss the Manchurian problem and adds that in diplomatic circles the outcome of the Conference is viewed with hope.

Some of the minor journals of Tokyo show impatience at the delays in the negotiations and contend that Russia should be invited only to say "yes" or "no." This sort of writing has its significance but the procedure it indicates is not within the range of practical diplomacy. On the part of the leading papers there is no such play of impatience.

Berlin continues to be optimistic.

M. Clemenceau and the French press generally are reported to be speaking of Japan's demands as natural and just.

The world may now be said to be ranged itself on Japan's side. If M. Witte expected that by departing from the reticence invariably deemed essential to the success of diplomatic negotiations, he would win

Russia the sympathy of the nations, he erred. But it must be admitted that M. Witte's situation is extremely difficult.

Saturday, August 19th, p.m.

The Kokumin's news from Portsmouth, dated the afternoon of the 17th and published in Tokyo on the afternoon of the 19th says that in spite of many pessimistic rumours the prevailing idea is hopeful. On the 18th the Articles relating to limitation of Russia's naval forces in the Far East and to fishing privileges along the coast of the Maritime Province were to be discussed and it was expected that they would be settled early in the afternoon of that day. Then the really difficult questions alone would remain. The Plenipotentiaries were to seek fresh instructions by telegraph from their Governments in Tokyo and St. Petersburg with regard to these questions.

The same paper has a telegram despatched from Portsmouth on the 18th to the effect that the Japanese Plenipotentiaries have shown a disposition to abandon the clauses relating to limitation of Russia's naval forces and surrender of the interned ships if Russia agrees to the cession of Saghalien and the re-imbursement terms.

August 19th, night.

Washington telegraphs to the Asahi Shimbun under date of the 18th that the Conference with regard to the re-imbursement clause has altogether failed to reach a settlement. Russia refuses to pay anything and Japan insists that she must pay.

The question of the interned ships is not yet settled.

The Conference may be broken off on Monday (21st). On the side of the Russians no hope is entertained as to the future of the discussion. They loudly proclaim that the only possible mutual concession is that Russia should yield as to Saghalien and Japan as to re-imbursement.

The London Daily News advises Japan to yield in the matter of the re-imbursement.

The Nichi Nichi Shimbun and the Hochi Shimbun have telegrams in precisely the same sense. In short at this moment the Conference seems to be on the point of rupture, but it is hard to believe that peace will not be purchased at the price of a few hundreds of millions of yen.

The latest news published in Tokyo on the 19th appeared in an Asahi extra containing two telegrams despatched from Portsmouth on the afternoon of the 18th. The first said:—"From 9 o'clock this morning (18th) the Conference sat. It discussed the 11th article but could not come to a decision. A recess was taken at noon and from 3 p.m. the same Article was considered." The second telegram said:—"The newspapers in general take a pessimistic view, but the attitude of the Japanese is firm and from to-day the Russian attitude has begun to weaken. To-morrow (19th) and the 21st will be the most important days."

The above, it will be observed, contradicts previously received intelligence which predicted that no meeting of the Conference would take place on Friday or Saturday in order to afford time for the Plenipotentiaries to confer telegraphically with their Governments.

Sunday, August 20th, a.m.

This morning the news is that the 12th Article was discussed and settled at the Conference on the 18th instant. This 12th Article is said to be that relating to fishing privileges. Apparently the scope of these privileges is very large. We gather that it extends along the whole coast from Vladiv-stock to the mouth of the Amur and thence northwards to the Behring Sea.

The Kokumin Shimbun and the Asahi Shimbun say that the Conference has been postponed until Tuesday the 22nd instant. Mr. Olaughlin telegraphs that at this meeting M. Witte proposes to submit to writing all the points of agreement and disagreement. He further says that if peace can not be arranged it may be necessary to summon an international conference. But that, of course, must be regarded as a mere threat. Another telegram represents the Russians as having disclosed that they hope to effect a settlement by mutual concessions.

The American Assistant-Secretary is stated to be very hopeful, almost confident, of a satisfactory conclusion. He points out that everything except the points of crucial difficulty has been settled, and that an arrangement with regard to these may be anticipated. The Plenipotentiaries will have plenty of time to consult their home Governments before Tuesday, and the fact that they have agreed to continue their conferences on that day indicates that they see room for amicable discussion.

M. Martens, who is understood to have been excluded from the conference, though there is no confirmation of the fact, is using very decided language about the re-imbursement question. He declares that Russian diplomacy must be moribund if anything of the kind is agreed to. Russia has never paid an indemnity.

London telegraphs that the surrender of the East Chinese Railway to Japan is regarded in England as a very great concession on Russia's part, and that there is a belief that Japan must be about to yield on the question of re-imbursement.

August 20, night.

The latest intelligence indicates that the Conference is believed to have come to a deadlock. It is stated that President Roosevelt sent a private letter to the Russian Plenipotentiaries on the night of the 19th and on the 20th Baron Rosen left Portsmouth, doubtless to confer with the President. M. Witte remained and was despatching to and receiving telegrams from Russia.

On the 19th instant a meeting of statesmen took place at Marquis Ito's house in Tokyo. An extraordinary meeting of the Cabinet was held on the 20th. Subsequently Count Katsura proceeded to the Palace and reported to the Emperor Baron Komura's telegrams and the result of the above meetings. It is rumoured in Tokyo that the decision came to at the meetings was that Japan should yield nothing of her demands.

Monday, August 21, a.m.

New York telegraphs to the Jiji Shimpō that although there is an apparent deadlock over the two questions of re-imbursement and the session of Saghalien, the situation is not without a practicable exit. But what that exit is this telegram does not state. Probably the idea is that the President will act as intermediary. The telegrams this morning suggest that the President, having been kept fully informed throughout as to the course of the negotiations, announced on the evening of the 18th a desire to meet and confer with Baron Rosen, who proceeded on the 19th to Oyster Bay. These dates, it will be observed, are different from those previously reported. The first account said that a letter from the President was received at Portsmouth on the 19th and that Baron Rosen's journey was undertaken on the 20th, but the dates now telegraphed seem more likely inasmuch as there was no meeting of the conference on the 19th. Mr. Olaughlin wires to the Kokumin Shimbun that M. Witte also was to leave Portsmouth on the 19th for the purpose of visiting the President and explaining that he himself had left nothing undone to secure peace. M. Witte is represented as saying that there will be no change in the Russian attitude when the Conference next meets. If that be so, the war must go on. Rumours have reached London that Japan has yielded in the matter of the indemnity, but this is strenuously denied. London also telegraphs to the Jiji that President Roosevelt has again appeared upon the stage.

A cablegram to the Asahi from Portsmouth suggests that the President is using Baron Kaneko as an intermediary with the Japanese Plenipotentiaries and Mr. Pierce as a means of communication with the Russian. This cablegram also speaks of M. Witte proceeding to Oyster Bay to meet the President, and declares that the attitude of the Japanese Plenipotentiaries is immovable.

The American newspapers of the 19th regard the situation as hopeless unless the President intervenes, for the Plenipotentiaries on each side maintain an unyielding attitude. Dr. Morrison, interviewed by the Asahi's correspondent, takes a pessimistic view as to the outcome of the Conference, but expresses grave doubts as to whether Russia's domestic condition will allow her to continue the war. There is an idea that the Conference will confine itself on the 22nd to signing a protocol of the business thus far done, and that the discussion will be resumed on the 23rd, but this is uncertain.

The Chuo Shimbun publishes a telegram differing essentially from the news received by all its contemporaries. The message is sent from Newcastle and is dated the 19th. It describes the prospect as good and predicts that everything will be settled within a week.

The Nichi Nichi's news from Washington, dated the 19th, is that on the evening of the 18th the Japanese Plenipotentiaries declared their determination not to yield and foresaw that the meeting of the conference on the 22nd would be the end.

A long visit paid by Sir Claude MacDonald on Sunday to Count Katsura has attracted considerable attention and provoked some conjecture. The Nichi Nichi combats the idea that the business discussed can have been connected with the alliance, for the alliance problem no longer demands lengthy debate. Therefore our contemporary thinks that the meeting had something to do with the peace negotiations.

August 21, p.m.

This morning the shares of the Tokyo Stock Exchange rose 9 yen and those of the Nippon Yusen Kaisha 3 yen. This fluctuation was owing to a generally credited rumour that the Japanese Government had decided to abandon the demand for the cession of Saghalien in consideration of Russia agreeing to re-imburse Japan's war expenses. There has been no confirmation of this rumour.

In the evening the Asahi Shimbun published the following telegram: "President Roosevelt, in order to avert a rupture of negotiations, invited Baron Rosen to Oyster Bay as a last resort, and after a consultation lasting several hours transferred to him a measure for reconciling the disputants. The nature of this measure is not yet known, but it is believed to afford a hope of peace."

Later.

At 8.30 p.m. the Asahi published the following telegram:

Original from

Portsmouth, 20, a.m.

President Roosevelt, acting through Baron Kaneko, counselled Japan to yield, but she maintained a firm attitude, and declined to make any concessions except some of a nominal character. The President therefore ceased to counsel Japan.

It is commonly reported that on the 19th instant Baron Rosen and Prince Koudacheff left Portsmouth by the 7.20 train for Oyster Bay and arrived there at 5 in the afternoon. They were immediately received by the President, who suggested to Baron Rosen that Russia should change her attitude and make a material concession. Baron Rosen promised to telegraph on his return to Portsmouth, to the Tsar, and said he would be guided by His Majesty's reply.

Tuesday, August 22, a.m.

This morning the problem of peace may be said to be in abeyance. Some accounts say that the President's intervention has smoothed the way, and that a gradual rapprochement is in sight, though not even the most optimistic venture to assert that the deadlock has been entirely removed. But others, among whom is the Kokumin's correspondent, Mr. Carl Olaughlin, affirm that the President's mediation is believed to have been in the nature merely of a friendly endeavour to improve the relations between the Plenipotentiaries, and that M. Witte, on learning what Mr. Roosevelt said to Baron Rosen, decided that no further steps could be taken on the Russian side. Nevertheless a rumour is generally current that a compromise will be effected. On the other hand, the intelligence published by the Nichi Nichi and the Hochi confirms the news received by the Asahi on Monday night, namely, that Baron Rosen and Prince Koudacheff carried away from their interview with the President a draft compromise which will probably be accepted by M. Witte. This statement comes from New York and it goes so far as to allege the certainty of a settlement. The fact is that, as might be expected, the nature of Baron Rosen's interview with the President is not clearly known. According to telegrams sent to the Jiji Shunpo there is a theory that the President merely received from the Baron a statement of the Russian views; but there is also another theory that he urged the advisability of making peace. In these accounts no mention occurs of a draft compromise. It is added, however, that the Japanese deny the rumour of Baron Kaneko's services having been utilized by President Roosevelt. The denial was scarcely necessary.

Dr. Morrison has made to the Asahi's correspondent a statement of Japan's terms ascertained by him. They differ somewhat from statements hitherto published in so far as concerns the railway question, but as there is some obscurity we need not perplex our readers by entering into details. Moreover, the main facts concerning the railway concession stand as previously reported.

August 22nd, p.m.

The Yomiuri Shimbun published an extra on Tuesday afternoon saying that a telegram in the following sense had been received at a certain quarter in Tokyo:—

The Russo-Japanese Protocol will be signed on the 22nd or the 23rd by the Plenipotentiaries. Russia is to re-imburse Japan's expenses to the extent of 1,500 million yen (a larger sum is named but is doubtful) and to agree to the occupation of Saghalien. Japan on her side concedes 3 or 4 demands, the most important of which is the limiting of Russia's naval forces in the east and the surrender of the interned ships.

(It will be observed that the above is vague.—Ed. J.M.)

August 22nd, evening.

The Asahi published a telegram this evening to the effect that the President's suggestion, that Russia should yield on the cardinal points, having been submitted to the Tsar, was rejected by him.

The Hochi Shimbun's information is that the President's suggestion that the two questions of the cession of Saghalien and of re-imbursement of expenses be submitted to the Hague Tribunal was rejected by the Tsar.

Reports from General Linevitch strongly objecting to peace are influencing the Tsar.

A telegram from New York says it is expected that the Conference will take a recess for a week.

Wednesday, August 23, a.m.

It may well be supposed that little credence is placed in the rumour of the President having suggested that the cardinal points of Japan's demands be submitted to a court of arbitration. Such a step would be equivalent to Japan's abandonment of her position as victor. She would thus place herself on an equality with Russia and would forfeit whatever potency attaches to her title as conqueror. The report seems to have been set on foot by the newspapers alone; newspapers which failed to give due consideration to their own canard. It may be taken for granted that the President did not suggest anything of the kind, and indeed the latest reports say that the story has been denied by Prince Koudacheff and M. Witte.

As to Reuter's news that England, Germany and France have thrown their influence into the scale—upon which side it is not quite clear—the thing is incredible. Three such Powers can not arrange to co-ordinate their international movements at a moment's notice, even supposing that they saw the expediency of doing so, and it is more than doubtful whether such expediency would suggest itself to them in this case. What may be regarded as certain is that England, at all events, would never join a combination designed to subject Japan to pressure, and that France would be equally reluctant to show any semblance of unfaithfulness to her ally, Russia. This tale of a combination of Powers may therefore be dismissed as a canard, and we are astonished at the confident tone adopted by Reuter in publishing it.

The Times' correspondent at Portsmouth wires that at a council held in the Palace in St. Petersburg it was definitely decided not to cede any territory or reimburse any expenses.

Rumours of the most conflicting character are current. One is that while Russia will not pay anything under the name of re-imbursement or indemnity, she is willing to offer some money on three accounts, namely, the price obtained by selling the East Chinese Railway to China—this we do not understand—the value of the interned ships, and the cost of supporting the prisoners. These three sums would total about five hundred million yen.

The only thing that can be confidently asserted is that neither side shows any symptom of yielding at present. Nevertheless it is not probable that the Conference will be broken off immediately. Both of the disputants will be anxious to postpone the crisis, each trusting that the other may weaken, and there are ways of postponing the final without actually discussing the crucial points. For example, it is more than probable, in view of the rapidity with which eight out of the twelve articles were disposed of, that the protocols relating to them have not yet been duly prepared and signed. That operation might be made to cover some days. At the same time each side will be equally careful not to suggest by its attitude that it is deliberately seeking to prolong the Conference, and out of that carefulness a conclusion may be forced at any moment. The Japanese Plenipotentiaries are not talking. Rumour is so far accurate that it does not attribute a word to them. The Russians are talking. Everything that the public hears comes from their side. Were other nationals in question there would be no difficulty in drawing an inference from this difference. But silence is habitual with the Japanese and constitutionally impossible to the Russians. Some authorities seem to be persuaded that the end will be reached by the 26th instant. M. Martens speaks of the 23rd. It is all conjecture. Evidently, however, the tinge of optimism that rumour showed two days ago has faded.

August 23rd, p.m.

The Kokumin Shimbun publishes the following telegram dated at Portsmouth on the afternoon of the 21st:—"All the newspapers report that the President will mediate an endeavour to bring about an understanding, but this is not true. Some people think that the meeting between the President and the Russian Plenipotentiaries will furnish a motive for changing the situation but these conversant with the facts deny this. The state of affairs continues unsettled. Mutual concessions constitute the only route to peace. It is generally agreed that hope has not entirely disappeared. The solution of the question depends on the meeting to-morrow (Tuesday)."

The Hochi Shimbun has a later telegram from New York, dated the 22nd instant:—"The Tsar is said to have rejected the demands for re-imbursement and the cession of Saghalien, and to have decided that the war shall be continued for two years. There has been an important meeting between the President and Baron Kaneko. The President is earnestly endeavouring to avert a rupture of the negotiations."

Another telegram to the same journal (Hochi) from Washington, dated the 22nd, says:—"The President has proposed a draft with reference to the questions of re-imbursement and Saghalien which has brought the peace Conference to a standstill, and the Russian Plenipotentiaries have submitted it to the Tsar. No reply has been received. The issue of the conference which meets at 3 p.m. to-day can not foreseen."

The Hochi's New-York cablegram quoted above is evidently a replica of the St. Petersburg telegram sent by the Times' correspondent from Portsmouth. It is obvious that the Tsar can not have fixed 2 years as the period for continuing the war. Even a bluff such an announcement would be incredibly clumsy.

The Asahi Shimbun's news from Portsmouth dated 8 p.m. 21st instant, is this: "It is alleged that the explanations offered by Baron Rosen at his interview with President satisfied the latter. It is further asserted that there will be no rupture of conference at to-morrow's meeting and the negotiations will continue without intermission. On both sides all the documents preliminary necessary for to-morrow's meeting have been prepared. There is not for it but to wait until 3 p.m. to-morrow. Such being the case, our Plenipotentiaries together with the correspondents have photographed to-day in front of their hotel. It is observable that of the newspapers which until to-day adopted a pessimistic tone, several have become optimistic since the meeting between the President and Baron Rosen."

In the same journal's extra appears a telegram despatched from Washington on the 22nd:—"The Russian Plenipotentiaries at Portsmouth declare that all hope of peace is gone, owing to the greed and obstinacy of Japan. The Tsar has sent to M. Witte a telegram from General Linevitch in which the latter advocates continuing the war. The Tsar has refused to cede Saghalien or to pay an indemnity. Baron Kaneko has had a meeting with the President, in consequence of which an important telegram has been despatched from Baron Komura."

London, telegraphing to the Asahi on the 22nd, denies totally that the President proposed to submit to the Hague Tribunal the questions of re-imbursement and Saghalien; all that the President is seeking to do is to prevent a sudden rupture of the Conference and to secure its continuance. All hope is now at an end, but it is not likely that the conference on the 22nd will arrive at a final decision.

August 23, Evening.

The latest news is that the meeting of the Conference which was to have been held on the 22nd was postponed until the 23rd in order to avoid a rupture. The Russian Plenipotentiaries, in spite of the President's advice have not changed their attitude at all.

Thursday, August 24, a.m.

The news this morning is confirmatory of that received on the evening of the 23rd, namely, that the meeting of the Conference, which was to have taken place on the 22nd, was postponed until the 23rd at 9 a.m., and the reason assigned for this postponement remains unchanged, namely, that a meeting on the 22nd must have involved a rupture as neither side had shown any disposition to yield on the cardinal points. Of course no such reason could be definitely stated. Some plausible excuse had to be found, and it was found by the Russian Plenipotentiaries in the pretext that they had not yet completed the memoranda which would have to be submitted to the Conference at its proposed meeting on the 22nd. We thus learn that the idea of postponement came from the side of the Russians, and a reference is suggested that their reluctance to precipitate final failure is more active than that of the Japanese. But in that context it has to be remembered that whatever influence President Roosevelt is exercising appears to be brought to bear on the Russian plenipotentiaries, and that this delay may be nothing more than a concession to the President's kind offices. We do not mean to suggest for a moment that the President is in any way throwing his weight on the Japanese scale. He has doubtless assured himself positively as to the extreme limits of Japan's possible yielding, and recognising that unless Russia abates nothing of her obduracy the situation is useless, he is applying his strength to push on the Russian partition. It is rumoured, indeed, that a special envoy from the President reached Portsmouth on the afternoon of the 22nd and immediately repaired to the presence of the Russian Plenipotentiaries, with whom he was closeted at the time of the despatch of this news (Asahi Shimbun). Therefore, on all accounts, it will be safer to assume that the postponement resulted indirectly from the President's action than to deduce from it a symptom of Russia yielding. Meantime M. Witte and Baron Rosen are represented as persistently maintaining that Japan's demands are excessive and that their acceptance is quite out of the question. In short, there are absolutely no indications of the opening of a path to settlement and the public must reconcile itself to pass a few more anxious hours.

Telegrams from Portsmouth (Fiji Shimpō and Asahi Shimbun) allege that the correspondents of English journals and persons whose sympathies are with the Japanese strongly counsel the maintenance of an unflinching attitude. They say, what must be evident to all and what is certainly evident to the Japanese, that although to continue the war would be a sad calamity from the point of view of humanity, it were the worst possible statesmanship to forfeit this opportunity of making such terms as shall establish Japan's position in Asia and secure the preservation of peace in the Far East for many years to come. The effort required to reach the point at which Japan now stands has been too costly to permit the sacrifice of any of its results. It is a case of the old Chinese proverb of the one load of earth needed to complete the mountain. If Japan's demands were in any respect excessive, all her friends would counsel her to yield, but as she has formulated an unquestionably moderate programme, the responsibility of renewing the fight will rest solely on Russia, who will thus forfeit the world's sympathy more completely than ever.

To us the interesting and suggestive feature of the discussion is the island of Saghalien. Russia will not surrender Saghalien, she says. What is meant by that? She has already lost Saghalien. She can never hope to recover it until she places in East-Asian waters a fleet strong enough to crush the Japanese navy. But that must at best be a matter of many years, if not of eternity. Does she then contemplate an everlasting war like those that States waged in ancient times, when nothing interrupted a contest except the belligerents' need of rest to renew the fight? She can not possibly entertain such a programme. If she is to recover Saghalien it must be by negotiation, and if by negotiation, then she must pay for it. Is that the aim she has in view when she shows this obdurate front?

Mr. O'Laughlin wires that M. Witte has abandoned all hope of a peaceful effort, and that he has been instructed from St. Petersburg not to yield a jot in the matters of re-imbursement and Saghalien. The same correspondent repeats a rumour current at Portsmouth that Japan is prepared to abandon her claims as to Saghalien, the surrender of the interned ships and the limitation of Russia's naval forces.

Again the rumour is repeated that Russia announces her intention of carrying on the war for two years. Is Russia, then, so omnipotent, so almighty, that she can thus fix times and seasons at her own sweet will? She has devoted nearly two whole years to most unsuccessful attempts to conquer the Japanese. Nothing has resulted but her own signal discomfiture. Yet she talks of two years more as though the future and all its incidents were under her control and within her ken. We do not credit this two years' touch.

Before we go to press the result of Wednesday's meeting should be known. Meanwhile the Kokumin Shimbun preserves its optimistic tones. It attaches much importance to the fact that the application for postponement came from the Russian side, and although the ground assigned was an uncompleted state of the memoranda our contemporary regards that as a mere pretext. The points of difference have now been reduced to two—from which we infer that Japan has abandoned her claims as to the interned ships and the limitation of Russia's naval force—and even these two are not so difficult of adjustment as people imagine. It is inconceivable that Russia would have entered the Conference had she been resolved not to do anything in the way of re-imbursement or cession of territory.

We record these unvarying views of the Kokumin because, if the Conference ends successfully, our contemporary will merit corresponding applause for perspicacity. Our own hope is in President Roosevelt, whom we have always regarded as the deus ex machina.

Berlin has abandoned its optimistic view. The press of the German capital was full of hope at first, but the present view seems to be that the Plenipotentiaries will leave Portsmouth re infecta before the end of the present week. This, however, seems to be rather a reflection of San-Francisco and New York news than an expression of Berlin opinion.

The political parties have been bestirring themselves in Tokyo. Mr. Hara Kei on behalf of the Seiyun-kai appears to have waited more than once on the Premier and expressed the views of his Party, which views are not publicly stated, though we gather that they were emphatically stalwart. Subsequently Mr. Hara was invited by Mr. Oishi on behalf of the Progressists to visit the Premier and denounce all idea of yielding, but Mr. Hara suggested that as he had already acted, Mr. Oishi had better proceed alone. We do not learn whether Mr. Oishi has yet taken this step. Meanwhile the non-parliamentary members of both parties have combined to hold a meeting at which they denounced the Cabinet's procedure, first in agreeing to a Conference without previously ascertaining whether Russia was in earnest, and next in postponing the discussion of the crucial questions until the close of the negotiations.

August 24, p.m.

Under date of the 22nd p.m. Carl O'Laughlin telegraphs to the Kokumin that the situation has undergone a change owing to an earnest suggestion from the President that the points in dispute should be left for decision by a tribunal of 5 distinguished personages. We are very incredulous as to such advice having been given.

At the same time and from the same place Mr. Hamada, the Kokumin's special correspondent, wires that, according to American local journals a compromise will be effected on the lines of Japan abandoning her demands for the surrender of the interned ships and the limitation of Russia's naval forces, while Russia will agree to the indemnity and Saghalien.

A telegram to the Hochi from Washington dated the 23rd says that the Tsar has refused to consent to re-imbursement or cession of territory, and that the meeting of the Conference which was to have taken place on the 23rd has been postponed till the 26th at the request of the Russian Plenipotentiaries.

The latest news received in Tokyo up to 4 p.m. on the 24th was despatched to the Kokumin by Mr. Hamada from Portsmouth on the 23rd. It said that the American newspapers, on the morning of the 23rd, had suddenly changed from pessimism to optimism, and announced that there was full hope of peace being restored on a basis of mutual compromise.

Latest.
The latest news is an official telegram saying that the meeting of the Conference, which was to have taken place at 8 a.m. on the 23rd has been postponed to the 26th.

LINEVITCH'S DISPOSITIONS.

The Russian Official Gazette of the 15th July contains the following order issued by Linevitch and transmitted to the Foreign Office in Tokyo by telegram:—

1. The regiments of the Second and Eighth East Siberia Rifle Divisions shall henceforth consist of 4 battalions each.
[This doubles the strength of the two Divisions concerned.—Ed. J.M.]
2. The 41st East Siberia Regiment shall be organized.
[This is a new force.—Ed. J.M.]
3. A new Tenth East Siberia Rifle Division shall be formed from the 37th, 38th, 39th and 40th Rifle Regiments, each consisting of 4 battalions.
4. The First and Second Battalions of Saghalien Infantry shall be formed; and further two independent infantry battalions shall be formed at Dui and Toimoff.
5. A new battalion of infantry shall be formed for Kamchatka.
6. The reserve battalion at Khabarovsk is given up, and in its place a regiment of artillery consisting of 4 battalions and an independent battalion of infantry are formed.
7. The regiment forming the Nikolaievsk garrison will hereafter consist of 4 battalions.
8. The Blagovestchensk reserve battalion is given up and an infantry regiment consisting of 4 battalions as well as an independent battalion are formed in its place.
9. At Novokiefskoe a land-transport regiment of 3 battalions is newly formed.

From this order we gather that in the middle of July Linevitch had begun to appreciate the contingencies resulting from the almost complete extinction of Russia's naval forces in the Far East. He understood that at any moment Saghalien and the Amur region might be exposed to attack and he adopted measures accordingly. Indeed when this Order was published in the St. Petersburg Official Gazette a week had already elapsed since the first Japanese landing in Saghalien, namely, near Korsakoff, so that Linevitch had facts to guide him, not forecasts. Did he then imagine that the Japanese, after making a lodgement in the south of the island and having free access to all its coast line, would refrain from any immediate operations against the capital in the north-west? So it would seem, since with the south of the island actually in Japanese possession, he nevertheless orders four new battalions to be organized and directs that two of them shall be placed at Dui and Toimoff. It would be very interesting to know whether this order was carried out and if so what were the means adopted. We can scarcely suppose that these four battalions were raised in Saghalien; nor is it easy to conceive that they were transported thither from either the mouth of the Amur or De Castries Bay. Apparently this is a veritable case of shutting the stable-door after the horse has flown, for in all probability if these 4 battalions were ever organized they came into existence just as Saghalien had passed completely into Japanese possession. The incident proves one of two things: either that Linevitch is singularly afflicted with short sight or that he can not spare a soldier from Manchuria. If he did not know that from last April Saghalien was in imminent danger and that from the moment of Rojestvensky's annihilation the question of climatic conditions alone stood between the island and invasion, he must be one of the worst informed generals that ever directed a campaign. If, on the other hand, knowing all this, he could not take any steps to avert the danger, then he must be either exceedingly incompetent or curiously straitened in resources. There are at least four score of steamers in the Amur that could negotiate the channels at the river's estuary and might have been used throughout June to throw a division into Alexandrovsk. Such a force, if resolutely led, could have rendered the task of the invaders very arduous. Why did not Linevitch adopt a precaution so obvious instead of waiting till the enemy was actually knocking at the gates and then ordering battalions to be organized? It is a flagrant example of ineptitude or impotence.

The new Kamchatka battalion spoken of in the order is intended presumably for garrisoning Petropavlovsk. Perhaps it was carried thither in the transport Australia which the Japanese captured in Avacha Bay a few days ago. This very curt announcement of the seizure of a transport is all that the naval authorities have vouchsafed to tell the public thus far about the operations at Petropavlovsk, and Linevitch is silent. In fact Linevitch is effectually cut off from all information about Avacha Bay.

It will be observed that Nikolaievsk, Khabarovsk and Blagovestchensk are sources of anxiety to Linevitch. He has doubled—or ordered to be doubled—the regiment at Nikolaievsk, thus giving to the place a garrison of from three to four thousand men. He assigns four battalions of artillery and one of infantry to Khabarovsk, and he puts five battalions of infantry at Blagovestchensk. Nikolaievsk is within the estuary of the Amur River. It has batteries to defend it, but its best defence consists in the great difficulty of navigating the tortuous and narrow channels at the mouth of the river. That obstacle once passed the Amur is easily navigable, but we should be surprised to learn that the Japanese had attempted to enter it. Khabarovsk is at the junction of the Ussuri and the Amur, being thus 400 miles from the mouth of the river, and Blagovestchensk lies 450 miles further up at the junction of the Amur and the Zeya. These two places would of course be endangered if a Japanese flotilla went up the Amur, but to make preparations for that contingency after leaving Saghalien to its fate seems to indicate a somewhat fine fear on the part of Linevitch.

Novokiefskoe is on Possiet Bay. The organization of a land-transport regiment at that place suggests that the officer commanding at Vladivostock is provisioning his Tumen force by sea, in part at any rate. If so he is making a dangerous experiment. There is a fairly good road along the coast from Novokiefskoe and Novorogod to the Vladivostock Railway but the distance is nearly 100 miles and to provision a large force on the Tumen by this route is an arduous undertaking compared with sea-carriage of some 80 miles from Vladivostock. Should the Portsmouth conference end in a rupture, Possiet Bay and the Tumen will soon become interesting.

A FALSE STATEMENT.

From telegrams received in Tokyo it appears that the Shanghai Times, in its issue of the 15th instant, published in its editorial columns an alleged translation of a public telegram sent to the Foreign Office in Tokyo by the Japanese Consul-General in Shanghai under date of the 2nd instant. This message represented that some conference had taken place between the Consul-General and Mr. Wang Kwangnien, editor of the Chung- wai Jihpao, with reference to the Chekiang railway. It appears that this so-called message is wholly erroneous. It was contradicted at once by the acting Consul-General, and the contradiction appeared in the Shanghai Times of the 16th inst.

Later intelligence alleges that the Russians have obtained control of an English paper in Shanghai and are arranging for the publication of a Chinese paper also. However that may be—and there is certainly no reason why the Russians should not have their own organs if they please—the Shanghai Times has been unfortunate in making a bad break at this juncture. It published a despatch purporting to have been sent by Mr. Matsuoka, Vice-Consul at Shanghai, the object of the publication being to create the impression that Japan was scheming to get possession of the Chekiang railway to the detriment of its American projectors. The despatch was a shameless forgery. Mr. Matsuoka at once employed Mr. Drummond to communicate with the newspaper, and the latter published Mr. Drummond's note but described it as a diplomatic denial. This brought another note of a peremptory nature, and the Shanghai Times had now to acknowledge plain that the despatch was a forgery. We may assume that the editor of the newspaper imposed upon by the forgers.

THE CAPTURED SHIPS.

Among the 55 merchant vessels, transports, etc., captured by the Japanese since the war commenced, the following have been finally adjudicated prizes of war and have received new names as indicated in the list:—

Old Name.	New Name.	Tonnage.	Nation.
AngaraAnegawa Maru	1,700	Russ
KazanKasada Maru	—	Russ
SungariMatsuyue Maru	—	Russ
EkaterinoslavKarasaki Maru	5,671	Russ
RussiaSeishu Maru	2,312	Russ
ArgunRashu Maru	2,458	Russ
ManchuriaKwanto Maru	6,193	Russ
ManchuriaManshu Maru	2,937	Russ
FuhpingChozan Maru	1,393	Russ
GeorgeRotetsu Maru	179	Russ
SeverusShibetoro Maru	3,307	Russ
AlexanderRekizan Maru	261	Russ
MukdenHoten Maru	1,567	Russ
NagatanNagara Maru	—	Russ
KotiHokuyo Maru	399	Russ
VeieranYaura Maru	1,199	Russ
NingtaIkuta Maru	—	Russ

Vessels marked with an asterisk were captured but were raised at Port Arthur or Chemulpo. It will be understood that the ships are now catalogued as having been registered as Japanese property. And the remaining 38 vessels 33 have been declared lawful prizes but have not yet been publicly advertised as on the Japanese register.

With regard to the nationality of the vessels, the following list is published:—

Nationality.	Number of ships.	Total Tons.
British22	65,821
Russian16	33,337
German7	12,144
Austrian2	6,231
Norwegian3	5,411
Dutch3	4,177
French1	2,381
American1	2,381
Total55	134,402

Notification No. 458 of the Department of Communications says that, the Fog Signal Kinkazan Lighthouse, Province of Rikkyu Miyagi Prefecture, which has been temporarily for repairs will be sounded again after the 21st August, 1905.

PRESS COMMENTS ON THE PEACE CONFERENCE.

Friday, August 18.

The correspondents of London journals still hold the view that there will be a rupture of the conference over the question of re-imbursement and the cession of Saghalien. In connexion with this we may mention that the Niroku Shimbun has two telegrams. One is said to have been received by the Asia-shokai (Asiatic Trading Association). It is to the effect that the fishery question, which presently comes up for discussion, includes the opening of the Amur and a part of Siberia as well as the coast of the Maritime Province and Vladivostock, and that if this question can be settled the re-imbursement and the Saghalien problem are not expected to cause any insuperable difficulty. The second telegram is to the effect that the Tsar has wired emphatic instructions to M. Witte, ordering him to reject 5 of Japan's terms, namely, re-imbursement, cession of Saghalien, limitation of Russia's naval forces, surrender of the interned ships and one other demand which is not specified in the telegram. In spite of these instructions, concludes the message, the conference goes on.

The Niroku make some very large statements about the value of the fishery privileges in question, but objects that they would be of little practical value unless accompanied by the right of owning land for fishing stations.

The Hochi Shimbun is persuaded that the conference has reached a deadlock, inasmuch as the Russian Plenipotentiaries utterly decline to concede six of Japan's demands, namely, the fishery privileges, the transfer of the Railway, the limitation of Russia's naval forces in the East, the surrender of the interned ships, the re-imbursement of expenses and the cession of Saghalien. It is not conceivable, says our contemporary, that the Russian Government can have expected to conclude peace on the conditions that remain after the above six are eliminated. They will make some concessions for the sake of appearances. But there is little prospect of their complete agreement, and once Japan will not give in, a rupture seems inevitable. To account for this action on Russia's part we must assume that she has something in the background, and it can only be the hope of a victory by Linevitch.

The Fiji, however, thinks that Witte's sign is to yield readily on the two questions which constituted the cause of the war, namely, Manchuria and Korea, but to decline anything suggestive of Russia's complete feat. He thus hopes to fix upon Japan a responsibility of continuing the war. But all manoeuvres will have no weight with the world. If Russia yields to-day on the questions Manchuria and Korea, that will be an open acknowledgement that she yields because she is beaten, for it is certain that had she yielded in 1903 there would not have been any war. She thus tacitly admits her responsibility for bringing on the war, yet declines to pay the normal penalty of reimbursing the outlays which her obstinacy compelled Japan to make.

Sunday, August 20.

The Fiji Shimpō retains its firm tone as to questions of cession of territory and the reimbursement of expenses. Apparently contemporary finds it advisable to repeat the notion that as the object of the war was to obtain Manchuria and Korea, therefore the cession of Saghalien and the re-payment of Japan's expenses are secondary questions.

In point of fact Saghalien is already in Japan's possession, and by acknowledging the accomplished fact Russia would not be yielding more than she has already yielded in the case of Korea and Manchuria. Reimbursement of expenses, too, is simply what a victor has a right to expect at the hands of the vanquished. Japan's terms, as originally formulated, were the irreducible minimum and she must have them. In another article the Fiji urges the necessity of immediately resuming military operations in Manchuria. Evidently Russia's obstinacy is due to faith in Linevitch's power and in his professions. His signal defeat would entirely change the situation. If Japan can not obtain re-imbursement, she must indemnify herself by seizing territory on the mainland.

The Nichi Nichi Shimbun is equally insistent. It declares that even as they stand Japan's demands are regarded with discontent by the nation as being inadequate, and there can not now be any question of further concessions. The Nichi Nichi further thinks that since Russia made known from the first her objections to re-imbursement and cession of territory and since these are the cardinal concessions required of her, the Japanese Plenipotentiaries would not have continued the conference unless they had foreseen that Russia would yield. They must obey that conviction throughout. There can be only one alternative to Russia's obduracy.

The Nippon thinks that it is all a question of degree. Russia must know perfectly well that Saghalien is lost to her for ever. If, then, she declines to acknowledge the obvious fact, it must be simply because she wants to find a make-weight in other directions—wants to bargain, in short. Bargaining is a performance where diplomacy can display its talent, and Japan looks to her diplomatists for success.

The Chuo Shimbun regards Russia's loud talk as largely due to her sense of difficulty. The darkest hour comes before the dawn. Russia is in a very strait place and is clamouring proportionately. She has to be careful, however, lest she create an irremediable position; lest she render it impossible for herself to climb down. The rainy season is over in Manchuria and the armies are free to re-commence operations. There is not much time to avert another spilling of blood.

Monday, August 21.

It is denied that Baron Komura has applied to Tokyo for final instructions. There is no question of final instructions. Japan can not yield on the most essential points of her demands and Baron Komura has no occasion to be re-assured as to that. The Japanese Government is not going to order its Plenipotentiaries to commit diplomatic suicide. Unless Russia shows some sign of yielding when the conference meets on the 22nd, the negotiations must be broken off. The meetings of the Elder Statesmen and Cabinet Ministers decided not to budge an inch. We should state that this paragraph contains the gist of statements made by the Miyako Shimbun and the Niroku Shimpō only. All the leading journals are silent as to the results of the above meetings in Tokyo: they merely record the fact of the meetings and the communication of the results to the Emperor. We are disposed to think, however, that the Miyako and the Niroku do not err in their interpretations.

The Nichi Nichi Shimbun publishes an epitome of the views entertained by the leaders of the Seiyu-Kai. They say that Japan can not possibly yield, but that it does not follow that there is no hope of a settlement. No one could expect that Russia would accept Japan's terms en bloc. She was bound to make a fight for some reduction and that is what she is now doing. But if she insists on a compromise which will either render the permanence of peace problematical or reduce the amount of the re-imbursement so as to subject Japan to heavy loss, it would be far better to continue the war.

It will be evident from the above that the leaders of the Seiyu-Kai, if they are rightly represented by the Nichi Nichi—which may be taken for granted—regard the problem now as one of degree. They recognise the desirability of a compromise, but they insist that the limits of concession shall not be large.

A few newspapers discuss the question editorially. The Nichi Nichi takes the view that the provision limiting Russia's naval forces in the east is precisely analogous to that retaining the use of the Trans-Manchuria Railway for military purposes. In the interests of permanent peace Japan desires to adopt the same precautions on sea as she has already adopted on shore. Farther, the record of the Russian Navy in this war shows that such a limitation is most desirable in the general interests of trade and tranquillity. Russian ships have distinguished themselves by their flagrant disregard of international law, sinking neutral vessels and treating non-combatants without the least consideration. As for the interned ships, they escaped to neutral ports because, in the first place, their officers and men failed to do their duty by fighting to the last, and, in the second, they had no ports of their own to enter. From either point of view their surrender is imperative. There is nothing for it but that Russia should yield. Japan assuredly can not: she has already yielded as much as she possibly can. The Hochi is another journal which speaks editorially. It maintains that what Russia may be said to have hitherto yielded is simply the fishery concession. All the other terms to which she has agreed represent merely a reversion to the status quo ante; that is to say, the mere abandonment of things to which she possessed no valid title. She is endeavouring nevertheless to create an impression that as she has yielded 8 Articles, it is now Japan's turn to yield 4. If Japan having fought this great war successfully is prepared to be content with obtaining certain fishery privileges for her subjects, well and good. Does any one imagine anything of the kind? The Hochi makes also the new point that Russia's naval strength in Europe is already subject to limitations, and thus there is a precedent for Japan's demand.

The Nippon sees no reason to regret the failure of the Conference if it does fail inasmuch as Russia would then be clearly convicted of a resolve not to abandon her ambitious designs in East Asia. A year and a half's fighting has sufficed to establish Japan's self-defensive capacity. The next period would see her seated in Harbin and Vladivostock. She does not want fighting but she does not shrink from it, and if peace is not yet attainable, it is not Japan that will be the chief sufferer.

Tuesday, August 22.

The Kokumin, in its Tokyo-dayori column, expresses the opinion that a compromise has been effected, or is about to be effected, on the lines of Japan abandoning the two clauses relating to the surrender of the interned ships and the limitation of Russia's naval forces in East Asia, while Russia agrees to the cession of Saghalien and the re-imbursement of Japan's expenses. Our contemporary considers that a knowledge of this compromise reached certain quarters in Tokyo on Sunday evening, and was responsible for the upward leap made on the stock market when the Exchange shares rose 9 yen and the shares of the Yusen Kaisha 3 yen.

The Conference was to re-assemble at 3 p.m. on the 22nd. No definite news of its result can reach Tokyo before about noon of the 23rd, but at any moment some conclusive intelligence may indicate what is to be expected. At present it would seem that the President has succeeded in removing the deadlock.

The Fiji Shimpō alone discusses the question editorially this morning. It maintains its familiar ground, namely, that Japan has asked for her irreducible minimum and that she can not possibly make any concessions. If Russia declines to agree, there is nothing for it but to take off our hats to her Plenipotentiaries and say "Good-bye, gentlemen. We shall meet again." One point, however, in the Fiji's article is worth special notice. It says that had Russia approached Japan on the score of exhaustion; had she pleaded that her treasury was empty and that ability to make further payments did not exist, Japan might have listened to her, and might have been willing to accept some substitute for money, Vladivostok and Primorsk for example. But Russia has taken a false route and must face the consequences.

Wednesday, August 23.

Perhaps it is not necessary to say that journals like the Niroku and the Yoroku continue to publish striking tales, quite indifferent to the fact that their previous stories have proved altogether untrustworthy. The Niroku, for example, alleges that an agreement has been reached on the basis of Japan abandoning her claims as to the interned ships and the limitations of Russia's East-Asian naval force, while Russia consents to the tenure of Saghalien and reimburses Japan in a sum which the President will fix. The Yoroku gives the same basis of compromise but omits the item as to the President adjudicating the amount, and adds that the proposal was telegraphed on the 20th to the Tsar, who has not yet replied. Our contemporary adds also that President Roosevelt is acting very strenuously, and that, in the event of the disputants not agreeing to compromise, he will address a circular note to the Powers inviting them to cooperate in the cause of humanity. We should be inclined to class these statements as either forecasts or conjectures.

The most optimistic report is published by the Nippon. Its information, founded on the habitually vague "a certain quarter's telegram," is that the questions of re-imbursement and cession of territory do not constitute crucial difficulties and that an agreement will be reached immediately. We should like to think so, but from no source available to ourselves do we gather such an idea.

On all sides it is agreed that Japan has no intention of yielding. That is the universal view taken of the result of the meetings of Elder Statesmen and Cabinet Ministers recently held. Indeed it appears to be generally believed that those meetings were not convened to consider any application for instructions on Baron Komura's part. Their purpose was merely to consult about his reports.

It should be noted that the Conference was to re-assemble at 3 p.m. on the 22nd, which would correspond to a late hour at night in Japan, and consequently the result can not be known here until the evening of the 23rd at soonest. But we do not look for any decisive result as yet.

The tone of the Japanese press is very strong. There is not the least symptom of yielding. Even the organ of the business world insists that it must be renewal of the war or compliance with Japan's demands. Russia appears to be now again unfortunately labouring under misapprehensions such as those that precipitated the war in the first instance. If so, there is nothing for it but to dispel her illusions by a rude process.

A SERIOUS ACCIDENT.

News has been received of the sinking of the transport Kinjo Maru, a Nagoya steamer (2,278 tons). She left Moji on the 22nd with a body of troops returning from the front—presumably invalids—and at 10 p.m. on the same day, while en route for Kobe, she came into collision with the British steamer Barralong in Himejima Oki. The Kinjo Maru went to the bottom and it is stated that 126 men, including Major Kohori, are missing. Twenty-one were picked up by the Barralong, and twenty of them were transferred to the steamer Goldmouth which was on her way to Kobe. There is some confusion as to the destination of the two British steamers. It is stated that Lieut. Matsuda, having been severely hurt, could not be transferred to the Goldmouth and had to remain on the Barralong. The accident is very shocking and we can only hope sincerely that all those missing even were not lost, but it is possible that many of them were not in a condition to help themselves.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE IN AMERICA.

In an address before the graduating class of the Yale law school, on June 26th, Secretary Taft severely criticized the administration of criminal law in the United States, saying in part:—

"I grieve for my country to say that the administration of the criminal law in all the states of the union (there may be one or two exceptions) is a disgrace to our civilization. We are now reaching an age when we can not plead youth, sparse civilization, or newness of country, as a cause for laxity in the enforcement of law.

"What makes the difference between the administration of the criminal law in England and in this country? In the first place, while the jury has always been a sacred and untouched part of the tribunal constituted to try crime in England, the judges have always taken and maintained their part at common law in the trial of every defendant, and that part has been, first, the retention of complete control over the method by which counsel try the case, restraining them to the points at issue, and, second, the power to aid the jury by advising them how to consider the evidence and expressing an opinion upon the evidence, leaving, however, to the jury the ultimate decision. Another reason why English justice still maintains its reputation for certainty of punishment is the fact that there are no appeals allowed from the trial in the first court unless the judge presiding shall deem certain questions of law of sufficient importance and doubt to reserve them to a court of crown cases reserved.

"How is it in our own country? We find that these constitutional limitations, adopted centuries ago in tenderness to the defendant, have been elaborated in their scope and operation not only by the courts but also by the legislatures, because thought to be in the interest of liberty. And this has made them greater obstacles to the conviction of the guilty. The institution of trial by jury has come to be regarded as a fetish to such an extent that state legislatures have exalted the power of the jury and diminished the power of the court in the hearing of criminal cases. And now what has been the result in this country? Since 1885 in the United States there have been 131,951 murders and homicides, and there have been 2,286 executions. In 1885, the number of murders was 1,808. In 1904 it had increased to 8,482. The number of executions in 1885 was 108. In 1904 the number was 116. This startling increase in the number of murders and homicides as compared with the number of executions tells the story.

"The cure for this growing cancer in the body politic may be found in statutory amendments. Laws could be passed either abolishing the right of criminal appeal and leaving to the pardoning power as it is in England, the correction of judicial error, or, instead of that, if appeals must be allowed, the provision of law could be enacted by which judgment of the court below should be reversed except for an error which the court after re-examination of the entire evidence can affirmatively say would have led to a different verdict, ninety-nine per cent out of one hundred under the present system would be avoided. Second, if the powers of the court by statute to advise the jury, to comment on the evidence, and to express its opinion to the jury upon the facts in the criminal case could be restored, and if the state of the defendant were both deprived of peremptory challenges in the selection of a jury, twenty-five per cent of those trials which are now miscarriages of justice would result in the conviction of the defendant, and that which has become a menace in which the defendant's counsel play with the dice would resume its office of a serious judicial investigation."

The newspaper comment is in the major part of cases confined to summarizing and agreeing the points made by Secretary Taft in the Brooklyn Citizen, avoiding the issues in dispute, comes to the defence of the jury system as it operates in America.

"Judge Taft speaks of the scandal of our administration, but he fails to distinguish between the parts of the scandal which are due to error on the part of juries, and the much more serious parts which are chargeable upon incompetent, over-technical members of the judiciary. As a matter of fact, the juries everywhere in this country act promptly as the judges will permit, and it is in degree their fault that, after they have rendered their verdicts, an almost interminable series of appeals and appeals are sanctioned by the judges. Had the judge given more thought to this branch of his address, we might have had from him some useful suggestions for the correction of judicial law, rather than an attack upon laymen who are very rarely to blame. The right of trial by jury has long been regarded by the whole English-speaking people as one of their greatest securities against tyranny. If they are not likely to change their mind because anything contained in the address before us."

THE "SILNI"

It is not clear whether this destroyer sunk by Japanese shells or whether Kingston valves were opened. A letter from a Russian naval officer—according to Asahi—stated that on the 4th of November she received serious injury from a Japanese projectile but she certainly was not sunk then, and from the ease with which she has been raised the inference is that she was to the bottom without suffering any very serious injury.

The Peresviet (now the Sagami) is reported to have reached Sascho on the 23rd at 3:30 p.m., having made the voyage from Port Arthur with her own machinery. Apparently it was erroneous to state that the Bayan, the Peresviet, the Pallada and the Pallada were to leave Port Arthur on the 17th instant. None of them can have left at that date.

The Korea Daily News of August 12th reports the death of Mr. Uchiyama Rosetsu. The particulars were to hand. The deceased was well known in Yokohama, where he resided many years. He was of Dutch extraction, but was an American citizen when he came to this country, and he became a Japanese subject about twenty years ago. Mr. Uchiyama was married to a daughter of the late Mr. E. B.

MANCHURIA.

Friday, August 19.

Yingkow telegraphs that there are signs of a general engagement commencing, but so far as we can decipher it would seem that this view is based upon the skirmishes connected with the Russian reconnaissances on the 14th instant, which have already been officially reported. It is certain, however, that the rains have ceased, and if either side contemplates a decisive blow, the time is at hand. Meanwhile much activity is reported on the part of the Hungtuts, but their raids appear to be now directed against the Japanese. The millet being now high enough to afford cover such enterprises are encouraged.

An officer who has just returned from the front says that the troops are much discontented at the talk of peace. They think that the Army has been more or less eclipsed by the Navy, and that Linevitch ought to share the fate of Rojestvensky. Besides, the boastful language of Linevitch is exasperated them much and they are "spoiling for a fight." As for the health and fitness of the troops they are excellent. Even the men in the trenches are in a most robust condition. Much of this is doubtless attributable to good sanitary arrangements, but it would also seem that the climate of Manchuria is well suited to the Japanese constitution, and that the Russian predictions as to the effects of the great cold and the great heat were quite unfounded. The Russians themselves are suffering much from disease. They have as many as five or six hundred fresh patients daily and all the stations are crowded with invalids waiting to be sent to the rear. Elsewhere we find it mentioned that owing to the cleanly habits of the Japanese and their careful sanitation the plague of flies, which at first proved a terrible affliction, has been largely diminished.

Saturday, August 19.

General Linevitch reports various small engagements in the west of the field but we not identify his place names. He claims have inflicted a loss of 200 on the Japanese in one instance, having himself only 22 casualties.

He also reports that the Russian troops in North-Eastern Korea have recovered Koryu-san, driving back the Japanese, who were leaving their killed and wounded and abandoning arms and ammunition.

An account from the Nippon's correspondent shows that the advance made by Japanese from Susong to Pulyong on 24th of July and following days is extremely arduous owing to constant rain.

Day after day the downpour was easing, and such floods resulted that the Russian advance guard was cut off from the main body, in which isolated position it had to last several hours and ending in complete repulse of the enemy. The Russian did not clear until the 29th and the Japanese suffered much from want of provisions. As far as we can follow the movements in the quarter, Ko-Phungsan was never occupied by the Japanese and consequently Linevitch's report of its capture is insignificant.

The Hochi Shimbun says that according to the latest reports Russia has 80,000 troops posted on the left bank of the Tumen. It says as though the next big battle would be fought in this region.

Tuesday, August 22.

Telegram to the Fiji Shimpō from the front says that Linevitch has disturbed the calm of the past few days. On the 20th instant he put in motion a force of 4,000 infantry and cavalry with 4 guns. They made their appearance at Sumiaotsz in the Yingepienmun district. The Japanese advanced to meet them and a fight ensued. At 4 p.m. the Russians began to retire and when this message was put on the wires the Japanese were in pursuit.

We shall probably receive presently a very different account of this affair from Russian sources. A Japanese officer, speaking through the columns of the Nichi Nichi Shimbun, says that up to the end of May the reports sent by Linevitch to St. Petersburg were generally accurate and truthful, but that from the time of the destruction of the Baltic Fleet he suddenly developed a strange faculty of exaggeration. The retirement of a Japanese reconnoitering party, which never had any intention of fighting, figured thenceforth in Linevitch's records as a Russian triumph, and if a couple of rifles were found on the field beside dead or wounded Japanese soldiers, the Russian General did not fail to announce a capture of arms and ammunition. It is impossible to escape the conviction that this sudden disposition to magnify trifles was prompted by ulterior motives, and one has no difficulty in understanding that those motives were political. But the hard fact remains on record that all Linevitch's announcements and promises of assuming the offensive and winning a great victory have dwindled down to a few fitful and petty skirmishes. No clearer proof could be afforded of his impotence.

The Military Expert of The Times published at the end of June an estimate of Russia's forces in Manchuria. His calculation was this:—

Infantry	434 battalions.
Cavalry	187 squadrons.
Artillery	203 batteries.
Machine guns	22 "
Special Troops	102 battalions.

Allowing an average of 880 men per battalion, this would mean:—

Infantry	380,000
Cavalry	27,000
Artillery	1,520 guns.
Total	450,000 of all arms.

The Expert further assumed that an additional 40,000 would reach Manchuria before hostilities re-commenced, thus bringing the total to 490,000. But this estimate is disputed by the Kokumin Shimbun. It says that according to Japanese officers the Russian battalion, owing to sickness and casualties, does not average more than 700 men on the most liberal calculation, so that the total force is thus reduced to 410,000.

The Kokumin further states that the Russian Second Army is on the right, southwest of Fenghuwa, its advanced lines being at Pamienching and its commander is General Kaulbars. Mischenko's cavalry forms a screen on the right of Kaulbars. The Third Army under Bachanoff forms the Russian centre and has its headquarters at Fenghuwa. The First Army under Kuropatkin is on the left, and its lines extend from Fenghuwa to Itungchau. Renankamp's forces have their headquarters at Hailungching and form the extreme left of the Russian army. Very strong reserves are posted at Changchung. The advanced lines in the east of the field are from Luiho-ching via Nanshanhintsz and Taolu to Changtu.

Wednesday, August 23.

When publishing the last Japanese report of a skirmish in the vicinity of Sumiaotsz near Hailungching we expressed the anticipation that a different story would come from the Russian side. It has come. Linevitch reports that on the 15th a party of his troops moved out and attacked the Japanese, who speedily retired, firing as they went. This divergence between Japanese reports and Russian reports is becoming very marked. At one time it was confined to tales told by Pflougs and their congeners, who did not fully represent official authority, but now Linevitch himself seems to be treading in the rut of these romancists. Of course these incidents are not of cardinal importance in themselves, but they afford an interesting illustration of the Russian method of reconnoitering. They seem—as the Fiji Shimpō remarks—to labour under the necessity of always making reconnaissances in force. One account says that they sent out four thousand men for the purposes of this Sumiaotsz affair; another speaks of a whole brigade. Whichever account be correct the same inference is suggested, namely, that Linevitch has to entrust to large bodies of men duties which can be much better performed by a subaltern's or a sergeant's command.

The Russians appear to have abandoned, temporarily at all events, their some-time design of turning the Japanese left. No other essay stands to General Linevitch's credit since he assumed the command-in-chief except Mischenko's ride southward to outflank Nogi, a ride which had for issue the destruction of a Japanese field-hospital and some stores. This exploit tended to place the military operations in the same category as the naval, but as an evidence of the great achievements Linevitch has been promising, it seems miserably insignificant. Mischenko and the infantry force supporting him appear—according to Asahi correspondence—to have withdrawn to the Liaoyangwopien lines where, in common with the Russian right, they are drawing ample supplies from Mongolia, and where the rainy season has been utilized for throwing up strong entrenchments. The Russians in the Pamienching region are said to be not by any means so well furnished with provisions, as indeed may easily be conjectured. Now that the wet season is over, it is difficult to imagine that two great armies can lie much longer inactive within easy striking distance of each other.

We may refer here to a telegram in the Nichi Nichi from London. It says that the military correspondent of The Times estimates the Russian forces in the field at 550,000 of all arms, but believes the Japanese to have an army far in excess of anything previously put into the field by them, and predicts that they will inflict on the Russians a blow for which the latter are not prepared.

THE BANK OF JAPAN.

The 46th semi-annual meeting of the Bank of Japan was held at 1 p.m. on Aug. 19th. The accounts for the first half-year were as follows:—

	Yen
Net profit	2,603,745
Balance brought forward from the previous account	462,814
	3,066,559
From the foregoing the following allotments were made:—
	Yen
First dividend	900,000
Second dividend	900,000
Reserve	650,000
Bonus to employees, etc.	170,000

The remainder, yen 446,559 was carried forward to the next account. The net profits for the corresponding periods in 1903 and 1904 were yen 2,023,627 and yen 2,195,476 respectively.

SAGHALIEN.

Saturday, August 19.

It is stated that small bodies of soldiers still continue to defy Japanese authority. They are without refuge and without provisions, but the forests supply the former and they obtain the latter by robbery. To lay hands on them is a matter of great difficulty.

Very possibly these so-called soldiers are in reality the brodyagi, of whom we read so much in that interesting book "The Uttermost East." The Russian authorities never managed to keep these semi-outlaws in control, and now that the island has passed into the hands of people probably without records as to the numbers and localities of the brodyagi, who, further, have probably received a large accession of strength, in the shape of recently escaped convicts a difficult situation has been created.

Three transports have reached Awomori having on board 3,450 prisoners.

Colonel Koizumi, who has just returned from Saghalien to Awomori, is quoted (Asahi Shimbun) as saying that there was nothing like real fighting in the island. The Russians had sufficient force to make a much more obstinate resistance, but General Liapoff does not appear to be a man of war and his staff officers did not seem to render him much aid. Colonel Tarasenko, who commanded at Alexandrofska, was the only really effective leader on the Russian side. The criminals, with the exception of about 120 who were undergoing light sentences, escaped from the jails, or were released, at the time of the attack. Many of them returned and gave themselves up when they learned how their comrades were treated by the Japanese. A number of the convicts offered resistance at first and were all killed, which was perhaps a fortunate result. When the Russians found that prisoners received a kindly welcome from the victors, surrenders became frequent, and a common saying when a patrol went out was that it would catch some human fish before its return. There remain about 1,200 non-combatants who wish to be sent home. The original idea was to send these people over to the Maritime Province, but as there would be little opportunity for them to make their way thence to Russia, that project has been abandoned and no decision has yet been taken. The Japanese are employing the services of Russian officials, as the latter's knowledge of local conditions is most useful.

Monday, August 21.

Colonel Koizumi says that the Russians, at the time of their surrender southward of Rykoff, asked that all the officers should be allowed to retain their swords. This was refused, the Japanese considering that such a privilege should be granted to the senior officers only. Some disposition was shown by the Russians to demur. They claimed treatment similar to that accorded to the Port Arthur garrison. But it was pointed out that the circumstances were entirely different. The Port Arthur garrison had resisted to the bitter end whereas the Saghalien troops had done little more than retreat. To this view the Russians had to bow. Asked how many were prepared to surrender, they answered, some three thousand; a reply, says Colonel Koizumi, which astonished us, for the force sent in pursuit was much less than 3,000 and if the Russians had fought resolutely they might have made a formidable resistance. Altogether it was calculated that they had ten thousand men under arms on the island, and the poor fight they put up seems almost as though it were attributable to previous conviction of defeat. Fortune certainly favoured the Japanese. They had eight consecutive days of fine weather after landing. Their plan of attack, too, completely disconcerted the Russian scheme of defence. The Russians, expecting the brunt of the assault at Alexandrofska, posted their main force there and sent only a detachment to Alkowa. But the Japanese directed their main force to Alkowa and sent a detachment to Alexandrofska. The result was that the Russians were practically taken in the rear. None the less they made a very inadequate showing. It was found, the Colonel continues, that nearly all the principal buildings in Alexandrofska, Dui and Rykoff were government property, which greatly facilitated matters for the invaders. Several of the settlers—convict settlers presumably—came in and announced their desire to remain in the island. They are now rendering valuable assistance to the Japanese. The Colonel relates that the waters teem with fish to an extent beyond anything previously reported. The soldiers catch salmon in the rivers without difficulty and these make a notable addition to their rations. Potatoes grow in a manner not witnessed anywhere in Japan, and oats and apples do splendidly. There is no kakke among the natives. The fact that the Japanese troops suffered from it seems to be due to their having been exposed to wet in landing and in wading rivers.

The question of how to dispose of the convicts appears to be still unsettled. So far as our reading goes there were practically only two classes of inhabitants in the island when the Japanese landed, namely officials and convicts. We are not speaking, of course, of the Giljak, the Orochon, the Ainu, the Tungu and the Yakut. These aborigines, a very scanty number, would naturally remain undisturbed. But the Russian section of the population, whether in the position of actual prisoners, of "free commands" (ticket-of-leave men), or "exile settlers," are all convicts or ex-convicts. As to the proportion of political prisoners, statistics show that out of a total of 7,080 men and women engaged in hard labour on the island in 1898, only 76 were under punishment for political offences. The rest were all criminals of the worst type, and the same was true of the "free commands and exile settlers" who lived outside the prisons. It may be noted here that according to the Russian system, a convict, even after the expiration of his original term of punishment, has to spend six years on the island before he is permitted to cross to the continent, and must undergo a further term of six years' probation on the continent before he is allowed to return to Russia. All accounts agree that the state of morality on the island was of the very worst. Murders and robberies were perpetual, and crimes of a nameless character reached almost incredible proportions. This is the state of affairs to which the Japanese have succeeded. The ex-prison population, too, must be now larger than ever, for it is stated that nearly the whole of the convicts under confinement at the time of the invasion either were released or broke out of jail, and it is obviously impossible for the Japanese to re-arrest these fugitives since they can not be distinguished from the members of the free commands and exile settlers. The Asahi Shimbun is very insistent that not a moment should be lost in deporting the whole of this convict population, but it is evidently a big problem, not to be lightly taken in hand. The mere transport of some thirty thousand persons to the mainland is a great undertaking, and they can not be dumped down on the shores of Primorsk without arrangements for their subsequent fate. Evidently it is essential that they should be handed over to duly constituted authority and one does not see where such authority can be found. Russian official co-operation is essential, but Russian official co-operation will certainly not be given so long as the future ownership of the island is in question.

THE RUSSIAN NATIONAL ASSEMBLY.

Wolf's News Agency telegraphs (Foreign Office) that on the 19th instant an Ukase was issued in Russia of which the following is the prologue:—"Unity and agreement between ruler and ruled is the great material force which preserves the independence of the Empire, secures its prosperity and gives it strength. By a proclamation on the 26th of February, 1903, and other notifications I endeavoured to strengthen the foundations of the State and to bring the elective local bodies in accord with the existing Government departments, inasmuch as dissensions between them had inflicted great misfortune upon the Empire. My ancestors also pursued an autocratic policy made their great object. But now in pursuing that purpose, the time has come to nominate representatives who will have a permanent share in enacting laws. Thus I propose to form a special consultative machine and shall draft laws and discuss them, and shall revise the budget. In order to carry out this purpose, I, while preserving the fundamental law of autocratic authority, consider it opportune to create a national assembly and to sanction rules for its constitution. The application of these rules shall be extended to all parts of the Empire with the exception of certain regions where the conditions do not permit such a measure. With regard to the participation of the representatives of Finland in the business of the national assembly no arrangements will be made. The Ministry of Home Affairs will be instructed to compile and submit election laws. I hope to see the national assembly opened at latest by the middle of January, 1906, during the existence of the assembly necessity arises for changing its organization in consequence of the demands of the Empire or the prosperity of the Empire, I shall whatever orders the occasion may require."

The subsequent part of the Ukase contains the following clause:—

"I am fully persuaded that the representatives betraying the confidence I place in them, in order to promote the unity of the Empire and the interests of the people's prosperity and tranquility, will be in full accord with the existing bureaucratic system and will obey that principle."

The Ukase relating to the national assembly contains 63 Articles, of which the following seem to be the most important:—

(a) The assembly will be competent with regard to the undermentioned matters:—

- (1) Questions relating to the enacting of new laws or the amendment and abolition of existing laws.
- (2) The budget of each Department of State and the expenditures included in the budget.
- (3) Reports of financial auditors with regard to the operation of the budget.
- (4) Questions relating to the abandonment of part of the State income.
- (5) The national wealth.
- (6) The building of railways.
- (7) The establishment of joint-stock companies. That is to say, in cases only where the law applies for exemption from the existing laws.
- (8) The assembly will have power to propose drafts of law relating to the abolition or amendment of existing laws. Provided that these draft shall not conflict with the bases of public order determined by the fundamental law of the State. A draft of law which has been adopted by the assembly shall be submitted to the Imperial Council and shall then be offered for the Emperor's approval. If the Council can not agree with a resolution of the assembly, such resolution shall be submitted for discussion by a committee consisting of equal numbers of the Council and the assembly; and if this committee can not agree, the measure shall be again submitted to the Council.

(c) The assembly shall be competent to address questions to the Departments of State. Further, the period of membership shall be 5 years; the members shall enjoy freedom of speech; shall have the right not to be arrested for absence, and their liberty shall not be curtailed by sentence of a law court.

This Ukase seems to be regarded with dissatisfaction on all sides. Professor Reussler, writing in the New Free Press, says that the system proposed is altogether wrong, and that it is a mere sham constitution. It will not satisfy a single unit of the liberal opposition, and there can be no question of the attitude they will adopt towards it. The conservatives will doubtless combine with the advocates of the existing system and the minority in the local assemblies to utilize this new constitution as a means of creating dissension among the revolutionists, and endeavouring to contrive the organization of a national assembly which will do as the autocracy desires. The moderates will offer a passive resistance and the liberals will attack the measure vehemently.

The German newspapers, for the most part, while regarding the Rescript as a step towards the establishment of a constitutional system, contend that the new assembly will be nothing more than a consultative body. Thus the Vossische Zeitung says that the Tsar's views have not undergone any change, and that he still regards himself as almighty. It will be strongly argued that the proposed assembly's powers of introducing bills, asking questions and revising the budget are mere pretences, but nothing of which the Emperor disapproves will be carried out. Telegrams from St. Petersburg published in Berlin say that the Russian newspapers are obliged to print praises of the Tsar's benevolent administration, but this new system is very far from satisfying the people's hopes. They looked at least for freedom of speech, pen and public meeting.

In Vienna the journals take the same line. The New Free Press declares that neither the disasters which his forces have suffered by land and by sea nor the sufferings of his subjects have taught the Tsar anything. The people regard the bureaucracy as the origin of all abuses, but the new assembly will be simply a consultative machine, to whose utterances the Tsar need not pay any attention and which will not produce any effect upon the bureaucracy. Indeed, so far from dealing a blow to the bureaucrats, it is to them and not to the national assembly that His Majesty has left the task of carrying out reforms. The Ukase declares that the autocratic system must be preserved as a law of the State, but the only thing preserved will be the rotten bureaucracy. Nevertheless these journals hope that the measure now enacted may prove the first step towards a liberal policy.

PETROPAYLOVSK.

The meagre telegram published by the Naval Authorities to the effect that a detached naval squadron has captured the Russian transport Australia in Petropavlovsk harbour, leaves much to be conjectured. We are unable to determine whether a landing was effected or whether the place is now in Japanese hands. Petropavlovsk was the first port on the Pacific occupied by Russia.

It stands on the Bay of Avacha, which has been described as surpassing in beauty and grandeur the celebrated harbours of Rio Janeiro and Sydney. It encloses numbers of islands, is protected on three sides by high volcanic mountains, being open only on the east, and has water sufficiently deep to allow vessels to unload at the quays. When it was attacked by an Anglo-French squadron in 1854, Petropavlovsk had 7 batteries mounting 39 guns, but of its present strength we have no certain information. Probably, however, the Japanese did not find it strongly protected for the place ceased to be considered important after Nikolaievsk, near the mouth of the Amur, became the Russian chief town in the Far East. Nikolaievsk shared the same fate when Vladivostok was established, and Vladivostok would doubtless have fared similarly had Dalny remained in Russian hands. It is scarcely likely that the Japanese have landed any troops on the shores of Avacha Bay. In two months from now the harbour will begin to be blocked with ice, and an isolated detachment of troops posted there among such circumstances, would be most troublesome to maintain throughout the winter. Probably, therefore, what has occurred is merely a naval operation without the cooperation of troops, but inasmuch as the place was supposed to be fortified the details will be interesting. When the despatch of a naval detachment in the Kamchatka direction was announced some time ago, an idea prevailed that Nikolaievsk might be its destination. But the approaches to Nikolaievsk by the Amur estuary are exceedingly tortuous and difficult. Moreover, the place is fortified and doubtless there is a pretty strong garrison or, at any rate, there ought to be, unless Linevitch has singularly neglected obvious precautions.

Japanese journals say that the steamer Australia, captured in the harbour of Petropavlovsk, is probably a vessel of 2,000 tons, which is known in these seas.

YOKOHAMA AND TOKYO.

The two problems of dredging the approaches to the Sumida river in Tokyo and improving Yokohama harbour seem to be attracting a considerable share of public attention. We read in the Fiji Shimpō that on the 12th instant a meeting to discuss the latter subject was held in the chamber of the Prefectural Assembly. Members of that Assembly, of the Town Council, and of the Chamber of Commerce attended, to the number of about 80. The Mayor of Yokohama, Mr. Ichihara, addressed the meeting. He pointed out that the officials of the Government, as well as Count Okuma, fully recognised the necessity of improving the harbour. Count Okuma, indeed, had said that a time of war was particularly favourable for inaugurating such enterprises, as men's minds were in an expansive and daring condition. The Mayor therefore urged that the citizens of Yokohama should lose no time in completing their investigations. The result was the election of a special committee of eleven. Referring to this incident the Nichi Nichi Shimbun writes editorially. It notes the extraordinary development of the Japanese mercantile marine in recent years. In 1895 the number of vessels borne on the Japanese register was 528 steamers of 331,000 tons and 173 sailing ships of 29,000 tons; or a total of 701 ships and 360,000 tons. But the latest statistics show that the steamers have increased to 1,309 representing 882,000 tons, and the sailing ships to 3,564, representing 323,000 tons, or a total of 4,873 vessels and 1,205,000 tons.

In ten years there has been more than a three-fold increase. At the same time, the country's foreign trade having developed largely, there has been a corresponding growth of foreign vessels entering Japanese ports. In 1895 the number of such vessels was 1,142 and their tonnage 2,210,000 tons, but in 1904 the corresponding figures were 4,504 ships and 10,270,000 tons. In the face of such statistics the necessity of harbour improvement becomes imperative. In the whole of Japan—we still quote the Nichi Nichi—there is not one harbour that can be called perfect. At Osaka harbour works are in progress to which the State has contributed 5 million yen and the city 15 millions, but a further expenditure of 10 millions will be required, and the enterprise is only half way towards completion. Some years ago a large measure of State aid was given to Yokohama. The harbour was dredged and breakwaters were built, but since that time virtually nothing has been done. For twenty years Tokyo harbour has been one of the questions of the day, but when a beginning of actual work will be made, it is hard to tell. Even the expenditure of a paltry 2 million yen on dredging the approaches to the Sumida River seems to be counted a serious undertaking. It is a poor state of affairs when we remember that Japan is a maritime country. When peace will be restored no one can tell, but when it is restored trade will certainly receive a great impetus and this question of harbours will become more pressing than ever. It is a question with which Tokyo and Yokohama are intimately connected, and now that the Yokohama citizens seem to be waking up, it is high time for Tokyo to open its eyes.

FUNERAL OF BARON SANNOMIYA.

The funeral of Baron Sannomiya took place on the 18th instant, the cortege leaving the residence of the deceased nobleman in Takanawa at 3.30 p.m., and proceeding to the Hongwan-ji in Tsukiji, which was reached at 5.15. In anticipation of the very large number of mourners who would certainly attend to pay the last tribute to one so widely loved and respected, it had been suggested that instead of repairing in the first place to Takanawa, where the available space is naturally restricted, the Hongwan-ji Temple should be the place of assembly. The public obeyed this suggestion, and thus though the spacious enclosure of the Tsukiji edifice was crowded to overflowing, not more than thirty carriages actually followed the bier on its way thither. The Hongwan-ji is an immense building. Probably some fifteen hundred seats were ranged on either side of the aisle, yet vast spaces remained unoccupied. Large bodies of troops, a battalion in all, marched at the head and in rear of the procession and the floral offerings were countless. The service was Buddhist. It consisted simply of the chanting of some verses from the Sūtras by a numerous band of richly robed priests, after which incense was burned and a word of prayer whispered before the bier first by the relatives of the deceased and then by the whole body of mourners. To write any list of those present would be quite impossible without devoting a whole column to the task. It will be sufficient to say that most of the Ministers of State and all the foreign Chefs de Mission now in Tokyo, as well as an innumerable concourse of the capital's leading residents, official and private, were present.

KOREA.

Our readers have observed, doubtless, that from time to time statements were heard as to the probability that Korea's coast-wise carrying trade would be thrown open to Japanese vessels, and if to Japanese vessels, then also to the vessels of Powers having the most-favoured-nation clause in their treaties. Korea has now had a space of 30 years to develop and organize a mercantile marine of her own, were she so minded, and had she showed any serious disposition to do so, Japan would doubtless have made no attempt to prevent her from imposing on the competition of foreign vessels such restrictions as all Powers have considered essential in the early stages of their development. The Koreans, however, seem wholly indifferent to such questions. Sometimes they are visited by fitful impulses of patriotism which prompt them to turn from the supposed exactions of one foreign State to the ambitious egotism of another, but the idea of putting their own shoulders to the wheel and working out their own salvation seems to be hopelessly strange to them. Meanwhile the interests of other Powers, especially Japan, require that facilities should be provided for maritime carriage along the coasts and in the inland waters of the peninsula, and thus finally, after considerable delay, the convention above alluded to has been concluded. It seems to have received a great deal of hesitating thought from Korea's statesmen and opposition at the hands of the anti-Japanese section. The terms of the convention are simple. It provides that Japanese vessels may ply for trade purposes along the coasts and in the inland waters of Korea, not calling, however, at places other than the open ports. For that purpose they are required to furnish various information to the Japanese Consul and to receive permits once a year from the Korean Customs authorities. In exchange for these permits tonnage dues have to be paid at the following rates:—For a vessel (foreign style or Japanese) up to 100 tons, 15 yen; for a vessel from 100 to 500 tons, 50 yen; from 500 to 1,000 tons, 100 yen, and over 1,000 tons, 150 yen. The permits must always be carried and must be produced whenever demanded by Customs or local officials. Owners of Japanese ships are to be entitled to rent land, build store-houses and (with the approval of the Customs authorities) construct wharves at the ports of call. Penalties are set forth for violations of the Convention, and its period of validity is fixed at 15 years. But there is a provision that, in the event of future development of Korea's mercantile marine, the convention may be replaced by another even before the expiration of that period.

The Cabinet Ministers have not resumed the duties of their offices in Seoul in spite of the relegation of Mr. Li Yong-ik to a provincial post. It was expected that Mr. Hayashi would seek audience of the Emperor on the 19th, and would address His Majesty very plainly on the subject of this dead-lock.

Mr. Li Keun-thaik, Minister of Finance, the great opponent of Li Yong-ik, has also been relieved of office, on the principle of impartiality doubtless. But this has not mended matters. Confusion still reigns supreme. It is a fertile soil in which to sow the seeds of reform, forsooth!

The merchants are not yet tranquillized. Having failed to get the Household Department's cheques cashed, they have again closed their stores and reverted to their original demand, a loan of 3 million yen without interest, without security and for an indefinite period.

In the Korea Review for July there is an article entitled "Japanese Plans for Korea." The writer is the editor of the magazine. We quote a few extracts:—

With a desire to state both sides of the case with perfect fairness we have made careful inquiries as to the attitude of Japanese officials here towards the unlawful acts of their nationals and also as to what steps are being taken in Tokyo to meet these conditions. The result has been a pleasant surprise to us, and while time alone will tell whether our optimism is justified we feel inclined to set down in black and white the reasons for the hope we have that the night is nearly over."

We are informed that the authorities in Tokyo consider it of prime importance that there should be established in many places in Korea courts of appeal, where all cases between Koreans and Japanese can be attended to fairly and promptly. * * * For this purpose 24 men have been appointed, all of them specially selected for their fitness for the work. * * *

It goes without saying that the Korean Government puts every possible obstacle in the way of every such action, on the ground that it impairs the independence of the country. * * * The Korean prefects are either absolutely supine or are in league with the worst elements of the Japanese. * * * There is every reason to believe that some if not many of the Koreans' complaints are grossly exaggerated. They have all to be looked into very carefully, and we all know that the Korean is not likely to look at his grievance through the big end of the telescope. * * *

"While we strongly advocate the preservation of Korea's independence it must be apparent to every one that unless very radical reforms are instituted such independence will be of no value at all to the Korean people. * * * Her officials ought to know by this time that their only hope is to fall in line with the plans for reform which Japan is preparing. They may rest assured that they will lose the sympathy of all the Powers unless they begin to show a different spirit towards reorganization from that which they have recently shown. * * * If such senseless opposition is to continue and genuine reforms are to be held off indefinitely we shall be the first to welcome a Japanese protectorate."

This writing indicates a wholesale change in the outlook of the Korea Review, and we congratulate that magazine on its receptivity to evidence controverting its previous criticisms. At the same time we can not forget that this evidence has been always accessible, and that it might have been sooner consulted with advantage.

There is a statement from Seoul that a sum of 900,000 yen has been found in the residence of Li Yong-ik, whose removal from the central government to a provincial post was recently announced. Accounts differ about this money, but the most credible story seems to be that a sum of 930,000 yen in 50-sen silver pieces was handed over by Mr. Hayashi to the Korean Finance Department, and that it found its way to the residence of the Minister of War, Li Yong-ik, but whether as a mere matter of convenience of deposit or with some ulterior motive there is no certainty. Rumour says that Li made some attempt to remove the 400 boxes containing the metal, but that he was prevented by Japanese gendarmes. Li himself is said to have disappeared. He has not taken up his provincial appointment, but is hiding somewhere. The strong probability is that nothing dishonest was contemplated in connexion with this money.

Mr. Hayashi is said to be urging the organization of a cabinet which shall at least have the character of a united body. We do not clearly discern that anything definite has yet been accomplished in that direction.

Simultaneously with the publication in the Japanese Official Gazette of the new convention opening Korea's cabotage, news comes that a Korean patriot, deeming this an injury to his country, broke into the residence of Mr. Li Hwa-yong, Minister of Foreign Affairs in Seoul, and administered a beating to His Excellency. The ruffian was immediately arrested.

Rumour says that many Koreans are now turning to Christianity as a refuge from the perils of the time.

It is expected that the Seoul-Wiju Railway will be opened for general traffic next month. The construction of this road, 300 miles long, has been quite an engineering feat when we consider the remarkably short time required for the work.

The first number of the resuscitated Korea Daily News appeared on Aug. 11th.

Seoul can now boast of two newspapers—a daily and a weekly—the former edited and published by Mr. E. T. Bethell, the latter issued by the Seoul Press, Hodge & Co.

Let the Government, says the Seoul Weekly Press, if it wishes to be considered a Government, indeed, listen to the well-meant advice of Japan to thoroughly reform its present system of so-called "justice," which to the common people only too often spells "Injustice!"

On Monday, Aug. 14th, the Korea Daily News had the following paragraph:—"We learn from a Chemulpo correspondent that the funeral of the late Mr. Uchiyama Rossetsu took place at 5 p.m. yesterday, the Rev. G. A. Bridle conducting the ceremonies. Practically all the residents of Chemulpo attended and numerous wreaths covered the coffin. Our sympathies go out to Mrs. Uchiyama Rossetsu in her affliction. Mr. Uchiyama Rossetsu had many friends and no enemies."

Mr. Megata, the Financial Adviser to the Korean Government, has presented a memorial to the Emperor with regard to the recent loss given to the Korean merchants by his Majesty, a which he impeaches the Minister of Finance for having acted arbitrarily in the matter. Mr. Megata states that the Minister relieved the merchants under pressure. Secondly he expresses his disapproval of the Emperor's conduct in thus ordering his Minister to deal with financial matters without first referring to him in the matter, whose peculiar province it is. At the same time Mr. Megata sent a remonstrance to the Vice-President of the State Council stating his disapproval, and hoping that in future, his consent and signature will be requested before the signing of any official documents be agreed upon.

Seoul papers report that on Aug. 9th a large crowd, estimated at about 2,000, assembled at the Home Office in Seoul for the purpose of seeking redress in consequence of the appropriation of land in what is known as the "Five Rivers" district by the Japanese military authorities. Japanese gendarmes endeavoured to disperse the crowd but had to wound several persons with their swords before they could attain that end. One of the contemporaries said on Aug. 12th:—"We have just been informed that yesterday the Japanese Military Authorities intended to put up a notice containing a map of the land in question and a proclamation stating that 'it is necessary for us to occupy the land indicated in this map for military purposes, and ample compensation will be paid to the Korean Home Office for the same. The people who own houses and property within the space indicated must remove them after having received their share of the compensation if not we shall remove them ourselves.'"

J. Onda (49) on the night of Aug. 19 attempted to murder a widow, Yoshi Fujii (44), inflicting severe injuries on her head with a cooking knife. The affair took place in the dwelling of the woman at Tamachi, Asakusa, Tokyo. The culprit was arrested on Sunday morning. The cause is reported by the Shitaya police to be jealousy.

THE "JIJI" ON SAGHALIEN.

The Jiji Shimpō has a strong and eloquent article on the subject of Saghalien. Nothing is more repugnant to our contemporary than the idea of surrendering the island. Its loss thirty years ago made a distinct flaw in the golden vessel of the Empire's existence—here the Jiji quotes an ancient Chinese proverb—and the nation feels that in recovering the island, something has been obtained which can be laid with gratification on the ancestral tombs. It is not a question of large or small. It is a question of honour. The Jiji's own programme would have been to continue the war until not only Saghalien but also Vladivostok and Primorsk fell into Japanese possession: not because this country suffers from any earth fever, but because the lessons of the past have shown that if all menace from the northern quarter is to be averted, if peace is to be permanent, Japan must be complete mistress of Japanese seas. Before that solid result could be secured, proposals of peace intervened and now Japan's aims must be limited to seating herself in such a position that the seas washing her western and north-western shores shall be virtually a Japanese lake. That is accomplished by the tenure of Saghalien. Saghalien in Japanese possession means that Vladivostok is deprived of half its value as a naval port, and Russia's aggressive potentialities, if not completely destroyed, are at least checked.

Reading between the lines of this article and considering the time of its publication we incline to think that our contemporary detects a disposition to sacrifice Saghalien on the altar of peace.

POLITICIANS AND THE PEACE CONFERENCE.

The Japanese, as has been their wont in every phase of this great war, have remained remarkably undemonstrative in the presence of the peace conference and the conditions formulated by the Government. We noted in the recent issue that the Yomiuri Shimbun, a moderate and well edited journal closely connected with the Progressists, had sounded a note very like discontent with regard to the terms, and had even gone so far as to say that, in view of these terms, the Japanese nation would not be disappointed though the conference came to naught. On the whole, however, it must be admitted that the press has been wonderfully quiet and undemonstrative. Outside its columns too, reticence has been the mot d'ordre. Daily we have been expecting to hear from Mr. Oishi Masami, Viscount Tani or some other stalwart. Nothing like a clamour was raised, however, until the 17th when a meeting of fellow-thinkers (Doshu-Kai) was held in Tokyo. When we say that the most prominent figure was Mr. Kono Hironaka, our readers will at once be in a position to infer the quality of the gathering. The first resolution passed was to the effect that the conditions of peace formulated by the Government were already too considerate, and that if any reduction were made the remainder would not suffice to re-establish tranquillity as a permanency. The second resolution reads something like reflection on the inactivity of the army. Mr. Kono and his friends think that the army should not stay its hand for a moment, and that the success of the conference can be best secured by an object, lesson in the shape of striking military operations. Finally the meeting decided to send a telegram to Baron Komura urging him to make no concession whatever. This is a kind of counter-blast to the warlike petition addressed by the popes to the Tsar. We have not had, on the Japanese side, anything corresponding to the bellicose memorial of Linevitch and his Generals. There is a rumour that such a document has been addressed to the Mikado by the commanding officers in the field, but we have no definite information. We can only say that if such a document has been sent in, it remains a secret. Talking is not a Japanese propensity.

NOTES ON CURRENT EVENTS.

There seems to be no doubt that M. Witte is holding conferences with the leading Jewish bankers of New York and Chicago, though it is denied that these meetings have had any relation to financial affairs. The plea is that they relate merely to the status and treatment of the Jews in Russia, a question which reflects indelible disgrace on Russian civilization. Much has been written about the bund, a self-defensive association organized by the Jews to protect themselves against the pogroms, and some publicists have endeavoured to show that as the bund is in open sympathy with the liberals and revolutionists it brings upon the Jews an access of official antipathy instead of averting the shocking inhumanities perpetrated against this much-suffering people. But if the Jews have been driven into the revolutionary camp by the terrible barbarities of which they are the victims, that fact does not for one instant justify the continued perpetration of such barbarities. M. Witte, as an enlightened and liberal statesman, must ardently desire to correct a state of affairs so disgraceful to his country, and therefore there is ample reason for his conference with the leading Jews of New York and Chicago. The public, however, choose to be suspicious and to regard any promises of assistance he may give to the Jews as preludes to financial aid for Russia on their side. That too is likely enough.

The Naval Department has published the following list of casualties in the Navy from the beginning of the war up to the 15th of August, exclusive of those in the Northern (Kataoka's) Squadron:—

EVENTS.		CASUALTIES.
		Killed.	Wounded.	Totals.
Port Arthur, 9 Feb. 1904 ...		3	69	72
Battle of Yellow Sea, 10 Aug. 1904		65	161	226
Battle of Ulsan, 14 Aug. 1904		36	96	132
Naval Brigade Port Arthur, 26 June to 31 Dec. 1904		30	313	343
Battle in Sea of Japan, 27 and 28 of May 1905		88	611	699
Various small operations ...		1,669	541	2,210
Totals		1,891	1,791	3,682
WOUNDED, DETAIL.
EVENTS.		Deaths from wounds.
		Died from wounds.	Re-converted from service.	Released from service.	Still in service.
Port Arthur, 9 Feb. 1904 ...		6	59	3	1
Battle of Yellow Sea, 10 Aug. 1904		6	133	17	5
Battle of Ulsan, 14 Aug. 1904		10	80	3	3
Naval Brigade Port Arthur, 26 June to 31 Dec. 1904		27	258	20	8
Battle in Sea of Japan, 27 and 28 of May 1905		29	470	—	112
Various small operations ...		39	470	30	3
Totals		117	1,470	73	131

Bishop Isaac W. Joyce, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, died at his home in Minneapolis at 1.20 o'clock on the morning of July 28, from cerebral hemorrhage following a stroke of paralysis. He was preaching at the Red Rock, Minn., camp meeting on July 2nd when he was first stricken. Bishop Joyce, who was 69 years of age, was presiding Bishop in China and Japan about six years ago, and had been a very extensive traveller.

The Naval Authorities announce that the Russian war-ships raised at Port Arthur and Chemulpo have been re-named as follows:—

Old Name.	New Name.
Peresviet	Sagami
Poltava	Tango
Boyan	Aso
Pallada	Tsugaru
Varyag	Soya

Two centres of depression are moving about Japan, one in the west, the other in the east. Neither is deep, and there are no apprehensions of strong wind, but wet hard weather is anticipated, and the effect upon the rice crop can not be wholesome.

Lieut.-General Okihara and 190 officers proceeded to the Palace on the 22nd instant and were received in audience by the Emperor. Among the officers were Major-Generals Ota and Matsunaga. The two Major-Generals recently received their promotion from the rank of Colonel. The Jiji Shimpō publishes photographs of the Lieut.-General and the two Major-Generals.

There is some talk of a State monopoly of sugar being added to the other official undertakings. It is understood that the matter is under consideration, and that sufficient information has not yet been obtained as to whether the revenue of the State would derive greater benefit from a monopoly or from an increased tax. The Government aims at deriving an addition of 20 million yen to the Treasury's income from this source, and our readers doubtless remember that the matter received some consideration at the time of the last budget's compilation. Those directly interested in the industry of sugar-refining appear to think that a surer and less troublesome result, involving no initial outlay of capital, would be to add 3 sen per catty to the present consumption tax. They are represented as saying that such an addition would not seriously inconvenience consumers, and as the quantity consumed in 1903 was 657,324,000 catties, an additional tax of 3 sen would produce nearly 20 million yen. Probably most people will be of opinion that the establishment of another State monopoly should be avoided if possible. The system of State monopolies is essentially bad, and ought to be eschewed except in the presence of dire necessity.

According to a London telegram received at the Foreign Office, on August 22nd quotations for Japanese bonds are as follows:—

4 per cent.	£88.10.0	Stationary.
War 4 per cent.	£103.6.9	do
5 per cent.	£103.9.2	25h. 7d. fall.
6 per cent.	£104.0.0	Stationary.
New 6 per cent.	£103.0.0	3/4 fall.
4 1/2 per cent.	£92.15.0	1/4 fall.
do (prem.)	1 1/2%	Stationary.

The message adds that the price of 4 per cent. Russian bonds was at £89, which shows a fall of 10 shillings.

A submarine cable has been laid from Alexandrofska to Soya where it communicates with the Japanese land-line via Hakodate and Awamori.

The great ceramic factory of Doulton has succeeded in producing a monochrome glaze which very closely imitates the celebrated

Lang-yao of China. Nothing can be said against the colour. It is very fine, and for decorative purposes the ware should be highly satisfactory. Yet it falls short of its great original. There is a lack of depth and restfulness, qualities for which every connoisseur looks alike in the sang-de-bœuf, the liquid-dawn and the bean-blossom monochromes of China. We believe that it is a question of process. The English keramist applies his glazing material to the pâte déglazée; a practically easy method, for the porcelain then takes up just the right quantity of glaze and the latter can then be fixed at a comparatively low temperature. Moreover, the pâte, already hardened in the oven before the glazing process, can be readily manipulated. But the Chinese keramist applied his glazing material to the raw paste, and subjected both pâte and glaze to the same temperature in the kiln. Probably he thus obtained a more intimate association of the two, though the difficulties of handling and the risks of failure were largely increased. At all events, whether this difference of process be accountable or whether there be some other hitherto unexplained cause. Messrs. Doulton and Company's monochrome, beautiful as it is, falls short of its Chinese original, not in point of colour, for it is as near the cherry-red of King-te-ching as need be, but in the subtle qualities which make the Chinese ware incomparable. Nevertheless the Doulton achievement is signal. It suggests that we are on the threshold of a new departure in English ceramics.

The Asahi Shinbun announces in big type that a landslide caused by the recent rains has disclosed a stratum of fine coal at Port Arthur and that there is every indication of an abundant supply. The locality is about 2½ miles from Pigeon Bay so that no difficulties of transport present themselves. If this intelligence prove correct the discovery is highly important. Port Arthur will be invested with largely increased value.

A STORY OF KARUIZAWA.

O dewy shadows on the soft green grass,
O English lanes where white thorn bursts in May,
O distant church-spires pointing up to God
Out of the sleeping fields and murky streets.
Sorely I miss you in this Eastern land.
Here, where I stand among old Temple trees
And gaze on yonder far grey mountain-tops
Melting into the blueness of the sky.
Much in there here of beauty, but my heart
Yearns for a glimpse of English fields again,
Seen from the grassy slope of some small hill,
Where nestling lambs look white like Easter flowers.
The hills around me rear their heads on high
Proudly and grandly, like to old-time Kings,
And yet I can not love them, like to those Small swelling hillocks, where I wandered free,
And searched for primroses and violets,
Or yellow cowslips, with faint breath as sweet
As that of little children when they kiss.
Beauty without association brings
A sense of vague unrestfulness and pain.
I can not say these mountain tops were viewed
And loved by my own people long ago.
They never saw the yellow sun ball sink
Behind the pine trees crowning yonder ridge,
They never heard the Eastern nightingale
Sing night and morning with unwearied throat.
If I could say some poet loved these woods,
And murmured silvery sonnets to this stream,
Or loved the voices of the cicada,
Breaking upon the stillness of the air,
As though God wound the clocks of life by night,
I might see beauty and feel satisfied.
Yet there are legends of these very woods,

And ghosts of ancient lineage frighten still
The errand boy belated on his task.
And even now the nervous villagers
Would rather walk an extra mile or two
Than pass these rustling chestnuts after dark.
And there are tales of bygone mighty kings
Who passed this village in their journeyings,
With cavalades of ancient Samurai.
They never pass it now.—The engine's shriek
A mile or more across the flower'd plain
Would frighten them.—Poor ancient Samurai.
If one walks to the top of Usui pass
One comes upon a village, once the spot
Where old time pilgrims halted for the view.
There rise black rugged mountains, range on range,
With sea-like clouds breaking about their feet.
And sleeping silver rivers, noiselessly
Winding among the nearer greener hills.
There is a temple in this village street.
To reach it one must climb a flight of steps;
From which there is the finest view of all.
The temple's self is old but little worth.
A Shinto temple with a looking glass
Made out of polished metal, and a bell
Which people ring who wish to say their prayers.
Upon the right side of the temple gate
There is a stone upon another stone,
A moss-grown monument of rude design,
With characters too old and worn to read.
About this monument the legend runs—
There lived in ancient times a warrior king,
Who won the wrath of some malicious god
Who thereupon decreed that he should die—
Just in the way that gods were wont to do.
But in a fit of mercy, so they say,
He qualified his sentence partially,
By saying if the king could find a friend
To die in place of him—that death would serve.
Admetos-like this ancient warrior king
Besought his comrades one by one to die.
Not that he was himself afraid of death
But that he thought his life was needed most.
And though his comrades were brave men at arms
Vicarious death seems little to their taste.
The king then full of sorrow made lament
And as he wept his queen beheld his tears,
And asked of him the reason of his grief.
And hearing, sorrowed that her lord should die.
But humbly bade him make the most of life
And grace a feast she had prepared for him.
The royal tents were pitched near to a cliff
Which overhangs the clear far stretching sea.
Musicians sang sweet wailful melodies
And wrestler giants showed their mighty skill,
And silken banners fluttered on the breeze.
The queen sat by her lord all fitly dressed
In stiff brocade brodered with cherry flowers
And golden peacocks and blue water-falls.
And in her hair she wore a golden comb.
And when the revelry was at its height,
And all the lacquered tables richly spread
With dried persimmons, bean-paste and strange sweets
Shaped like to gay chrysanthemums and stars,
And he her lord quaffed saké merrily,
Slowly she rose, and unseen slipped away.
She reached the top of the tall mantling cliff
And there in rapture gazed towards the sea
And slowly sinking, Midas-fingered sun.
'Twas then perhaps she shed a tear or two,
Because the sun was fair to look upon
Or that her lord should sorrow at her death.
Her women missed her from their master's side
And sought her by the cliffs along the sea
But found her not. But when the sun rode high
Above the purple hill-tops in the east,
They found a golden comb upon the sands.
Then when her lord knew that his queen was dead
He mourned for her for many weary days.
And started on a sacred pilgrimage.
And when he reached the top of Usui pass
Where all the beauties of a realm are seen,
He had these stones erected in her name
Placing beneath the golden comb they found.
And on the stones they wrote in golden dust
The faithful story of her queen-like death.
The characters are now defaced by age
And generations of fierce mountain rain,

But still her story lives in people's hearts.
And when the softest summer breezes blow
Across the wide green plain and mountain slopes,
It were as though her gentle spirit, breathed
Some fragrant benediction from the past.

M. K.

THE CHINESE BOYCOTT.

A Shanghai telegram says that the Viceroy and Taotai are endeavouring to conciliate the anti-American boycotters, so that the movement can be put down before it assumes serious proportions. Native merchants, however, still refuse to touch American products. The Kokumin has a telegram from Peking that Mr. W. W. Rockhill, American Minister in Peking, is in communication with the Chinese Foreign Office in connexion with the boycott. The Asahi reports that the consular corps in Shanghai has asked the Taotai to convene a conference with a view to settle the dispute.

A Shanghai telegram to the Kokumin says that the Viceroy and Taotai are hoping to suppress the anti-American movement in China. Consequently it is generally believed that affairs will have quieted down before the arrival of Mr. E. H. Conger, ex-American Minister to Peking, who is commissioned to pacify the Chinese merchants, and is now on his way to China. Foreign merchants in Shanghai intend to institute action against the Chinese for damages sustained in their business by the placards notifying the natives to boycott American products.

Viceroy Yuan Shih Kai has presented a memorial to the Government to suppress the anti-American movements in Shanghai. It is said that business in Shanghai is very greatly impeded.

In connection with the Chinese anti-American movements, the American Minister in Peking, says a Shanghai correspondent of the Asahi, has presented a note to the Chinese Government in which the American Government authorities declare they will hereafter receive Chinese merchants, students, travellers, etc., and not examine them in the sheds in the compound of the Customs as hitherto; the Customs officials are strictly ordered not to treat the Chinamen with rudeness; and the American Government will introduce in the next session of Congress a bill amending the regulations with regard to the entry of Chinamen and will endeavour to pass it.

The Ta Kung Pao (L'Impartiale), of Tientsin, which was trying to incite the Chinese merchants to boycott American goods, has been suppressed by order of the Chinese Government.

CUSTOMS PROTESTS.

Mr. Minakami, Director of the Yokohama Customs, delivered a decision on Aug. 19th on a protest filed by Messrs. Heller Bros., No. 175, Yamashita-cho. The firm imported aventurine glass, on which the appraisers imposed 30 per cent ad valorem duty in accordance with No. 472 of the tariff and 10 per cent ad valorem extraordinary tax. The importers contended that the goods should be dealt with under No. 495 of the same tariff which provides "all articles, raw or unmanufactured," and 10 per cent duty. The protest, however, was dismissed on the ground that the goods in dispute are included in "imitation of precious stones and pearls," classified in No. 470.

On Aug. 21st, another decision was given in a protest instituted by Messrs. Sale and Frazar Ltd., No. 167, Yamashita-cho. They imported steel wire (or steel ribbon) for making umbrellas, on which the appraiser fixed duty at the rate of yen 1.819 per 100 kin under No. 243 of the tariff. The importers held that the wire should come under No. 496 and the duty should be at 10 per cent ad valorem. The protest was sustained.

Convicts and those undergoing examination throughout Japan were estimated at 53,000 in August. At the end of last year, the number was over sixty thousand.

WHAT HAS BEEN ACCOMPLISHED.

PROBABLY our readers are somewhat confused as to what has been accomplished by the Conference and what remains to be settled. According to the various telegrams the position stood thus on the evening of the 18th:—

SETTLED BY RUSSIA AGREEING.

- Art. I.—Recognition of Japan's preponderant power in Korea.
- Art. II.—Withdrawal of Russia's forces from Manchuria.
- Art. III.—Withdrawal of Japan's forces from Manchuria.
- Art. IV.—Opening of Manchuria to foreign trade.
- Art. VI.—Surrender of Russia's Liaotung lease to Japan.
- Art. VII.—Surrender of the East China Railway to Japan.
- Art. VIII.—Engagement on Russia's part not to use for military purposes the section of the Trans-Asian Railway running through Manchuria, Japan giving a similar engagement with regard to the East China Railway.
- Art. XII.—Granting of fishery privileges along the coast from Vladivostok to the Behring Sea.

NOT YET SETTLED.

- Art. V.—Cession of Saghalien.
- Art. IX.—Reimbursement of Japan's expenses.
- Art. X.—Surrender of the interned ships.
- Art. XI.—Limitation of Russia's naval forces in the Far East.

It seems plain that M. WITTE's policy has been to concede as much as he could conveniently concede, thus creating the impression that Russia is sincerely anxious for peace, and that if a deadlock comes, the responsibility is Japan's. It must be admitted that he has not been altogether unsuccessful. But it must also be admitted that his concessions amount to a unqualified confession of Russia's original sin. She has given up everything for which she fought. A small fraction of her present concessions, if made in 1903, could have averted war altogether. It must be a bitter retrospect for her. Think what her position would now be had she agreed with her enemy quickly while she was still on the way with him. She would be in possession of Liaotung and in virtual occupation of Manchuria. Her navy would be intact; her armies unshattered; her great scheme of Far-Eastern development in full progress; her magnificent position in Europe and the world still unchallenged. Never did fate lead to unwisdom a more striking lesson.

KOREA.

AN ERROR has been committed, apparently, with regard to the origin of the large sum of money found in the house of Li YONG-IL after his departure from the capital. Theasure did not consist of 50-sen silver pieces looted over by the Japanese for purposes of coinage. It consisted of old Korean silver coins, the proceeds of taxation. There is no definite suggestion, so far as we can gather, that Li intended to appropriate the money for his own uses, though it must be confessed the margin is very small between actual embezzlement and the theory put forward, namely, that he was holding the money with cognisance of his SOVEREIGN as a kind of secret-service fund applicable to purposes of intrigue. The fact that a large amount of revenue had not been passed into the State chest was pretty generally known in official circles in Seoul. Some assessed the figure as high as 4 million yen; others put it at from 2 to 3 millions; the amount actually found is reported to have been nine hundred and thirty thousand. There may have been more originally, but whatever the exact figure the money seems accurately describable as an anti-progress fund. LI YONG-IL, while this reserve, large from a Korean point of view, was reposing in his residence, represented the Treasury as absolutely à sec. He was Minister of War. That is an important element of the story, for the War Department in Seoul enjoys almost complete immunity from the nuisance of rendering accounts or the inconvenience of auditors' scrutiny. Probably no other department of State would have been so handy a depository. Li, it appears to us, represented another of the unsuccessful experiments made by Japanese reformers in Korea: the experiment of attempting to accomplish useful ends with Korean tools. Having passed many years in Japan he ought to have acquired some knowledge of men and things as they exist in the world of actual work outside the bounds of formula-ridden, effete and crookedly-thinking Korea. But credible accounts indicate that his residence abroad brought no illumination to his benighted intelligence, and that he did not stand far, if at all, above the incredibly thick mists of ignorance that permeate every corner of the average Korean official's brain-space. Nevertheless the Japanese appear to have placed some faith in his perspicacity and some confidence in his sincerity, for they helped him into the chair of Minister of War in consideration of his declarations that he understood the necessity of reducing the Korean army and would apply himself vigorously to the task. If he really understood, then his action is all the more reprehensible for instead of at least co-operating in the task of reduction, he actually did what he could to thwart it. Similar was his attitude towards all the reforms promoted by the Japanese: he obstructed them by every secret method, not excluding the underground employment of State funds diverted from the Treasury to his custody. He is by no means the first Korean tool that has pierced the hands of its Japanese users. Yet what is to be done? With what instruments are the Japanese to work in Korea if not with Korean instruments? Their critics are impatient because signal results are not speedily obtained, and would be clamorous if the administration were taken out of native hands and put into Japanese. In such conditions the only feasible course was the course chosen by the Tokyo Government, namely, to give to Korea advisers competent to work out her salvation if their advice were followed. But even the measure of intelligence required for obeying wise counsels seems to be lacking among Korean officials. What kind of revolution is needed to shake this country out of its immemorial rut one hesitates to conjecture.

THE BOOKSHELF.

"Navy Record Society."

We have before us the Council's Report read at the twelfth annual general meeting of the above Society on the 5th of July last, and as it is possible that many Britons in the Far East may be ignorant of even the existence of such a society, we say a word about the matter here. One of the main objects of the Society is to print and distribute among members books containing matter which, though of the greatest interest to all who concern themselves about things connected with the Royal Navy, and therefore with the history of the British nation, is difficult of access if not quite inaccessible for ordinary individuals. The nature of these publications is suggested by the following extract from the Council's Report:—

Since the date of the last general meeting the Society has issued,

For 1904

Vol. XXVII. A Descriptive Catalogue of the Naval Manuscripts in the Pepysian Library (Vol. II.). Edited by Mr. J. Tanner.

Vol. XXVIII. The Correspondence of Admiral John Markham, a Lord of the Admiralty, 1801-7. Edited by Sir Clements R. Markham.

For 1905.

Vol. XXIX. The Fighting Instructions, 1530-1816. Edited by Mr. Julian S. Corbett.

It is proposed also to issue, during the present year, The First Dutch War (Vol. III.). Edited by Mr. C. T. Atkinson.

Another book now in preparation is a volume of contemporary plans or bird's-eye views of the battles of Sole bay (28th May, 1672) and of the Texel, or more properly Kijkduin (11th August, 1673). These views are reproductions of sketches drawn for the first Lord Dartmouth which have been placed at the disposal of the Society by the present Earl. The subscription is only a guinea a year and it appears to us that such a Society's publications ought to be specially interesting to British subjects in distant lands. We note that persons desirous of joining have to apply to the Secretary, Professor Laughton, 9 Pepys Road, Wimbledon, S.W.

Indian Love, by LAURENCE HOPE: London, W. Heinemann.

A little more than a year ago news came from India that the writer whose passion-blanced lyrics were given to the world over the pen name of "Laurence Hope," had voluntarily broken through the meshes of the web of life and passed to "where, beyond these voices, there is peace." The present slim volume of 92 well-spaced pages may therefore be taken as her swan-song. The sensuous, pagan, voluptuous imagery which distinguished the "Garden of Kama" and "Stars of the Desert" is the dominant note which throbs unceasingly through "Indian Love." But why should these poems be so labelled? They no more represent the poetry of India as written by the thousand and one races of the Peninsula than Longfellow's "Hiawatha" represents the poetry of the Iroquois. The scenery, the place-names, the flowers, the moonlit nights and liquid dawns belong to India, it is true, but the literary touch, the intellectual environment belongs to a mind steeped in the erotic atmosphere of the later Greek poetry after it had been brought into demoralizing contact with the material animalism of decadent Rome. We can imagine a Phryne who had dallied in the frigidarium with the Freedman Petronius writing some of the verses in this book, but not a daughter of any of the races of India. Yet we shall no doubt read in serious London critical reviews that "Laurence Hope" has once more introduced us to "a region of native feeling and imagination never yet fully explored"—vide the Athenaeum.

A portrait of "Laurence Hope" adorns the book and it gives one a clue to much that is puzzling in her writing. Gazing at the heavy, tired eyes, one reads the lesson of hopeless weariness which satiety brings in its train; the lower half of the face explains much of the sensuous outlook on life which must have been an essential part of her existence and which finds expression in verse after verse of her poetry. Only a woman with a face like this, and dominated by the poetical brain which was her dower, could have so rudely drawn away the veil from life's deepest mysteries and wantonly thrown them open for the casual passer-by to mock or wonder at. Many of the lyrics in the present volume will long linger in the ear for their beauty of form and delicate, elusive imagery, but others will be gladly forgotten, for they savour of the forbidden fruit which turns to dust and ashes in the mouth. Putting the book down after a second perusal and a final glance at the writer's face, one can but pray that "after life's fitful fever she sleeps well."

Charles Lever's inimitable novels are to be issued by the Grolier Society in the form now becoming so fashionable, namely, a complete set limited in number of copies and offering three forms for choice, from an édition de luxe costing sixty-five guineas to a work-a-day edition in cloth costing twelve guineas. From the prospectus we judge that the book will be beautifully printed, and the publishers promise all the original steel-engravings and etchings by Cruikshank and a number of wood engravings and special illustrations. This will be a very tempting offer to many.

MONTHLY SUMMARY OF THE JAPANESE RELIGIOUS PRESS.

We find in the Shinjin, Mr. Ebina Danjō's organ, an interesting article on the Dōshisha, which we proceed to epitomize as follows:—Among all the Mission Schools that have been established in this country the Dōshisha stands first in rank, and there was a time when it promised to prove a formidable rival to the Tōkyō Imperial University itself. Its initial success had its origin in the character of the late Dr. Nijijima, and in the zeal of that remarkable band of Christians from the Kumamoto Oriental School known as "The Kumamoto prophets." When the Dōshisha came into existence high class education of the European type was still in its infancy. There were no High Schools anywhere. No first-class Normal Schools, even. The Tokyo University then bore the name of the Kaiseigakkō. The attitude of that institution towards religion was antagonistic or indifferent. In the conception of the Professors science was all-sufficient. Mr. Fukuzawa's famous school set itself to attack the evils of feudalism and preached ultra-utilitarianism. So it may be said that higher educational thought was all anti-Christian. Dr. Nijijima and his fellow-workers resolved to bring about a change, and for a while they were wonderfully successful. The students from Kumamoto, who formed the nucleus of the Dōshisha, were only about 30 in number. But their influence was paramount in the school. The earnestness of these young men was intense. They studied hard during the term and when the summer holidays came they assumed the rôle of evangelists and travelled East and West, North and South, preaching as no Japanese had ever preached a message that was new to all their hearers and attracted serious attention from not a few. This had the effect of turning the eyes of the whole nation to the institution from which these young men issued. Making a skilful use of public feeling, Dr. Nijijima took steps for changing the status of the school and making it a University. But, in 1890, before his plans had been half carried out, Dr. Nijijima was called away. To us it seemed that the death of the man who created the Dōshisha would involve the death sooner or later of the institution itself. Under the Rev. H. Kozaki the Dōshisha did no more than live on the after-effects of energy the source of which no longer remained. There was no progress of any kind. The superintendence of the school passed into the hands of Dr. Yokoi, but there was no material improvement. In the meantime high-class education throughout the country had made rapid strides. High Schools had sprung up here and there. The Keiōgijuku and the Waseda Semmon Gakkō had been created Universities and enjoyed immense popularity. And, moreover, a strong anti-foreign current of thought set in, which had the effect of raising doubts as to the superiority of Christianity to Oriental religions and systems of morality. In education the feeling among Christians now is that the Dōshisha has been left behind. Dr. Yokoi tried his best to prevent this; but the response he met with was enough to discourage any one. The general opinion seem to have been that the Dōshisha had fulfilled its mission and was needed no more. But two special causes hastened the downfall of the institution created by Nijijima. One was the unprogressiveness of the theology taught in the school; the other was the excessive dependence of the school on money supplied by the American Board of Foreign Missions. Theological thought in Japan had been going ahead during the 10 years that followed Nijijima's death, but the teaching in the Dōshisha took no cognizance of this fact. Then the respect for independence had been growing in Japan, and a school that owed its very existence to foreign help was regarded in an unfavourable light by educationists and the general public. It would seem as though God had no more use for the Dōshisha and as though its continuance were undesirable. The services of its best graduates were not retained for the institution. They found higher spheres of usefulness in one of the Imperial Universities or in the Waseda University. Had they remained in the school its tone might have been kept up. The Dōshisha has in past years, through the various schools organized by it, supplied to higher institutions about 170 of their graduates, distributed as follows:—Imperial Universities, 10; High Schools, 25; High Commercial Schools (Tōkyō, Ōsaka and Kōbe), 15; High Normal Schools (Tōkyō and Hiroshima), 7; High Commercial and Industrial Schools (Sapporo and Tōkyō), 10; Medical Schools, 20; Private Universities, 10. Though various schools connected with the Kumiai Churches annually send up some 200 students to higher institutions, the central institution in Kyōto has ceased to be patronized to any extent by any but theological students. The students who graduate in other subjects there only amount to 10 or 12 per year. The Science, Politics and Law Departments can hardly be continued much longer and the girl graduates in the institution do not now exceed about 15 per annum. Under these circumstances these seems to be no need for the further existence of the institution. (Kore ni yotte kore wo mireba, Dōshisha no sonzai suru hitsuyō wo nitomuru koto hanahada nanji nari.) The spirit of the institution departed along with the spirit of the late Dr. Nijijima. All attempts to revive that spirit have signally failed. Of what use is it to retain the tabernacle when its glory has gone?

The course we recommend, continues Mr. Ebina, is that the whole Dōshisha property, movable and immovable, be sold, that the money demanded by the American Board of Foreign Missions be paid off, and that with the remainder the Kumiai Church should establish missions in Korea and China. This would be carrying out the wishes of the founders of the institution. To allow the school to remain as it is now is a course that is quite indefensible. Just as the great Buddhist Hongwanji has been on the edge of extinction by corruption so is the Dōshisha in danger of passing into the fossil stage. There is not much to choose between downright decay and the loss of all the chief properties by which an institution has been known. The only way to perpetuate the memory of the school is to found something vital on its ruins.

The Shinjin announces that it purposes publishing a special number of the magazine for the use of the troops at the front. It will be called the Iwan-gō (Comfort Number). Contributions to this number are earnestly solicited, specially from women who, the Shinjin says, excel in the kind of writing desired.

A Mr. Misawa, now residing in America, contributes a long article to the Shinjin entitled "The Reasons for the Decrease of Theological Students in America and the Future of Christianity." The numerous facts that he quotes are mostly taken from a very elaborate and exhaustive essay, the subject by Mr. Alfred Terry, which appears in the Homiletic Review, published in Ohio. Mr. Perry sent questions bearing on the number of candidates for the ministry to all the chief colleges and universities of the United States. A remarkable decrease in the number of theological students all over the country has been demonstrated by Mr. Terry beyond a doubt. Mr. Misawa quotes some striking facts from the report of Mr. Tomlinson on this topic. Mr. Tomlinson says that at the Yale University, whereas in 1850 to 1855 the candidates for the ministry were about 22 per cent. of the total number of graduates, in the years 1890-1895 they fell to 10 per cent. According to the President of Chicago University, among the total number of graduates at the Yale, Harvard, Columbia and Princetown Universities in 1904, (1,200), more than 30 were candidates for the ministry. The causes alleged by Messrs. Terry and Tomlinson for this state of things, as quoted by Mr. Misawa are seven in number:

- (1) The rôle of materialism in the home and in society.
- (2) The coldness and disregard, in the mental and things material, which society shows towards ministers of the Gospel.
- (3) An apprehension on the part of young men that in the ministry they would not enjoy freedom of action and liberty of thought.
- (4) The gradual relinquishment of the idea that there is any sacredness about the Christian ministry.
- (5) The contempt with which theological students are regarded by other students.
- (6) The low rank occupied by ministers on the social scale and the passive character of their work.
- (7) Mr. Misawa in a long essay, the whole of which has not yet appeared, discusses this question from a Japanese point of view. He rightly maintains that the state of things in the religious world of America will certainly affect Japanese Christians in a variety of ways.

The Roman Catholic organ, the Kōye, continues to publish the questions of converts along with the answers supplied by the editorial staff. Some of these questions refer to ceremonies and observance of feast days and fast days, but others are concerned with doctrinal difficulties. In June number a Kōbe Christian asks what is the fate of those persons who have never heard of Christ? If, says the interrogator, God is perfectly just and all powerful, He cannot permit people for not observing precepts of which they have never heard. The reply is that what may be the fate of the non-Christian is not their concern; they certainly will not be sent to hell, whether they can obtain the same amount of happiness as will be enjoyed by Christians is a question on which the Kōye does not care to pronounce a decided opinion. Another question inquires the best methods of preventing the interference of prayer by wandering thought. The answer displayed considerable discernment and common sense. The Kōye lays itself out to reply to reasonable and to some unreasonable objections to Christianity. The July number takes charge that Roman Catholic Christians are not allowed by the Church to read anti-Catholic books and that hence they gradually get the age. Such restrictions, it is affirmed, are contrary to the religious liberty which in this country is secured to all Japanese citizens by the Constitution. The Koye denies that the liberty of Roman Catholic converts is curtailed in the way indicated above. On the contrary, says the Koye, extensive reading is encouraged in the case of such converts as are educated and have moral balance. It is only over certain weaklings that the Church endeavours to exercise a certain amount of control. For very ill-informed minds to hear a number of puzzling questions bearing on their belief, to which they are not able to reply, is anything but advisable. In certain cases this has led to apostasy. Surely if public bodies and Governments place restrictions on the books to be placed in circulation, such a select body as the Church cannot afford to ignore the subject altogether. But the Church is interested in developing the intelligence of Christians as much as possible. If its teachers consider that certain books had better be left unread, they are not afraid to say so. Beyond this they cannot go. To strictly forbid the reading of any current literature is not their practice. Those who bring forward this objection with so much gusto and clamour about "liberty of belief, liberty of discussion, and the liberty of the press" have not taken the trouble to find out what is the actual policy of the Church in this matter.

The articles which we epitomized from the Fukui Shimpō in our last Summary have naturally attracted much attention among Japanese Christians. The Koye published a very full summary of the discussion a few weeks ago, observing that considerable importance is to be attached to it and that it is an indication of the tendency of thought among all Protestant Christians.

The Koye has a note on the growth of heresy in Berlin, where a large section of Protestants have openly denied the Divinity of Christ, and have maintained their right to do so as members of the German Protestant Church. The Koye says that most of the teachers of divinity in German Universities are rationalistic, and that a large number of the Protestant ministers in that country are Christian in name only, that is, they are practically Unitarians.

The Seikyō Shimpō (Greek Church) has a notice erring to the scholarly and painstaking work Mr. Albert J. Edmonds, who for the last thirty years has been studying as a preparation for his at work Buddhist and Christian Gospels, the last of which has now been given to the public. There is a Japanese edition of this book now issued in Tokyo under the editorship of Dr. Izaki. The chapter on "The Possibility of Infection between Christianity and Buddhism" is said to be full of interest and to draw attention hitherto unobserved facts. Dr. Anezaki has in many years been working with Mr. Edmonds in preparation of this book. The text on which Edmonds bases his comparison is the Pali. Pali Buddhist Gospels have been translated English afresh by him. The English work is for sale at the Yūhōkwan, Hongō, 4 chōme, rō, at 1 yen 30 sen and 2 yen a copy according to binding. Mr. Yamada Matsujū's articles contributed lately to the Seikyō Shimpō are well worth noting. Under the title of Jihyō (Words for the day) he treats in a very fresh and earnest manner of religious questions of considerable importance. We give below a few specimens of his writing. Under the heading "Faith in the Culture of Feeling" he says:—Our men to-day are perplexed by a thousand things as to the truth of Christianity, and our states are at a loss how to deal effectually with such minds. In trying to account for the religious scepticism and indifference to religion are some that affirm that the fault lies with evangelists themselves. They are, it is not thoroughly equipped for the work which they are engaged. Their learning is inefficient; their arguments are shallow; instead of attracting inquirers they repel them. This may be to a certain extent true, but another cause for the want of success of many evangelists complained. They appeal on too much and to feeling too little.

With a great many people the idea seems to prevail that religion must be principally based on logic. Even our evangelists seem to preach with this notion in their heads. They pile up arguments in favour of the acceptance of Christianity, and in many cases they succeed in making converts by this means. But subsequently it often happens that young men whose connection with the Church is dependent on argument alone are argued out of the Church by skillful logicians just as they have been argued into it by Christian pastors. To base belief on argument alone is a dangerous course to follow. The doctrine of the all-sufficiency of reason destroys much of the happiness of mankind and deprives human life of not a little of its charm. Do human feelings count for nothing? How great is the power they exercise in controlling men's actions the world over! What in religion is finer than the love and respect felt for the holy men and women who in past ages devoted their lives to a noble cause? Take the loyalty and patriotism whose presence in the hearts of our soldiers has contributed so much towards our success in this war. Are these sentiments dependent on reason? Are they not rather noble feelings instilled into the hearts of our sons and daughters from childhood? What is there that sublime emotions will not accomplish? (Yūbi ni shite Kōshō naru Kanjō wa subete no Chikara wo yūsu. Kirisutokkyō no bokusha nanzo Shinkō no jōku (情育) nisutome zaru?) Why do not Christian pastors endeavour to cultivate belief as an emotion of the heart?

On "Christianity and Literature" Mr. Yamada writes: The day has passed for using the teaching of language as a means of propagating Christianity. The teaching of foreign languages has now become general and Japanese linguists swarm. But Christians who have studied foreign languages can utilize their knowledge in a highly beneficial way if they will but take to translating European and American Christian books. Japanese Christian literature has still to be created. Unfortunately we have hitherto had few good Christian writers, but there is no reason why they should not be forthcoming in the near future.

Writing on "The Creation of Great Men," Mr. Yamada says:—Great men are not always the product of one age, but are the result of a long series of political, social and physical occurrences. In the upward progress of nations the occasional appearance of geniuses is most common. How far various forms of despotism interfere with individual development it is difficult to determine. The question of the limits to the power of States over individual action, though frequently discussed, is still left unsettled. No individual is under an obligation to act in defiance of his or her innermost convictions in order to please the State. The State has not unlimited power over the individual by any means. There are sacrifices that are too great to be made even for the State. All wise States must recognize that there are limits to their authority over individual action.

The talk about blending Eastern and Western civilisation Mr. Yamada takes to be all moonshine. In the material parts of the two systems there may be a mixture but seeing that in their fundamental principles the two systems are antagonistic, their working in harmony is impossible. The Japanese principle is intensely altruistic—all must be sacrificed for the family and the State; the Western principle is egoistic—the individual and his rights override all other considerations. Modern Japanese must make a choice between the Eastern and the Western ideal, between freedom and slavery.

The Dai Nihon comments in the following tones on the independence and self-support of Christian Churches. What is the meaning of this cry for independence? Is it independence to receive money from our fellow-countrymen instead of from foreigners? Is Japanese money pure and foreign money impure? Is Japanese sympathy to be received with gratitude and foreign sympathy to be rejected with contempt? Does foreign money only enslave? Has Japanese money no such effect on the recipients of it? The clamour for independence seems to us to ignore certain great principles of Christianity—the universal brotherhood of mankind, the abolition of national and class distinctions, and world-wide charity. If it is servile to accept donations to Christian work made by foreigners as a result of earnest conviction, then is it less servile to accept donations made by Japanese Christians from the same cause? Is work carried on in connection with Foreign Mission Boards calculated to corrupt or debase in any way the workers more than work conducted under the superintendence of Japanese Missions? Why all this talk about difference of nationality? Is it not worldly? Is it not far more noble as well as far more Christian to eliminate as much as possible the element of nationality and to try and make the qualities and powers of Japanese and foreigners complement each other in the great work which all alike are anxious to further? The magnifying of unimportant distinctions brings dishonour on the Christian name and tends to weaken the Church of Christ in Japan, says the Dai Nihon.

Writing on equality and inequality in society generally, the Fukui Shimpō affirms that the tendency of modern civilisation is all in the direction of breaking down class distinctions. There is no such equalizer as education. By means of this not a few members of communities succeed in overcoming many of the disadvantages attendant on low birth. Equality, says the Fukui Shimpō, seems to be favoured by Heaven. Light and air and all the beauties of nature are bestowed with a lavish hand on all alike. The circumstances and experiences that go to make the whole world of human beings akin are far more powerful than the influences that tend to separate man from man. But education as an equalizer may be carried too far. It may suppress and crush out a number of fine individual traits and turn out a number of boys and girls so like each other that to know one is to know all. There are educational systems that work like the factories that turn out articles by the thousand, all of precisely the same shape. Equalization carried thus far is a hindrance to human progress, which depends largely on originality, on the unfettered development of the special mental powers of each individual mind.

We read in the Kirisutokkyō Sekai that for the past seven or eight years the Christian summer schools have yielded poor results, the reason being, according to this organ, that they have been run on too narrow lines. There has been manifest a deliberate resolve to keep out lectures of unorthodox views. But this year a lecture has been made, and even Mr. Ebina Danjō has been asked to lecture. The proposal to invite him to co-operate met with considerable opposition. Certain young men connected with the Yokohama Baptist Mission took a very strong opposition attitude, says the Kirisutokkyō Sekai. But the committee which controls the arrangements was able to overrule all opposition and duly appointed Mr. Ebina as a lecturer. They wisely resolved that in future the chief aim should be to obtain men of power and influence in the Church whatever their special views might be; the object of the schools being to impart Christian knowledge, to strengthen faith, to stimulate the mind of evangelists and others. Mr. Ebina is, says the Kirisutokkyō Sekai, eminently qualified for this kind of work and his exclusion in past years has been a mistake.

A series of letters from a Japanese Christian in America, a Mr. T. Yamada, are appearing in the Gokyo (Melchiodist). No. 2 of these letters records Mr. Yamada's impressions on board ship and on his arrival in San Francisco. In Hawaii a rough set of passengers seems to have joined the ship. The greediness with which they devoured their food, the utter lack of politeness and consideration for others shown draw from Mr. Yamada the remark that while in Japan he had supposed that all Occidentals were gentlemen, but these passengers acted more like wild beasts. He has much to say about the arbitrariness and harshness with which the Chinese passengers are treated on American ships. Signs that he witnessed moved him to pity. On arrival in San Francisco, the Chinese were detained two weeks on board before being allowed to land. Referring to the Japanese proverb, jigoku no satama kane shidai, Mr. Yamada says that this is as true of America as of hell—all depends on money. After commenting on the many beauties of the great Californian port, Mr. Yamada passes on to write about the churches he visited and the impression they made on him. Among church buildings those of the Jew and the Roman Catholics struck him as the most imposing. As he entered these buildings he was conscious of a spirit of awe and solemnity that conduce to devotion. The Roman Catholic churches he always found open, and not a few persons of both sexes, he says, may be seen at their devotions in these buildings at all hours of the day. He realized as he looked around these grand edifices how great is the power of architecture, sculpture and painting over certain minds. In the Protestant churches that he attended two things specially struck him: one was the beauty of the music and the other the extreme commonplaceness of the sermons preached. No intelligent Japanese Christian would want to go a second time to hear such preachers, says Mr. Yamada. But Americans do not keep away from church on account of the ordinariness of the sermons. (Sekkyō wa inada kampakuri suru hodo no mono wo kikiaru koto kore nashi. Jaire mo tanjun mo ohanashi nomi mite, Nihonjin naraba kanarazu nido to wa kili ni mairanu koto uketai naredo, Beijin ni wa sono yō na koto naku, kanarazu Kōkai ni shusseki suru no wa, warerano manabubekiten to sonji sōrō.) The architecture of the Protestant Churches I attended, says Mr. Yamada, struck me as lacking in imposing elements, and as having nothing distinctly religious in it. While in San Francisco I was present at a Pastors' Weekly Conference, which was attended by some 34 pastors. After reports of the work of the previous week have been made, one of their number is in the habit of reading a paper on a given topic, which is followed by comments made by the ministers present. The discourse to which I listened contained nothing at all that was new to me. It was as simple as simple could be. But to my surprise it called forth the praise of a number of learned listeners. Nobody criticized. They all praised. (Shōsei ni wa mimi atarashiki tokoro sukoshi mo naku, jutsu ni heitai donbon no rambun narishi ga, Beijin ni wa yahodo kondō wo atayataru mono to miye, rippa maru bakase ri ga mina soroute kore wo home mashi sōrō, jutsu ni fushigi naru koto ni gona sōrō.)

Mr. Yamada thinks that the practice of holding Pastors' Conferences weekly might with profit be followed in this country. Whether one agrees with the writer or not, such letters as those Mr. Yamada is sending to the Gokyo seem to me worthy of attention. He is evidently a very devout and open-minded Christian.

YACHTING.

The wind for the early part of Saturday afternoon was very light and uncertain, but later on a nice sailing breeze came up. The Cruising Class started at 1 p.m., their course being to the Nagahama buoy and back. They had rather a puzzling beat to the Honmoku Lightship, but from that mark the easterly wind enabled them to sail round the course with sheets free. Times at the finish :—

	Handicap.	Corrected on handicap.
Nina4. 1.27	scratch.	4. 1.27
Surprise4. 5.34	30 mins.	3.35.34 wins Kathleen Cup.
Wanderer ...4. 6.27	27 mins.	3.39.27
Asagai4. 7.42	30 mins.	3.37.42 2nd prize.
Kathleen4.20.16	30 mins.	3.50.16

Eight boats of the 21 Rater Class started, finishing in the following order:—

	Handicap.	on handicap.	Corrected
Aimée	3.57.16	scratch	3.57.16
Fele	3.58.58	scratch	3.58.58
Edna	4. 0 3 mins.		3.57. 6
Walsome	4. 4. 9	scratch	4. 4. 9
Sienbach	4. 5.15 mins.		3.49.51 First prize.
Almar Johanna	4.12. 8 15 mins.		3.57. 8
Lily	4.31.15 35 mins.		3.56.15 Second prize.
Witch	Gave up.

Five Larks started, and made a close finish in the following order:—

No. 11	3-43-01	First prize.
13	3-43-44	Second prize.
4	3-43-48
5	3-44-03
1	3-44-46

BRITISH NAVAL SHOOTING

The Fleet gives the following summary of the best individual shots in the British Navy for last year :—

Name and Rating.	Ship.	Fleet.	Gun.	Pts.
A. Stewart, P. O. 1.....	Venerable.....	Med'n.....	12-in. M. IX.....	38.11
H. H. Valentine, P. O. 1.....	Industrious.....	Channel.....	12-in. M. VIII.....	68.53
W. J. Aspell, P. O. 1.....	Majestic.....	Channel.....	12-in. M. VIII.....	68.53
F. R. Bragg, P. O. 1.....	Victorious.....	Channel.....	12-in. M. VIII.....	68.53
T. Brown, P. O. 1.....	Exmouth.....	Home.....	12-in. M. IX.....	68.53
W. C. Wall, R. M. A. „	Cesar.....	Channel.....	6-in. Q. F.....	37.6
C. Fenness, A. B.....	Majestic.....	Channel.....	6-in. Q. F.....	78.84
R. R. Evans, P. O. 1.....	Formidable.....	Med'n.....	6-in. Q. F.....	76.24
T. McDonald, R. M. A., P. of Wales.....	„	Med'n.....	6-in. Q. F.....	76.24
I. Wood, R. M. A. „	London.....	Med'n.....	6-in. Q. F.....	76.24
Belcher, P. O. 1.....	Fearless.....	China.....	47 Q. F.....	37.05

The best shooting ship was H.M.S. Cæsar: total points, 94.42. The worst shooting ship was the Persens: total points, 6.42.

CRICKET.

A low temperature and overcast skies on Saturday made things very pleasant for Yokohama cricketers and there was consequently a little more life thrown into the match Under Thirty v. Over Thirty, than one usually associates with cricket in the month of August in these latitudes. The Under Thirty team went to bat first and knocked up 184 for seven wickets, when the Captain of the side, Mr. H. W. Kilby, declared the innings closed. Piggott, the top-scorer, gave an excellent display with the bat and only offered one chance, just as he reached the half century; the next best score was made by H. W. Kilby, 58, and he was missed once. The fielding on the whole was loose. The Over Thirty lost their first man, Dr. Moon, for ten, but after that Abbott and Emerson made a stand and took the score to 41 before Abbott succumbed to a ball from Cooper. Seven runs later Emerson was caught by T. W. Kilby. Johnstone McClure was partnered by E. W. Maitland and the former hitting out freely kept the field employed till time was called, when the score stood at 110 for three wickets. Score :—

UNDER THIRTY.

O. Strome, b. Moon	0
W. S. Moss, b. Moon	4
J. T. Dixon, c. Duff, b. Emerson	13
F. S. G. Piggott, c. Momban, b. McClure	23
H. Kingdon, c. Momban, b. Brady	61
H. W. Kilby, not out	58
A. E. Cooper, st. Duff, b. Brady	1
G. W. Hawkins, b. Emerson	1
V. A. Hearne, not out	11
T. W. Kilby, did not bat.	0
Extras	0

DOWLING ANALYSIS.

	B.	R.	M.	W.
Dr. Moon	90	56	2	3
Dr. Emerson	78	55	3	2
J. McClure...	43	27	1	1
W. D. S. Edwards ..	30	22	—	—
G. G. Brady	24	15	1	2

Brady bowled one wide

OVER THIRTY.

Dr. Moon, b. Figgott
Dr. Emerson, c. T. W. Kilby, b. Cooper
F. J. Abbott, b. Cooper
J. McClure, not out
E. W. Mailand, not out
W. D. S. Edwards
C. M. Duff
G. G. Brady
J. E. Holmes
A. J. McClure
C. T. Mayes
Extras

did not bat.

BOWLING ANALYSIS.

	B.	R.	M.
F. S. G. Piggott	18	14	0
J. T. Dixon	48	25	3
A. E. Cooper	36	19	1
H. W. Kilby	18	16	—
O. Sirore	12	15	—
T. W. Kilby	6	8	—
B. C. Foster	6	7	—

Cooper bowled two wides, Sturme two and T. Kilby one. Foster was no-balled once.

THE TEST MATCH.

The final Test Match was continued at the Oval in dull weather, before an enormous crowd. The Australian wicket was playing queerly, but the Aussies managed to make a draw of the game. Jock MacGill declared when England had scored 261 for the loss of six wickets, and were therefore 328 on. For the remainder of the match the Australians were disposed of for 117, but Armstrong and Darling then played out time. Duff is suffering with influenza. Full score:—

ENGLAND.

	1st Innings	2nd Innings
A. C. Madaren (Lancs.)	6	0
Hayward (Surrey)	59	0
Tyldesley (Lancs.)	16	not out
C. B. Fry (Saxsex)	144	0
F. S. Jackson (Yorks.) Capt.	76	0
R. H. Spooner (Lancs.)	0	0
Arnold (Worcester)	40	0
Rhodes (Yorks.)	36	0
Hirst (Yorks.)	5	0
Lilley (Warwick)	17	0
W. Blearley (Lancs.)	11	0
Extras	20	0

Total.....430 (6 wks) 26

AUSTRALIA

	1st	2nd
	Innings	Runs
V. Trumper (N.S.W.)	4
C. Hill (S. Australia)	18
R. A. Duff (N.S.W.)	146
M. A. Noble (N.S.W.)	25
W. W. Armstrong (Victoria)	18	not out
J. Darling (S. Australia)	57	not out
A. J. Hopkins (N.S.W.)	1
C. E. McLeod (Victoria)	0
J. J. Kelly (N.S.W.)	42
A. Cotter (N.S.W.)	6
F. Laver (Victoria) not out	15
Extras	31

Total.....362 (4 wks)

BOWLING ANALYSIS

ENGLAND.
1st Innings.		Runs.
Cotter	148
Laver	41
Hopkins	32
Noble	51
Armstrong	76
McLeod	47
Duff	15
2nd Innings.
Cotter	73
Armstrong	61
Noble	56
McLeod	27
Laver	18
Hopkins	11

AUSTRALIA

	Runs.
Brearley	110
Hirst	86
Jackson	27
Arnold	50
Rhodes	59

CHINA.

The disturbance in Shansi seems to be of formidable dimensions. It is stated that the troops sent to quell it have not been heard of since they set out.

According to a Hongkong telegram to the Kokumin, the Chinese movement there in connexion with the boycott against American products is being attended with curious results. The Chinese participations show a disorderly attitude; they are breaking the law and threatening to commit murder. Their meetings, therefore, are forbidden.

The Chinese paper Takungpao, of Tientsin, has been suppressed by Viceroy Yuan on a charge of having published a violent article in connexion with the anti-American movement.

Shanghai papers declare that the hopes aroused by the Indian criticisms of the Bandmann Opera Company have been more than realised. Mr. D. Munro, who first came out to the Far East with the original London Lyric Company of twelve years ago, is among the company.

A Chinaman who was known as Lika Bax, or Kadar Bakhat, was murdered in Shanghai on Aug. 15th. The deceased, we learn from a contemporary, had an interesting career. At the time of the Taiping rebellion he was a small lad, and somehow or other he was brought to the notice of a British officer of an Indian native regiment who picked him up from the streets, as it were, and took care of him. The exact place where the lad was found is not known, but it was in the vicinity of Shanghai, and is generally thought to have been Minghong. As soon as the boy was big enough he began to receive instruction, and when he was of sufficient age was put on the strength of the regiment as a member of the band. Lika was taken to India and he remained there serving in the British army until he was pensioned. The deceased adopted the Mohammedan religion, and of course, was a British subject. On his return to Shanghai he joined the Municipal band, and was a member of it until about two months ago. The deceased was a wealthy man for his class, and seems to have led a very respectable life since his return to China. A Chinaman has been arrested and on his own confession charged with the murder.

In spite of the placards posted by certain persons in the province calling upon natives of Shantung not to go to South Africa on account of the ill treatment given to Chinese labourers at the Rand, there has been no stoppage in the number of coolies enlisting for South Africa; no less than 3,000 odd having left Chefoo for the Rand last month.

The Takungpao, published in Tientsin, states that it has received news from Shantung to the effect that there is a rumour of a wide-spread conspiracy on foot in that province to rise against the Germans, the date set being the 18th day of the 8th moon (16th September next). It is alleged that each family is to provide one fighting man, whose equipments are to be paid by public subscription. Rumours of this kind are hardly occasional in China, remarks the North China Daily News.

It is reported that the net half-yearly profits of the Imperial Chinese Railways for the six months ending March 1st, 1905, amount to a little over £375,000, and that if this rate of progress is maintained, as is confidently expected, the year's profits will, even after paying interest on the loan and providing the stipulated sum for amortisation, amount to over £600,000. With this sum the Chinese Government has already commenced the construction of the 120-mile line to Kaigan. Experts believe that even after the war, which has helped the railway, the development of trade in Manchuria will continue to such an extent that his profit will remain undiminished.

Elgin Avenue, as seen from the mud wall road, the P. S. Times says, promises to be one of the most picturesque roads of Tientsin presently.

Perhaps the silent influences of Mr. Jeanrenaud's well known Swiss chalet may have some effect on neighbouring buildings, but they seem certainly less uniform than usual both in design and colouring, and seen in the light of the setting sun even the village on the other bank of the canal is not lacking in picturesqueness, with its fringe of willows along the water's edge. The last few evenings the distances have been a vivid blue against an orange horizon, temporarily lending a positive beauty to our little mud flat north.

A madman was arrested in Tai Ho Hall of the Imperial Palace on the 8th inst., sitting on the Imperial couch smoking a cigarette. The guard on duty saw him through the window by which he had evidently entered, and as it is prohibited for them to enter the Hall, they caught him by means of poles with hooks on the end, by which they dragged the man out, and then found he was mad. He proves to be a printer by trade about 30 years of age. He had a small bag with him, and a sword and a knife and it is stated that he cut the window with the sword. The guard was of the plain white banner troops and they cannot say how the man got in, so there is great consternation among all the officials that were on duty that day.—P. S. Times.

The North China Daily News gives some particulars concerning the fire which broke out on board the Dutch Petroleum Company's steamer Perlaton on August 12, when she was laying at Wosung. The fire was in the foremost hold of the vessel, which was full of benzine in tins, and blazing fiercely, frequent explosions taking place and rendering the work of the firemen very difficult and dangerous. As it was the benzine was doomed from the beginning and efforts had to be mainly directed to checking the flames at that end as far as possible and saving the hull and the rest of the cargo, consisting of cargo oil in bulk, which was separated from the benzine by a double bulkhead filled with water. As the result of one of the explosions three firemen were rather badly injured and had to be brought up to the Shanghai General Hospital for treatment. Messrs. W. E. Keay, Weinberg, and J. C. Beckhoff were serving streams near a hatch when the explosion took place below and they had the worst of it. It carried them off their feet and they sustained nasty burns about the face, but luckily no bones were broken and they should be about again, not much the worse, in a few days. Less fortunate was a Chinese, who was blown up by an explosion, and fell through a hatch into the furnace beneath. In a few seconds nothing remained of the poor fellow. Another Chinese who went to the forepeak to pay out chain was never seen again. One of the foreign engineers of the ship was severely burnt and was removed to hospital at Shanghai. Before midnight the fire was extinguished and the vessel and the bulk of her cargo saved.

Mr. A. E. Harvey, barrister, formerly of the British Consular service, in China, has been appointed Professor of English and International Law in the Peking University. He retired from the Consular service on a pension in 1898.

The report of the Hongkong and Whampoa Dock Co., Ltd., for the first half of 1905 shows a divisible balance of $815,739. It is proposed to pay a dividend of 12 per cent, write off $14,407 from the value of Kowloon Docks, and carry forward the balance, $501,332.

A very sad occurrence is reported in the North China Daily News. On Aug. 13 a party went to Minghong on the steam launch Marguerite at 10 in the morning, and everything went along satisfactorily until about half-way back when between 4 and 5 o'clock Mr. Joseph Hicks, of Messrs. Llewellyn & Co., was found to be missing. From the facts to hand it appears that the party were in the cabin trying to rid themselves of some of the mud which they had on their clothing—caused by the heavy downpour when they were on shore—when Mr. Hicks went on deck, took a bucket, and giving the rope a turn or two round his wrist, dropped it into the water. The launch was travelling at a speed of from eight to nine knots at the time, and when the bucket filled the strain on the rope was so great as to pull the deceased overboard. Mr. Hicks could not swim and was drowned before anyone knew what had occurred; a Chinese making the report that one master had fallen into the river. Every endeavour was made to recover the body, but without success. Mr. Hicks was about 25 years of age and only arrived in Shanghai from home about four months ago. He was a Scotsman of a studious, retiring disposition and his death is a great shock to his friends.

Viceroy Yuan Shih-k'ai has received a dispatch from the Prince and High Commissioners of the Army Reorganisation Department, informing his Excellency that they propose to attend the Grand Autumn Manoeuvres of the Peiyang Army in Hochienfu on the 22nd October next, and asking that arrangements should be made for the accommodation of Ministers of Powers who have been invited to be present at the Manoeuvres with their respective suites.

The German-Asiatic Bank at Berlin and Shanghai states that the business results in 1904 were influenced by the Russo-Japanese war, particularly as regards the traffic of goods to the north of China. Later on, however, an improvement set in as soon as the coast ports became clear of the war difficulties. The branch firms of the bank operated successfully, and especially Hongkong and Calcutta have been favourably developed. In April a branch was opened at Tainanfu, the capital of the province of Shantung. The total income amounts to Tls. 1,064,652, out of which after paying all expenses, a net profit remains to the amount of Tls. 823,782. A dividend of 10 per cent, is paid, the same as in the previous year.

It is stated from Peking, says the writer of "Notes on Native Affairs," that certain high officials of the Great Boards of the Capital have drawn up a memorial to the Throne in their joint names recommending among other much-needed reforms: (1) the publication of an Imperial Edict doing away for ever with all race distinctions, making those of Chinese descent eligible for the highest rank or posts hitherto the sole privilege for those of the Manchu race; (2) that civil and military grades be looked upon as equal with one another; (3) that if a man be found thoroughly fitted for any post he should be appointed to fill it irrespective of the official rank he may be holding at the moment. Apropos of No. 2—this reform if granted will certainly have the most important influence on the future of the people of China. Hitherto for centuries, no scion of a good family would willingly enter upon a military life owing to the fact that the military officer is without exception beneath the Civil official. A Civil mandarin, for instance, of the 5th rank may easily order a military officer holding the same step (5th) in rank or even higher to be bamboozed or otherwise punished for a slight offence, whilst no person possessing a civil rank, however low in the official scale, may be bamboozed unless he be first reported to the Throne and cashiered and reduced to the rank of a commoner. Even a "Ti-tu," which title belongs to both a General and an Admiral, if found guilty of some fault may suffer the bamboo penalty at the hands of the Viceroy or Governor of a province. A man with military rank is looked down upon and liable to suffer the bamboo penalty at any moment, for which reason no person of decent family willingly takes up the profession, and only illiterates are found in its ranks. An Admiral or a General engages the services of a Secretary, to hold the pen for him, and who is substantially the General or Admiral but without the risks of being bamboozed, which punishment hangs like the sword of Damocles over the head of every present-day Chinese military or naval officer. Hence a man must be a civil mandarin first and then he may take up a military or naval appointment without danger of being despised, and free from the risk of the bamboo. This has been the curse of China, and she has so far been weak and unable to rise up to her proper status, simply because the military and naval officer is despised while the civil official is raised up out of all proportion over the heads of the former. Once China reforms this custom, and puts the military, naval, and civil professions on a par, and requires every military and naval officer to have the education of a gentleman like a civil official, we shall find youthful scions of the best families only too eager to enter the Army or Navy, for, like the young men of other countries, they are attracted by the brilliant trappings of the military officer coupled with the sense of power in being at the head of a body of fighters not possessed by the civil official.

Many old China residents will learn with regret, of the death of Dr. Alfred Bowyer Barton, M.D., F.R.C.S., in his 80th year. He was for some years a surgeon of the Royal West India Mail Company, and the Peninsular and Oriental Company, and was after resident in China. With Major-General Sarel, C.B., and Captain Blakiston, R.A., he explored the Yangtze in 1861, the result being given in Captain Blakiston's interesting volume.

The following is a translation of a pamphlet being circulated in Canton:—

CANTONESE, READ THE FOLLOWING.

The United States is a country known for its great wealth, and its citizens are lavish in spending money. Should American travellers, who visit Canton, refuse on account of the present boycott, to patronise the Jade stone, Curio, Silk and other shops, would this not be a great loss to the Chinese shop keepers?

Further, if Americans should refuse to continue to buy matting, silk, firecrackers and other articles of native manufacture—which can be bought in other countries—would this not prove very disastrous to the interests of the Chinese merchants? If this boycott continues there is no telling what may happen!

Let our people consider this!

Issued by a fair-minded Chinese merchant.

It appears that some friction has arisen among the promoters of the Swatow-Chiu-chou railway. The directors of the Company have been impeached before the Viceroy by some influential gentry. The grounds of the impeachment seem to be that whilst no names of foreigners appear on the list of shareholders, they hold in reality some of the shares. This impeachment on the other hand has been attributed to private maliciousness. The Viceroy replies that provisions were made in the Company's regulations that foreigners should be employed in the construction of the line, and also to teach the Chinese how to use the machinery. Afterwards their services would be gradually dispensed with. The malcontents are therefore advised not to seek to interfere with the Company's prerogatives to manage their own affairs, and not to impede the progress of the work. Meanwhile, the Chamber of Commerce has taken the matter in hand, and has sent out thither as their representative Wai Chiu Ka, to personally examine into the whole affair, and having ascertained the facts, to take steps for the furtherance of the work and its effectual protection.

The following, remarks the N.-C. Daily News, may throw some light on the to frequent disappearance of Europeans and others at Shanghai, the last traces of whom show that they took a sampan to cross the river or go out to some vessel. Between 11 and 12 o'clock on Saturday night a local Scotsman, who lives at Pootung, hired an unnumbered sampan from the native city to take him to the other bank of the river. On the way across, the two Chinese in charge of the boat demanded money and being refused attacked the European with choppers, but they found their passenger too big a handful and after a fight, in which the sampan narrowly escaped being capsized, they took to the water. Left alone in the boat the Britisher yulohed as best he could to Pootung, arriving about 3.30 a.m. He now has the sampan as a memento of his trip.

The N.-C. Daily News reports the death of Mr. Kita, engineer at the Shanghai Cotton Spinning Mill, which took place as a result of a fall from a pony. It appears that on the afternoon of the 10th inst. the deceased went out for a ride along the Yangtseepoo Road, when the pony bolted, and one of the reins breaking, the rider fell, receiving terrible injuries to his head, causing the brain to protrude. He was conveyed to Dr.

Sasaki's hospital and attended to but died the same night. The deceased was a reserve Japanese cavalry-man and had been for some time in Shanghai as engineer at the Cotton Spinning mill.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Major-General Hayashi will shortly leave for Korea.

Colonel K. Watanabe was promoted to Major-General on Aug. 20th.

The Yusen Kaisha has decided to open a regular service between Hakodate and Saghalien.

The Formosan government intends to present some Wulong tea to Russian officers in Japan.

Lieut.-General Okihara and 190 officers under his command had audience of the Emperor on Aug. 22nd.

The Italian cruiser Marco Polo arrived on Aug. 20th at Miyatsu. She will make a stay of three days.

Prince Nashimoto, now at the front, who had been ill for some days past, is reported to have recovered.

A Yaniagata telegram says that dysentery is raging in the districts of Kitayama, Atsumi and West Oshitama.

A man was run over at 5.30 a.m. on Aug. 23rd by a freight train at Kawasaki station. Apparently he committed suicide.

Tokyo papers report that the battleship Sagami (formerly Peresent) arrived at 3.50 p.m. on Aug. 23rd at Saseho under her own steam.

The Emperor of Korea has decorated Major-General Usakawa, Director of the Bureau of Military Affairs, with the first insignia of merit.

On the morning of Aug. 23rd, a floating dock was launched at Tsintao, Kiaotchou. It is 125 metres in length and can admit a vessel of sixteen thousand tons.

Mr. William Bruce Dick, founder of the electrical engineering firm of Messrs. Dick, Kerr, and Co., died suddenly on July 10th at Sevenoaks, in his seventy-sixth year.

The death is announced of Mr. J. Inouye, a representative in the Diet for Kagawa prefecture. The funeral will take place at 1 p.m. on Aug. 24th at the Zojoji, Shiba, Tokyo.

A New York telegram to the Hochi says that the Australia, which was recently captured by the Japanese in Petropavlovsk, is an American ship and not a Russian transport.

An American transport arrived on Aug. 20th at Nagasaki. According to a report brought here, the Hon. W. Taft and party will leave Manila about Sept. 10th for Japan.

The Hochi has a telegram under date of Aug. 23rd from Washington that the subscription for the new Russian domestic loan of a hundred million roubles has been closed with bids for only ten millions.

The steamer Mukden has been renamed the Hoten Maru and attached to the Saseho Naval Station. She was captured on Feb. 6th, 1904, in the neighbourhood of Fusan, Korea. She is of 1,567 gross tonnage.

The Japanese Consul at Bombay reports that the cotton market is very quiet and there is no change. The price for future delivery has advanced remarkably. "Fine Bengal" for January delivery is quoted at 212 rupees.

Major-General McArthur and Captain West, of the American army, arrived on Aug. 22nd at Moji from the front. They put up at the Sanyo Hotel. They will pay a visit to Korea, after which they will leave for home.

About fifteen hundred civilians in Saghalien have applied to the Japanese military authorities for permission to leave for Europe. They will shortly be brought to Awomori, and thence to Yokohama to be delivered to the French Consul.

According to investigations made up to Dec. 31st, 1903, by the Statistics Bureau, the population of the Japanese Empire was 48,542,736—males, 24,632,462; females 23,910,274. Deaths numbered 8,725,093. Formosa is included.

According to Japanese journals, the Russia warships which have been floated at Chemulpo and Port Arthur have the following values: the Prevel, yen 13,000,000; Poltava, yen 10,000,000; Bayan, yen 8,000,000; Pallada, yen 6,000,000 and Varyag, yen 6,000,000. On floating them about seven million yen was spent.

I. Soyeda (32), ex-employee of the Tokyo branch of the Vacuum Oil Company, was prosecuted on Aug. 22nd in the Tokyo District Court. The Nichi Nichi says that he made a contract with Y. Inouye, a drug merchant, residing in Saiki-cho, Kyobashi, Tokyo, to sell him used oil and received three thousand yen in bargain money. The accused, however, did not deliver the goods to the merchant.

The funeral of Mr. C. L. Dubois took place at the Yokohama Cemetery on Friday, the Rev. S. Booth officiating. The chief mourner was the deceased's brother, M. Jules Dubois, who was followed by his uncles, Messrs. C. and J. Faur Brandt. The pall-bearers were Messrs. B. Baumgartner, J. Mizaino, Soia, Schellenberg, and Schoeninger. There was a large attendance testifying to the esteem in which the deceased was held.

On Aug. 22nd, the standing Committee of the Central Tea Guild met in Tokyo. They decided (1) to welcome the Hon. W. Taft and his party when they visit this country on their way back from Manila; (2) to present a petition to the Government for a subsidy to develop the tea business abroad; (3) to ask the Government to make a Commercial Treaty with Russia after the peace, which will exempt Japanese tea from duty in Siberia; and (4) to pay a subsidy for competitive exhibition of tea raised in normal gardens throughout the Empire.

A soldier named K. Natsume (24) attempted to commit suicide on the morning of Aug. 23rd by throwing himself into the canal near Negishi Prison. He was saved by a policeman of the Isezaki-cho Station and removed to the office. It is said that the man sustained severe wounds to his left arm on Nov. 30th at the attack on 235 metre Hill, Port Arthur, and in March this year was released from service. Since then he has been temporarily supported by an aunt, a poor widow, residing at Kawasaki, as he is unable to work.

On Aug. 20th a swimming race was held under the patronage of the Osaka Mainichi Shimbun. It consisted of a championship race of ten miles—from the breakwater to Uwosaki point. The race attracted twenty-eight champions. The first man in was Mr. Y. Sugimura (22), a student of the Imperial College of Law, and first son of Y. Sugimura, Minister to Brazil; the second was Mr. S. Sawada (18), a son of a swimming expert in Osaka; the third was Mr. S. Kaneko (19), employee of the Osaka Shosen Kaisha; and fourth was Mr. K. Shinoda (19), a student of the First Kyoto Academy.

S. Namiki, a foreign rice merchant of Masu-cho, Yokohama, was arrested on Aug. 22nd, by the Isezaki-cho police on a charge of fraud removed on the following day to the Yokohama District Court. According to the police, he obtained yen 2,650 on April 21st and yen 2,190.80 on May 3rd from the 35th Honcho-dori, by fraud. On Aug. 18, he obtained 102 bags of beans and 295 bags of the staple from Cheong-Yuen and Tung Hsing Lu Chinese traders in Yamashita-cho, and received yen 1,340 from the 3rd Bank, Bentendori, offering the goods as security for a loan. At this he ran away without paying the Chinamen.

MUSIC AT KARUIZAWA.

On Friday evening, August 18th, the Union Church at Karuizawa was crowded to the very doors when the Cantata entitled "The Rose Maiden" was rendered under the able direction of the Rev. B. C. Haworth, D.D. of Tokyo. For the past few weeks twenty-six ladies and gentlemen have laboured earnestly to prepare and rehearse the music for this Cantata, but they were amply repaid for their earnest work by the storm of applause which greeted every one who took part on this occasion.

The programme for the evening was opened with two cornet solos by the Rev. J. Monroe Stick, of Sendai, who every beautifully and artistically rendered (a) "Old Uncle Ned," with variations and a brilliant cadenza, (b) "Cujus Animam," from the Stabat Mater, by Rossini. Mr. Stick has delighted Karuizawa audiences all summer with his splendid cornet playing and has very much aided the Sunday services by accompanying the hymns and rendering cornet and mellophone solos. Indeed, he has proved himself an artist of parts and he deserves the hearty thanks of the entire Karuizawa community whose pleasure it was to hear him play. Following the cornet solos and prior to the opening Chorus, Dr. Haworth gave a detailed synopsis of the Cantata for the benefit of the children and for all who had never heard of the very interesting story of the "Rose Maiden." His remarks were much appreciated and throughout the entire evening Dr. Haworth proved himself an able director of music, and well earned the hearty applause and three cheers which greeted him. The following sang the duets in the order named:—Rev. McNair and Mrs. Cowen, Miss Wygal and Mrs. Cowen, Rev. Haworth and Mrs. Cowen.

The duet work was very well done and great credit reflected on the performers. Their voices blended beautifully and their enunciation was very clear, thus making it easy to follow the story. Mrs. Cowen, being leading soprano, took the part of "The Rose Maiden" and rendered all her solos in her usual excellent and artistic manner. The other soloists of the evening were,—Mr. Pedley, bass solo; Messrs. Peek, Elwin, and Iglehart, tenor solos. It would be very difficult to say who excelled in the solo and duet work, as all did exceedingly well and rendered their selections with great confidence, clearness and tact. Special mention, however, must be made of the solo by Rev. Peek who sang with such earnestness and soul as to move visibly the hearts of the audience, and the tenor solo in the grand finale by Rev. Iglehart added greatly to the splendid ending.

The chorus throughout the whole Cantata was good and at no time was there any timidity or ear exhibited. Dr. Haworth had his singers under control and both singers and Director deserve great credit.

Prof. Edward Gauntlett presided at the Organ. Those taking part in the Cantata were: Soprano Voices:—Mrs. Cowen, Mrs. Stick, Mrs. McCoy, Miss Gibbons, Miss Ward, Miss Hayashi, Miss Cowen.

Alto Voices:—Mrs. Weaver, Mrs. Hagen, Mrs. Buncome, Miss Wygal, Miss Mumah, Miss Cowen.

Tenor Voices:—Rev. Elwin, of China, Rev. Dr. Lasalle, of China, Rev. Peek, Rev. Iglehart, Rev. Logan, Rev. Scott.

Bass Voices:—Rev. Pedley, Rev. Dr. Davidson, Rev. McNair, Rev. Erdman, Prof. Boynton, Prof. Ross, Prof. Grover.

At the close of the evening's entertainment Prof. Sharp proposed a special vote of thanks to Dr. Haworth, Rev. M. Stick, Prof. Gauntlett and all who took part in the Cantata, to which the entire audience most heartily responded; this was followed by three cheers bringing a pleasant evening to a close.

The Cantata was given as a benefit for the Tokyo School for Foreign Children, and judging from the crowded condition of the Church it is safe to say that a nice little sum was realised for most worthy object.

LITERARY GOSSIP.

Under the title "The Wild Huntsman: A Legend of the Hartz," Messrs. Putnam are preparing an illustrated translation of the poem by Julius Wolff which has already gone through twenty-seven editions in Germany. The translation (by Mr. Ralph Davidson) is believed to be the first appearance in English of Wolff's most successful work.

"Angelique of Port Royal" is the title of an anonymous biography, which Messrs. Skeffington have in preparation, of one of the leaders of the band of nuns and hermits of the seventeenth century whose self-devotion won for them the bitter antagonism of the Jesuits. Angelique's brother Antoine and many other scholarly recluses—Pascal and Nicole among them—are closely bound up with her life.

It is odd, but the fact has a certain curious interest, that the mutiny of a twentieth century Russian battleship should recall the life's vicissitudes of the author of the "Metamorphoses," Kusteni, to which port the Kniaz Potemkin was steered after leaving Odessa, stands on the site of the ancient Roman colonial town of Tomi, to which Ovid was exiled, and where he passed the last years of his life.

Soon after the death of Miss Charlotte Yonge, the novelist, a fund was started for the purpose of erecting a suitable memorial to her genius and her piety. It is now more than a year since the first part of the memorial decided on by the committee was erected in Otterbourne Church and dedicated by the Bishop of Guildford. On July 3rd the second part of the memorial was dedicated by the same prelate in Winchester Cathedral. It takes the form of an elaborate reredos in the Lady Chapel of the Cathedral, its subject being the Annunciation.

Mr. Murray, who published Dr. J. W. Gregory's narrative of his scientific exploration in British East Africa—"The Great Rift Valley"—in 1896, has another book in preparation by the same author, giving an account of his experiences as head of the Lake Eyre Expedition in 1901-2, when he was Professor of Geology at Melbourne University. The work is entitled "In the Dead Heart of Australia: A Journey around Lake Eyre in the Summer of 1901-1902; with an account of the Lake Eyre Basin and the flowing well of Central Australia."

The next three volumes arranged for Messrs. Putnam's "Heroes of the Reformation" series is "The Satirists and Satires of the Reformation, both Protestant and Roman Catholic," by Mr. Oliphant Smeaton, whose "English Satires and Satirists" in the Warwick Library appeared in 1899; "John Calvin: The Founder of Reformed Protestantism," by Dr. Williston Walker, Professor of Germanic and Western Church History at the Theological Seminary, Hartford, Conn.; and a volume which is to be shared by the Rev. Alexander Gordon, Principal of the Unitarian Theological College, Manchester—who deals with Lælius Socinus and his nephew Faustus, "the founders of the Unitarian movement"—and Dr. Henry C. Vedder, Professor of Church History at the Crozer Theological Seminary, who gives the life of Balthasar Hubmaier, the theologian of the early Baptists.

There has been no lack of Lives of John Wesley. The great preacher forms, of course, a very attractive subject, and few prominent men have had careers that are more intimately or more widely known. The Rev. Richard Green's "John Wesley, Evangelist" (just issued by the Religious Tract Society) differs somewhat, as will be gathered from the title, from the ordinary biography. Mr. Green's aim, first of all, was to describe fully Wesley's earlier career, giving prominence to those events and circumstances which in "so remarkable a way prepared him for his great work"; and, secondly, to set forth his evangelistic appeal to the heart and conscience of the nation. While acknowledging his indebtedness to the labours of earlier biographers, Mr. Green gives an original study—clear, vigorous, and striking. He does not hesitate to differ from other writers on Wesley when he thinks they fail in accuracy or in justice to their subject. Mr. Green's pen is that of a ready writer, his style is crisp and effective, and his book, both for its matter and manner, deserves to take a high place among the many works devoted to Wesley. There are a number of illustrations, and a very full and excellent index.

M. Elisée Reclus, the eminent French geographer, revolutionist, and philosopher died at Thourout, near Bruges, from heart disease, in his 76th year, on July 5th. Reclus travelled widely in his youth and early took an active part in politics. He was the first French writer to lend support to President Lincoln in the great struggle of the North against the South; and so highly was this appreciated that the American Minister offered Elisée Reclus a large sum of money, which, as might have been expected, was indignantly refused. During the sixties Reclus published various geographical works, the most important of these being "La Terre, Description de la Vie du Globe" (two volumes, 1867-68), afterwards translated into English under the title of "The Earth." This may be regarded as an introduction to the great work which occupied most of his later years, his "Nouvelle Géographie Universelle." He afterwards published a companion volume to "The Earth" under the title of "The Ocean." When the Franco-Prussian war broke out and Paris was besieged, Reclus served in the National Guard and in the company of Aeronauts under M. Nadar. His convictions led him later to side with the Communists, though he did his best to restrain their violence and vandalism. He was taken prisoner in a skirmish on the plateau of Chatillon and was confined for some months in Brest, where he taught his fellow-prisoners mathematics. In November, 1871, he was condemned by the Council of War to transportation, but on the representation of distinguished men of science of various nationalities, including Darwin, Wallace, Carpenter, and other Englishmen, this was commuted into perpetual banishment (January, 1872). Later he was allowed to return to Paris, but after some years he went to Brussels as Professor of Geography in the Université Libre. The Times concludes its obituary notice in these words:—

A small man, of extremely spare habit, his health must have suffered under the hardships he had to endure during the period of the Commune. His habits were almost ascetic; he was practically a vegetarian. His manners were of the sweetest and gentlest; his eyes brimmed over with humanity. It was this intense human sympathy, probably, more than any reasoned-out political creed, that led Elisée Reclus into the Anarchist camp. He was a man of the most generous disposition; in his later years he was almost in poverty, mainly through his lavish liberality to his fellow Communists. Mistaken though his political creed may have been, he was a man actuated only by the loftiest, purest, and most unselfish motives. He had many dear friends in England among all classes. In his "Last Word" to the "Universal Geography" he says:—"I have sought to depict clearly the lands I have described as if I really had them before my eyes, and studied the inhabitants as if I were living in their midst. Everywhere I have found myself at home, in my own country, among men who are my brothers. I believe that I have never been inspired by any feeling but one of sympathy and respect for all the inhabitants of the great fatherland. On this ball revolving so rapidly in space, a grain of sand in the midst of infinity, is it worth while to hate one another?"

KOREAN PROBLEMS OF THE DAY.

"Esson Third," sends the following letter to the North-China Daily News, under date Seoul, July 27th:—

There has been much written of late with regard to Korea and her responsibility as to the war, and I regret to say that much of what has been written will mislead the Koreans and do them a wrong. It will also alienate the sympathy of the Japanese from the very people whom we desire most of all to help in their time of need.

To the ignorant people of this country, the responsibility for the war rests, heaven knows where, they know not and care not. All they see is an invasion of Japanese pouring into the land; a railway of theirs running the whole length of it; ring-straked and spotted coolies from the Island Empire butting into them on the streets. When the Korean gets in the way with his long pipe, fan, and patriarchal look at wonder, he is frequently awakened by a cuff or a kick to exclaim, "Under heaven and among men where am I?" He does not wish to awaken to the fact that a pipe so long on a jostling street now-a-days is out of order, and that if he stands and gazes he will assuredly be run over by the electric cars or upset by some beast or other into no end of deshabille.

This same Korean talks over the wrongs he suffers at the hands of the Japanese. He was kicked. He has been kicked before for his stupidity, we are sorry to say, by a missionary, but that is not the question now. It is these Japanese. What matter to him if three hundred and sixty thousand, or half a million of them are among the dead, wounded, or missing on the battle-field, this is his land to do as he pleases in, and he calls on the gods to back him up in it. He absolves himself from all responsibility for the war, and unfortunately much that is written encourages him in the absolution.

Many of the more enlightened Koreans talk in an equally short-sighted way. "This is no fault of ours; this state of affairs is our Government's fault." They also fail to recognise that down through the ages peoples are held responsible for their government, that for the sins of King Manasseh Israel went into exile; and that in the trail of grasping Cassinis, Pavlovs, and Alexeifs are the blood drops of half a million poor Russian peasants. "But what of that?" say they, "we must be free to waste the eternal ages as we please. This is no fault of ours; 'tis the sin of the Palace."

These Koreans do not remember that not they themselves, but General Hasegawa held off, this year, an invasion of Cossacks by way of Ham-Kyung, an invasion that would have done incalculably more mischief than many years of the Japanese. You ask them about it and they say: "Why, yes, that is something to be thankful for, we never thought of that before."

The Korean is not an unfair man or unkind, but he does not think. He has no view of the world in proper perspective. His sight extends just to his own limits, front yard and gate, and ends there, and has to do with empty form more than reality and truth.

There is another group of Koreans, however, who say: "This war serves us jolly well right. We have been lazy, good-for-nothing, sinful, deceitful, indifferent to all reform, unwilling to learn, and this is our day of judgment. Let us confess our sins and awaken to the lesson."

These men do not accept the theory that they are not responsible. They are terribly responsible; and yet as one of them remarked the other day: "We have got off scot-free in comparison with others. Our little wrongs are not to be compared with the sufferings through which Japan, Russia and Manchuria are passing." These are the Koreans that one can rest his hopes on and feel assured that they will yet do much for their country.

Japan, meanwhile, is being soundly rated by the ignorant classes and by some foreigners for her whole course of action during the past year. She is threatening a protectorate, we are told. But what of that? We have had a protectorate ever since the treaty was signed and since war broke out. As to what a protectorate is let the "Century Dictionary" answer:

"A relation assumed by a strong nation toward a weak one, whereby the former protects the latter from hostile invasion or dictation, and interferes more or less in its domestic concerns."

However, Japan's wrong-doings do seem to stand out on the face of things, no-question about it.

One is that she has not removed from the palace the corrupt, lying, lazy, ignorant officials, who have brought the country to this pass, the friends of Russia, who would sell the land to-morrow if they had their way. Does Japan think she has won these men over? Not at all. Is she ignorant of their inner natures? By no means. Then why does she not at once oust them from power and institute real reform? That might seem a very easy matter to an onlooker, but it is by no means so. To inaugurate any such radical change, at the present time, would please a few reformers only; it would alienate His Majesty more than ever, and would stir up a hornet's nest, that might be very embarrassing indeed at this point when a great war is on her hands. Korea has of her own free will kept these men in office for the last twenty years, and it seems hardly fair that Japan should be ordered to house-clean some one else's neglect and disorder, when she is confronted by half a hundred problems at home and half a million of Russians abroad. It surely is wisdom on her part to keep Korea as quiet as possible till her hands are free.

Again it is stated that the Japanese Government allows her people to come in great numbers and settle anywhere.

This is evidently true, though a close watch is being kept on the landings at Fusan, and in some cases objectionable parties are being turned back, yet great numbers are coming in. It is unfortunate, but it cannot be held up as a piece of bad faith. The right to land and live anywhere in Korea has been contended for and established, first by the missionaries, the French Fathers, then the Americans, and lastly the English. A right that missionaries have claimed and secured the Japanese may surely have a share in.

It is said again that they are securing land in unfair ways and that their Government abets them. In refutation of this we would state that it is just the other day that the Japanese Government made one of their most powerful banking companies restore a large property in Songdo on the demand of the Koreans, because the title to the same did not seem clear.

We know that Japanese subjects are in some cases very objectionable, and that they are beyond the reach of law and do as they please among the Koreans. This too is a situation following in the wake of war, and one that we hope to see rectified in due time, certainly as soon as peace is proclaimed, if not before. But the Japanese cannot possibly, on a moment's notice, provide police to safe-guard Koreans against all tramps from their own country, and so it seems unfair in this time of their struggle with the mightiest on earth to hold them responsible for every act of violence perpetrated by their private citizens.

As Dr. Morrison, correspondent of the Times, says: "Seoul is policed by the Japanese." This is perfectly true, and the city has been quiet and orderly since. True there are Korean police everywhere, but of what use are they? Before the outbreak of the war, there were just as many as there are to-day, and yet private citizens were thugged and violated until they had at last in the interests of common safety, to provide a man for every five houses to patrol the streets and shout off the robbers. Suffice it to say that there is no longer need of patrols in civilian dress, or men with rattling sticks to go howling about the streets at night.

Korea is no easy task to deal with, even though the people are kind, trustworthy, and lovable. Westerners have in the past attempted more than one small change with this easy-going people, silk-culture, paper-making, army training, glass manufacture, education, and they have all failed; not because the foreigners in charge were failures, but because the Korean mind does not yet move along any of these lines. There is no scientific silk-raising as yet, no present-day paper-making, no army worth the name, no glass, and no thoroughly educated men from the schools of Seoul, though they have had first-class teachers.

Much force, much compulsion, and alas, many bitter days are in store for them ere they emerge into intelligence, industry, and honesty.

Of all countries in the world your correspondent desires first the weal of this peninsula, but at present he cannot see it apart from Japan. If there was no protectorate and the country was allowed to continue on its way, it would return as speedily as possible to the condition of ten years ago, and the Palace would be run once more by sorcerers, fakirs, banishes, goblins, that have constituted the real Cabinet in the past. There would be no reform, and no desire for reform, and men like Yim Chi-ho, and Yi Sang-ja, and others who are true men and intelligent, would be imprisoned, paddled, tortured, exiled, and beheaded. There is no hope for Korea alone, none; Japan must do the work. We trust that she will act the part of a great and true protector. As yet we see no reason to think otherwise of her. It is too early in the day to hold up irrelevant things as evidence and pass judgment. When Korea has suffered as Japan, and Manchuria, and Russia; and when all the hills are marked with her blood from a war that she is equally responsible for having brought about, then Israel's sighing will surely be heard and Moses the deliverer will come.

In a word the bane of Korea to-day is not the Japanese, but the Palace, where ignorance, superstition, and cruelty hold sway. So short-sighted is this country! She ought to hail the day with joy when there will be no more slaughtering of men like Chang Ho-ik, Cho Tak-hyun, and Kim Hong-jin, whose sin was a desire to clean out the Augean stable and revive the land. Let Korea accept of the present, set to, learn her lesson, and trust God for the future. To the fullest extent of her territory and influence, she stands responsible for the war. In the blood and sweat and suffering of it she has shared nothing. Let us help her to see her faults, her sins, her good-for-nothingness, help her to awake to an earnest, diligent, honest life, and it will be time enough then to declaim against a protectorate and the high-handedness of the Japanese.

CORRESPONDENCE.

A RECTIFICATION.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR.—In the monthly Summary of the Rejoice, Press I read the following résumé of an article in the Kyoe referring to questions and answers published by that Review:—

"In the June number a Kobe Christian asks what will be the fate of those persons who have not heard of Christ? If, says the interrogator, God is perfectly just and all-powerful, He cannot punish people for not observing precepts of which they have never heard. The reply is that whatever may be the fate of the non-Christian nations, they certainly will not be sent to hell. Whether they can obtain the same amount of happiness as will be enjoyed by Christians is a point on which the Kyoe does not care to pronounce an opinion."

If I had not read in the Kyoe the article in question I confess that the writer of this article, and of other résumés in the summaries of the Rejoice Press, would appear to me to be a sort of Platypus who meets the questions submitted to be after the fashion of those who offer to shake their over the matter. I very well understand that it is difficult to sum up in six lines a reply which covers more than two pages of the Kyoe. As it seems to me that in a few lines it is possible to give the ruling ideas of the reply, which are these:—God does not punish non-culpable ignorants. According to St. Paul, those who have not known the law shall be judged without the law, that is, say, according to their conscience. God may use mysterious means of procuring the supernatural happiness of souls to whom the ordinary means are not accessible. Apart from this supposition, which is perfectly just, could not fail to reward in a which is unknown to us, the virtuous lives of heathen pagans.

This résumé will not doubtless occupy a large space materially than the summary of 22nd July, and it will have the advantage of being 20% exact.

A READER OF THE "KOE"

Tokyo, August 22nd, 1905.

"THE NIGHTLESS CITY"

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR.—In your issue of the 21st inst. I noted that you had a short paragraph in which you stated the fact that another edition of the "Nightless City" was being announced. You then state that because it is "unsavory," and that, in consequence, "many people prefer to close their eyes altogether to the existence of such institutions and their inmates."

Apropos of your remarks, I desire to state that subsequent to the anonymous publication of the 1st edition of "Nightless City" in 1899, I was entrusted with the task by certain unctuous persons in writing a work which lays bare a phase of Japanese social phenomena before which all writers of the notable exception of Mr. Henry Norman have studiously drawn a veil. To this class of persons neither owed, nor offered, an apology; but to obviate any misunderstanding of my motives, may be well to explain the raison d'être of the work.

The voluminous data on which is based the science of Medical Jurisprudence, the records of Courts, and the experience and common knowledge of mankind, prove the universal existence of a "social evil" to be a present and undeniable fact.

History shows that from the earliest ages man was never free from the devastating influences of a vice which arises from an apparently inextinguishable natural impulse inherent alike in human beings in the lower creation. Wrap ourselves up in a mantle of prudery, refuse to acknowledge the evil, it is still there, and, like the pest, it will probably "be with us always."

We can no more hope to eradicate or suppress than to control an earthquake or harness a wave! Its existence being thus palpable, far wiser to frankly recognise and investigate a phenomenon with a view to control, by regulations, the current of the vice and direct it into channels where it may be, to a certain extent, grappled with and arrested, than to foolishly cover our eyes and refuse to discuss the subject on a cowardly plea that we may possibly disturb "conventionalities" by publicity and fully investigate the evils of prostitution.

I utterly deny the proposition that there can be any impropriety in enquiring into the facts of a malady which virtually affects, either directly or indirectly, the whole community; on the other hand, I feel that much may be done by collecting facts and statistics which may prove of value to the legislator, the philanthropist, and the clergy. Without such data how can we ever hope to devise measures preventive or ameliorative to nature, and how can such data be obtained if we are all to be de-from necessary investigations by the mawkish sensibility of Mrs. Grundy?

Legislators of all nations, at different times, have apparently endeavored to crush out or control prostitution, and by various high-handed methods sought to single out and distinguish, for the alleged protection of the public, women known to be guilty of leading a professionally abandoned life. Moses, the great Jewish law-giver, hurled cruel and oppressive edicts against improper unions among the children of Israel. Greece made the Disternads wear a distinguishing costume, and, branding these women with infamy, made regulations by which they were subjected to the control of the municipal police, and were forbidden to offend the public by open indecency. Rome required the registration of its prostitutes, who, under the directions of the Edile, were forced to wear special garments and to dye their hair to a certain colour. Mediæval Europe tried (among other gentle (?) measures) sumptuary laws, banishment, scourging, branding, the stake, the gibbet, the dock, outlawry; while the spiritual (sic) powers anathematized against prostitution all the terrors of religious anathema, threatening physical torment and strict communication in this world, and in the world to come everlasting damnation!

Modern Europe, while outwardly wearing a spotless garment of professed self-righteousness, and turning up its goggling eyeballs in sanctimonious error at the bare suggestion of anything being amiss with its morality, knows well enough that its various governments are secretly struggling with the problem through their police, and that the latter have found a satisfactory solution of the matter notwithstanding many serious essays.

Thousands of miles away from Europe, and practically cut off from all intercourse with the rest of the world at large, the Japanese found themselves confronted with the same problem, and, after various attempts at control, they endeavored to solve the question in a manner far more practical than that of Europe. They were stout enough to see that human passions could not be changed by human legislation, and instead of attempting impossibilities they started in to limit and control what they knew they had not the power to prevent; so, with the object of rendering the evil as inoffensive as possible, the authorities decided upon setting aside certain areas within which prostitutes were allowed to pursue their calling subject to various stringent laws.

These quarters were fenced in and mortared, their exit gateways carefully guarded, and so successful did the system prove in many respects that it has been maintained (with certain modifications) to the present day.

Human nature is fixed and immutable, is, always as, and ever will be the same; and while race, environment, and education may affect its outward form, the animal is essentially the same throughout the entire globe. This being so, it is evident at the experience of one nation or country may often be of considerable value to other peoples if accepted and applied mutatis mutandis to the circumstances and needs of the latter; and it is always well to investigate the results of institutions foreign to our own in a candid and receptive frame of mind before concluding that we possess a monopoly of wisdom in our own home lands. Moreover, human nature is so constituted that when a separate community is established in such a manner as to be practically unaffected by pressure from the outside, its units are sure to co-operate, never unconsciously in moulding new customs and habits and even superstitions, which gradually crystallize into time-honoured precedents by immemorial usage.

The Yoshiwara, during its three centuries of existence, proved no exception to the rule, and in the course of years its inhabitants became slaves to numberless precedents, with the result that some extraordinary customs were developed and even linger on in a modified form.

A consideration of these facts induced me to believe that it would be of value to students of sociology throughout Europe and America to be provided with all available data as to the ins and outs and the working of this unique and purely Japanese system of control—a system of which the westerners have had no experience whatever.

The result of my labours was "The Nightless Y," and as this work treats, in a sober frame of mind, of a subject co-existent with the human race, respectfully submit that it is an essentially practical work which should neither, in a spirit of prudery, be named as "unsavory," nor put aside as unfit for serious consideration.

Yours faithfully,
J. E. DE BECKER
Fuiga-hama, Kamakura, August 22nd, 1905.

W. C. T. U.

A conference (the tenth in succession) of the ladies belonging to the Foreign Auxiliary of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union in Japan, was held in Karuizawa on the 2nd, 3rd and 4th days of August.

It was a matter of sincere thankfulness that Miss Smart, too seriously indisposed to be present at last summer's meetings, was able to attend those of this year, and to contribute, besides the inspiration of her presence, her valuable remarks and advice concerning the important and ever-increasing work of Temperance in all its branches.

Each of the four sessions of the Conference was opened with devotional exercises, after which business was promptly discussed under the supervision of the President, Miss M. A. Spencer.

This business related, in the main, to work among Japanese, in all parts of the country, supervised by American and European ladies, and comprising twenty-one different departments; it was part of the work of this Conference to add three new branches, as will be seen below, as well as to sub-divide an old one. The reports of work were, on the whole, better filled out and more promising, than on any previous occasion.

The subjects specially calling out the interest of all assembled were "The Loyal Temperance Legion," referring to the hopeful enlistment of Japanese children in the good cause, "Physical Education," referring to the true care of the body, especially among Japanese school-girls, "Medal Contests," especially introduced to strengthen the principles of aspiring rhetoricians, "Rescue Work and Social Parity," and "Work among Soldiers and Sailors."

The last two departments named, indeed, were found to be of such vital importance that special extra meetings beyond the bounds of the Conference were voted as necessary for their consideration. The usual election of officers resulted in the retention of all those who had served during the past year, viz:

President Miss M. A. Spencer.
Vice-Pres. Mrs. H. H. Guy.
Cor. Sec. Miss E. Griffin.
Rec. Sec. Miss S. M. Longstrech.
Treasurer, Miss I. M. Blackmore.

The attendance of members and friends was especially encouraging, while the visitors included Miss MacDonald, of the Y. W. C. A.; the Rev. J. Soper, Vice-President of the National Temperance League; Mr. Oshima, of Nagoya; Mrs. and Miss Holbrook of New York; Dr. and Miss McLean of St. Louis, and Dr. Newell of Shanghai.

The Conference passed the following resolutions: "We, the Foreign Auxiliary of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Japan, in this our Tenth Annual Conference assembled, reverently thank God for the achievements of the past year, and render unto Him all the praise.

"We emphasize anew our unwavering loyalty to the basic principles of our organization—total abstinence for the individual, prohibition for the nation, and equal purity for both sexes—and it shall continue to be our earnest endeavor to further these principles so important to the welfare of humanity.

"We invite all earnest women who are like-minded with us to join our organization, put on the White Ribbon, and become soldiers in our peaceful war.

TOTAL ABSTINENCE.

"Because only self-governed individuals can make a self-governed nation; because alcoholic drink debases individual judgment and will and sovereignty; because science, morals, religion and business are unitedly warning of its dangers and discriminating against its users, we pledge ourselves to place greater emphasis upon this fundamental principle, in all our work for the ensuing year. We urge upon our Japanese sisterhood a closer adherence to this principle, and a strict observance and enforcement of the Total Abstinence Pledge among the membership of their Society.

SCIENTIFIC TEMPERANCE.

"Whereas the Japanese Diet, at a recent session of that body, failed to pass as a law the bill providing for the prohibition of the use of alcoholic liquors by minors, and the sale of the same to them, stating that this was 'a question which must be left to education and morals,' therefore be it Resolved: That we push with vigor, during the coming year, the work of our department of Scientific Temperance instruction; and that we endeavor to interest the Government Educational Department and leading educators of this country in the adoption, for their government schools, of a course of study in Physiology and Hygiene, which shall give instruction in regard to the effects of alcohol and narcotics, similar to the course of study pursued so beneficially for many years in the United States, and now being adopted by Great Britain and Germany.

YOUNG WOMEN AND CHILDREN.

"Resolved: That greater efforts than ever before be made to organize 'Y' societies in educational institutions and among young women in social life; that we emphasize the importance of pushing the work among the children, through the formation of Loyal Temperance Legions and otherwise, not only teaching them the evil effects of alcoholic liquors and narcotics, but training them to be skilled temperance workers.

AIDS TO EFFECTUAL WORK.

"We strongly urge upon each member the importance of acquiring a broader knowledge of our organization, its rules of order, and its fundamental principles, and recommend, as aids to the securing of this knowledge, a careful study of our Declaration of Principles, W.C.T.U. Catechism, the Hand-book, "Do Everything," National and Local Constitution, Departmental Plans of Work, and Robert's Rules of Order.

"We also urge the importance of subscribing for and of reading the official papers of the Society, viz: the Union Signal, the Japan Evangelist (in which we have a department), the Woman's Herald, (in Japanese) and the Kuni no Hikari.

LAWS.

"Because the laws of a country affect, in large measure, the life of its women and children, and are so often a hindrance to their highest and best development, Resolved: That we endeavor to secure copies of all laws that in any way affect women and children, especially such as relate to the liquor traffic, gambling, impurity, marriage, divorce, and child-labor; and that we urge upon our members and our Japanese co-workers the importance of a knowledge of these laws and a careful study of the same.

PEACE AND ARBITRATION.

"As the tendency of the times is towards militarism, and an ever-increasing army and navy among the nations of the world, we, as an organization realizing the horrors of war, and believing in the Golden Rule of Christ, affirm our belief in the principles of Peace and Arbitration, and pledge ourselves to do all we can to counteract this tendency towards militarism, and to teach the better way of settling all controversies by arbitration.

PURITY.

"Divine revelation, enlightened science and individual experience agree in the fact that a pure life is conducive to the highest mental, moral and physical force. Therefore, we will continue to work for the highest standard of purity for both men and women; we will more faithfully investigate methods of moral education, and will endeavor to prepare ourselves to be wise counsellors to all who apply to us for advice and instruction in regard to the training of the young in principles of self-control and purity.

SUNDAY SCHOOL.

"Whereas we learn that the universal World's Temperance Sunday is not generally observed in this country we will do our utmost to secure a more general and special observance of this day (the third Sunday of November), in all churches and Sunday schools throughout this Empire. We request our Department Superintendent to prepare, as speedily as possible, special helps for use of Sunday Schools in the observance of this day.

SABBATH OBSERVANCE.

"1st. Whereas there is serious desecration of the Sabbath on the part of many Christians, and, whereas, in many instances, they are unconscious of their sin,

"Resolved: That we request all heads of departments and all other members of this Union who live in places where there are local or native Unions, to use all of their influence to get them to carry out the plans of work suggested by the Sabbath Observance Committee, and to inaugurate such additional plans as they deem practical in their respective fields.

"2nd. In places where there are no organizations, that individual effort be made to create a sentiment and to arouse an interest in this important department of Christian life.

MEDAL CONTESTS.

"Because of the success already attending the efforts made to introduce Medal Contests, and because we believe this to be one of our best educational departments, especially among the young, we advise redoubled effort in this work, and heartily recommend the holding of these Contests in connection with all government and mission schools.

ANTI-NARCOTICS.

"Resolved:—That the Anti-Narcotics Department be requested to give more attention to publishing, in all secular papers, original or translated articles against the use of narcotics, and to investigate, and publish in the Japan Evangelist, and other publications, the national laws governing the manufacture, sale and use of narcotics and that anti-narcotic leaflets be published at a price that will make it possible to use them plentifully.

PRESS WORK.

"Resolved:—That the Foreign Auxiliary of the Japan W. C. T. U. do its utmost to secure and fill space in the local papers with W. C. T. U. items, especially with such as expose the fallacies of the pro-liquor arguments.

PHYSICAL CULTURE.

"As we all heartily endorse the words of Frances Willard when she said 'We cannot help a cause of which we are ignorant' therefore:

"Resolved:—That we, who are engaged in the work of this organization, do all in our power to impress on those among whom we work that pure air, exercise and nourishing food are of vital importance to health and especially urge upon them the necessity of good ventilation in sleeping rooms.

COURTESY.

"Resolved:—That we extend our sincere thanks to the decorating committee, for the very artistic way in which they have decorated the Hall for our meetings; to the musicians, who, by their singing and playing, have added so much to the enjoyment of this meeting; to the Union Hall Committee for the use of the Hall for our Conference and Prayer Meetings; to Miss Riddell for her very generous donation of a page in the Police Journal (worth five yen per month) for the printing of Temperance items; and to the Evangelist for the gift of from four to six pages each month.

DEPARTMENTS.

SUPERINTENDENTS.

1. Schools and Colleges...Miss Susan Searle, Kobe.
Associate...Miss F. Holbrook.
2. Loyal Temperance Legion...Miss Penrod, Tokyo.
Associate...Miss Craig.
3. Work among Foreigners...
Mrs. Van Putten, Yokohama.
4. Health and Heredity...Mrs. Nina Stevens, Akita.
5. Scientific Temperance Instruction...
Mrs. Wm. Buchanan, Tokyo.
6. Physical Education...Miss C. M. Osborn, Tokyo.
Associate...Mrs. Cate.
7. Sunday Schools...Miss M. B. Griffiths, Hiroaki.
8. The Press...Miss E. Griffin, Yokohama.
9. Temperance Literature...Mrs. H. H. Guy, Tokyo.
10. Anti-Narcotics...Miss Wigle, Nagano.
11. Evangelistic...Miss S. M. Bauernfeind, Tokyo.
12. Unfermented Sacramental Wine...
Miss E. A. Preston, Kofu.
13. Work among soldiers and sailors...
Mrs. Weaver, Osaka.
Associate...Mrs. Newell.
14. Sabbath Observance...
Mrs. G. W. Van Horn, Osaka.
15. Social Purity...Miss I. M. Hargrave, Tokyo.
16. Rescue Work...Mrs. G. P. Pierson, Asahigawa.
Associate...Mrs. McCauley.
17. Mothers' Meetings...Mrs. B. Chappell, Tokyo.
18. Cradle Roll...Mrs. G. Howles.
19. Work in Factories...Miss Claggett, Tokyo.
Associate...Miss Imhoff.
20. Mercy...Mrs. Madden, Sendai.
21. Medal Contests...Miss Sala Evans, Sakawa.
22. Peace and Arbitration...Miss E. R. Gillett, Mito.
23. Parliamentary Usage...
Miss I. M. Blackmore, Tokyo.
24. Legislation and Petition...
Mrs. Gorbeld, Toyama.
25. Flower Mission...
Miss M. E. Williams, Yokohama.

TELEGRAMS.

(REUTER'S SPECIAL SERVICE.)

THE FIFTH TEST MATCH.

London, August 17.

The fifth Test match between the Australian cricket XI. and all England was drawn.

FRANCE, GERMANY AND MOROCCO.

Owing to the negotiations for the Morocco conference now proceeding the French press has been sharply commenting on the proposals by German bankers to lend the Sultan half a million sterling. The German Legation at Tangier now announces that the contract has been signed.

THE SINGAPORE DOCKS.

Sir Michael Hicks-Beach, ex-Chancellor of the Exchequer, acts as umpire in the arbitration between the Straits Settlements and the Tanjong Pagar docks, in the matter of the expropriation of the company.

THE CONFERENCE.

Later.

The plenipotentiaries announce that Art. 5 was discussed yesterday, but owing to a divergence of views, they decided to proceed with the other Articles and subsequently disposed of Article 6.

THE AMERICAN BOYCOTT.

The American State Department at Washington declares that the Chinese boycott of American goods is not serious. Some headway has been made at Shanghai, but the boycott is unsuccessful in Canton and elsewhere.

TROUBLE IN MOROCCO.

London, August 17.

The Sultan of Morocco has rejected the French Minister's demand for the release of an Algerian Chief who had been brought to Fez in chains. Serious developments are possible.

THE PEACE NEGOTIATIONS.

The Conference has agreed to Articles 7 and 8, which have reference to the Chinese Eastern Railway, with the exception of one point which requires elaboration.

Later.

The Conference discussed the indemnity article yesterday. They failed to agree on this question and temporarily laid the article aside. They then proceeded to consider the surrender of the Russian interned warships.

Russia by accepting Articles 7 and 8 surrenders every vestige of ambition in Manchuria. She closes the door on the ice-free port of Dalny, on which she has spent millions, and retains only a non-military line connecting her European possessions with her Pacific and Maritime provinces.

London, August 19.

The peace plenipotentiaries disagreed regarding Article 10, the disposal of the interned warships, and it was shelved, as was also Article 11, which refers to the limitation of the Russian Navy in the Far East. The consideration of the latter subject will be resumed to-day.

RUSSIAN INTERNAL LOAN.

London, August 18.

It is reported from St. Petersburg that an Imperial Decree has been published, authorising the Russian Minister of Finance to issue an internal loan of two hundred million roubles, bearing five per cent. interest.

RUSSIAN DELEGATES CONFER.

London, August 20.

A prolonged conference of the entire Russian mission at Portsmouth began at midnight. It is stated that some disagreement exists concerning what Russia should yield in order to secure a compromise.

THE TSAR AND DOMESTIC REFORMS.

The Tsar has issued a manifesto, to be read in all the churches, granting a constitution. He hopes that the new assembly will meet not later than the middle of January next. The manifesto confers on the assembly a certain amount of legislative power.

THE CONFERENCE.

London, August 20.

The Conference has adjourned till Tuesday afternoon, when the protocols will be signed. Meanwhile the plenipotentiaries will consult their respective Governments, as the final decision rests with Tokyo and St. Petersburg. The Conference disagreed with regard to Article 11, but agreed to Article 12, granting Japanese fishing rights on the Siberian coast.

RUSSIA AND THE FAR EAST.

Later.

It is stated at Portsmouth that M. Witte has declined to entertain Article eleven, but has intimated that Russia has no intention of maintaining a naval force in the Far East, constituting the theatre (of influence) of Japan or any other power.

CURZON RESIGNS.

London, August 21.

It is officially stated that Lord Curzon Viceroy of India, has resigned. Mr. Balfour has communicated the fact of the resignation to the King.

THE CHANNEL SQUADRON.

The British Channel Squadron has arrived at Esbjerg.

THE PRESIDENT AND BARON ROSEN.

The President conferred for an hour with Baron Rosen. It is known that before inviting Baron Rosen to meet him President Roosevelt had secured the active and cordial support of Great Britain, France and Germany, and had also communicated with the Emperor of Japan.

RUSSIAN DOMESTIC REFORMS.

London, August 21.

A complete absence of enthusiasm is the most striking feature of the Russian press comments on the national assembly project. There are no signs of rejoicing anywhere. The high rental qualification for town vote excludes the majority of educated persons from the franchise. Only 5,000 of the population of St. Petersburg are qualified.

THE TSAR AND PEACE CONCESSIONS.

London, August 21.

The Times has a telegram from Portsmouth which says that the Tsar held a council and finally decided that no further concessions can be made.

LORD CURZON'S RESIGNATION.

The newspapers are unanimous in their tributes to Lord Curzon's magnificent services.

GENERAL STRIKE AT WARSAW.

A general strike has been proclaimed at Warsaw owing to the indignation caused by the procedure at the elections, in which the Poles are treated in a fashion similar to Asiatic nomads.

BOTH SIDES FIRM.

London, Aug. 21.

A summary of the peace protocols submitted to the Conference to-day, which has been published, shows that both sides adhere to their positions with regard to the indemnity and to Saghalien.

FRANCE AND MOROCCO.

The French Minister at Fez has presented a vigorous demand for the release of the Algerian chief and for payment of an indemnity. It is understood that France contemplates making a demonstration either on the Algerian frontier or at a Moorish port a lesson to the Sultan.

THE PEACE NEGOTIATIONS.

London, August 21.

The meeting of the Conference was postponed until to-day, the non-completion of protocols being assigned as the reason. It is believed that the real reason is that M. Witte is awaiting final instructions from St. Petersburg. A representative of President Roosevelt conferred with M. Witte and Baron Rosen yesterday.

(RECEIVED AT THE FOREIGN OFFICE.)

RUSSIAN REFORM.

A Wolff's telegram from Moscow says: The recent meeting of the Agricultural Union in Moscow was attended by representatives from 22 localities. They decided make the following demands:—

- 1.—That an election of representatives for a national assembly be carried out.
- 2.—That all persons of 20 years or upwards itled to vote for representatives by direct an signed ballots.

That the assembly shall have power to submit jects of law and to superintend administration and ince.

That the persons of the representatives shall inviolate.

That the right of farmers to own land be in- ised.

That religious instruction be not compulsory that a system of secular elementary education be be compulsory.

That education and religion be separated.

That free libraries be established.

RUSSIA.

A Wolff's telegram from St. Petersburg s:—An Ukase with reference to a onal assembly and an Imperial Ordin- are expected to be issued on the 19th ant. Among 8 drafts of an Ukase sub- ted to His Majesty that of M. Pobie- utschef was selected as a basis.

the Japanese Consul at Newchwang under date of the 22nd

JAPANESE IN NEWCHWANG.

reat numbers of Japanese females con- e to come to Newchwang, imperilling cause of morality. Henceforth, therefore, opening of new restaurants is forbidden, from September 1st no licences will be ted to dancing girls or maid-servants ying for them. Consequently Japanese les who contemplate proceeding to chwang are warned that no place exists hem and that they had better refrain making the voyage.

(ISSUED BY THE FOREIGN OFFICE.)

GENERAL LINEVITCH.

Reuter's telegram says that General itch reports:—"On the 13th several e enemy's torpedo-boats cannonaded Lazareff and endeavoured to land a but they were repulsed."

s affair has been already reported by Admiral ca. The Russians, according to the Japanese it, opened fire on the landing party from the of a forest and killed one bluejacket, wound- s. The landing party repulsed them, however, stroyed the telegraph station on the cape.—

evitch further reports:—"According elligence received from Korea our on the 5th instant repulsed the enemy had advanced from Ko-Phungsan. he 6th and 7th the enemy again ced but were again repulsed. At the time another of our forces drove back empt directed against it, the enemy z some corpses and ammunition. On th our troops assumed the offensive in ighbourhood of Unkwi Bay and drove my south, taking some arms and nition. Subsequently our troops oc- Ko-Phungsan.

e is no statement from Japanese sources that I advanced as far as Ko-Phungsan, and we e, therefore, how they can have made any orthward of that place. Possibly, however, t out reconnoitering parties. As to Unkwi, orth of the point where the Japanese right the date of the latest advices. That they ced back to the south of Unkwi is thus a plexing story.—Ed. J.M.]

GERMANY AND RUSSIA.

gist of an article in the Kolnische with reference to the relations be- ussia and Germany is this:—"Dur- s war Germany has maintained eutrality towards both of the ents, but there is no reason why it e right for her to set little store by ndly relations with her eastern ur. Persons in certain quarters of who used to entertain doubts of y seem to have now a growing ce in her sincerity. Some folks hat Germany need not take into her ulations that Russia has suffered defeat and that her national strength is greatly diminished, but such a contention is hard to endorse. For many years to come there can be no doubt that under all political aspects Russia's strength will be small, for, even if peace is now restored or if it comes in the sequel of further fighting a long time will be needed for her to reorganize her army and restore tranquillity and good order within her borders. Nevertheless Russia is not to be excluded from the category of strong Powers. Above all looking at the matter from Germany's geographical position, it is clearly to her advantage to maintain good relations with Russia. Even France, which of late has shown a certain degree of cool- ness towards Russia, strictly preserves the dual alliance, which is a proof that Russia will be hereafter as she has been hitherto a strong and imposing Power. In that respect Germany and France see with the same eyes."

(Received at the Naval Head Quarters.)

[Received on the afternoon of the 19th from the officer command- ing the force sent to Kamchatka.]

KAMCHATKA.

On the 13th instant the Kamchatka Squadron captured the Russian transport Australia in the harbour at Petropavlovsk.

(Received by the Naval Department from Admiral Shibayama, Port Arthur, 22nd inst., p.m.)

RUSSIAN DESTROYER FLOATED.

The sunken destroyer Silni (240 tons 26½ knots) was floated to-day.

(The Silni is one of the destroyers put together at Port Arthur, materials having been sent overland from Russia.—Ed. J.M.)

(RECEIVED BY THE "KOKUMIN SHIMBUN.")

THE CONFERENCE.

Portsmouth, August 16, a.m.

On the morning of Wednesday, 16th, the Plenipotentiaries proceeded to the conference chamber through the rain which had lasted since the previous night. They are to consider the 7th Article, which is very complicated.

Later.

At the meeting on the 16th instant the following appears to have been settled:— VII.—The transfer of the Harbin-Port Arthur Railway from Russia to Japan.

VIII.—That the railway across Manchuria shall not be used for warlike purposes but shall be devoted solely to commercial uses.

Russia agreed to the above two Articles. Japan consenting that the same restriction should be applied to the Port Arthur Rail- way. The other articles are to come up for discussion to-morrow.

(From Mr. Carl O'Loughlin.)

Portsmouth, August 16, p.m.

Russia will probably agree to concede fishery privileges to Japan and Japan will abandon her demand as to limiting the naval forces of Russia in East Asia. It is expected that the question of handing over the interned war-ships will be submitted to arbitration. As to the cession of Saghalien and the re-imbursement of expenses, it is declared on the Russian side that there will be no yielding.

(RECEIVED BY THE "HOCHI SHIMPO.")

On the 16th inst. the 7th Article relat- ing to the Harbin-Port Arthur railway was discussed but no decision was arrived at. Russia declares that the railway is private property.

The 8th Article, viz., the one guaranteeing that the Vladivostok railway shall not be utilised for warlike purposes, was agreed to.

A New York telegram says that the prospects of peace are becoming hopeful. It is expected that a compromise will be effect- ed regarding the re-imbursement and Sagha- lien articles.

There is also a rumour in New York that the Powers will bring pressure to bear on Japan to make her abandon the re- imbursement article and restore peace.

(RECEIVED BY THE "NICHU NICHU SHIMBUN.")

London, August 16, 3.30 p.m.

The outlook of the Peace Conference is somewhat better. The Saghalien question has not been settled but it has not led to a dissolution of the conference. The conditions likely to be settled have now been nearly all discussed. As to the railway-transfer demand the Russian Plenipotentiaries affirm that it is a private line, the property of the Russo-Chinese Bank.

(RECEIVED BY THE "JIJI SHIMPO.")

RAISING THE SHIPS.

Yingkow.

The work of repairing the Bayan, the Peresviet and the Pollava having been car- ried to completion very successfully, all three are fit to put to sea under their own steam.

(RECEIVED BY THE "HOCHI SHIMBUN.")

THE RUSSIAN DOMESTIC LOAN.

The subscriptions to the Russian domestic loan of one hundred million roubles amount to only 100,000 roubles.

MAIL STEAMERS.

NEXT MAIL IS DUE

From	Line	Steamer	Date.
Europe	N. D. Lloyd	Preussen	Sa. Aug. 26
Vancouver	C. P. R. Co.	Emp. of Japan	Sa. Aug. 26
Hongkong	B. M. Co.	Blanchina	Mo. Aug. 26
Europe	M. M. Co.	Ernest Simons	W. Aug. 30
Hongkong	B. T. Co.	Hyades	W. Aug. 30
Hongkong	C. P. M. Co.	Emp. of India	Th. Aug. 31
America	P. M. Co.	Siberia	Sa. Sept. 1
Europe	B. T. Co.	Pleiades	Sa. Sept. 1
America	P. M. Co.	Mongolia	Tu. Sept. 10
Hongkong	O. & O. Co.	Coptic	F. Sept. 20

- 1 Leaves M be on the 19th inst.
- 2 Left Vancouver on the 14th inst.
- 3 Left Hongkong on the 18th inst.
- 4 Left Hongkong on the 20th inst.
- 5 Left San Francisco on the 25th inst.

NEXT MAIL LEAVES

For	Line	Steamer	Date
Europe	N. D. Lloyd	Armand Behlo	Sa. Aug. 26
Hongkong	C. P. R. Co.	Taiter	Sa. Aug. 26
Portland	P. & A. Co.	Armbia	Sa. Aug. 26
Hongkong	C. P. M. Co.	Emp. of Japan	Mo. Aug. 26
America	P. M. Co.	Blanchina	Tu. Aug. 29
Shanghai	N. Y. K.	Anhui	W. Aug. 30
Europe	B. T. Co.	Hyades	Th. Aug. 31
Vancouver	C. P. R. Co.	Emp. of India	F. Sept. 1
Europe	N. D. Lloyd	Preussen	Sa. Sept. 1
Hongkong	P. M. Co.	Siberia	Tu. Sept. 3
Hongkong	P. & A. Co.	Nicomedia	W. Sept. 6
Seattle	N. Y. K.	Iyo Maru	F. Sept. 8
Hongkong	B. T. Co.	Pleiades	Sa. Sept. 10
Hongkong	P. M. Co.	Mongolia	W. Sept. 13
America	O. & O. Co.	Coptic	Sa. Sept. 20

LATEST SHIPPING.

ARRIVALS.

Kil-urn, British steamer, 2,111, E. Le Templier, 19th Aug.—Kobe, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.
Alheman, British steamer, 2,440, S. Robinson, 19th Aug.—Hongkong via ports, and Kobe, 17th Aug., Mails and General.—C. P. R. Co.
Keenun, British steamer, 4,897, R. Conradi, 19th Aug.—Liverpool via ports, and Kobe, 17th Aug., General.—Butterfield & Swire.
Chiswick, British steamer, 2,072, C. W. B. Woods, 20th Aug.—Muroran, Coal.—Hokkaido Tanko Kaisha.
Chenan, British steamer, 1,350, H. E. Laver, 20th Aug.—Shanghai via ports, Mails and General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.
Prima, Norwegian steamer, 761, B. A. Meyer, 20th Aug.—Moji, Coal.—Yashimatsu Coal Co.
Lord Antrim, British steamer, 1,954, A. Cordiner, 20th Aug.—Moji, Coal.—Yamagataya.

Original from

Macduff, British steamer, 1,882, John B. Muir, 21st Aug.—Otaru via ports, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Lyra, American steamer, 3,516, G. V. Williams, 21st Aug.—Seattle, Wash., via Victoria, B.C., 1st Aug., Mails and General.—Dodwell & Co., Ltd.

Tremont, American steamer, 6,195, T. W. Garlick, 21st Aug.—Manila and Hongkong via ports, and Kobe, 20th Aug., Mails and General.—Dodwell & Co., Ltd.

Doric, British steamer, 2,936, Harry Smith, 21st Aug.—Hongkong via ports, and Kobe, 20th Aug., Mails and General.—O. & O. S.S. Co.

Coptic, British steamer, 2,744, Wm. Finch, 21st Aug.—San Francisco via Honolulu, 2nd Aug., Mails and General.—O. & O. S.S. Co.

Patroclus, British steamer, 3,548, E. G. Dickens, 21st Aug.—Liverpool via ports, and Kobe, 20th Aug., General.—Butterfield & Swire.

Bentley, British steamer, 2,509, J. Potter, 21st Aug.—London via ports, and Kobe, 20th Aug., General.—Comes & Co.

Ganges, British steamer, 2,721, W. Sibbald, 21st Aug.—Kobe, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Inga, Norwegian steamer, 577, O. P. Spinnau, 21st Aug.—Wakamatsu, Coal.—Drabble & Co.

Breid, Norwegian steamer, 645, J. Folkman, 21st Aug.—Kuchinotsu, Coal.—Drabble & Co.

Peking, British steamer, 2,875, G. A. Rodway, 21st Aug.—Liverpool via ports, and Kobe, 20th Aug., General.—Butterfield & Swire.

Saxonia, German steamer, 3,316, Hoppe, 22nd Aug.—Hamburg via ports, and Shanghai, 17th Aug., General.—C. Illies & Co.

Scandia, German steamer, 3,135, von Doehren, 22nd Aug.—Hamburg via ports, and Hongkong, 16th Aug., General.—C. Illies & Co.

Minnesota, American steamer, 13,323, J. H. Rinder, 24th Aug.—Seattle, Wash., Mails and General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Oro, British steamer, 2,147, W. Ransome Coleman, 24th Aug.—Kobe, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Prussia, American barque, 1,131, A. Johnson, 24th Aug.—Vancouver, B.C., 7th June, Timber.—Jardine, Matheson & Co.

Valetta, British steamer, 1,937, J. McMorran, 24th Aug.—Sakata, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Hugo Maru, Japanese steamer, 882, N. Nielsen, 24th Aug.—Bonin Islands, Mails and General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Tartar, British steamer, 2,768, W. Davison, 24th Aug.—Vancouver, B.C., 7th Aug., Mails and General.—C. P. R. Co.

Unda, Norwegian steamer, 879, A. Hansen, 24th Aug.—Yokkaichi, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

DEPARTURES.

Baralong, British steamer, 2,684, E. D. Jenkins, 18th Aug.—London and Antwerp via ports, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Bentley, British steamer, 2,164, W. Thomson, 18th Aug.—Shanghai via ports, Mails and General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Samara, British steamer, 1,790, W. Lewis, 18th Aug.—Muroran, General.—Hokkaido Tanko Kaisha.

Isleworth, British steamer, 1,719, Cox, 18th Aug.—Moj, General.—T. Inouye.

Yoshida, German steamer, 5,001, E. Prehn, 19th Aug.—Hamburg and Bremen via ports, Mails and General.—H. Ahrens & Co., Nachf.

Breconshire, British steamer, 2,323, G. E. Elliott, 19th Aug.—Otaru via ports, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Athenian, British steamer, 2,440, S. Robinson, 20th Aug.—Vancouver, B.C., Mails and General.—C. P. R. Co.

Golconda, British tank steamer, 4,863, H. Carter, 20th Aug.—Java via Moji, Ballast.—Samuel Samuel & Co.

Bogor, Dutch steamer, 2,306, J. Werkhoven, 20th Aug.—Macassar via ports, General.—Ed. L. van Nierop & Co.

Kaiserin Elisabeth (8 guns), Austrian cruiser, 4,200, Capt. Mirtl, 21st Aug.—Chefoo.

Dracmar, British steamer, 2,316, S. L. Saxby, 21st Aug.—Kobe, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Lyra, American steamer, 3,516, G. V. Williams, 22nd Aug.—Manila and Hongkong via ports, Mails and General.—Dodwell & Co., Ltd.

Kilburn, British steamer, 2,111, E. Le Templier, 22nd Aug.—Otaru via ports, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Doric, British steamer, 2,936, Harry Smith, 22nd Aug.—San Francisco via Honolulu, Mails and General.—O. & O. S.S. Co.

Windsor, British steamer, 1,853, E. A. Booth, 22nd Aug.—Moj, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Tremont, American steamer, 6,195, T. W. Garlick, 22nd Aug.—Tacoma, Wash., via Victoria, B.C., Mails and General.—Dodwell & Co., Ltd.

Gerd, Norwegian steamer, 750, N. Chr. Halvorsen, 22nd Aug.—Muroran, General.—S. Tanaka.

Coptic, British steamer, 2,744, Wm. Finch, 23rd Aug.

—Hongkong via ports and Manila, Mails and General.—O. & O. S.S. Co.

Serra Blanca, British steamer, 2,338, Gruchy, 23rd Aug.—New York via ports and Suez, General.—Comes & Co.

Keemun, British steamer, 4,897, R. Conradi, 23rd Aug.—Puget Sound ports, General.—Butterfield & Swire.

Chenan, British steamer, 1,350, H. E. Laver, 23rd Aug.—Shanghai via ports, Mails and General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Prima, Norwegian steamer, 701, B. A. Meyer, 23rd Aug.—Moj, Ballast.—Yamashita Coal Co.

Cairo, Norwegian steamer, 1,381, Hansen, 23rd Aug.—Miyoko, General.—Osaka Shosen Kaisha.

Patroclus, British steamer, 3,548, E. G. Dickens, 24th Aug.—Batavia, Ballast.—Butterfield & Swire.

Macduff, British steamer, 1,882, John B. Muir, 24th Aug.—Kobe via Yokkaichi, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Chiswick, British steamer, 2,072, G. W. B. Woods, 24th Aug.—Muroran, General.—Hokkaido Tanko Kaisha.

PASSENGERS.

ARRIVED.

British steamer Athenian, from Hongkong via ports, and Kobe.—Lady Piggott, Capt. L. A. Barnes-Lawrence, Mrs. Barnes-Lawrence and child, Miss Barnes-Lawrence, Capt. Harvey, Mrs. Harvey, Mr. H. W. Moron, Mrs. Moron, Mr. J. Baker, Mrs. Munck, Mr. M. D. Currie, Mr. J. Ahtschin, Mr. G. E. Woodward, Mrs. Woodward and 2 children, Capt. Parton, Miss Barker, Mr. R. J. Iribek, Mr. B. Tanner, Lieut. Messenger, Capt. Bennett, Mr. Alexander and Mrs. Alexander in cabin. In Transit:—Mr. Allan Cameron, Mr. Penning, Mrs. Penning, Mr. Frank Penning, Mr. Albert Penning, Mr. Stanley Penning, Mr. C. S. Keem, Miss H. B. Benton, Miss Viola Hays, Mr. R. A. Graham, Mr. J. Heldreth, Mr. Chu Yang, Mr. F. Nette, Miss Rogers, Mr. M. E. Harris, Mr. E. P. Moss, Mrs. Moss and child, Mr. W. Evenburg, Mr. Schneiderwind, Mr. J. F. Brounton, Capt. E. S. Brand, Miss E. R. Dieterle, Mr. C. P. Newton, Mrs. Newton and child and Mr. E. G. Patric in cabin; 4 Chinese; 25 Filipinos; 34 Japanese in steerage.

Per British steamer Doric, from Hongkong via ports:—Dr. G. B. K. Wright, Mrs. G. B. K. Wright, Mr. W. J. Kehoe, Miss May Kehoe, Miss A. Slater, Mrs. Breckman, Capt. S. F. Bottoms, U.S.A., Mr. A. C. Beyer and native servant, Mr. T. D. Knight, Mrs. T. D. Knight, Master D. Knight, Mr. J. B. Thomas, Mrs. J. B. Thomas, Mr. W. Bullard, Capt. P. Reimers, Mrs. Reimers and child, Mr. G. H. Thompson, Mr. Douglas, Mr. C. H. Hunt, Miss L. L. Hunt, Mr. Ward, Mr. E. Jonah and native servant, Mr. C. H. Lawson, Mrs. C. H. Lawson, Capt. C. Olsen, Capt. J. T. Harrison, Mr. G. J. Brockman, Mr. C. Bidwell, Mr. C. Van Buren, Mr. F. E. Ringer, and Mr. E. A. Evers, in cabin. For San Francisco:—Mr. G. E. Loring, Mr. W. P. Pettus, Mr. Wm. Rosenfeld, Mr. W. J. Fisher, Master C. J. Warren, Mr. R. McCullough, Mr. E. A. Rowe, Mr. L. M. Brown, Mr. Wm. L. Hay, Mr. W. F. Bockius, Mr. E. Wechselberg, Mr. W. L. Gunther, Mr. E. M. Oury, Miss J. E. Chapin, Mr. R. Gailey, Mrs. R. Gailey and 2 children, Mr. A. Jewett, and Miss Grace Jewett, in cabin.

Per British steamer Coptic, from San Francisco via Honolulu:—Mr. T. Iwasaki, Mr. T. Momono, Mr. K. Yoshikawa, Mr. M. Van Hook, Mrs. J. M. Van Hook, Mrs. S. Brandt and infant, Dr. Hermann Fahrlander, Mr. S. Brandley Moore, Mr. Karl Postner, and Mr. K. Otsuki, in cabin. For Nagasaki:—Mr. Frank N. Meyer, in cabin. For Manila:—Mr. C. A. Belknap, Mrs. B. A. Belknap, Miss Retta Carlin, Mr. Frank L. Crone, Mr. C. C. Fuller, Mrs. C. F. De May and son, Mr. Jos. T. Hanlon, Miss N. Leona Hunter, Miss M. L. Johnson, Mr. Melvin L. Merritt, Mr. Filmon Perez, Mr. E. G. Redline, Mr. N. C. Smith, Mr. H. H. Wallace, Mr. J. S. Verger, Mr. T. C. Zschokke, and Mrs. T. C. Zschokke, in cabin. For Hongkong:—Mrs. A. F. Budge, Mr. Galt Ingram, Mrs. A. T. Smith, and Mr. J. H. Langtry, in cabin.

Per American steamer Minnesota, from Seattle, Wash.:—Mr. L. B. Graves, Mrs. L. B. Graves, Miss M. Graves, Miss D. Graves, Mr. Gustave Werner, and Mrs. Gustave Werner, in cabin; Mr. A. G. Hurst, Mrs. A. G. Hurst, Master Hurst, Mr. Lizzie Hirshey, Mr. Grace Yattelle, Mr. Carrie Wasland, Mr. Bessie Haroldson, Mr. L. B. Worcker, Mr. J. H. Eshebean, Mr. R. Taniwah, Mr. P. C. Daito, and Mr. N. Makino, in intermediate; 1 Japanese, in steerage. For Kobe:—Rev. C. S. Denning, in cabin; 7 Japanese, in steerage. For Nagasaki:—Mr. W. C. Bryant, Mr. J. N. Hoid, and Mr. C. W. King, in intermediate. For Shanghai:—Rev. A. W. Martin, and Mrs. A. W. Martin, in cabin; Mr. John J. Westrup, Mrs. John Westrup, Master Jos. Westrup, Mr. C. C. Chopp, and Mr. H. Wang, in intermediate. For Hongkong:—Dr. Edwin Bowes, Mrs. Edwin Bowes, Miss M. Bowes, Mr. B. F. Whipple, Miss F. Montgomery, Mrs. Helen and child, Mrs. A. Abi, Mr. Louis Levy, Mr. Ed. Levy, Mrs. J. Hamilton, Lewis, Miss D. Foshay, Miss B. Shaffer, Judge S. Giffin, Mrs. W. S. Giffin, Mr. C. B. Smith, Mr. W. Wilder, Mrs. H. W. Wilder, Master Joe Wilder, Mrs. A. T. Baxter, Mr. R. G. McLeod, Miss J. Cullom, Mrs. W. B. Walker and child, Mr. E. Magie, and Miss Mabel Lanyon, in cabin; Mr. G. MacPherson, and Mr. J. H. Fitzbutler, in intermediate; 34 Chinese, in steerage. For Macao:—Mr. Samuel McClintock, Mr. O. S. Peabody, Mr. W. Dorris, Mr. J. Anderson, Mr. C. D. Schell, C. D. Schell, Miss Schell, Mrs. A. E. Whipple, O. Liddell, Mrs. Elizabeth Gray, Mr. O. G. L. and Miss F. Gray, in cabin.

DEPARTED.

Per German steamer Pinus Edel Frick, Europe via ports:—Mr. Seelhorst, Mr. Inge, G. de Lalande, Mr. H. Deck, Mrs. Schmeck, Nishizawa, Mr. Shaw, Mr. James Marshall, Abenheini, Mr. P. Kummel, Mr. G. R. Grog, Suhr, Mr. L. Janson, Mr. and Mrs. Hornemann, C. Rieck, Mrs. Nelson and baby, Lieut.-Col. W. Mr. J. C. Epperly, Mr. A. M. Montell, Mr. E. Meer, Mr. E. R. Duer, Mr. J. P. Roche, Mr. Mrs. Loureiro, Mr. J. W. Crouch, Mr. and Mrs. Morrell, Mr. McCowan, Colonel H. A. Codd, Mrs. Coddington, Mrs. Bessie Nickels, Mrs. Sayers, Mr. Kwong Chang, Jr., Miss M. C. Mr. Spence, Mr. Hall, Mrs. Todd, Mrs. Mrs. Remedios, Miss J. D. Remedios, Mr. Show, Mr. A. E. Pfaukuchen, Mr. and Mrs. Blunck, Dr. Dorsey Smith, Mr. and Mrs. Sharp, Miss Toki Okada, Miss Sawo Koguchi, Mr. R. Kinoshita, Mr. H. Okada, Mr. Campbell, Mrs. Chan, Mr. Gai and 2 children, Johannsen, Mr. Berrent, Mr. C. Johannsen, Olsen, Mr. Olsen, Mr. Edwardsen, Mr. Y. T. Mr. J. Shinza, Mr. G. Low, Mr. N. Olsen, Jansen, Mr. F. Ceuremon, Mr. P. C. Koroistoy, Mr. G. Newman, Mr. C. Wolf, in cabin, and 12 Chinese, in cabin.

Per British steamer Athenian, for Vancouver, B.C.:—Mrs. C. J. Branham, Capt. E. S. Brand, J. F. Brounton, Miss H. B. Burton, Mr. Allen, Mrs. Allan Cameron, Mr. E. C. Chu Yung, Miss E. R. Dieterle, Mr. W. E. Mr. P. L. Glenn, Mr. R. A. Graham, Mr. Harris, Miss Viola Hay, Mr. Hildreth, Mr. Miss M. Burnside Johnson, Mr. C. Keen, Konoda, Rev. H. Kozaki, Mrs. H. Kozaki, MacCallum, Mr. E. P. Moss, Mrs. E. P. Moss, child, Mr. F. Nette, Miss C. S. Reman, Mr. Newton, Mrs. C. P. Newton and child, Mr. Penning, Mrs. J. E. Penning, Mr. Frank Penning, Mr. Albert Penning, Mr. Stanley Penning, Mr. Roberts, Miss Rogers, Mr. Y. Sakano, Mrs. kano, Mrs. S. Sato, Mr. R. Schneider, Takenaka, Mr. H. Watanaka, Mrs. H. W. Mr. J. E. Williams, Mr. James Woods, and James Woods, in cabin.

Per British steamer Doric, for San Francisco via Honolulu:—Mr. W. F. Bockius, Mr. R. W. Morgan Brown, Mr. R. W. Campbell, Miss J. E. Chapin, Miss Ermine Campbell, Mr. E. L. Fanshawe, Dr. E. W. Fisher, W. J. Fisher, Mr. R. Gailey, Mrs. A. G. children, Mr. W. L. Gunther, Mr. A. W. Mr. Franklin Hamilton, Mrs. Franklin Hamilton, Master Edward Hamilton, Master Arthur and governess, Mr. Wm. L. Hay, Mr. A. Miss Grace Jewell, Miss F. Lawrence, Mr. Lawson, Mrs. C. H. Lawson, Mr. G. E. L. S. Lowery, Mr. R. McCullough, Mrs. T. Cloy, Miss Francis McCulloch, Miss Grace M. D. Montague, U.S.N., Mr. E. M. Pettus, Dr. J. T. Priestley, Mr. W. B. E. A. Rowe, Mr. Wm. Rosenfeld, Dr. J. J. N., Mr. E. A. Taylor, Mr. J. W. Master C. B. Warren, Mr. E. Wechselberg, Samuel H. Whitehead, in cabin.

Per American steamer Tremont, for Seattle, Wash.:—Mr. J. Clarens, Mr. and Mrs. Capt. J. Crossby, Miss A. Briggs, Lieut. L. A. Mr. and Mrs. De Ath, Mr. T. A. Gleason, Greenough, Mr. J. Harold, Mr. P. A. He R. W. Henderson, Mr. and Mrs. A. E. child, Mrs. Meyer and 2 children, Mr. T. Lieut. R. E. Smyser, Capt. L. Sievert, Waters, and Capt. H. Whittier, in cabin.

Per British steamer Coptic, for Hong Kong:—Mr. C. A. Belknap, Mrs. C. A. Mrs. A. F. Budge, Miss Retta Carlin, Mr. Crone, Mr. C. C. Fuller, Mrs. C. F. De son, Mr. Jos. T. Hanlon, Miss N. Leona, Galt Ingram, Miss M. L. Johnson, Mr. J. H. Mr. Melvin L. Merritt, Mr. Frank N. Filmon Perez, Mr. E. C. Redline, Mr. N. Mrs. A. T. Smith, Mr. H. H. Wallace, Verger, Mr. T. C. Zschokke, Mrs. T. C. Mr. F. Collier, Mrs. F. Collier, Rev. L. P. Capt. Herbert B. Crosley, Mr. Wm. Hay, Wm. Haywood, 2 children and governess, Hidalgo, Mrs. H. Lefebvre, Sister Marie L. Major A. Pickering, Mr. D. Schlemmer, Schoetzchen, Mr. L. A. Smart, Sister Saw, Mr. P. G. Woolley, and Mrs. P. G. Woolley, LATEST COMMERCIAL.

IMPORTS.

Yokohama, August 25.

The market is still stagnant, buyers waiting for the result of the peace negotiations.

COTTON PIECE GOODS.

White Shirting—{40 yds. 36 in.} ... 0.10 to 0.16
 {50 yds. 36 in.} ... 0.10 to 0.16

Grey Shirting—8 1/2 lb. 38 1/2 yds. 36 inches V. 4.00 to 4.50
 Grey Shirting—9 lb. 38 1/2 yds. 45 inches 4.50 to 5.25
 Prints—Assorted, 24 yards, 30 inches... 2.85 to 4.25

Cotton Italians and Satteens... 0.30 to 0.40

WOOLLENS.

Flannels... V. 0.50 to 0.65
 Italian Cloth, 32 in... 0.35 to 0.50

Mousseline de Laine—Crape, 24 yards, 30 inches... 0.16 to 0.22

Cloths—Pilots, 54 to 56 inches... 0.50 to 1.00

Cloths—Presidents, 51 to 55 inches... 0.90 to 1.00

Cloths—Union, 54 to 56 inches... 0.50 to 1.00

Blankets—Scarlet and Green, 3 to 5 lb per lb... 0.60 to 0.66

Elvets—Black, 35 yards, 22 inches... 9.20 to 12.50

Victoria Laws, 12 yards, 42 3/4 inches... 0.90 to 1.80

Turkey Reds—2.8 to 3.0 lb 24-25 yards, 30 inches... 1.90 to 2.25

Turkey Reds—3.8 to 5 lb, 24-25 yards, 32 inches... 2.50 to 3.65

COTTON YARN.

os. 16/24, Singles... Y. Nominal

os. 28/32, Singles... —

os. 38/42, Singles... —

os. 42, Doubles... Nominal

os. 42, Doubles... Nominal

os. 2/60, Plain... Nominal

os. 2/80, Plain... Nominal

os. 2/100, Plain... Nominal

os. 2/60, Gassed... 300.00 to 310.00

os. 2/80, Gassed... 350.00 to 370.00

os. 2/100, Gassed... 430.00 to 460.00

RAW COTTONS.

American Middling... 27.00 to 27.25

Indian Broach... 25.50 to 26.00

Chinese... 24.00 to 26.50

METALS.

No special feature to report.

und and square 1/2 inch and upward... V. 4.00 to 4.20 n Plates, assorted... 4.35 to 4.65

set Iron... 4.70 to 6.95

vanised Iron sheets... 10.05 to 10.95

re Nails, assorted... 6.85 to 7.15

Plates, per box... 7.40 to 7.65

Iron, No. 3... 2.40

op Iron (3/4 to 1 1/2 inch)... 5.00 to 5.50

KEROSENE.

No change.

merican... 3.00 to 3.26

isian... 3.14

igkat... 2.94

SUGAR.

The market is still inactive.

wn 'Jakao... V. 9.40 to 9.80

wn Manila... 10.10 to 11.10

wn Daitong... 7.80 to 8.00

wn Canton... 10.00 to 12.10

ite Java and Penang... 12.80 to 13.80

ite Refined... 14.40 to 17.20

INDIGO.

small business.

Medium to best... 190.00 to 240.00

utta, Medium to best... 140.00 to 200.00

ras (Karyak), Medium to best... 90.00 to 120.00 ras (Dry Leaf), Medium to best... —

EXPORTS.

RAW SILK.

here has been a large business at gradually incing prices, until values have touched the ations given below. At these prices there comes use, and there is less business doing. Japanese very confident that the market will advance

ather, while some buyers think that these values ot be maintained. Time will prove who is right.

QUOTATIONS.

res—Extra Best, Coarse... 1,130 to 1,135

res—Extra, Fine... 1,080 to 1,090

res—Extra, Coarse... 1,080 to 1,090

res—No. 1, Fine... 1,060 to 1,070

res—No. 1 1/2, Fine... 1,070 to 1,100

res—No. 1 1/2, Coarse... 1,020 to 1,030

res—No. 2, Fine... 1,040 to 1,050

res—No. 2, Coarse... — res—Extra... —

res—No. 1... 1,060 to 1,070

res—No. 1 1/2... 1,040 to 1,050

res—No. 2... 1,020 to 1,030

res—Extra... 1,040 to 1,050

res—No. 1... 1,010 to 1,020

res—No. 1 1/2... 980 to 990

res—No. 2... 960 to 970

res—No. 2 1/2... 940 to 950

BAD COMPLEXIONS

Dry Thin and Falling Hair and Red Rough Hands Prevented by

CUTICURA SOAP

MILLIONS use CUTICURA SOAP, assisted by CUTICURA OINTMENT, for preserving, purifying, and beautifying the skin, for cleansing the scalp of crusts, scales, and dandruff, and the stopping of falling hair, for softening, whitening, and soothing red, rough, and sore hands, for baby rashes, itches, and chafings, in the form of baths for annoying irritations and inflammations, or too free or offensive perspiration, in the form of washes, for ulcerative weaknesses, and for many sanative, antiseptic, cleansing purposes which readily suggest themselves to women, especially mothers, and for all the purposes of the toilet, bath, and nursery. CUTICURA SOAP combines delicate emollient properties derived from CUTICURA OINTMENT, the great skin cure, with the purest of cleansing ingredients and the most refreshing of flower odours. No other medicated soap is to be compared with it for preserving, purifying, and beautifying the skin, scalp, hair, and hands. No other foreign or domestic toilet soap, however expensive, is to be compared with it for all the purposes of the toilet, bath, and nursery. Thus it combines in ONE SOAP ONE PRICE, the best skin and complexion soap, and the best toilet and baby soap in the world.

COMPLETE EXTERNAL AND INTERNAL TREATMENT FOR EVERY HUMOUR.

Consisting of CUTICURA SOAP, to cleanse the skin of crusts and scales, and soften the thickened cuticle; CUTICURA OINTMENT, to instantly allay itching, inflammation, and irritation, and soothe and heal; and CUTICURA RESOLVENT PILLS, to cool and cleanse the blood. A SINGLE SET is often sufficient to cure itching, disfiguring humours, eczema, rashes, and irritations, with loss of hair, when all else fails. Sold throughout the world. Australian Depot: R. TOWNS & CO., Sydney. British Depot: 27-28, Charterhouse Sq., London. French Depot: 5 Rue de la Paix, Paris. POTTER DRUG AND CHEM. CO., Sole Props., Boston, U. S. A.

CUTICURA RESOLVENT PILLS (Chocolate Coated) are a new, tasteless, odourless, economical substitute for the celebrated liquid CUTICURA RESOLVENT, as well as for all other blood purifiers and humour cures. Put up in the screw-cap pocket vials, containing 50 doses. CUTICURA PILLS are alternative, antiseptic, tonic, and digestive, and beyond question the purest, sweetest, most successful and economical blood and skin purifier, humour cures, and tonic-digestives, yet compounded.

WASTE SILK.

The market has opened and some Filature kibiso have been settled on the basis of our quotations. For other kinds of waste there is a difference between buyers and sellers of about 10 per cent. The prices we give are those asked by holders.

QUOTATIONS.

Noshi—Filatures, Best... —
 Noshi—Filatures, Good... —
 Noshi—Oshiu, Best... —
 Noshi—Oshiu, Good... —
 Noshi—Oshiu, Medium... —
 Noshi—Shimshiu, Best... —
 Noshi—Shimshiu, Good... —
 Noshi—Bushi, Best... —
 Noshi—Bushi, Good... —
 Noshi—Bushi, Medium... —
 Noshi—Joshui, Best... —
 Noshi—Joshui, Good... —
 Kibiso—Filatures, Extra... —
 Kibiso—Filatures, Best... —
 Kibiso—Filatures, Second... —
 Kibiso—Joshui, Good... —
 Kibiso—Bushi, Fair... —

TEA.

There are small stocks and a moderate business has been passing at slightly firmer prices.

QUOTATIONS.

Choicest... Y. 51 and upwards
 Choice... 43 to 50
 Finest... 38 to 42 Nom.
 Fine... 33 to 37
 Good Medium... 30 to 34
 Medium... 26 to 30
 Good Common... 24 to 25
 Common... 19 to 22

EXCHANGE.

Yokohama, August 24

London silver 1/2 lower and China sterling quotations 1/2 to 3/4 lower have caused local rates on China to rule rather higher, but no change in other rates.

London—Bank T.T. ... 2/0 1/2
 — Bills on demand ... 2/0 1/2
 — 4 months' sight ... 2/0 1/2
 — Private 4 months' sight ... 2/0 1/2
 — 6 months' sight ... 2/0 1/2
 Paris & Lyons—Bank sight ... 255
 — Private 4 months' sight ... 259 1/2
 — 6 months' sight ... 260 1/2
 Hongkong—Bank sight ... per $100 96 1/2
 — Private 10 days' sight ... 94 1/2

Shanghai—Bank sight ... 74 1/2
 — Private 10 days' sight ... 76 1/2
 India—Bank sight ... 151 1/2
 — Private 30 days' sight ... 153 1/2
 America—Bank sight ... 49 1/2
 — Private 30 days' sight ... 49 1/2
 — Private 4 months' sight ... 50 1/2
 Germany—Bank sight ... 207 1/2
 — Private 4 months' sight ... 211
 Bar Silver (London) ... 28 1/2

* Nominal.

JAPANESE SHARES.

Yokohama, August 25, a.m.

Mean prices for Cash Delivery of Bonds and Shares, which may be held by Foreigners in their own names.

	Div'd.	Paid up 1 year.	Q'tion.
Provincial Exchequer Bonds	100	5	90.80
1st Issue	100	5	88.30
2nd Issue	100	5	86.50
Exchequer Bonds 3rd Issue	100	5	83.00
Exchequer Bonds 4th Issue	100	5	82.90
Exchequer Bonds 5th Issue	100	5	83.70
Consolidated Bonds (Seiri)	100	5	83.70
War Bonds (Gunji)	100	5	81.00
5% Imperial Bonds (Goburi)	100	5	80.60
Navy Bonds (Kaigun)	100	5	84.50
Tokyo City Public Loan Bonds	100	6	93.00
Y'hama Water-works Bonds	100	6	91.20
Y'hama City Public Loan Bonds	100	6	90.00
Osaka Harbour Bonds	100	6	86.50
Sanyo Railway Debentures 2nd	100	10	70.80
Sanyo Railway	50	8	60.40
Kyushu Railway	50	8	89.00
Hokkaido Colliery Railway	50	8.50	63.50
Sobu Railway	50	11	77.00
Tokyo Electric Car (Densha)	50	11.04	80.10
Tokyo Street Railway (Shibai)	50	12.50	11.04
Tokyo Street Railway new	12.50	11.04	30.00
Tokyo Electric Railway (Denki)	50	3.5	61.80
Tokyo Electric Railway, new	30	3.5	40.50
Yokohama Electric Railway	40	—	49.50
Odawara Electric Car	50	3	24.00
Keihin Electric Railway	50	8	70.10
Keihin Electric Railway, new	12.50	8	31.60
Tokyo Marine Insurance	12.50	15	36.00
Yokohama Fire Insurance	12.50	10	17.30
Tokyo Fire Insurance	12.50	12	23.70

* Ex dividend.

Milkmaid Milkmaid Milkmaid

TRADE MARK.

BRAND
Milk

As a guarantee of
Quality, see the
MILKMAID
on every Tin.

LARGEST SALE
in the
WORLD.

TRADE MARK.

BRAND
Milk

TRADE MARK.

BRAND
Milk

As a guarantee of
Quality, see the
MILKMAID
on every Tin.

LARGEST SALE
in the
WORLD.

Lea and Perrins' Sauce.

By Royal Warrant
to
His Majesty the King.

THE ORIGINAL AND GENUINE WORCESTERSHIRE.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS

Cure Indigestion,
Bile, Sick Headache, Giddiness,
Palpitation,
and all Internal Disorders.

THESE PILLS
ARE PURELY VEGETABLE;
they contain no deleterious
matter, and may be taken by the most delicate.

Manufactured only at 78, New Oxford St. (late 53, Oxford St.)
London. Sold by all Chemists and Medicine Vendors.

"I tell you, man,
it's as good as gold!"

VESSELS ON THE BERTH

For KEELUNG, via Moji (from Kobe), 18th every month, at Noon, the "NAGATO MARU."
—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

For KEELUNG, via Moji (from Kobe), 10th and 23rd every month, at Noon, the "KOSUN MARU."
—Osaka Shosen Kaisha.

For HONGKONG, via Kobe, Inland Sea, Nippon and Shanghai, about Aug. 26th, the "TANTO."
—Canadian Pacific Railway Co.

For MARSEILLES, via ports, and Shanghai, 26th, at 7 a.m., the "ARMAND BEBE."
—S.S. Co.

For PORTLAND, Ore., Aug. 26th, the "ARL."
—P. & A. S.S. Co.

For HONGKONG, via Kobe, Inland Sea, Nippon and Shanghai, about Aug. 28th, the "EMPEROR JAPAN."
—Canadian Pacific Railway Co.

For SAN FRANCISCO, via Honolulu, Aug. 28th, 3 p.m., the "MANCHURIA."
—P. M. S.S. Co.

For AUSTRALIA, via ports (from Kobe), 29th, the "EASTERN."
—Comes & Co.

For LONDON, Amsterdam and Antwerp, at Daylight, the "PARKING."
—Butterfield & Swire.

For MARSEILLES, London, and Antwerp, via the Shanghai, Hongkong, Straits, Colombo, and Port Said, Aug. 29th, at Daylight, the "CASSA."
—O. S.N. Co.

For SHANGHAI, via Kobe, Moji, and Nagasaki, 30th, at 2 p.m., the "ANSHU."
—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

For HAVRE, Hamburg and Bremen via ports, 31st, at Daylight, the "SCANDIA."
—C. O. S.S. Co.

For VICTORIA, H.C., and Tacoma, Wash., 31st, the "HYADES."
—Dodwell & Co., Ltd.

For CANADA, United States, and Europe, via Vancouver, B.C., Sept. 1st, at Noon, the "EMERALD OF INDIA."
—C. P. R. S.S. Co.

For GENOA, Marseilles and Liverpool, Sept. 1st, the "ACHILLES."
—Butterfield & Swire.

For VICTORIA, Seattle, Tacoma, Wash., Sept. 1st, the "MACHAON."
—Butterfield & Swire.

For HONGKONG, via Kobe, Nagasaki, Shanghai, Manila, Sept. 1st, the "MINNESOTA."
—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

For BREMEN and Hamburg, via ports, Sept. 9 a.m., the "PREUSSEN."
—H. Ahrens & Nachf.

For TRIESTE, via Kobe, Hongkong, Singapore, Penang, Colombo, Bombay, Karachi, Aden, Port Said, and Florence, about September 4th, the "PERSIA."
—Heller Bros.

For BONIN ISLANDS via ports, Sept. 5th, the "I MARU."
—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

For HONGKONG, via Kobe, (Inland Sea), Nagasaki and Shanghai, about Sept. 5th, the "SHAN."
—P. M. S.S. Co.

For HONGKONG via Kobe, Moji, Nagasaki, Shanghai, Sept. 6th, the "NICOMEDIA."
—P. S.S. & Co.

For SYDNEY, via Hongkong and New Guinea, 5th, the "WILLMARD."
—H. Ahrens & Co.

For SEATTLE, Wash., via Victoria, B.C., Sept. 2 p.m., the "IYO MARU."
—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

For NEW YORK, via ports, and Suez Canal, 8th, the "SENECA."
—Standard Oil Co.

(毎土曜日一發行)

編輯人 エフ・アール・ハ
發行兼印刷人 エー・ビー・グレイ
發行所 横濱市山下町五十五番
社 〆ヤツメンテール新聞

The Japan Weekly Mail.

第千九百一十一號 A REVIEW OF JAPANESE COMMERCE, POLITICS, LITERATURE, AND ART. 一國料理

No. 9.]

REGISTERED AT THE G.P.O.
AS A NEWSPAPER.

YOKOHAMA, SEPT. 2ND, 1905.

明治三十五年三月廿二日
第三千九百一十一號

[VOL. XLIV.]

CONTENTS.

Summary of News	131
as on the Conference	132
Chinese Postal System	133
Telephone at the Battle of Mukden	134
Arthur's Sunken Ships	135
scholar	136
alien	137
Kaiser and the Tsar	138
Professor Tani	139
German in South-West Africa	140
marine Signalling by Sound	141
etical Philanthropy	142
"Kinjo Maru"	143
ious Protest	144
ea	145
sa	146
George Kennan's Description of the Battle in the Sea of	147
ipan	148
Doshi Kishi Club	149
as on Current Events	150
ice and Princess Arisugawa Arrive Home	151
Chinese Boycott	152
shima and Tokyo Foreign Residents Association for the	153
ality Summary of Japanese Literature	154
Young People and Missions	155
Law Courts	156
Bookshelf	157
hing	158
o Vantis	159
frican Topics	160
rary Gossip	161
o Charmine Letters	162
shima General Hospital	163
wise Navigation of Korea	164
espondence: Japanese versus Foreign	165
Battle of Mukden	166
Sinking of the "Kinjo Maru"	167
giong and Shanghai Banking Corporation	168 grams	169
at Shipping	170
at Commercial	171

「FAIS CE QUE VOUS DEVEZ: ADVIENNE CE QUE POURRA」

NOTICE TO CORRESPONDENTS.

Notice will be taken of anonymous correspondence. It is intended for insertion in the "JAPAN WEEKLY MAIL" must be authenticated by the name and address of the writer, not for publication, but as a guarantee of faith.

It is particularly requested that all letters on business addressed to the MANAGER, and Cheques be made payable to same; and that literary contributions be addressed to the EDITOR.

YOKOHAMA: SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 2ND, 1905.

BIRTHS.

BUCKLAND—On the 25th inst., at 24, the rd, Shanghai, the wife of HORACE WILFRED BUCKLAND, of a Daughter.

On the 26th inst., at No. 107, Bluff, Yokohama, wife of A. E. PEARSON, of a Daughter.

SUMMARY OF NEWS.

CE has been concluded but the terms are not known.

Aug. 26th, snow fell on the Shiojiri mountain to a depth of two inches.

heavy rain on Sunday evening flooded all low-lying quarters of Yokohama.

Aug. 29th, Colonels H. Kusakari and Y., sul were promoted Major General.

40th telegram reports that recently pirates sailed off Gunsan, Korea, and attacked native s.

5 a.m. on Aug. 26th, fire broke out in Mi-cho, damaging a coal shed. The cause tobacco ashes.

OR TANAKA, Commander of the Yokohama mental district, says the Boyski, will shortly e for the front.

RTY-FOUR invalids of the Russian battleship retutch, interned at Kiaochow, left there on . 26th for home.

N the steamer Hui arrived recently at ioi from Haiphong, the third engineer, Mr.

C. J. Price, went to his cabin, drank a whole bottle of cognac, and died.

A NAKASAKI telegram says that a through train and steamer service between Tokyo and Seoul will be opened on Sept. 10th.

A NAGANO telegram says that snow fell on Aug. 20th on Mt. Akaishi. A farmer named K. Fujisawa was frozen to death.

ON Sunday, 387 Russian civilians were brought from Saghalien via Awomori to Yokohama and delivered to the French Consul.

A RAT infected with plague was found on Aug. 28th in a godown at Fukagawa, Tokyo, belonging to the Mitsui Bussan Kaisha.

THE Tsushima Maru (1,500 tons) was launched on Aug. 27th at Nagasaki. She will run between Shimonoseki and Fusan.

MR. SAKURAI, ex-representative for Chiba prefecture, on Aug. 25th committed suicide at Dairen. He was president of the Japanese Club there.

A REPORT has been received in Tokyo that at the beginning of September, Prince Tsai of China will arrive in Japan to investigate Japanese political affairs.

OWING to the heavy rains in Kobe on the night of Aug. 25th, 990 houses flooded. Seven of them collapsed; one person was killed and two were severely injured.

A CASE of plague was reported on Aug. 28th in Kobe. The patient is a workman named T. Yamamoto (36) of the Hyogo branch of the Kanegafuchi Cotton Spinning Co.

THE Superintendent of the Awomori Forestry Office, was arrested on Aug. 26th. It is reported by Tokyo papers that he accepted bribes from merchants patronized by the office.

THREE Japanese have been arrested in Nagasaki on a charge of having counterfeited some nine hundred ten-dollar notes—issued by a foreign bank—and circulated a number of them.

ACCORDING to the Hochi, on Aug. 24th the Chinese Government issued an order to governors in South China to suppress immediately the anti-American measures planned by the native traders.

LEADING Korean merchants of Seoul intend to establish a bank as an organ for encouraging domestic industries. The promoters are negotiating with British and American bankers now in the capital.

PROFESSOR B. FUJITA advocates the erection of a bronze statue in honour of the late Commodore Perry. Japanese papers say that Mr. Smart, an American gentleman now in Tokyo, will assist the enterprise.

THREE Russian officers among the prisoners in Kokura were sentenced on Aug. 24th to four years' imprisonment and two men to one year's imprisonment. They some days ago escaped and were subsequently arrested.

UNT OTERA (40) who was sentenced on Aug. 1st last to death in the Osaka District on a charge of having murdered her husband—a wealthy merchant—in Osaka on Sept. 24th, 1903, was executed on the morning of Aug. 23rd in the Horikawa Prison.

M. SAWAYAMA (30), an interpreter of the Chinese language, employed by the Manchurian army, was recently sentenced by Court Martial to three months' imprisonment with hard labour. He will shortly be removed to a prison at home. This man, having obtained a bribe of fifty yen from a suspicious Chinaman, who came to an outpost of the Japanese lines, connived at his passing to another line.

ON Aug. 27th, 671 invalids arrived at Ujina by two transports. Major-General Kamio arrived on the previous day at Tientsin. Major-General Watanabe, formerly Commander of the 20th brigade at home, left Himeji on Aug. 27th for the front.

A WIRELESS telegram from the look-out station on Hachijo island to the Yokosuka Naval Station reports that at 10.30 a.m. on Aug. 27th, a schooner was observed drifting southwest. She was severely damaged and completely water-logged.

THE Nippon Christian Society, Tokyo, has expelled a member named H. Shiraki. Recently he published a pamphlet with the title of Yasu-no-ko (Love of Christ). The society regarded the book as opposed to the doctrines of their religion.

OWING to dense fog, the steamer Hakodate Maru (490 tons) went ashore at 2 a.m. on Aug. 27th, off Noda point, Rikuchu province. The passengers and crew were saved. She was insured with the Nippon Marine Insurance Co. for twenty thousand yen.

AN Otaru telegram reports that on Aug. 23rd, 2,500 Russians were removed from South Saghalien to De Castries Bay, in the Maritime Province, and released there. Another batch of four thousand will shortly be removed from the island to the same district.

THE 51st semi-annual general meeting of the Yokohama Specie Bank will be held on September 9th. The net income for the first half-year is reported to be yen 2,109,720. These figures show an increase of yen 202,720 over that of the previous half year.

ON the evening of Aug. 27th, a train on the Koku Railway collided with an electric carriage at a crossing in Shinjuku, Tokyo. Two employees of the train, one conductor and about ten passengers in both were severely injured. The carriage was smashed.

THE funeral of Major-General Takenaka took place on Sunday, Aug. 27th, at Aoyama Cemetery. The late officer was commander of the commissariat of the second army. In consequence of illness, he was removed to Hiroshima in June. On Aug. 12th, he passed away in a hospital in that city.

BARON SHIMOSAWA, and Messrs K. Okura, M. Yokoyama and R. Hara, Directors of the Imperial Hotel, have been prosecuted in the Tokyo District Court on a charge of having infringed the Commercial Code. The Jiji says that they did not inform the Local Court of the death of Mr. S. Inamura, one of the directors, which occurred in 1902.

ON Aug. 24th, the steamer Dokai Maru collided with a Korean junk while entering Chemulpo. The latter was sunk and fifteen Koreans on board were drowned. The Captain of the Japanese ship was assaulted by some natives and severely injured on the wharf, where he had landed on his way to the Japanese Consulate to report the accident.

ABOUT a thousand copies of No. 2 of the Nijuski-no-Shina (China of the 20th Century) were confiscated on the night of Aug. 27th by the Kanda police, Tokyo, under the instructions of the Home Department while about to be put in circulation. The charge was that an article in the magazine is injurious to social peace. It is published principally by Chinese students.

NOTES ON THE CONFERENCE.

Friday Aug. 25th, a.m.

It appears that there has been some misunderstanding about the Conference. According to the majority of yesterday's telegrams no meeting took place on the 23rd, the Russians having explained that their draft of the protocols was not ready. But the subsequently received telegrams show that there was a meeting, and that the protocols were actually signed in the forenoon. This did not involve any discussion: it was merely a matter of reading and comparing the documents. In the afternoon the discussion of the four crucial articles should have commenced, but the Russian Plenipotentiaries asked for a postponement, which was agreed to, and the next meeting takes place to-day (26th) at 3 p.m.

It is stated that on the afternoon of the 22nd a special delegate from the President reached Portsmouth and was received by M. Witte and Baron Rosen. He is reported to have carried an autograph letter from Mr. Roosevelt urging in very strong terms the advisability of concluding peace, and this letter, according to rumour, is likely to have great influence. But evidently the incidents of the meeting must be pure conjecture, and as to its probable influence on the Tsar, no one is in a position to speak except the Russian Plenipotentiaries themselves, who, we may be pretty sure, have not spoken. Some ground for logical surmise would be furnished if the proposal postponing the meetings came from M. Witte of his own initiative. But if it was made, as certain telegrams suggest, at the instance of President Roosevelt, who earnestly desires the Conference to succeed and thinks that every hour's delay may bring some change of Russia's attitude, then the most optimistic inference permissible is that the Russian Plenipotentiaries also are anxious to leave no chance untried. It is plainly possible, however, that M. Witte may be reckoning on a weakening of Japan's attitude rather than on a change of St. Petersburg's mood. He certainly has compromised himself partially by being the party to apply for a postponement, though we do not see that this alone constitutes a solid basis for the optimistic rumours circulating in various quarters. The facts seem to be that President Roosevelt was able to announce privately to M. Witte Japan's willingness to concede certain points—presumably the limitation of Russia's naval forces and the surrender of the interned ships—and that these concessions having been telegraphed to the Tsar, were submitted to a second Palace Council, which had not conveyed its decision to Portsmouth by the hour fixed for the afternoon session on Wednesday. There is no doubt, so far as we can see, that the first Palace Council resolved to reject the re-imbursement and the ships' surrender demands, but the Council was apparently not then in possession of information as to Japan's willingness to waive the other two demands, and this information may produce a pacific effect. If the above analysis be correct, we may conclude that the Russian Plenipotentiaries, at all events, endorse this plan of compromise, and that everything now depends on St. Petersburg.

The Niroku Shimpō undertakes to give all the details of what passed at the private meetings at Portsmouth, but it is difficult to avoid the impression that the Niroku has been playing throughout to the 'stock brokers' gallery. Not without effect, too. On Thursday morning the shares of the Tokyo Exchange, responsive to a rumour which found expression in a Niroku extra, leaped up no less than 6 points, only to fall again by precisely the same amount in the afternoon.

It is plain that General Linevitch has been an obstacle to the restoration of peace. The General believes in himself. No one can blame him for that. But neither can he blame others if they do not share his confidence, and truly it must be admitted that he has not given any evidence of military genius up to the present. He has talked big and he has made a great show of taking off his coat to begin the fight, but the sum of his performances has been a number of the pettiest skirmishes, in which, so far as can be seen, he has not scored a single victory worthy of the name. Is it possible that St. Petersburg places faith in such a commander?

Saturday, August 26, a.m.

The Hochi Shimbun and the Asahi affirm that on the afternoon of the 25th a long telegram from Baron Komura reached the Foreign Office in Tokyo and was carried by Mr. Chinda to Count Katsura, who then proceeded to call on Marquis Ito. Subsequently General Terauchi and Admiral Yamamoto were summoned, and a conference took place lasting from 4 p.m. to 9 p.m. This is evidently an ominous sign.

It is stated that since the negotiations for peace were announced and above all since talk of compromise began to be heard, numerous communications have reached the Premier from the provinces denouncing every idea of yielding and demanding an obdurate attitude. It is further stated that the two great political parties have determined, in the event of rupture of the negotiations, to organize lecturing tours throughout the whole country for the purpose of laying the facts clearly before the nation.

Sunday, August 27, a.m.

This morning all the news may be said to be bad. It had been supposed that the postponement of the Conference's meetings might be interpreted as indicating that the Russian Plenipotentiaries at least were in favour of conceding Japan's crucial terms, and that they had telegraphed to the Tsar in that sense, seeking His Majesty's sanction. But from the language now attributed to M. Witte there may have been no solid basis for such a supposition. M. Witte is represented as declaring that Russia will not pay a copeck under any pretence whatever. The concessions made by Japan in the matter of the interned ships and the limitation of Russia's naval forces are declared by him to be quite insignificant—an obviously extravagant statement in view of the reception given to these terms by the Russian Plenipotentiaries themselves originally—and to be merely intended as make-weights for the purpose of securing Russia's consent to the re-imbursement and Saghalien demands. It is alleged that the Japanese Plenipotentiaries have signified their willingness to surrender one half of Saghalien to Russia, the latter purchasing it from its conqueror and the difficulty of the indemnity being thus overcome. But M. Witte regards this as a mere subterfuge and declares it to be such. His view is that for Japan to abandon her claim to an indemnity is much easier than for Russia to concede it, since in Japan's case it is a mere question of money whereas in Russia's honour and prestige are concerned. The belief therefore is that at the meeting on the 26th the Russian Plenipotentiaries will definitely reject this scheme of compromise, but will endeavour to reject it in terms such as to impose on Japan the responsibility of bringing fruitless President Roosevelt's efforts to restore peace.

Such are the outlines of the story we piece together from numerous telegrams published in Tokyo this morning. But our readers will observe that the story is fundamentally singular if not incredible. For it represents the tables as completely turned. It represents Japan as the conqueror; Russia as the conquered. Russia belongs the duty of making proposals. Japan is in the position of offering peace to offer for sale, and Russia in the position of the buyer should accept her bids. But this natural and logical order of things appears to have been reversed. Russia is seated on high and to be conciliated and Japan is labouring to conciliate her. We can not believe such is the real state of affairs. We much more probable is that at Portsmouth an agreement has been arrived at by Plenipotentiaries of the two Powers that M. Witte considered it essential to obtain the approval of the Tsar in openly pledging Russia, and such approval has been either refused or not yet received. It is altogether incredible that proposals of compromise made outside the Conference chamber should be answered for the time by Russia in the chamber. Therefore these accounts must be rejected as radically inconceivable, and we must assume that so far as M. Witte and Baron Rosen are concerned they have given their assent to a method of compromise which, up to the morning of the 26th, had not received the Tsar's approval, though indications were that consent would be withheld.

Meanwhile the President is endeavouring to leave no stone unturned to effect compromise, but from a welter of statements as to the steps taken by him and their results it is practically impossible to sift out the truth. We are asked to believe that the programme of dividing Saghalien and selling back one half of it came from his side, and that a telegram sent to him by the Tsar has destroyed his hope of a peaceful result unless Japan consents to withdraw her re-imbursement demands. These things are obviously mere conjectures and very clumsy conjectures at that.

Some folks in London and Paris are persuaded that the Tsar's latest declaration represents His Majesty's final effort of the kind and that he will yield at the psychological moment.

The European press, like the American, appears to be agreed in approving Japan's terms and in declaring that rejection of place on Russia's shoulders the whole responsibility of whatever further bloodshed takes place. The Times affirms that the nothing humiliating in acknowledging accomplished facts. What is disgraceful and wicked is to expose tens of thousands of brave men to death and wounds as an instance of false pride. Le Temps says that Russia's true interests lie in paying indemnity and restoring peace.

August 27, 9 p.m.

No news has yet been received in Tokyo as to the result of the meeting of the Conference on the 26th inst., but the Shimbu has published a gogai saying that it is likely to be restored on the basis of an selling to Russia the northern part of Saghalien. The price is not yet fixed, but sident Roosevelt is busily carrying on negotiations.

Monday, August 28th, a.m.

The latest news this morning is contained in an extra published by the Fiji Shimpō. It affirms Reuter's intelligence in so far as the postponement of the conference is concerned, but it adds that the only business done at meeting was to read and sign the minutes of previous proceedings. But it says nothing about the Russian attitude being unchanged.

A London telegram to the Fiji Shimpō contains an alleged version of a letter addressed

President Roosevelt to the Russian Plenipotentiaries. In this document Mr. Roosevelt is made to say that it would not be forgotten that Russia is in the position of the vanquished State, and in that of the victor; that the payment of an indemnity by the vanquished to the victor is customary; that Russia's concessions have not yet been sufficient to satisfy Japan and that an agreement should be sought in mutual understanding. Newcastle telegraphs that to the effect of this advice, which was communicated to Tsar, His Majesty answered that if he withdrew her demand for re-imbursement, Russia would agree to everything else. A message from London to the Nichiichi Shimbun says that there is no sign of a real concession. In Russia the war party has gained the upper hand and is daily declaring that it will yield nothing.

Washington, on the contrary, telegraphs in the sense of Reuter's message of Sunday, namely, that there is good hope of a settlement being effected on the basis of one half Saghalien being restored to Russia. In making this restoration, however, there must be no open mention of purchase. The Tsar objects to that. Evidently His Majesty is a great stickler for forms. But his inconsistency is curious. At one moment we see him declaring that if he pays any money to Japan, the world will construe it as an indemnity under whatever name the fact be concealed. At another we have him objecting to open mention of a sum of money for the recovery of Saghalien though the world knows perfectly well that he would never get back any part of the island without paying for it. Such conflicting distinctions will make the public smile, and will add anything to His Majesty's reputation for sagacity.

New York predicted that the meeting on the 26th would lead to another postponement inasmuch as the divergence of views as to regard to Saghalien and re-imbursement remained unadjusted.

Berlin says that the Russian newspapers express a desire that Witte should continue the Conference. The German Government is described as believing that Russia wishes peace, and the Kaiser is alleged to have employed his good offices to prevent a rupture of the Conference.

The Kokumin's San Francisco telegrams affirm the news that a settlement is likely to be effected on the lines of Russia purchasing the northern part of Saghalien, but the amount to be paid remains unsettled and the cause considerable discussion. The Asahi also has news from Washington in a similar sense, namely, that the basis of a compromise has been agreed to, but the details remain to be settled. The President is said to be working unremittently in the cause of peace.

There is a curious message from Paris to the Hochi. According to this source of information the Tsar, replying to the President's advice, said that if Russia ceded Saghalien and paid an indemnity she would be assisting the development of Japan's aggressive spirit, and a renewal of the war might be expected in the near future. The spectacle of the Tsar's anxiety to check such a contingency as the growth of aggressive tendencies among the nations of the world is surely a case of Satan rebuking sin. Nevertheless it would certainly be very convenient for Russia that she should have a monopoly of this kind of mood.

It is scarcely necessary to observe that these versions of letters sent by the President to the Russian Plenipotentiaries and replies made by the Tsar are exceedingly apocryphal. What Paris says is likely enough, for the Tsar has certainly made cogent utterances in the past, but all the rest must be taken with abundant reserve.

The Novoye Vremya lightens the solemnity of the occasion with a large joke, all the more piquant because it is made with entire gravity. Our contemporary suggests that if Russia takes over Japan's financial responsibilities, Japan should transfer Tsushima to Russia. Commenting on this the Hochi Shimbun attributes such monstrous proposals wholly to the invertebrate display made by the Japanese Plenipotentiaries in offering to give back a part of Saghalien if only Russia would be so kind as to pay an indemnity. How easy it is to be critical. One is sometimes constrained to conjecture what kind of world we should live in if the conduct of international affairs were entrusted to these critics, or to men like Mr. Oishi Masami, the Progressist leader.

The English press, without distinction of parties, is vigorously supporting Japan (Hochi Shimbun's telegrams). The Times (Asahi's telegrams) declares that Japan has just the same right to have her expenses re-imbursed as a successful suitor in a law court has, and that there is no reason whatever for her to abandon her right. She stands before the tribunal of the nations, and what that tribunal's verdict will be there is no need to state. Some of these newspapers, replying to Russia's pretence that there is no precedent for the payment of an indemnity under the circumstances, recall how she herself in 1878 not only compelled Turkey to pay a big indemnity but also demanded a cession of territory, and how, in 1900, she claimed a large sum from China while at the same time retaining Manchuria. It is indeed an interesting illustration of the Occident's constitutional tendency in dealing with the Orient—one law for me, another for thee. Can there be the smallest doubt that had Russia been successful in this war she would have imposed upon Japan the burden of a crushing indemnity; not merely the re-imbursement of expenses but also a substantial ransom for the restoration of peace?

Aug. 28th, p.m.

Rumours continue to pour in. Thus the Asahi has two telegrams:—

Portsmouth 4 p.m. 26th.—As stated in a previous telegram (not received)—Ed. Asahi the Tsar has wired to M. Witte that he will refuse to pay any sum whatever on account of the prisoners.

Portsmouth, 5 p.m. 26th.—To-day there was a further discussion about the Saghalien question but no division was reached, and the meeting was again postponed until Monday, 28th, when it is said that the point will certainly be decided. Saghalien was the principal matter discussed to-day.

The Hochi Shimbun publishes two telegrams:—

Portsmouth, 26th.—The meeting upon which the eyes of all the world were fixed took place this after noon and was again postponed until the 28th inst. at the request of the Russian Plenipotentiaries. The causes of the postponement is understood to be that the Tsar is considering Japan's new proposals and has not yet replied to them.

Portsmouth, Later.—The new proposals referred to in the above telegram are (1) that Japan should sell the northern half of Saghalien to Russia; (2) that Russia should pay 1,200 million yen for it; and (3) that Japan should withdraw her demands for the surrender of the interned ships and for the limitation of Russia's naval forces in East Asia. These are indeed extreme concessions. For us Japanese they are supremely regrettable, but Russia shows no sign of consenting. Appearances indicate the rupture of the Conference.

Subsequently to the publication of the above the Hochi issued the following extra:—

The present state of the Conference is that Japan has offered to hand over to Russia the northern half of Saghalien in consideration of a payment of 1200 million yen, but Russia continues obdurate, shows no sign of yielding, offers 200 million yen and declares that she will not consent to pay any more. There is thus no hope of an agreement, and nothing remains but to break off the Conference. Since 7 o'clock this morning a meeting of the Elder Statesmen took place at the Premier's residence and they are discussing the matter.

The Niroku Shimpō also issues an extra which, though not embodying any telegram, is worth quoting:—

"The Plenipotentiaries had a short meeting from 3 p.m. on the 26th and then decided to postpone their final meeting until Monday. The reason, according to trustworthy information, is that, in reply to advice tendered by the President and the Kaiser, the Tsar declared that since Russia became a State she had never ceded territory or paid an indemnity, and if His Majesty ventured to suffer such a disgrace during his reign, he would incur heavy guilt towards his ancestors. The President and the Kaiser, however, repeated their earnest counsels that in the interests of the world's peace the Tsar should make every possible sacrifice, and it is for the purpose of receiving a reply to this second suggestion that a further delay of 2 days has been sought. The Japanese Plenipotentiaries have never departed in the least from their demands for the cession of the whole of Saghalien and re-imbursement to the extent of 1200 million yen. Unless then success attends the efforts of the President and the Kaiser, there will be nothing for it except that the Japanese Plenipotentiaries should abandon the Conference and return home. We are persuaded that our Plenipotentiaries never proposed anything such as the partition of Saghalien. As to whether the efforts of the President and the Kaiser will succeed in restoring peace, the probabilities are 6 in favour of success and 4 against it.

The meeting of Elder Statesmen alluded to above lasted until 11.30 a.m., and in the afternoon was transferred to the Palace. It is rumoured that the Government has decided to break off the Conference at once if Russia continues obdurate.

Tokyo, August 28, 8.30 p.m.

The latest news is that Russia adheres firmly to her resolve not to pay anything that can be construed as an indemnity. She will hand over between 150 and 200 million yen on account of the prisoners, and if the indemnity demand be withdrawn she will agree to everything else. New York believes that Japan will waive the indemnity, but St. Petersburg does not and neither do European financiers. Of course under these circumstances there is not any further talk of a partition of Saghalien. The consensus of opinion in Tokyo, after the rising of the Council at the Palace, seems to be that the Conference will be broken off.

Tuesday, August 29th, a.m.

The meeting which was to have been held on the 28th was put off until the 29th, but this postponement, according to the Fiji Shimpō's correspondence from Newcastle, is not regarded as suggesting a favourable turn of events. The Japanese Plenipotentiaries are said to have intimated that if Russia agreed to the principle of buying back a part of Saghalien, there might be room for discussion as to the amount paid, but even in the face of that concession the Russians showed no sign of yielding. It is not quite clear from which side the suggestion to adjourn until the 29th came, but the indications are that it came from the Japanese, who were desirous of learning the result of the Palace Council held in Tokyo on the 28th. If this account be correct, it is evident that Japan has made every possible concession, whereas Russia has obstinately refused to yield any of the cardinal points. It may be true, however, that M. Witte was instructed to agree to the whole of Japan's demands provided that she waived the re-imbursement clause, but if so St. Petersburg's talk of never under any circumstances concluding a dishonourable peace assumes a character of complete insincerity, for as between re-imbursement Japan's expenses and surrendering an important part of Russian territory, there can be no question in the matter of prestige or honour. To surrender territory is a permanent disgrace; to pay money is merely a temporary inconvenience. M. Witte is said to be sensible of this, and to be anxious to conclude peace on the lines proposed by Japan, but his hands are tied by instructions from St. Petersburg, where the war party appear to be again at the head of affairs. Indeed the present belief is that the proposal to divide Saghalien and sell back the northern portion to Russia came originally from M. Witte, a version which is inherently probable since it is extremely unlikely that the Japanese Plenipotentiaries would have suggested such an arrangement. At that time the prospects of a peaceful ending were most favourable, for a solution suggested by the Russians themselves had received the consent of the Japanese. But when this exit from the dead-lock was submitted to the Tsar, he rejected it peremptorily at the instance of the war party whose backs had been strengthened by Linevitch's assurances of pending victory. Then, as a matter of course, Japan withdrew her assent to M. Witte's proposition so far as the partition of the island was concerned, and the situation reverted to its old impasse, with scarcely any hope that a practicable route would be discovered. It results that the responsibility of preventing the restoration of peace rests primarily on the shoulders of Linevitch. How far he is influenced by genuinely patriotic motives, how far by the very human desire of acquiring personal glory, none will care to say, but unless he achieve the results which alone can justify his attitude, his name will go down in the pages of history as one of the most unlovely ever written there.

The above analysis of the situation is borne out by the Kokumin's telegrams. They represent M. Witte as no longer discharging any plenipotentiary functions, but being frankly a puppet whose strings are pulled from St. Petersburg. They also represent the war party as completely in the ascendant owing to Linevitch's promises of success. When we remember how often Russia has been the dupe of these accessions of confidence during the present war, and how unlikely a general in Linevitch's position is to despair of his prospects until he has suffered at least one crushing defeat, the nature of the reed on which Russia now leans becomes apparent.

The New York Herald of Paris appears to have made an attempt to represent England as having advised—strongly advised—Japan to waive the indemnity and be content with Saghalien. England is not named in the paragraph, but she is evidently designated, inasmuch as the Power in question is said to have promised to supply any amount of capital that Japan may need. The London Morning Post has thought it worth while to combat this rumour, which it describes as radically unreasonable. Japan asks for an indemnity, not because she wants capital, but because she does not desire to saddle her people with the continued payment of heavy taxes on account of expenses already incurred. Russia forced her into the lists, and it is a matter of unqualified justice that Russia should recoup the expenses thus caused.

There are differences of opinion as to the result of the Cabinet Council and the Palace Council on the 28th, but the overwhelming balance of intelligence is that the impossibility of further concessions was recognised and that a telegram in that sense was despatched to Baron Komura, which means, of course, that any hope of a peaceful ending to the Conference must be abandoned. Such too is the view evidently taken by Tokyo capitalists, for the share market witnessed something like a debacle between Saturday and Monday.

Aug. 29th, p.m.

According to an extra published by the Hochi the Palace Council on the 28th decided, first, that whereas Russia had shown no disposition whatever to change her attitude in spite of the concessions made by Japan, and whereas the claims of the two sides are now separated by a wide interval, this Empire can not yield any more and must firmly maintain its position; secondly, that if Russia continues obdurate, the responsibility of breaking the peace will rest on her and Japan will recall her Plenipotentiaries. These resolutions are said to have been telegraphed to Baron Komura.

Aug. 29, 8.30 p.m.

There are rumours in Tokyo that the Japanese ultimatum will take the form of demanding the cession of Saghalien and abandoning the indemnity, but this is mere report and lacks confirmation.

Wednesday, August 30, a.m.

The most conflicting rumours arrive this morning. Up to the 26th or the forenoon of the 27th the various correspondents telegraph an almost inevitable rupture of the Conference. They say that the Tsar's attitude has actually stiffened and that the gulf between the two countries is wider than ever. Note is also taken of the fact that certain German journals as well as the Paris edition of the New York Herald urge Japan to abandon the indemnity and be content with Saghalien alone, and there is an evident disposition to attribute this advice as well as the Tsar's augmented obstinacy to some influence secretly brought to bear by the Kaiser. These suspicions, in spite of the very unequivocal evidence now before the public as to the Kaiser's strenuous work in the cause of peace, are remarkable. The fact is that William II. is such a restless and ubiquitously active monarch that the world is disposed to imagine his interference, direct or indirect, in every great crisis or event. In this case a grave injustice seems to be done, for there is every reason to think that the Kaiser deserves Japan's gratitude and the gratitude of humanity instead of being the object of injurious suspicions.

From the afternoon of the 27th, however, the news assumes a different complexion. It takes the form of a vague suggestion that Japan contemplates a large concession and that the situation is correspondingly easier. There is some uncertainty as to the provenance of the proposal for postponement from the 28th to the 29th. Reuter, as will be observed, distinctly attributes it to the Japanese Plenipotentiaries, but other authorities make it emanate from the Russians. The truth is that although certain rumours have come to the ear of the public, the processes by which they were reached remain hidden, in the absence of information as to the basis of intelligent criticism is impossible. It is known, for example, whether the proposal for partition Saghalien emanated from M. Witte or from President Roosevelt. We may be certain that it did not emanate from the Japanese Plenipotentiaries, though some persons in Japan who are inclined to be critical refuse to believe that obviously reasonable assumption. Otherwise there are two conflicting allegations. One is that the President privately suggested a compromise on these lines; the other is that M. Witte himself proposed it and that consequently, it looked like an arrangement of settlement until the Tsar rejected it. We have already alluded to this, but we refer to it again as it is evidently destined to provoke much controversy. And by the minutes of the proceedings doubtless be published and until then all wise folks will refrain from criticism.

An interesting fact is that the Tokyo papers are divided in their accounts of the result of the Palace Council on the 28th. Some maintain that an unyielding resolution was taken and that instructions in that sense were issued to Baron Komura. Others, however, that circulate this version allege that Admiral Yamamoto assumed a very different attitude at the Council board; that he unequivocally supported by Marquis Ito, that although Count Matsukata was prevented by illness from attending, he acted through a Court Chamberlain to seek his opinion, an emphatic declaration that Japan could carry on the war without serious inconvenience for two or three years longer and that he advised a resolute peace policy. According to this version, the Japanese Plenipotentiaries were instructed that no further concession of any kind could be made and that they must at once break off the Conference unless Russia yielded. The latter version agrees with this in so far as that the Council adopted a final decision, but differs as to the nature of the decision. The Japanese statesmen are represented by this account as having taken the view that Japan must by every means avoid the imputation of carrying on the war solely for the sake of money. She must therefore put forward as an ultimate proposition the excision of the re-imbursement demand and insistence on the cession of Saghalien in toto, Baron Komura being left to his discretion with the demands for surrender of the interned ships and limitation of Russia's naval forces in the East. It was believed that Russia would not accept even this great concession, and that event the Conference was to be broken off forthwith, the Japanese Plenipotentiaries withdrawing from Portsmouth. Japan then have the unequivocal approval of the world, whereas that approval might be held if, by insisting on a monetary payment, she renewed the terrible bloodshed of the few months. It will be seen that both versions attribute a final decision to the Council, but the latter version—which was first published by the Miyako Shimbum—suggests modification not at all unlikely to Russia's assent.

It may at any rate be assumed that despite the strongly pessimistic feeling prevailing in Tokyo throughout Tuesday, and despite the heavy fall of certain stocks, chances of a peaceful solution have not disappeared completely. The weak point in Japan armour was emight always be reduced to the monetary adel, and thus exposed to the reproach of uandering the lives of her people for the ke of filthy lucre, a proceeding as far as sible removed from the fundamental inciples of bushido. She is in a manner und to avoid that reproach, hard as the ligation may be, and Russia knows it. No ercise of very sapient diplomacy was eded to know it.

Aug. 30th, p.m.

The general belief in Tokyo this afternoon ms to be that Japan will withdraw her mand for re-imbursement but will insist the cession of Saghalien. There are ne rumours of the northern half of the nd being sold to Russia, the price to be ed by a court of arbitration, but little dence seems to attach to such a plan.

August 30, 9 p.m.

It is generally believed in Tokyo that ce has been concluded, Russia giving up ghalien and the Japanese waiving their mand for reimbursement. Nothing official yet been published, however. The news ts on a telegram received by Messrs. ura & Co.

Thursday, August 31.

That peace has been concluded there can no doubt, but as to the terms there is still e uncertainty. The Kokumin, which ht to be well informed, alleges that these not by any means as good as was posed. In the first place, Japan does not ain the whole of Saghalien. She gets y the portion south of the fiftieth degree atitude, and she pledges herself, in com- i with Russia, to refrain from stationing troops on the island. This is rather cult to believe, unless Russia intends to : up her system of making Saghalien a al settlement. With about twenty asand convicts, some in prison but many e living at large as "convict settlers" or e commands" it would be impossible to ide for the most ordinary measure protection to life or property unless a e force of troops were always at hand. : provision with regard to military blishments seems therefore necessarily involve the withdrawal of Russia's penal ement, yet nothing is said about that. ne next place the sum paid by Russia count of the prisoners is not 200 million but only 150 millions. The difference t cardinal, but a sum of 50 million yen important for Japan just at present. Then e Japan does not get the whole railway a of Harbin. She gets it from Chang- g only; that is to say, from a point 165 : south of Harbin. As to the fishery lege, it is stated that Russians and nese are to enjoy equal rights, which only natural. We hear nothing e interned ships, and the inference is they are not to be surrendered. If this ment of conditions be correct, it would ar that out of what the nation has stormed itself to regard as the four nal demands, only a part of one has conceded by Russia. But it is well to ve judgment on these points until more ate information is to hand. We may that the fiftieth parallel of latitude cuts alien would leave in Russian possession androfska, Dui, Rykoff and all the s of any importance except Korsakoff. he other hand, all the valuable fishing eds, with one exception, are along the ern shores of the island.

ne journals allege that the whole of alien has been obtained, but the main, the ji and the Nichi Nichi all that partition has been agreed to.

The Hochi Shimbun alleges, however, that a special convention has been concluded providing for the purchase of the southern half of Saghalien by Russia at a price not less than a thousand million yen, and the ratification of this supplementary convention is to decide the validity of the treaty itself. In other words, the treaty is to provide for the partition of the island as a matter of form, but the supplementary convention provides for the restoration of the whole to Russia on payment of a thousand million yen. That seems a more probable arrangement than the other and would certainly be more practical.

There is, however, yet another version; namely, that it is for the northern part of the island Russia is to pay. The amount of her payment is to be left to an independent tribunal which will consider solely the value of the island as a possession. Thus the idea of Russia re-imbursing Japan's belligerent outlays will be avoided. This story is not supported by any stronger evidence than the previous one. The proposition is said to have come from Japan, and there is a report that Russia agreed in consideration of the Japanese Plenipotentiaries having definitely withdrawn the demand for re-imbursement.

It is somewhat strange that no official information is made as to a matter which causes breathless interest to the whole nation. People are able to be sure that had the Conference been broken off the fact would have been officially announced, but nothing whatever has been published by the Government one way or the other up to this moment (Thursday morning). We do not know even whether an armistice has been agreed to. It is the custom according to international law that an armistice commences from the day on which a treaty of peace is concluded, without awaiting the formality of ratification, but nothing is yet stated on that subject.

There has not been time for any of the leading journals to comment intelligently on the peace inasmuch as they are ignorant of the terms. The Jiji Shimpō and the Chuo Shimbun alone speak editorially. They both agree that the peace is unsatisfactory. But the latter journal justly observes that a conference necessarily means a compromise, and that a compromise can not possibly be satisfactory to both sides. From Japan's point of view there is cause for grumbling, but to call the peace dishonourable to her, as some journals are disposed to do, is extravagant. The dishonoured party is Russia; Russia who has had to give up Port Arthur; to hand over her great railway; to efface herself in Korea; to evacuate Manchuria; to submit to a substantial loss of territory and to abandon her long-cherished scheme of an ice-free port on the Pacific; Russia who, in 19 months of war on shore and at sea never succeeded in winning so much as one battle. It is true that Japan has not got everything she would have liked to get. But she has got a very great deal, and she has to consider how it would have suited her financially to continue this war for several years to come; to continue it with borrowed money. If, instead of taking such a reckless step, she now applies herself resolutely to developing her resources, she will be at least twice as rich ten years hence as she is now, whereas had she continued the war she would have been many times poorer.

Among the minor newspapers the Nippon and the Yoroku sound a note which they probably propose to swell presently into a loud diapason. The former writes a few lines declaring that it is Russia who has been strong and Japan weak. Is this the result, it asks, of an unstinted expenditure of blood and treasure by the fifty millions of the Japanese nation. Nothing remains but to cry aloud to the blue sky. The Yoroku simply says "Oh disgraceful! Oh disgraceful!" There will doubtless be more of this kind of writing on the part of journals which make it their business to appeal to passion and to ignore reason. Possibly they may succeed in inflaming some morally ill-balanced patriot to raise his hand against some of the statesmen who have had the courage to be wise in their country's best interests. Then these newspapers, which are a disgrace to their craft, will obtain new sensational copy.

August 31, 9 p.m.

The Nichi Nichi publishes an extra saying that the northern half of Saghalien has been surrendered without any compensation, but it will be well to receive all reports with reserve pending the publication of official news.

The Kokumin prints an extra which says that Mr. Marten and Mr. Denison are drawing up the peace treaty and that the task will take them about a week. There has not been any consultation about an armistice. When the fact that peace terms had been arranged became known at Portsmouth the church bells rang, steamers whistled and the people at the hotel where the Japanese plenipotentiaries are staying crowded to meet them at the entrance on their return from the Conference, cheering lustily.

PEACE.

The People caught at the skirts of War:
"Oh, listen!" they said,
"We are weary, full weary of bloodshed and strife,
And the agonised ending of human life—
Let Peace reign instead!"
The People kissed the garments of Peace:
"Welcome!" they said;
But the black-robed figures that stood in the crowd,
The losers of loved ones, murmured aloud,
"Can you bring back the dead?"
The People listened with bated breath,
Peace sweetly replied:
"I have given to the brave and the noble who fell
What is better than Life; with them it is well—
They have Peace who died."

M.

A NEW LOAN.

There is talk of a new domestic loan of 200 million yen, as that sum will be needed to put the country's house in order. Some say that a special session of the Diet will be summoned to vote the money. Others foretell that the thing will be managed by Imperial Ordinance. If a session of the Diet be summoned we shall hear a vehement discussion of the peace terms and there will follow proceedings necessitating a dissolution. That would not be in the country's interests. Probably the best plan would be to act without the Diet, and not to summon it until the normal time in November. By that period the real facts of the situation would have had time to filter into the brains of the political parties.

Lieut. Generals Oshima (Hisanao), Oseko, Inouye, and Okubo, on Aug. 28th, were promoted to third Junior Rank.

PRESS COMMENT ON THE PEACE CONFERENCE.

Friday, August 25.

The Tokyo press continues to write in most resolute terms. Both the Fiji Shimpō and the Nichi Nichi urge that not the smallest sign of yielding should be shown in the matter of the re-imbursement and Saghalien demands. The former journal says that if any of the successes actually achieved by Japanese arms be sacrificed for the sake of patching up a temporary peace, the nation will be profoundly dissatisfied. To continue the war would be far preferable. If Russia has not yet been roused to the facts of the situation, Japan must deal her some further blows. The Asahi seems dissatisfied that even postponement should have been agreed to. It thinks that the Russian Plenipotentiaries have succeeded in assuming the position of recipients as though Japan were suitor for their concessions. It thinks also that Russia is utilizing the delay for the purpose of endeavouring to obtain the intervention of other Powers. One thing is certain, however, namely, that Japan will not regret the dissolution of a Conference which would have asked her to endorse insufficient terms. The Chuo Shimbun does not desire the rupture of the Conference, but it contends that failure to restore peace would not be in any sense dishonourable for Japan. The Japanese Plenipotentiaries are doubtless fully sensible of this, but there is always a possibility that men actually confronted by a crisis and required to deal with it may be weaker than onlookers with cool heads. We gather that the Chuo and the Fiji both entertain some vague apprehension of Japan abating her re-imbursement demand—not abandoning it but abating it—and that they are both irrevocably opposed to anything of the kind. The Chuo speaks of one more great effort which would carry the Japanese armies to Harbin and decide the fate of Vladivostok. It compares Russia now to a man seated on an egg whom one small push would prostrate in the dust. The Nippon believes that Russia will yield and the victory will rest with Baron Komura. It refrains, therefore, from any strenuous comments.

Saturday, August 26.

The tone this morning is pessimistic. It is now alleged that the documents exhibited at the meeting on the 23rd were not the protocols but the minutes of previous meetings, which were read and duly signed. The Fiji Shimpō's correspondence from Portsmouth, despatched from that place at 2 a.m. on the 24th, says that the situation admits of no confident forecast either one way or the other, and that no reply has been received from St. Petersburg. London, however, telegraphs to the Asahi Shimbun that Count Lamsdorf has again openly declared Russia's inability to agree to the alienation of Saghalien or the payment of money under any pretext whatever, and that there is every reason to credit the accuracy of the view previously enunciated at Portsmouth, namely, that unless Japan abandons these two demands, peace is impossible. The Kokumin Shimbun also has a cablegram from Portsmouth, despatched on the 24th, which confirms the above news. It says that although the American journals wrote in an optimistic strain when the postponement of the Conference's meetings was announced, M. Witte told a visitor on the evening of the 23rd that in spite of Japan having yielded on the questions of the interned ships and the limitation of Russia's naval forces, it would be quite out of the question for Russia to make any large payment under whatever title inasmuch as the world would certainly call it an indemnity and her dignity would thus be compromised. The Nichi Nichi Shimbun's intelligence as to the state of affairs on the 24th supports these pessimistic views, and alleges that each side declares the question of peace or war to be in the other's hands; in other words, each requires the other to yield. But a London telegram to the same journal, dated the 24th, puts an altogether different complexion on the situation. It says that the Tsar has at length shown signs of yielding and that M. Witte will probably introduce at the meeting on the 26th a proposal which will embody mutual concessions and will receive the approval of the Japanese Plenipotentiaries.

The Hochi Shimbun publishes Peking news which professes to give the gist of a telegram sent by the Chinese Minister in Washington to his Government on the 24th. He represents Germany and France as engaged in consultation about the result of the Conference, which is causing much anxiety in Berlin and Paris; he expresses the opinion that the Russian Plenipotentiaries are endeavouring to prolong the Conference whereas the Japanese are seeking to bring it to a close, and he apprehends that peace will not be re-established during the current year.

We have often expressed doubts as to the authenticity of telegrams attributed to Chinese Representatives in foreign countries and published in the columns of newspapers or communicated to correspondents in Peking, and we need only here point out the extreme improbability of the alleged consultation between the Cabinets in Berlin and Paris.

On the whole the feeling in Tokyo seems to be despondent, though the Niroku adheres to its role of knowing incomparably more than every one else, and being in a position to state exactly what sum Russia intends to pay by way of compromise.

A notable exception to this general pessimism is the Kokumin Shimbun. It advances arguments with which we can not but agree in a large measure. The Kokumin's view is that Mr. Witte's delay is inspired, not as some people suppose, by a vague hope of obtaining foreign intervention, but by a genuine desire to save from rupture the negotiations which he has already carried so far. His difficulty is to reconcile the discordant opinions in Russia herself, so that the War party shall not be able to turn on him subsequently and denounce his arrangements. But St. Petersburg does not intend to continue the war. Some confidence might be placed in the promises of Linevitch had not the promises of Kurapatkin and those of Rojestvensky already proved so delusive. But as compared with these two the potentialities of Linevitch are small, while, on the other hand, he is a last resource. His failure would signify complete catastrophe and Russia is not going to risk that, above all in view of the fact that her first national assembly is to meet in January. She must have emerged from her foreign complications before that time. Naturally, however, she is seeking to beat down her antagonist's demands as much as possible. Hence her delay, and hence her re-iterated assertions that she can not possibly yield.

Sunday, August 27.

The Hochi Shimbun sounds a loud note of discontent, but our contemporary has evidently accepted without careful thought the statements analysed above. It concedes that the roles are completely exchanged that Witte is acting Bismarck while Baron Komura has been assigned the rôle of Jules Favre. In that belief the naturally waxing indignant, and very hints that some enervating wind Japan has weakened Baron Komura's constitutionally strong vertebra, and the fruits of the country's great victory being sacrificed to the Russophilic Russophil statesmen of Japan. T surely premature.

The minor Tokyo journals which hitherto distinguished themselves by citing the most varied rumours in the positive and precise terms, are that a compromise has been effected Russia agreeing to pay 600 million on account of the prisoners.

Turning to the leading journals, the Fiji writing in a tone somewhat different from its wont. The most striking point in its article is that it calls attention to the unprecedented change of position observable on the part of the Powers. Invariably any intermediary part has hitherto taken the form of urging upon a victor the duty of clemency. But now they are urging on a vanquished Power the wisdom of concession. Plain proof could be afforded that the world endorses Japan's demands as reasonable and just, and that she will receive benefit of her moderation. The Asahi confines itself to discussing the concessions attributed to Japan in the matter of interned ships and the limitation of naval forces. As to the latter, it is of practical value so long as Vladivostok remain in Russia's hands, whereas the operation of such a demand would greatly hurt her pride. The question of interned ships, however, belongs to a different category. Their value is incalculable but Japan should insist on their return as a point of international law, the taking of refuge in neutral ports being in effect, an act of surrender. This is somewhat an academical discussion on a temporary's part at a moment of practical like the present. The Nichi Nichi adds itself to the question of surrendering Saghalien. It denounces such a move as most prejudicial, but it declines to say that the proposal emanated from Japan divide Saghalien would be to go back to the days of Matsudaira and Ignatieff and the seeds of endless disputes. Peace of that kind is to be earnestly deprecated. The Nippon thinks that Saghalien now after actually surrendering many parts of it, would be more than even than to surrender Liaotung.

The Yomiuri Shimbun writes in a profound despondency. It fears that the country's diplomats have made a mistake which neither the nation will support nor the army endure. Had the original demands been resolutely adhered to the Conference been broken up by Russia's obduracy, the people would gladly consented to make further sacrifices of blood and treasure. But if a peace has been patched up by weak concessions the seeds of everlasting regret will have been sown. The Yorozu calls for the immediate rupture of the Conference and declares that these rumoured concessions Russia will only embolden her and exalt her spirit of aggression so that she will not be able to sleep at ease. It ends by saying that the Yorozu sounds a warning note in this crisis. The says a great deal of post-facto wisdom, but its arguments appear to be founded on the misstatements for which its own purveyors of news are alone responsible, we shall inflict its discussions upon our readers.

Monday, August 28.

The Niroku Shinbun denies all the reports now circulating as to the partition of Saghalien and the purchase of a part of it. It declares that such rumours are purposely circulated from Russian sources. The truth is that the Japanese Plenipotentiaries have not budged. They demand the cession of Saghalien and re-imbursement to the extent of 1,200 million yen. The Saghalien question is now under consideration. That relation to the indemnity has not been reached. There will be postponement after postponement. But do these delays indicate any real desire for peace on Russia's part? In this context reference must be made to the telegram of Sunday, which says that the Russian Government has requisitioned all the rolling stock of the Trans-Siberian railway and the Black-Sea lines for purposes of troop transport. How is that to be interpreted? Does it mean that enormous preparations are being made to bring home the great army now in Manchuria, or does it mean that these preparations are directed to strengthening that army? If the latter then the Russian Plenipotentiaries may be expected to prolong the conference as much as possible, for although armistice exists, it is plain that both of the combatants are unwilling to incur any expenditure of life so long as any hope of peace exists and there is thus an interval ending re-inforcements. But there is just possibility that the Russian Government is getting ready to carry home the troops. In two months remain before the great war. Naturally there would be a strong desire to utilize that interval. But it is hard to accept this view. The re-inforcement thesis seems much more credible. The Fiji Shimpō writes in the strongest terms against the proposed division of Saghalien. It describes such a concession as a great disgrace to Japan. Moreover, although Japan make such a concession, there is no prospect of her obtaining a cent indemnity. President Roosevelt is sincerely thanked for his exertions in the cause of peace, but there is only too much danger of his seeking to induce Japan to still further in order that the Conference carried thus far successfully may not fail. To avert such dangers the wise plan is to break off the Conference and appeal to force. Japan has proved her moderation.

Nichi Nichi is scarcely less strong. It is that the Japanese Plenipotentiaries have shown fatal weakness in yielding about the division of Saghalien, if they have yielded it. They have put their foot to be measured by Russia and the latter now understands the quality of the material she has to mould. They expect a long series of trickeries and imitations based on the natural hypothesis that an adversary who has yielded so may justly be expected to yield more. The gist of the Nichi Nichi's contention altogether condemns the nature of the plenipotentiaries' procedure. In the Hochi Shinbun, the character criticisms may be gathered from the gist of its article "The head of a dragon, of a worm." Our contemporary is not in line with the popular version "the head of a dragon, the tail of a snake." The one better, and gives the hybrid creature a worm's extension. All Japan's successes in battle threaten to become as unsubstantial as a dream. She has given up the demand for surrender of the interned ships; she has given up the demand for limiting Russia's naval force; and now she is about to give up one-half of Saghalien which her brave troops have conquered and are actually occupying. There is only one hope. The Conference may still be broken off. Yet even that consolation is frail, for if President Roosevelt has urged Japan to divide her Saghalien claim in two, he is not unlikely to urge her to reduce her monetary claim in a similar ratio, and her present diplomatists are not unlikely to yield. "We sincerely trust that the facts as reported by telegram may yet prove to be misrepresented."

The Chuo Shinbun (Seiyū-kai) is less vehement but not less critical. It wants to know what has become of the list of demands labeled "Japan's irreducible minimum." It wants especially to know what has become of the re-imbursement demand. The talk is now that Russia will buy back one-half of Saghalien; that Japan is prepared to sell in the morning a castle captured by her troops over-night. That may be, but what has it to do with re-imbursement? The two things are wholly different. Russia, instead of being obliged to pay her debts, is to be allowed to purchase a portion of Japan's property.

The Yomiuri Shinbun attacks the Plenipotentiaries and the Government. It insists that there should be an immediate change of Cabinet. When Japan's terms were first announced the country found them too small. Yet they are to be whittled down to smaller and smaller dimensions. "Let us have Ministers who will know how to safeguard the country's interests."

The Miyako Shinbun (once the organ of the late Baron Kusumoto) is profoundly disgusted. It does not believe in the Elder Statesmen and it does not believe in the Cabinet, but it did think that these officials, sensible of the fate awaiting themselves if they frittered away the results of the country's achievements, would stand firm on this occasion. But no. Yield an inch in the morning; yield a foot in the evening; there will soon remain nothing at all. The nation will not endure such ineptitude. There remains only one course, break off the Conference forthwith; recall the Plenipotentiaries immediately. This is but a faint outline of the Miyako's vehement rhetoric.

The Yoroku Choho considers that the proposed arrangement would be a greater disgrace to the country than the retrocession of Liaotung. Above all, it would not secure peace. On the contrary, it would sow the seeds of future troubles.

Tuesday, August 29.

With the exception of the Kokumin Shinbun all the Tokyo journals write in a most pessimistic tone. The Kokumin adheres firmly to its unvarying opinion that a peaceful issue may be anticipated, but does not predict that it will be an issue entirely satisfactory to Japan. Apparently our contemporary—apart from any special knowledge it may possess—relies on two facts, namely, that the Emperor of Germany is exerting himself in the cause of peace and that the meetings of the Conference are postponed from day to day. The latter procedure points to a mutual desire to find a pacific exit, not by any means to a resolve to break up the discussion.

The Asahi Shinbun declares that the continued presence of the Japanese Plenipotentiaries in Portsmouth has become almost a disgrace to this country. Russia has shown herself to be precisely the old Russia that she was before the war began. She forgets all the humiliations she has suffered from defeat after defeat, and shrinks from concessions which are purely just and in no sense disgraceful. Some may say that she has already ceded 8 out of Japan's 12 demands. But even among these 8 the most important are mutual concessions, and the 4 that she declines to agree to are cardinal. Moreover, the concessions she has made amount to a definite acknowledgement that she was wrong in going to war, yet she declines in practice to recognise the responsibility arising from her wrongful act. She is Russia. No more need be said. The war must continue until she develops some measure of sense.

The Nichi Nichi Shinbun is even more emphatic. It insists that Japan must not yield a point of her demands for the cession of Saghalien and the payment of an indemnity. Nothing less will secure permanent peace. There can not be the slightest yielding. Russia must be struck again and again until she is prepared to listen to reason. Our contemporary does not doubt that such was the decision of the Palace Council on the 28th, and such is certainly the decision of the nation. It may be that in the face of a clearly unyielding attitude on Japan's part, Russia will change her mind, but no reliance whatever should be placed on that hope. The only sound course is to fight on.

The Nippon considers the question mainly from the point of view of the great gulf that would be created between the Government and the people if the partition of Saghalien be made a pretext for receiving money from Russia. It is because of the nation's unity that Japan has been able to win successes in this war, but if any such arrangement be made—an arrangement clearly pointing to future trouble and thus condemning the country to the burden of constant warlike preparation—that unity will be lost and the people will recognise that the Government has sacrificed their blood and treasure wantonly. Doubtless in the sequel of a peace thus contrived, there would be distributions of Orders and grants of patents of nobility, but the nation would feel that such honours had been ruthlessly purchased with the wasted lives and squandered properties of its units. Rather than that this route to peace be taken, the Nippon prays that the Russians may remain obdurate.

The Hochi says that the world has heard of selling one's country, than which nothing could be more disgraceful. But this partition of Saghalien—would it not be plainly such a sale? It is a blessing that the Russians have not agreed to such a proposition. Does the Government then contemplate some further concession and does it imagine that the nation would endorse it? Break off the negotiations at once: recall Baron Komura, and obliterate if possible the traces of this disgraceful conception which seems to have been gravely discussed in the Conference chamber at Portsmouth. If the statesmen present at the Cabinet Council on Monday represented the Japanese people, they must have decided in this sense. If they shrank from the responsibility, it is for the nation to stand forth and take the direction of affairs into its own hands. "The fate of the Empire depends upon this effort."

The Yomiuri wants to know what kind of welcome the nation will accord to its Plenipotentiaries if they return with a peace concluded on this partition basis. Baron Komura's weakness is probably a reflection of the weakness of the Japanese Cabinet, but in Russia's eyes Japan must seem a veritable child and M. Witte is treating her as such. The Yomiuri makes some veiled references to what might have been expected of the country's so-called "Bismarck" were he worthy of the name that has been given to him.

The Shogyo Shimpō (commercial organ) declares that Russia is still as blind-eyed as ever, and that there is nothing for it but to strike at her harder than ever. Let the army advance upon Harbin and Vladivostok. Upon Russia's shoulders now unequivocally rests the responsibility of forcing a renewal of the fighting. The world has declared for Japan.

The Chuo, the Yorozu, the Miyako, and the Niroku all write in a similar strain. The only difference is in degrees of vehemence of language.

Wednesday, August 30.

The Tokyo press continues to write in very strong terms. This morning the Jiji, the Yomiuri, the Niroku, the Yorozu, the Hochi, the Miyako and the Nichi Nichi all speak with undisguised indignation at the concessions already made and vehemently repel the notion of making any more. We can not find anything new in their arguments. Indeed the subject is pretty well threshed out. The Nichi Nichi declares that Russia can not continue the war whereas Japan can, but after all Russia undoubtedly thinks that she can and that is the main point. The Kokumin retains its hopeful tone—not quite so hopeful as hitherto—and is disposed to laugh at its contemporaries for their assumption of miraculous foresight in announcing the result of meetings not yet held.

THE CHINESE POSTAL SYSTEM.

To those who know the postal system of China only as a creation of very recent times—1896 was the date of its establishment by Imperial Decree—it will be surprising to learn that the organization of a postal service was commenced as far back as 1861 by the present Inspector-General of Customs, Sir Robert Hart. It was then only an experimental affair, having its origin in the need created by the establishment of foreign legations in Peking, and at first the carriage of mails on behalf of these was undertaken under the auspices of the Tsung-li Yamen, which enlisted the services of Government couriers employed for the transmission of official despatches. But very soon the responsibility of making up and distributing these mails was entrusted to the Customs. No special pecuniary assistance was given by the Imperial Government. During 30 years the work had to be carried on as a kind of corollary to the regular business of the Customs, which lent the assistance of its staff and such resources as it could spare. A Report just published among the series of invaluable Yellow Books forming the Statistical Series of the Imperial Maritime Customs, justly observes that "the independent and quiet creation of an administration so new and so useful is the more wonderful in this immovable country and will not be the least of the services rendered by the Customs and its Chief to China and her people." In 1904 for the first time the Chinese Government became convinced that a national postal service would be a success, and announced that thenceforth an annual grant of Hk. Tls. 720,000 would be made on account of the service. This grant has not yet been paid in full, but such sums as have been received suffice very nearly to bring the income of the institution into equilibrium with the expenditure. For the system, so far from being a source of revenue to the State as it will doubtless be ultimately, has not yet become self-supporting. It is very nearly so in six districts, but in seven others the receipts are less than one half of the expenditure. There are now 1,329 offices and agencies throughout the 40 districts and sub-districts to which this network of communications extends. It has to be noted that the conservatism of the Chinese Government in this matter is more apparent than real. The report now before us says that "in 1876, when the Chefoo Convention was being negotiated, the Tsung-li Yamen authorized the Inspector-General to inform the British Minister, Sir Thomas Wade, that it was prepared to sanction the establishment of a national postal system and willing to make it a treaty stipulation that postal establishments should be opened at once." But no clause in that sense found its way into the Convention. Mr. Piry, Postal Secretary, the compiler of the Report, attributes the omission to "a conspiracy of silence," and those acquainted with Sir Thomas Wade will have no difficulty in understanding how such a thing might have occurred in any business conducted by him. Happily, however, the great Viceroy Li lent valuable assistance, and under his patronage progress was made in spite of Sir Thomas Wade's insouciance. Of course it is not to be imagined that a country so highly civilized as China—the most civilized country in the world at one epoch—altogether lacked a postal service. Such was very far from being the case, and as a chapter of history this part of the subject is very interestingly treated in Mr. Piry's Report. We read there that from immemorial times the Chinese nation has possessed two postal institutions, one the I Chan, or Imperial Government Courier Service; the other, the native posting agencies. These two give employment to legions of couriers, and naturally their immediate suppression or replacement is out of the question: they have to be gradually superseded or absorbed. The I Chan is wholly maintained by the State through provincial contributions from ordinary local taxes and its total cost is estimated at 3 millions of taels annually. The native postal agencies, on the other hand, are altogether independent of officialdom. "Their innumerable ramifications, fast couriers or rapid post-boats, as the style of country decides, extend to all parts of China a veritable network of postal connexions which, with their slow ways, have for centuries answered the requirements of busy and thrifty communities. They are essentially shop associations, for the most part engaged also in other trades."

They fix the limits of their responsibilities and adjust their rates as they please, the latter having often to be bargained for. One characteristic rule is that half the charge is paid by the sender and half by the addressee; a practice which often leads to extra demands on delivery." It will evidently be a work of time and patience to systematise and officially regulate this outgrowth of many centuries.

A girl named Hilda Wildblood has attended the National Schools at Leigh for six years and four months without being absent once. What's in a name? asks the Globe.

THE TELEPHONE AT THE BATTLE OF MUKDEN.

Mr. M. C. Sullivan, writing in the Reynolds Review, describes an interesting feature of the battle of Mukden. The following extracts from his essay are quoted by the Lancet Digest:—

"One of the most remarkable events that occurred in the world's history is the battle of Mukden, remarkable because it was the only land battle ever fought, and standing because its victory was ever won by such scientific methods. It was accomplished by the Japanese, who contemplated in war, and which had been proclaimed by military experts to be impossible, the success of the victorious forces was almost due to the skilful use of what is to-day considered one of the most ordinary and common among electrical instruments—the telephone."

"Formerly, a large battle was to a certain extent a haphazard, hit-and-miss affair, the conduct of the most skilful general failing to prevent the many accidents and incidents which almost a moment after the entire system was changed and a successful movement was a failure. Not so now, however, as by means of the telephone it is possible for the commander to keep in touch with each individual of an enormously large army, and thus to make use of all portions of it at all times, thereby producing the greatest possible effect with the least expenditure of energy."

"From the subdivisions of each portion of the army telephone lines were run in a portable board, and from the various switchboards lines were run to headquarters several miles rear. Thus the parts of each portion of the army were made to correspond with the telephone substation in a large city, the latter being analogous to the central station, and of the subsidiary stations are connected by lines."

"The rapidity with which the Japanese telephone communication was established were laid well in advance of the main body of the army even when the army was advancing by marches, and perfect connection was maintained between the different divisions. When conditions permitted, the reels of wire were carried in wagons, and the lines were laid on the ground as rapidly as a horse could advance. If the line so laid was to be permanent, a detail followed the wagon and attached the wire to trees or bushes or supports."

"For 'flying lines, or lines' within the action, which connected the command headquarters with the various divisions of the army, the detail following the reel wagon were wire in protected places on the ground, which were least likely to be disturbed. These lines were up, moved, or abandoned as occasion required. Where the nature of the country or other rendered the advance of a wagon impracticable, the line was advanced by means of a pedient, the line was advanced by means of wire on their shoulders."

"Although military glory has diminished considerably among enlightened people, it has become obsolete, yet it is one of the signs of the decadence of the war that more science is brought into play as a force in a controlling factor on the battle greater will be the tendency to lessen personal achievement in war. As a result, battles will become commonplace scientific routine, for the first time all time past has been born of the hope to be won through personal achievement executed, and not through a superior scientific methods of indirect killing."

PORT ARTHUR'S SUNKEN SHIPS.

The Bayan (now the Asa) was at Maidzuru at 8 a.m. on the 28th.

The Naval Department announced the afternoon of the 29th the Poltava (now the Tango), which floated at Port Arthur, arrived on steam at Maidzuru.

From the same source we learn that 2 a.m. on the 29th the Zena was at Port Arthur and at 2 p.m. on the 29th the Boreia. There are both steamers of 919 tons each.

MANCHURIA.

The following extract from a Japanese non-commissioned officer refers to Kangping, one of the most advanced towns occupied by the Japanese extreme left—the letter is dated August 16th:—"At last the wet season in this part of the country is over and we are again having bright sunny days. What is of most benefit, however, is that the roads have nearly recovered from their swamp-like condition. There remains only one place, a place about 15 metres long, between this and Fakumun, where the mud is still waist-deep. So our trains of ammunition and provisions reach us more easily and the horses are less tired, which concerns us very much. This town is becoming cleaner every day. Our gendarmes are very busy urging and compelling the Chinese inhabitants to sweep the roads, cleanse every spot within reach and strictly observe our sanitary regulations, which are posted conspicuously at all the street corners. When we first entered Fakumun the roads were carefully and inexpressibly filthy. So muddy were they that an incautious pig, if he ran along recklessly, could easily be drowned in the morass of mud. One day our soldiers chased four swine, and two of them, flying headlong, were engulfed in the mud of the street and never emerged from it. But if you were to see the town to-day you could never suspect what its former state had been. Not even a cigarette-stump is seen lying on the road, and the streets look as though they were paved with concrete. As to the enemy, there is no change; or at least none perceptible to us here. Our advanced line is very quiet. We hear that Mischenko's cavalry with some infantry has come in front of our—Division, which has been posted in prolongation of our original left, but no sound of cannon is audible. Everything is quite still. Our men are eager to advance. They look forward to another Mukden. Meanwhile they are very comfortable. Our military stores are well stocked and a man can get even delicacies as well as essentials."

The Asahi's telegrams say that reinforcements to the extent of 8,000 or 9,000 infantry, 3,000 cavalry and 16 guns have reached the Russians at Kirin, and are to be pushed forward at once to the Hailung-hing lines. The wet season is now completely past. Even the occasional showers which usually succeed it have ceased. There are signs of activity on the Russian side which seem to portend the assumption of the offensive.

For the moment all interest centres on the conference chamber at Portsmouth, and Manchuria is comparatively neglected. Yet Manchuria may presently be the scene of the reatest battle recorded in the world's history. London wires (Asahi) that the Japanese have extended and strengthened their left so as to completely envelop the Russian right. Thus it is only a fatal check imposed on Mischenko's flanking movements, but also the Russians are cut off from the abundant supplies hitherto drawn from the West-Liao regions. They are consequently making heavy drafts on their Hwaitieh forces in order to stiffen their right. We strongly suspect that there is much truth in this statement.

It was supposed that the rainy season had come to an end in Manchuria about the 8th instant, but a telegram to the Nichi Nichi declares that something of the extremely settled weather prevailing in Japan is felt in the Three Eastern Provinces also. On the night of the 18th another heavy down-pour set in, reducing the roads to quagmires and putting the rivers into flood. Under these circumstances all the recently apparent symptoms of a Russian assumption of the offensive have disappeared, and the enemy is toiling strenuously to strengthen his line of defences. It seems that in this kind of industry the Russians are never deficient. If they held their entrenchments with the same determination that they show in preparing them, it would be indeed a difficult task to dislodge them.

SAGHALIEN.

We read in Japanese journals that among the batch of 240 non-combatant Russians from Saghalien who reached Yokohama on the 22nd and were handed over to the French Consul, one was Professor Alexis Dragoni, who is said to have been connected with the assassination of the Tsar Alexander II. Dragoni was sentenced to 25 years transportation. He spent 5 years in China and 5 years more in prison, after which he was allowed to become a "free command." As the assassination took place in 1881, he must have almost completed his sentence, but under the Russian system, as we understand it, he would have been obliged to remain 6 years longer in Saghalien as an "exile settler" and 6 years in the Amur region before being eligible for return to European Russia. He is now a man of 52, so that, had he been obliged to adhere to the regulations strictly, he could not have proceeded to Europe before the age of 64. The capture of the island by the Japanese has changed all that, however. Dragoni and 38 other political exiles obtain their freedom as a matter of course. The Professor talks of spending the rest of his life in the United States. Japan, of course, has no responsibility for his manner of disposing of himself. It is interesting, however, to reflect upon the duties that the French Consul undertakes. Presumably he is expected to hand over these political prisoners to Russia and to provide for their safe conduct until they pass into Russian hands, but how can that be managed?

It appears that some Russian troops are still holding out in Saghalien. These are remnants of the Korakoff force; insignificant remnants which are expected to be soon driven to surrender by want of provisions. A party of Japanese fishermen engaged collecting edible sea-weed off the south-west coast near Mauka had an unpleasant reminder of the unsettled state of affairs on the 6th instant. They had set out on the 30th of July, and when they neared the shore a number of Russians in a boat attacked them, at once opening fire. It is the custom of Russians to open fire upon every one resembling a Japanese whether he be a combatant or a non-combatant. Indeed the Russian habit of mind seems to suggest such procedure, for it is well known that whereas robbers in general endeavour to steal first and do not kill if they can avoid it, the brodyagi of Saghalien begin by killing and then proceed to steal if there is anything to be stolen. Thus it frequently happens that when an unfortunate way-farer has been assassinated, his murderers find nothing valuable on his person. They kill on chance. In the above affair near Mauka one of the fishermen was killed by the fire of the Russians, but the others managed to escape.

The big island is now reported to be quiet and completely subdued with the exception of a small region near Naibuchi on the south-western shore of Patience Bay. There about 200 Russians are still under arms. If approached they retire into the depths of the forest, whence they emerge after their assailants withdraw. They deserve high credit for their obstinate resistance but of course it can have only one end. Probably they are still ignorant of the fall of Alexandrofska and Rykoff.

We read in the Kokumin that there is hope of raising the Novik, and that operations are now actually in progress with that aim. The weighty articles have been removed from her, and it is expected that she can be floated readily. One difficulty is that little time remains before the advent of the cold weather.

RUSSIA.

It appears to be the view entertained generally outside Russia, if we may judge from newspaper utterances, that her condition is almost hopeless, whereas the Russians, so far from forming any such pessimistic forecast, have profound faith in themselves and believe firmly in a brilliant future for their country. Self-confidence is a grand trait. No nation that lacked it ever rose to eminence. Nor is there, so far as outsiders can judge, any just cause for pessimism. Russia may be in a state of revolution but what then? Most countries have had revolutions and few countries have failed to benefit by them. It is difficult to see how any really formidable character can be ascribed to a revolution from which the army stands aloof, and as yet there is not the slightest symptom of disloyalty on the part of the Russian troops. The Tsar and the aristocracy are safe so long as they have the army at their back. Very hard things are being said of them now because they do not immediately concede all the demands of the liberals and transform the polity of the empire from pure autocracy to constitutional government on the most thorough lines. One does not see how any ordinarily prudent man can advocate such radicalism. It has never been successfully practised anywhere and the Russian nation has always been reckoned specially unfitted for wholesale experiments in reform. The national assembly which the Tsar has called into future existence may be a limited affair; the franchise may be enjoyed by very few and the powers of the assembly may be restricted, but none the less such a measure is an immense step in the right direction; an irrevocable step which carries the people into a route where the Emperor can never again stay their feet even though he desire to do so. There ought to be fullest deliberation in making such innovations, and it is impossible to see any just reason for condemning the deliberation of the Tsar and his advisers. Russia during the past two years has displayed some unlovely features, but since an anarchical revolution within her borders would be a calamity for all Europe as well as for humanity, we can not but wish her safe emergence from her troubles.

According to a Manila exchange Miss Alice Roosevelt attended a fashionable ball there and "looked sweetly pretty in her trailing gown of green, cross-barred with glinting gold—the Filipina dress woven specially for her and made the prettier in aspect by her wearing of it. The train and the unruly pantofole proved rebellious subjects at times, but the President's daughter never lost her good humour for a moment, and danced delightfully."

THE KAISER AND THE TSAR.

Russian journals certainly helped to create the impression that the Kaiser, when the Tsar visited him on board the Holenzollern, advised continuance of the war. The Nasha Zhizn, quoted by the St. Petersburg correspondent of The Times, said that the Kaiser, mindful of Germany's interests, would naturally recommend internal pacification with a view to the continuance of the external war, and that His Majesty's advice was probably the direct reverse of that of the re-actionary Mestchersky, who demanded the conclusion of peace with Japan in order that measures might then be taken against reform. The Novoe Vremya, we read, reviewing the occasions when the Tsar and the Kaiser have met, makes special mention of the Breslau meeting, after which William II. issued his famous appeal to the peoples of Europe to unite in defence of the sacred possessions threatened by the yellow peril, and the meeting at Wiesbaden in 1903, three months before the outbreak of war. The Novoe Vremya regretfully confesses that the Kaiser's crusade proved a failure and that Russia was left to her own resources. "We must strive to achieve a union of the Imperial national and social forces, which alone are capable of restoring what we have lost during the past 18 months. Doubtless the Emperor William discussed this union, deeply conscious that it would be useful not only to Russia but to Germany and to the whole white race." A similar belief prevailed in Paris. Thus the St. Petersburg correspondent of Le Temps telegraphed to the latter journal that "apparently William the Second's advice was to continue the war until the Russians had gained their first victory." It is now very evident, however, that these surmises and suspicions were entirely incorrect. The Kaiser can not possibly have counselled continuance of the war at the end of July and yet lent, at the end of August, whole-hearted assistance to bring about its termination. For no one can deny, we presume, that since the conference begun its sittings at Portsmouth the influence of William II. has been thrown heavily into the scale of peace. His Majesty appears to have acted with whole-hearted earnestness in this matter. Students of European politics are wont to allege that Germany's interests suggest the utmost possible weakening of Russia and that, consequently, the spectacle of the great Northern Empire frittering away its strength and its resources in a Far-Eastern conflict ought to be most welcome to German eyes. Perhaps so. But there is another aspect of the question. Germany does not want the virus of revolution to be carried across her borders from Russia, and a long continued war of defeat would be exceedingly likely to shake down the throne of the Romanoffs and throw their empire into a tumult of revolt. The Kaiser may think that things already have a dangerous tendency in that direction, and that the war should be stopped as soon as possible. At all events whatever may have been His Majesty's motive he has been an assiduous labourer in the cause of peace, and it does not seem extravagant to conclude that Berlin's optimism as to the outcome of the Conference was inspired by faith in the potency of the Emperor's influence. Events have not yet justified that faith, but they have proved that the Kaiser was very grossly misrepresented.

PROFESSOR TOMIZU.

Professor Tomizu has been relieved of his duties at the Imperial University. This step has been taken in accordance with the regulations relating to the control of the conduct of officials, and under an Article of the Regulations which empowers the Department of Education to dispense with the services of an official should such a course seem desirable. Thus no charge is preferred against the Professor, nor is any disgrace connected with his loss of office. The public, however, is fully sensible that the authorities condemn him on account of his vehement political agitation. He is one of the most prominent of the Seven Professors who have made themselves so conspicuous in connexion with the present war. It is stated that the Minister of Education had several times suggested the inadvisability of a University Professor engaging in political agitation, but Mr. Tomizu considered that the dictates of patriotism were more imperative than the counsels of his superior. A few days ago he attended a meeting in the Kairaku-en when Viscount Watanabe and Mr. Shimada Saburo were among the speakers. Exceedingly vehement addresses were delivered, but we can not find that Professor Tomizu was among the speakers or that the meeting adopted any resolution which he openly endorsed. At any rate this meeting, coming in the sequel of his previous conduct, appears to have determined the Authorities. Professor Tomizu made a journey in Manchuria before the war and having thus acquired special qualifications to speak and having embodied his experiences in a book, he and Professor Tani became most outspoken advocates of war, and are now understood to contend that peace is premature. Professor Tani held the position of Councillor in the Foreign Office, a post which he necessarily resigned when he commenced his agitation. It is easy to foresee that this removal of Professor Tomizu will create much excitement and provoke a great deal of controversy. The policy of the Empire at present, however, is to exclude from the realm of politics all persons connected with education. A school teacher is not allowed to exercise the franchise, and one can not think that, in the face of such a restriction, a Professor of the University should be suffered to interfere actively in politics. Whether the system which imposes such limitations should be called wise, is another question. But we have always to remember that the schools to which the restriction applies are supported by the State and that to give the franchise to their teachers and permit them to stand upon the political platform would be almost equivalent to sanctioning the teaching of a special religious creed at public educational institutions. Any one can appreciate the abuses to which such licence might lead.

THE GERMANS IN SOUTH-WEST AFRICA.

We take the following from the Berlin correspondence of The Times, dated July 17th:—

According to the latest of the periodical estimates with regard to the strength and the losses of the German troops in South-West Africa the protectorate force numbered 42 officers, seven officials, and 772 men, together with 800 horses, at the outbreak of the rising in January, 1904. Since that date reinforcements to the number of 665 officers, 196 officials, and 13,653 men, together with nearly 12,000 horses, have been sent out from this country. The total losses in action up to date amount to 41 officers, 83 non-commissioned officers, and 305 men killed or missing, and 53 officers, 109 non-commissioned officers, and 303 men wounded; or a total of 106 officers and men of the regular corps killed or missing in action. The number of deaths from disease in consequence of accidents amounted to 15 officers, 63 non-commissioned officers, and 393 men, a total of 474 deaths. In addition, 119 officers and men of the colonial reserves also fell or were wounded in action. Moreover, murder, disease, and accidents accounted for one officer of the local force and 127 men who were either farmers or reservists or both. Thus the rising has so far cost the Germans some 1,100 Germans, probably exclusive of women and children, and 512 men have been wounded in action.

The total percentage of losses in killed and wounded amounts to 8 per cent. of the officers and 19 per cent. of the non-commissioned officers of the force. Moreover, 425 members of the expeditionary corps have been invalided home, and of these have been finally examined, with the result that 10 or over 77 per cent., have been classed as permanent invalids. No fewer than 14 officers and 311 men, nearly 4.5 per cent. of the average strength of the force, succumbed to typhoid fever. The situation has been reached in the suppression of the rising, to be gathered from the fact that during the last weeks 110 deaths have occurred in action from disease and 85 officers and men have been wounded.

So far the pecuniary cost involved by the campaign is estimated at not far short of 30,000,000 marks (£12,500,000). The extent of the action, which has demanded these enormous amounts of men and money cannot as yet be accurately gauged.

It is regrettable that the publication of these statistics should coincide with a renewed series of attacks upon the conduct of the British action both in British Bechuanaland and at the Cape. According to the deplorably misinformed assertions these accusations the British attitude towards the insurgents has long since passed from passive connivance to one of active support, apart from the official declarations which have been made in the Cape Parliament. The first-hand evidence for the refutation of these calumnies is to be found from time to time in the German Press itself, the whole campaign being dismissed as a childish exhibition of ignorance at the interminable character of the operations in German colony. One question, however, may be elucidated from the British point of view: is the present practice of German column-commanders to hostile the natives over the British home army regard a "drive" of this kind as a success?

It is probable that by this time the Germans are beginning to appreciate the nature of the task that had to be undertaken in Great Britain in South Africa a few years ago. Scorn of a very unequivocal description was poured upon the British Army by German critics at that time, but now the incomparably petty uprising of a weak tribe in South-West Africa has cost the Germans some 13 millions sterling, has involved the loss of some 1,100 German troops, has kept 12,000 German troops busy for 18 months, and is not yet completely quelled. The fact is that over-sea operations against an enemy, however insignificant, and with modern weapons of precision are no serious things. There is nothing in the British record which justifies us in imagining that had this revolt, like the Hereros occurred at any place, however remote, in her dominions she would have completely quelled it in six months. That has been her extreme limit of time: Egypt, in the Soudan, in Ashantee, Zululand, in Abyssinia, in Burmah, Tibet, on the Indian frontier and elsewhere. But Germany, being quite new to this kind of work, did not appreciate its difficulties and thus allowed herself to sit in judgment on British failures in South Africa where one of the "slimmest" enemies ever encountered had to be met in topographical conditions of vast difficulty. We sincerely regret the loss of German troops in the Hereros expedition, but if this element could be ruled out of the story should be obliged to confess to a deep satisfaction that bitter experience is teaching our Teutonic friends how poorly qualified they were to act the part of austere conquerors during the Boer war.

SUBMARINE SIGNALLING BY SOUND.

We have now to hand, by favour of the author, a copy of the paper on "Submarine signalling by means of Sound" which was read by Mr. J. B. Millet at the spring meetings of the forty-fifth session of the Institution of Naval Architects. It is a most interesting contribution on the subject, and most specially appeal to seafaring men. Early in the last century experiments were made in Lake Geneva to measure the speed of submarine sound, but these had no practical result; and it was not till sixty years later that attempts were made to provide ships with a means of hearing signals sent to them through the sea or possibly to hear surf on rocks. Singularly, however, no one thought of using the ship as a collector of sound; rather all the scientists were agreed in trying to obtain the sound by the use of an apparatus to be attached to the outside of the vessel or lowered into the water. It was left to Prof. Lucien I. Blake, now occupying the chair of Physics in Kansas University, to establish for the first time the fact that sound in the water surrounding a ship will pass readily through its walls into the hold. One of the vessels used in his experiments was the old frigate Constitution, and although her sides were 20 inches thick the sound of oar-blades struck together under water some distance away was distinctly heard inside the ship. The Hispano-American war stopped the Blake experiments but initiated another set of tests, those by Messrs. A. J. Mundy and Elisha Gray (of telephone fame). Mr. Mundy discovered something that no one else seems to have thought of, namely that the sound transmitter should be placed inside the ship. But he placed it in a tank attached to the skin of the hull and the noises of the vessel quite effaced all external sounds. So resort was again made to devices to be lowered overboard and finally these were discarded in favour of a tank to be fitted up inside the ship but not attached to her skin. This apparently has proved quite successful, so far as can be gathered from the facts given by Mr. Millet, who is Vice-President and General Manager of the Submarine Signal Company. This company determined to build and actually operate for a long period the three kinds of stations into which signals of this kind are divided: a lighthouse station, which necessitated a cable; a bell-buoy in which the submarine bell was to be rung by wave motion, and a lightship where steam or compressed air furnished the power with the bell hung over the side at some depth below the keel. All these forms of apparatus were built and operated for one year at stations in charge of the U. S. Lighthouse Board before the system was offered to the Government for inspection.

Repeated tests with bells in the ocean had shown that a bell with a lip or "sound bowl" several inches thick and having a high musical note gave the best carrying sound in the water though such a bell was quite unsatisfactory in air. Two bells have been most recently in use, one of 650 lbs. and another of 140 lbs. the latter of which is declared much the better and has been heard at a distance of 16 knots. The power used for ringing may be steam, compressed air, electricity or hydraulic.

To carry out the tests submarine bells were placed on four lightships situated on the coast of a line of steamers running between New York and Boston. The steamers were duly equipped and exhaustive tests were secured. The "ships' noises" phantom at once vanished. It was found that if the tanks were placed below water-line at certain fixed points aft, and at certain fixed points above the keel, if they were filled with a solution denser than sea water, and if the transmitters were adapted to the recognition of sounds of high pitch and not those of low vibration (in itself a problem of immense difficulty), the submarine bell notes and other sounds like screws of steamers were readily heard. It appeared as if the noises made by machinery on board preferred to pass along the hull rather than turn into the lighter medium in the tanks, whereas transmitters fastened directly to the skin of the ship had invariably heard so much "ship noise" as to be useless for detecting outside signals.

At first the officers of the steamers were very sceptical, but when the captain of one vessel was able to locate his course to a lighthouse at a dangerous point on Nantucket Shoals in a heavy gale and snowstorm at night the unbelievers were convinced. At first the range of the bells was three knots, but as the officers grew accustomed to the system the distance increased to twelve knots in a vessel running fifteen knots an hour. Gales, tides, and heavy waves had absolutely no effect on submarine sounds. By means of two transmitters, port and starboard it was easy to fix the source of the sounds to within one-eighth of a point whatever the distance. Thus the experiments appear to have been absolutely successful. The Canadian Government has adopted the system, and the U. S. Lighthouse Board was ready to do so but Congress adjourned without providing funds. The U. S. Navy had given considerable attention to the subject, and it has already been found that submarines can be heard and located at considerable distances. Mr. Millet thinks that the adoption of this system in navies will rob submarines of some of their terrors. Is it not possible also, he asks, that Admiral Kamimura could have heard and located the Vladivostok squadron when he missed it in a fog by a distance thought to be less than three miles? In all probability, judging from experience the Russian fleet before Port Arthur could have heard some of the Japanese vessels long before they made their proximity known.

PRACTICAL PHILANTHROPY.

Last week we published a paragraph recording the attempted suicide of a discharged and disabled soldier named K. Natsume. Within a few hours we received the following letter:—

"Herewith yen 5 for the soldier K. Natsume, mentioned in your issue of to-day under the heading "Attempted suicide."

Almost upon the heels of this letter we received a call from Mrs. R. Swain, Foreign Secretary of the Yokohama Circle of the King's Daughters. From her we learnt that the paragraph had come to the attention of the Executive Committee and on the principle that "he gives twice who gives quickly," they had taken steps to see Governor Sufu and the Chief of Police and made inquiry into the merits of the case. What they learnt induced the King's Daughters to take up the matter of poor Natsume (he was wounded in the famous attack on 203-metre hill on Nov. 30th), and they will provide for him until such time as he is able to fend for himself.

If our first correspondent agrees, we will hand over to Mrs. Swain the yen 5 he has so generously sent us, for in the hands of the Executive Committee of the King's Daughters the money will be applied to the best advantage.

The taking up of this case inaugurates a new line of practical philanthropic work for the King's Daughters of Yokohama. An attempt will be made to establish a fund by which help can be afforded the sick and maimed soldiers and sailors belonging to Yokohama and Kanagawa ken, and the young ladies and their advisers, among whom are Mrs. R. Swain, Mrs. J. F. Lowder, Mrs. Miller (wife of the American Consul General), will work along the lines and in complete harmony with the Japanese ladies who are doing such noble work in our midst under the capable guidance of Madame Watanabe and Madame Sufu. Should any of our readers wish to contribute to this fund for the maimed and destitute we will gladly accept their gifts on behalf of the King's Daughters, and they may be sure they will be thankfully received and faithfully applied. The coming winter will see much misery at our very doors and if the King's Daughters can alleviate it by even such a little they will earn the grateful thanks of a nation not slow to recognise such deeds of practical charity.

THE "KINJO MARU."

Twenty-nine corpses have been picked up at the scene of the Kinjo Maru disaster. But the original fear that 6 officers, 122 rank and file, 2 nurses and 21 coolies had been lost, may prove to have been excessive, since news has been received that 4 survivors reached Yokkaichi, 9 Nakatsu and 6 Futo. This broad fact alone is telegraphed, and no details are published as to the class to which these survivors belong. It is at any rate certain that there has been terrible loss of life, and in view of the circumstances our readers will probably agree with us that this is an appropriate occasion to contribute something for the relief of the families of these men who, returning to their country after long service in Formosa, met their death within sight of her shores.

We learn that the British Government have officially conveyed to the Japanese Government and people their condolences in connexion with the deplorable affair of the Kinjo Maru.

We beg to acknowledge receipt of the following sums on behalf of the widows and orphans created by the Kinjo Maru disaster in the Inland Sea:—

	Yen .
H. E. Sir Claude and Lady Macdonald	300
Mr. J. T. Hamilton	100
Capt. and Mrs. Brinkley	50
Mr. E. M. Hobart Hampden	25
M. N. Gobhai & Co.	25
Capt. and Mrs. Young	20

CUSTOMS PROTEST.

On Aug. 24th, Mr. Minakami, Director of the Yokohama Customs, delivered a decision on a protest instituted by Messrs. Becker and Co., No. 197, Yamashita-cho. The firm imported cotton tissue on which the appraisers imposed 10 per cent. ad valorem duty in accordance with No. 17 of the conventional tariff between Japan and Great Britain. The importers contended that the tissue was "cotton shirting twilled" and it should be dealt with under No. 11 of the same tariff and the duty should be sen 1.1 per square yard. The protest was dismissed on the ground that the goods are thick twilled cotton tissue to be used for lining.

KOREA.

A Japanese officer who recently returned from north-eastern Korea, says that on the 7th instant when the Japanese troops were surrounding a body of Russians near Put-yong, they (the Japanese) were suddenly attacked on the left flank. It turned out that their assailants were disbanded Korean soldiers who attributing their loss of employment and consequently of sustenance to Japanese interference, had placed their services at Russia's disposal and were now acting as spies for the latter. Prisoners taken on this occasion stated that there were three companies of these disbanded soldiers, numbering 150 in all. Being well acquainted with the country, they must be of great assistance to the enemy.

In northern Korea the rains are incessant. All possibility of military operations is precluded for the time. Frequent skirmishes, however, are reported to be taking place. The Russians appear to be acting with much shrewdness, not to say trickery. They disguise themselves as Korean peasants working in the fields or as wood-cutters on the hills; the former keeping their rifles handy so as to fusillade any Japanese detachment that approaches, the latter acting as scouts. They also construct dummy fortifications armed with timber guns and manned by straw figures. Approaching these, the Japanese find themselves ambuscaded. At first owing to these causes and owing to the services rendered to the Russians by disbanded Korean soldiers, the Japanese are said to have suffered some losses, but they have now turned the tables and are making the enemy pay for his previous devices. We take these facts from the Hochi Shimbun's correspondence. It adds that a considerable force of the enemy, having crossed to the right bank of the Tumen, are now in difficulties owing to the demolition of the bridges by floods in the river.

It might have been supposed that M. Pavlov's appearance in the British Court at Shanghai and the incidents connected with that affair would have put a permanent extinguisher on him in a political sense. But if reports from Seoul may be trusted he is again mischievously active. In combination with Mr. Heong, who made the much-talked-of visit to Port Arthur on the eve of the outbreak of hostilities when Admiral Alexieff still wore the purple, and in combination with the former Korean Representative in Peking and with the famous Li Yong-ik, M. Pavlov is said to have been intriguing to procure the removal of the Korean capital to some distant point. A place "westward of Pyongyang" is spoken of, but there is no conceivable locality answering to that description. Li Yong-ik is reported to have been in full pursuit of this object when his doings in other directions led to his fall from office. He was believed to have made his escape to Shanghai, but rumour now says that he is hiding in Seoul. Li with the command of the large sum of money found in his yamen might have been a formidable conspirator. Had he been working in co-operation with his own countrymen alone he might have been mistaken for a patriot, but his association with M. Pavlov taints him effectually.

We regret, to learn says the Seoul Press, that the Chemulpo Cigarette and Tobacco Company has been compelled to stop work for some time owing to the fact that the Chinese merchants in China refuse to patronise American goods. The Company's cigarettes are, apparently, made from the "best Virginian tobacco" and as this information is printed on the cigarette cases no doubt this is the reason why the Chinese merchants have decided no longer to deal with the Chemulpo company. It is absolutely absurd, and somewhat amusing to think that this boycotting question one reads so much about in the Chinese papers should have extended to Korea.

The French Minister is said to have been notified by the Foreign Department that the Korean Government is willing to engage Mr. Martel's services for another year, as he has always been most zealous in the discharge of his duties.

The Il-Chin-Hoi are reported to be anxious that Pingyang should become once more the capital of Korea.

It now transpires, according to the Seoul Press, with regard to the land seizure question, that the intention of the Japanese authorities concerned was that, out of the sum of 200,000 yen paid, 120,000 yen should have been handed over to the various owners of land and property outside the South Gate, and that about 200 yen would be about the average sum of compensation due to each family. Moreover most of the families concerned were not compelled to give up their land immediately but were permitted to carry on their agricultural pursuits as usual, the military authorities not wishing to occupy the whole of the land immediately.

We regret to hear, says the Korea Daily News, that the British gold mines at Ap-unsan (Gwendo-line) "have petered out" and will no longer pay for working by foreign methods. We have reason to believe, however, that the mines will not be abandoned but that the owners hope to get some of their money back by "farming" out claims to Koreans, who with their primitive methods and low expenses can still work them at a profit.

Mr. Yu Bong-ku who was appointed some time ago to confer with the Japanese authorities with regard to various lots of ground near Ping Yang and Wiju required by them for military purposes was reported to have returned to Seoul on Aug. 19th without having completed his mission. It was surmised that his return had some connection with the recent troubles at Ping Yang.

According to a report from Ping Yang said the News of Aug. 19th, it appears that when, several days ago, Japanese officials went to stake out the grounds recently acquired in that place for military purposes people about to be evicted offered some resistance. A fight, similar to the melee which recently occurred in Seoul then took place, the Japanese using firearms and the populace retaliating with stones. It is further reported, adds our contemporary, that in consequence of this Mr. Yi Sungjai, the acting Governor, has gone into hiding.

Aug. 18th being the anniversary of the establishment of the Il-chin hoi society these people had a great meeting to congratulate themselves. After handing oratorical bouquets to each other, they formed themselves into a procession and paraded the city. This was, in our opinion, says the News, a tactical error, as, seen "en masse" they create an even profounder impression of dirtiness and unintellectuality than they do when encountered in batches of six or seven.

CHINA.

The Chinese Government is said to have determined to re-establish a naval school. A number of students are to be sent to Japan for instruction, and it is said that Japanese teachers will be employed at the school. In the days of the great Li Chung-tang a large and prosperous naval college existed at Tientsin, mainly under German professors, and it undoubtedly turned out many competent men, who were drafted for service in the ships of the then highly-thought-of Peiyang Squadron. But after the death of the gallant Admiral Ting and the surrender of the remnants of his fleet at Wei-hai-wei,

China ceased to have anything that could be justly called a navy, and the once famous Shui-shih Hsueh-tang dwindled to a very insignificant affair, its foreign staff being limited to a professor of mathematics, navigation, a professor of engineering and an instructor of gymnastics. There must be in China many naval men who received good training at the old college, for only a few years have passed since the Yalu and Wei-hai-wei extinguished the Peiyang Squadron. Perhaps some of these will be employed in the newly expanded institution, but no evident impression is to have a staff made up of Japanese. Many people had expected that the energetic and enlightened Yuan would take up this question of fortifying his country with a navy. It must be a question of years, but if China can supply the funds, the Japanese will soon construct an efficient personnel. This question of personnel recalls an incident vividly illustrates the confidence inspired in the Chinese navy of 1894 in the latest foreign experts. Just three days before the sinking of the steamer Kowshing, the wife of this note was conversing with a British Admiral who had just inspected the Peiyang Squadron off Taku. The Admiral's clear and unequivocal opinion was that the Chinese would prove more than a match for the Japanese at sea; in fact, that the Japanese would not be "in it."

Yunnan appears to be the scene of a terrible disturbance. A mob rising is said to have resulted in the assassination of less than twenty-two French missionaries. The exact locality is not stated. This seems to be one of the periodical anti-foreign and anti-christian ebullitions which have become indelible features of China's modern history. The riot will be quelled, and stern vengeance will be exacted, but will the cause of the trouble be removed?

Tieh liang, Vice-President of the Board of War, has been appointed to the post of President. This Manchu official is an associated member of the Army Reorganization Council and being affiliated with the supporters of Viceroy Yuan, his appointment will tend to strengthen the already strong hands of the latter.

Long telegrams are reaching Tokyo in China with reference to the movement of boycotting American goods, but it is difficult to understand clearly what is going on. What seems plain, however, is that the Authorities are endeavouring to put an end to the agitation, though probably they are not acting in a very determined manner whereas the promoters of the boycott are showing much resolution. We read of a sum of 200,000 taels being put up to assist Chinese merchants who may be unduly distressed by the operation of the boycott. We read also of a resolution taken by the Shanghai (Chinese) Chamber of Commerce in the sense that any one breaking the boycott shall be liable to a fine of two thousand taels. It is tolerably certain that this movement cannot be carried much further without displaying illegal development, and any rate, violating the spirit of the treaty of commerce. At that stage the Powers will unite to interfere. There is evident some anxiety as to the attitude Japan will assume in the event of such union.

A strike of some magnitude is rumoured on the part of the labouring classes at Amoy. The trouble is said to be connected with the custom house officials. These officials have been obliged to remain away from the ices, as to attend them would have involved facing a furious mob. There are symptoms of the trouble spreading to Swatow. All business is said to be suspended at Amoy.

A Peking telegram to the North China Daily News, dated August 19th, says:—The Chinese Government is borrowing a further sum of 7,000,000 francs (£508,000) from Belgian capitalists, for railway extension, and the agreement has been signed. With regard to the rearmament for the Tientsin-Chinkiang Railway, asked by Great Britain and Germany, the answer in accordance with the petition of the people of Shantung province, has communicated the British Minister its desire to cancel the rearmament, to which the British Minister replied that that was impossible, while the German Minister, after telegraphing urgently to his own Government, is doing his best through the Governor of Tsingtao, to suppress the opposition in Shantung.

No Shanghai dog may land in Hongkong for months from Aug. 11th.

A new tower 58 feet high is being built for the new Island Light, Hongkong, and from next year the light will be visible for 18 miles.

Sheng Kung-pao, the great railway man of China, is once more basking in the sunshine of imperial favour to judge by the following report of audience which appears in a contemporary:—

His Excellency Sheng Kung-pao had a special audience on the 13th instant of her Imperial Majesty the Empress Dowager who, after asking some questions about the Lu-Han and the Shanghai-Nanking railways, turned the conversation on his Excellency's health. "Well, how is your health now?" "The day was that since his arrival his Excellency was glad to say that his health had greatly improved. Why do you live in a temple?" (Sheng Kung-pao is been stopping in the Fahua-shih Temple, near Forbidden City). "Find a large house and send your family to come up and live here. We'll then be able to command your presence before us often as we please." His Excellency thereupon bowed and thanked her Majesty for her graciousness. After a pause the Empress Dowager asked a curious question—"Oh, by the way," said her Majesty, "Wu Ting-fang advises me to become a vegetarian for the rest of my life. What is your opinion; will vegetarianism be good for my health?" To this Sheng replied: "Although vegetarianism may have its advantages, still, in my noble opinion it is not suitable for any one oppressed with the weight of years." Her Majesty nodded, said she agreed with his Excellency. Finally, losing the audience, and as his Excellency was king out of the Presence, her Majesty said: "You have greatly pleased us at this audience."

Atang, the place where the Chinese Viceroy of Tibet, H. E. Feng Chuan, was ordered last spring, has been taken by the British troops, who thrice defeated the Tibetans, led by Lamas, before Patang could be captured. General Ma is in command of the victorious troops.

We find in our senior Shanghai contemporary a king telegram, dated August 21, which says it is believed that a commencement will be made with the Changchiakou (Kalgan)-Kulon railway before or at the same time as the opening of the Peking-Changchiakou railway. It is noticeable that Russia will object to the new building the above-mentioned line, but H. E. Yuan Shih-kai is urging earnestly on the Chinese Government that there is no valid objection against the scheme being carried out.

The Hongkong papers tell a story of an incident a few days ago which was a remarkable case of answer to prayer. A Chinese woman in great distress went into a joss-house in Hongkong to pray the gods to restore some clothing which had been stolen from her house. A Chinese man heard her praying, went up to her, and said—"Come with me," and took her to the station, where she found her clothes, which she had been arrested that morning on suspicion that he had stolen them.

At West York, an iron barque of 722 tons gross, bound from Hongkong to Borneo in ballast, was wrecked on the way down on Palawan, and the Captain and nine of the crew are reported to be on shore, in a desperate condition, depending on rain to save them from dying of thirst.

It has been understood for some little time that the China Traders' Insurance Co., Ltd., was to be amalgamated with the Union Insurance Society of Canton, says the N. C. Daily News. In their Share Report of the 10th inst. Messrs. J. A. Sullivan & Co., write, under the heading "China Traders":—"We are credibly informed that the old name, after the amalgamation, will not disappear, but that the company will formally pass under the management of the Union Insurance Society of Canton, who will assume control and direction of the China Traders' business, and arrangements will be made to pay off the present staff of the company in a liberal manner."

Coolies are being prosecuted in Hongkong for putting up boycott posters.

Up to August 22nd there had been 282 plague cases in Hongkong this year, of which 266 were fatal.

It is reported that the Hongkong Cotton Co. is about to declare a dividend of 10 per cent., and carry a large sum to reserve.

Mr. Wu Kwan-kien, the Director of Studies at Nanyang College, has been appointed to the High Commission which is proceeding abroad, presided over by Duke Tsai and their Excellencies Hsu Shi-chang, Tuan Fang, and Tai Hung-tse. The selection of men like Mr. Wu, who have been educated abroad and are already "persona grata" in foreign countries, shows, says the N. C. Daily News, that an earnest endeavour is being made to benefit China, and augurs well for the success of the mission.

It is reported from Peking that certain Belgians in company with a couple of Chinese are now in the capital trying to obtain permission from the Shanghai and Waiwupu to construct a railway between Shanghai and Changsha, the capital of Hunan province. The syndicate claim to have large sums at their command to begin operations without loss of time if permission is granted them.

The present boycott, remarks a Shanghai contemporary, fairly revels in absurdities and inconsistencies, such as the prohibition of the use of Canadian lumber because its technical name is Oregon pine. A most striking instance, however, is found in the case that is now occupying the Mixed Court. A Mr. King is sued for damages because he is alleged to have endeavoured to enforce the boycott on Chang Su Ho's Gardens on the ground that the manager was an American, and he employs for his defence an American lawyer. Of course the boycott committee must now boycott Mr. King in his turn. By-the-by, the attitude of the magistrate, as reported, does not look as if the officials here are very earnest in their opposition to the boycott.

A Peking official now in Shanghai says that the Waiwupu demand from the U. S. Government that the following three clauses shall be inserted in the proposed new Exclusion Treaty, viz:—(a) that the policy of excluding Chinese labourers from entering the Hawaiian and Philippine Islands be waived; (b) that Chinese entering the United States shall be given the same favourable treatment as those of any other nationality entering that country, and that Chinese shall not suffer the indignity of being confined in wooden sheds or huts, like criminals; and (c) that Chinese immigrants shall be permitted to engage the services of legal representatives to conduct their cases, and that power of appeal to the higher Courts against the decision of the lower Courts be also granted should said decisions be considered unjust. Mr. Rockhill, the U.S. Minister at Peking, is said to have refused to entertain these demands.

According to the Nanfangpao Prince Pu Lun, who went to the St. Louis Exposition last year as Chief Commissioner on behalf of China, has begged their Majesties to allow him to go to Germany to study military tactics, and his request has been favourably entertained. The same paper is also authority for the statement that under present arrangements their Majesties may attend the autumn manoeuvres of the Peiyang forces. They are to be divided into three Army Corps; the Senior, or Centre Corps being under the immediate command of H. E. Yuan Shih-k'ai, Viceroy of Chihli and Imperial High Commissioner in chief command of the Peiyang land and naval forces; the second, or Left Corps, under H. E. Tieh Liang, President of the Board of War; and the third, or Right Corps, under H. E. Hsu Shih-ch'ang, Grand Councillor and Vice-President of the Board of Revenue. With reference to the above statement of the Nanfangpao the appointment of a Vice-President of the Board of Revenue to the command of an Army Corps may seem an anomaly to an outsider, says the N. C. Daily News, but we may state that H. E. Hsu Shih-ch'ang, prior to his promotion to the Board of Revenue, held the rank of a Military Deputy Lieutenant-Governor and the post of Senior Adviser on Military Affairs to the High Commissioners of the Army Reorganisation Department, which therefore makes him eligible to the command of an Army Corps, which, by the way, has been evolved through the work of the Reorganisation Department, of which he used to hold the post of Chief Adviser. As, however, his Excellency expects to go abroad about the middle of next month and the manoeuvres do not take place until October, it is probable that some one else will have to be appointed to command the Right, or Third Army Corps on that occasion. Finally, according to news received from the North, Viceroy Yuan Shih-k'ai intends to inaugurate this, the first Grand Army manoeuvres in the history of China's reorganised forces, with great pomp and circumstance, and special éclat will be given to them by the presence of their Imperial Majesties, who will be accompanied by most of the princes, nobles, and high Ministers of State whilst, also, the foreign Powers will be represented there in the person of a large portion of Corps Diplomatique. It is quite probable that Prince Ching will take supreme command on the occasion, being President of the Army Reorganisation Department.

H. E. Chang Te-yi, Chinese Minister to the Court of St. James, has lately written to the Central Government that as his term of office of three years is about to expire he is extremely anxious that his successor be appointed as soon as possible owing to the bad state of his health. In view of this, ignoring his previous refusal of the post, the Waiwupu has forwarded an Imperial Rescript to India to his Excellency Tang Shao-yi, Imperial High Commissioner to reorganise Tibet, in which his Excellency is commanded to leave India without further delay for London to take over H. E. Chang Te-yi's post and continue the negotiations regarding the Younghusband Treaty at the British capital. Under the circumstances, there does not seem any way whereby H. E. Tang Shao-yi can get himself excused from going to London as the next Chinese Minister to the Court of St. James. As a matter of fact, remarks the writer of Native Notes in the North China Daily News, to those who understand the workings of Chinese officialdom it is quite apparent that his appointment to London as Chang Te-yi's successor is "Irish promotion," since with the rank of an Imperial High Commissioner, plus the brevet grade of Fu Tu-tung or Military Deputy Lieutenant-Governor, which makes the holder of the rank an officer of the Second grade, Class A, Tang Shao-yi stands on a level with the Governor of a province, whereas a Chinese Minister of the First Class accredited to any of the Great Powers usually bears a brevet 4th Metropolitan rank, making him eligible at most for a Provincial Judgeship. One can then easily sympathise with H. E. Tang Shao-yi's dislike to his new appointment. Unless the Chinese Government increases the official standing of its representatives at the capitals of the Great Powers and raises them to the rank of Ambassadors, making them eligible to the Governorship of a province, we shall continue to see men of ability and high rank constantly refusing posts abroad.

MR. GEORGE KENNAN'S DESCRIPTION OF THE BATTLE IN THE SEA OF JAPAN.

In the Outlook for July 29th Mr. George Kennan has a highly interesting article on "The Destruction of the Baltic Fleet." As to the condition of the battle-ship Orel and the nature of the projectiles fired by the Japanese as well as their effects, he says this:—

At first sight the big Russian vessel looked like an old naval derelict which had been picked up at sea and towed into port. Her bottom, so far as it could be seen through the clear water of the bay, was incrustated with barnacles and green with the slime of submarine tropical vegetation; her sides, along the belt of heavy armor just above the water-line, were spotted with patches of rust where the black paint had been knocked or scraped off by the impact of shells; in the upper part of her hull, above the armor belt on the port side, there were three or four yawning chasms big enough to take in a wheelbarrow; both of her masts had been partly cut through by large projectiles; one of her yellow funnels had lost its top, while the other had a hole in it as big as a nail-keg; two large steam cutters, which she carried on chocks amidships, had been riddled and smashed by large shrapnel bullets and shells; her foretopmast yard had been partly cut from the slings and hung across the mast at an angle of forty-five degrees; and what little running rigging she carried aloft had been so torn to pieces by fragments of shells that it dangled from the spars in swaying ends and tatters.

But the injuries visible from the outside of the ship were not so striking nor so impressive to the imagination as the destruction that was everywhere apparent when we climbed a rope ladder to the upper decks and walked through the cabins, mess-rooms, turrets, and barbettes. The superstructure of the big vessel had been struck by forty-three large-calibre projectiles and perhaps as many more of smaller size, and there was hardly a square yard of surface, inside or out that did not show damage. One of the huge twelve-inch guns on the port side of the forward turret had been broken short off about eight feet from the muzzle; a big perpendicular seam, or crack, had been made in one of the six-inch gun turrets, and the solid mass of steel at one side of this seam had been driven five inches out of place; two or three of the quick-firing guns in the lateral barbettes had been broken off, smashed, or dismounted, and in one place the inner steel wall of such a barbette was almost literally plastered with blood and small, half-dry fragments of human flesh.

So far as I could discover, the heavy armor of the turrets and of the hull just above the water-line had not been pierced; but through the thinner walls of the higher superstructure, through the port-holes of the cabins and mess-rooms, and through the embrasures of the small, lateral barbettes, shells had come in everywhere, and the destruction that they had wrought in the interior of the hull almost baffles description. The general appearance of the ship seemed to indicate that the Japanese in this engagement used three kinds of projectiles, viz., (1) pointed, armor-piercing solid shot of eight-inch to twelve-inch calibre; (2) shells of all sizes loaded with Shimose powder; and (3) heavy shells in which a bursting charge of Shimose was surrounded by concentric layers of very large shrapnel bullets, weighing about three ounces each. The projectiles that caused most damage to the Orel were numbers 2 and 3—Shimose shells and Shimose shrapnel. The explosive energy of the composition known to the Japanese as "Shimose" is about equal to that of blasting gelatine, and when it is fired by detonation, it tears its iron casing, not into a few large fragments, but into hundreds of small pieces, which range in weight from three or four pounds down to as many grains. I saw splinters at Maizuru that were hardly larger than the paring of a thumbnail. These small fragments of iron fly in every direction with almost inconceivable velocity, find their way in at every crack, crevice, or loophole of a ship's defensive armor, and pierce, or cut to pieces not only iron partition walls and decks, but speaking-tubes, electric wires, and every other medium of sending orders or transmitting power that is not protected by a heavy covering of steel. I hesitate to say how many holes, dents, bruises, and abrasions had been made in the superstructure of the Orel by fragments of these shells, but think I do not exaggerate when I estimate the number at a thousand. Some were holes in partition walls that were big enough to put one's fist through, some were dents four inches wide and two inches deep in iron plates, and some were merely scratches and scars such as would be caused by a handful of nickel coins fired out of an old-fashioned blunderbuss. One iron wall in the superstructure, which had a superficial area of only eighty or a hundred square feet, had been pierced, dented, or abraded in at least fifty places. Nearly all of the officers of the Orel were disabled by shell splinters of this kind. One of them had six wounds; another fourteen, and I have a photograph of a Russian sailor who had been hit by one hundred and thirty small fragments of a single shell. I lay particular stress upon the destructive power of these Shimose shells, partly because it impressed me more than anything else that I saw on the Orel, and partly because these projectiles were among the more important of the secondary agencies that brought about the destruction of the Baltic fleet. When every shell that burst inside a ship or on her deck sets fire to everything that will burn and at the same time throws hundreds of small fragments in every direction, cutting, piercing, or smashing steam-pipes, speaking-tubes, electric wires, secondary engines, dynamos, ammunition channels, hoisting apparatus, gangway ladders, spars, rigging, and signal halyards, it becomes almost impossible to navigate the ship or work her guns, even though she be perfectly seaworthy. When the Orel surrendered, her belt of heavy armor had not been pierced; her main turrets had not been seriously injured; she had received no shots below the water-line; she had not been torpedoed, and her engines were intact; but sixteen deck officers out of eighteen had been killed or wounded; she had been on fire three times; and her thinly protected superstructure, outside of the turrets, was a chaos of smashed and tangled wreckage. She was seaworthy, but she could not fight.

Any naval power that attempts to cope with Japan must give the officers and gunners of its battle-ships better and more adequate protection from Shimose shell fragments than was afforded by the conning-tower, turrets, and barbettes of the Orel. The observation-slit of the latter's conning-tower was big enough to take in a 15-inch shell, and a Shimose projectile, of any size, bursting on or near the edge of it, would inevitably fill the tower with iron splinters, and might kill or disable every officer in that most important and vital part of the ship. The embrasures of the turrets, too, were very imperfectly shielded, and many officers were wounded by shell fragments that came in along the barrels of the guns. I am not a naval architect, and I do not know whether it is possible to protect embrasures and port-holes in such a way as to prevent splinters from coming in, and, at the same time, allow the officers and gunners to look out; but there certainly can be no good reason for having an opening eighteen inches wide in a heavily armored conning-tower. In a fight lasting half a day, the Japanese are likely to hit such a tower two or three times at a range of four miles, and a large Shimose shell, bursting against one edge of the observation-slit in the conning-tower of the flag-ship, might kill the commanding admiral and all of his assistants, and so derange the whole plan of battle. Something of this kind seems to have happened on the Kniaz Suvaroff, where Admiral Rojestvensky and many of his officers were disabled by shell splinters in the first two hours of the engagement.

We quote also the concluding page of the article, which is not the least interesting part:—

The reasons assigned by the Russian officers for their disastrous defeat are, briefly, as follows:

1. Insufficient information with regard to the whereabouts and disposition of Admiral Togo's ships.
2. The superior speed of the Japanese vessels, which enabled them to take the positions that were most advantageous, and to fight, throughout the engagements, at ranges of their own choosing. The Russian ships had been cleaned as well as it was possible to clean them without docking facilities, but their bottoms were still foul, and not one of them could make anything like its record speed.
3. The surprising and extraordinary accuracy of the Japanese gun-fire at long ranges. This, the officers of the Orel think, was the decisive factor in the contest. They agree in stating that their ships were overwhelmed and defeated by gun-fire long before a torpedo-boat was brought into action. The Kniaz Suvaroff, the Oslabya, the Alexander III, the Borodino, the Sissoi Veliki, the Admiral Oushakoff, the Sviatana, the Navarin, and the Orel were all disabled, primarily, by shells. Some of them were struck asternward by torpedoes, and finally sank as the direct and immediate result of the torpedo attack; but they had virtually been put out of action by gun-fire before the torpedo-boats appeared.

"At a distance of four miles," said Lieutenant X—, "the Japanese gunners seemed to hit us with almost every shot that they fired, and if you've been through the Orel, you know what they did to us. Our men had not had practice enough to shoot accurately at such ranges. We hoped that we might be able to crowd Togo's ships up toward the land on the Japan side of the strait, and so get nearer to them; but they were too fast for us. They circled around ahead of us, and knocked us to pieces at such long ranges that we were barely able to see them through the mist."

The officers of the Orel admit that the Japanese torpedo-boats rendered good service on the night of the 27th after the Russian formation had been broken, but they insist that torpedoes played a wholly subordinate and secondary part in the engagement, that Rojestvensky would have been defeated even there had been no torpedo-boats or destroyers in Togo's fleet. "We were smashed, set on fire, and finally disabled," they say, "by projectiles which, from the beginning at least, were fired at very long ranges—ranges over which our gunners could do little or no execution. The Japanese torpedo practice is a rule, was not good. They made hits only when they were close up to disabled ships."

4. The extraordinary efficiency and destructiveness of shells loaded with Shimose powder. I have already described the effects produced by these shells, and need only add here that the officers of the Orel fully confirmed my judgment with regard to them. They attribute the disabling of their ships largely to the explosive peculiarities of the projectiles.

5. The amount of interior woodwork in the Russian ships—particularly the battle-ships—the presence of coal in bags on their decks, the thing combustible was set on fire by the shells, and the conflagrations that ensued distracted the crews, distracted their attention from their proper work, and sometimes enshrouded the ships in such dense clouds of smoke that the officers and gunners could see nothing whatever of the enemy. "We suffered less from this cause than some of the other ships did," said Lieutenant X—, "because we had less woodwork, but even on the Orel the fire seemed to burn, down to the very paint, in the first stage of the battle the Kniaz Suvaroff appeared to be burning, with a clear flame, from one end to the other."

6. The neutral gray paint of the Japanese ships, which, in the gray mist that hung over the sea on the 27th, made them almost invisible at distances of three and four miles. The Russian battleships were painted black.

Finally, the Russian officers attribute their defeat in general to good judgment and great skill on the Japanese side. "Looking at it from their point of view," said Lieutenant X—, "it would be hard to imagine a better-planned or better-fought battle."

THE DOSHI KISHA CLUB.

This association, which consists mainly of junior members of the staff of the Osaka Press, held a meeting on the 30th inst. for the purpose of publicly expressing sympathy with Professor Tomizu, whose excellent and outspokenness with regard to the war recently led to his removal from his professorial chair in the University. While the meeting was collecting its idea news arrived of the conclusion of peace and it appeared to the present more appropriate to express an opinion about this all-important matter. There was talk of making arrangements to receive Baron Komura with funeral rites at his return to Tokyo, but the meeting then adopted a resolution declaring that the subject of the war had been forgotten and the honour of the empire tarnished. Such a signal failure must be held to disqualify the present Cabinet for continuance in office.

In this last clause of the resolution it was heard a note which will probably grow loud. It will be taken up by certain Progress leaders and sounded for all it is worth. Perhaps it will ultimately prove the death knell of a Ministry which in truth has no hopes she could have entertained two years ago.

The wearing of foreign decorations being forbidden to British subjects without special permission, the French Government, which offer Mr. Porter, British Consul in Antananarivo, some recognition of the loyalty he has displayed in his relations with the French representatives in Madagascar, presented him with a piece of Sevres porcelain. The presentation was marked by a good deal of ceremony. The French notabilities in Antananarivo and the high official resident in the capital were present, and M. Lepreux, the Acting Governor-General, presided.

NOTES ON CURRENT EVENTS.

The quotations on the London Exchange show that a pessimistic feeling prevailed on the London Exchange on the 22nd August and that it was replaced by optimism on the following day:—

JAPANESE STOCKS, 22ND, LONDON.

4 per cent.....	£87 15s. od....	Fall 15s.
War-bonds 5 per cents....	102 1s. 8d. ...	do 5s. 1d.
Five per cents.....	103 2s. 1d. ...	do 5s. 1d.
First Issue 6 per cents....	103 15s. od....	do 5s.
Second Issue 6 per cents....	102 15s. od....	do 5s.
First Issue 4½ per cents....	92 os. od. ...	do 15s.

JAPANESE STOCKS, 23RD LONDON.

4 per cent.....	£88 15s. od....	Rise £1.
War-bonds 5 per cents....	102 1s. 8d. ...	No change.
Five per cents.....	103 7s. 2d. ...	Rise 5s. 1d.
First Issue 6 per cents....	103 15s. od....	unchanged.
Second Issue 6 per cents....	103 os. od. ...	Rise 5s.
First Issue 4½ per cents....	92 17s. 6d....	do 17s. 6d.

Similar quotations in New York were:—

JAPANESE STOCKS, 22ND.

First Issue 6 per cents....	£103 11s. 3d....	Fall 7s. 6d.
Second do	102 2s. 6d....	do 7s. 6d.
First Issue 4½ per cents....	92 2s. 6d....	do 10s. od.
Second do	91 7s. 6d....	do 12s. 6d.

JAPANESE STOCKS, 23RD.

First Issue 6 per cents....	£103 15s. 9d....	Rise 2s. 6d.
Second do	102 7s. 6d....	do 5s. od.
First Issue 4½ per cents....	92 12s. 6d....	do 10s. od.
Second do	91 10s. 6d....	do 2s. 6d.

The Berlin quotations were:—

22nd inst. 4½ per cent....	£93 os. od....	Fall £1 os. od.
23rd " "	93 13s. 9d....	Rise 13s. 9d.

Russian securities also fell on the 22nd and rose on the 23rd but the fluctuations were small.

Concerning naval cadets, the Nichi Nichi notes with much satisfaction the marked increase of candidates in that branch during the past few years. The figures for the current year have not yet been published, but those for the 5 years ended 1904 were as follow:—

1900	1,422 candidates
1901	1,704 "
1902	1,920 "
1903	1,915 "
1904	2,326 "

The process of selection to which candidates are subjected is very severe. Thus out of the 2,326 who presented themselves in 1904, there were vacancies for 183 only, in other words, 12 out of every 13 were rejected. The medical test resulted in the rejection of 52, and 199 did not present themselves for inspection. Therefore 1,175 ought to have entered the examination hall to compete for 83 vacancies, but 40 did not attend, so that 11 competitors were reduced finally to 1,135. Two hundred and sixty-three failed to qualify in algebra, 395 in plane trigonometry and 27 in English, leaving 349 after these arduous tests, and out of these the best 83 were taken. Good material ought to be assured for the navy by such competition. It appears that Kyushu furnishes the largest contingent of candidates, Tokyo comes next and Saga (Hizen) third. With regard to places of education, the public schools are the most successful: 20 per cent. of their candidates gained admission; schools officially sanctioned stood second with a ratio of 13 per cent.; private schools were third, having only 8½ per cent. and domestic education failed altogether.

There is now staying at Wright's Hotel, Yokohama, says the Fiji Shimpō, a Russian named M. Grevnisky (?). He was on board the Australia at the time of her capture in Avacha Bay and he arrived in Vladivostok on the 19th, where he was released. He says that the Australia belonged to the Kamchatka Trading Company and that having been chartered by the Russian Government to examine and report upon the state of affairs in the Sea of Okhotsk and on the shores of Kamchatka, she left San Francisco on the 25th of May and reached Petropavlovsk on the 27th of June. Thereafter she made some visits to other neighbouring places and returned to Petropavlovsk where she was lying when, on the 13th of August, the Japanese ships Asuma (?) and Suma entered and bombarded the place, destroying the Government offices but not causing any loss of life. The Australia was not carrying any contraband, but of course her employment on official business made her liable to confiscation. M. Grevnisky expresses himself entirely satisfied with the treatment he received at Japanese hands. He speaks of the seizure of another vessel, the Montana (2,500 tons), also the property of the Kamchatka Trading Company. She was captured at the Commander Islands.

Capt. and Mrs. Bougouin, with Miss and Mr. Strange, left Yokohama on Saturday morning in the M.M. mail steamer Armand Behic. Among the large number of French residents who assembled to see them off were the French Minister, the French naval attaché, and the French Consul. Mrs. Bougouin was the recipient of some lovely flowers.

A telegram to the Hochi from London says that eight German steamers are now engaged unloading 3,500 tons of coal at Sevastopol. This fuel was to have been used by the Baltic Fleet. The telegram goes on to say that in view of the conings and goings and the losses of steamers chartered by Russia in the capacity of colliers, Rojestvensky's coal cost something like 550 yen per ton.

Speaking before the Royal Institute of Public Health on July 20, Sir James Crichton Browne, President of the Preventive Medicine Section, read a paper on "The Prevention of Senility." Sir James, in the course of his address, said that it is a good working hypothesis that the natural life of man is 100 years. Every man was entitled to a century of life, and every woman to a century and a little more, for women lived longer than men. Every child should be brought up impressed with the obligation of living to 100 and taught to avoid the irregularities of living which tended to prevent the attainment of this laudable ambition. Life was frequently prolonged to 100 years, for centenarians were not the rarest aces they were supposed to be. It was certain that a century of life could be attained in health and vigour, and we were justified in holding that, given favourable conditions and barring accidents, this was the normal duration of man's life. It was the end to which, if we guided our foot-steps aright, an ever increasing number of men and women arrived. If old age was to be attained, however, a good start in life must be given, and hence the importance of the questions of infant feeding and milk supply. Regular employment must be secured and poverty diminished, and as to alcohol, while he would indulge in no general condemnation of it, there could be no doubt that an excess of alcohol made men old before their time. The example of the American hustler must be abandoned, too, if we were to lower our death rate and promote old age; we must return to a life of simplicity and tranquillity.

It is stated that a Japanese sealing vessel, the Domei Maru, has been seized by a Japanese man-of-war at Seal Island. The former was poaching seals and had over 700 pelts on board, which, together with her implements, were taken possession of.

The protests entered in the case of the following ships and their cargoes of coal for Vladivostok have been over-ruled, and the vessels are finally confiscated:—

Ship.	Nationality.	Tonnage.	Cargo.
Rosalie	British...	4,370...	6,462 tons Cardiff coal.
Redington	do ...	4,421...	do
Oakley	do ...	3,798...	5,893 do
Easy	do ...	2,963...	4,500 do
Venus	do ...	3,558...	5,200 do
Aphrodite	do ...	3,949...	5,600 do
Harberton	do ...	3,256...	4,900 do
Tacoma	American	2,812...	?

Total steamers ...29,127...39,050

Of course the loss of these steamers falls entirely on Russia, except in so far as she had insured them at war risks in England or America.

Mr. Teramoto, a Buddhist priest of the Shin sect, has succeeded in reaching Lassa. Mr. Nomikwan's sad fate was recently recorded and Mr. Kawaguchi, who originally succeeded in reaching the sacred city, is now said to be on the Indian frontier, awaiting an opportunity to repeat his exploit. Mr. Teramoto has returned to Darjeeling. He spent 10 years preparing for his attempt, and his first expedition proved a failure. We shall doubtless have some interesting particulars by and by, though Tibet has lost much of its mysterious glamour.

London wires to the Hochi Shimbun that Admiral Nebogatoff and all his subordinate officers who were parties to the surrender at the Liancourt Rocks, have been deprived of their commissions in the Russian Navy. This must be taken to mean that their duty was to sink their vessels rather than hand them over to the enemy. Perhaps such an alternative would have been possible in the case of the Orel and the Nikolai I, where the crews were not in a state of virtual mutiny. But would it have been possible in the case of the Apraxin and the Seniavine? Rojestvensky says that the men on board the two latter ships were mutinous and would not fight. Then it is most unlikely that they would have consented to the sinking of the vessels. There were no Kingston valves in the old fashioned man-of-war, and no one thought it a crime on the part of a captain to surrender when he was fairly beaten. But the world is coming to endorse the Japanese theory.

A member of the crew of the steamer Australia, which is now in Yokosuka, says (Kokumin) that on the occasion of their recent visit to that place the Japanese landed four boat's crew and that a fight ensued, the issue being that a part of the town was destroyed. Nothing has been said of these events officially so far as the public knows.

A curious incident is related to have occurred in connexion with the import of Japanese fans into Bombay. A number of the fans were found to be decorated with pictures of the holy places of Medina, Mecca and Bagdad. So soon as this had been ascertained the Mohammedans of Bombay took steps to buy up all the fans, regarding them as sacrilegious, and having thus averted the danger of their falling into the hands of followers of other religions, they then addressed to the local authorities a document bearing 300 signatures, in which they begged that steps might be taken to prevent any further importation of such fans. The matter was brought to the notice of the Japanese Consul, and he has asked the Foreign Office in Tokyo to warn the fan-merchants against sending to India goods which must tend to injure Japanese trade.

Tairen has now been completely thrown open to Japanese ships. It was already open with certain restrictions, the chief of which was that no ship of less than 1,000 tons might enter, and that she must have come either direct from Japan or via Korean ports. This rule was evidently inspired by considerations of military expediency. It is now abolished, and any Japanese ship coming by any route whatever will have free access to the port. But she must be a Japanese ship, commanded and manned by Japanese subjects, unless she is engaged on some special duty and has obtained special sanction.

It is notable that in spite of the strongly pessimistic feeling which prevailed in Tokyo on Monday, the shares of the Stock Exchange were quoted higher when the market closed than when it opened. The figure in the forenoon for October delivery was 218.20, but in the afternoon the quotation was 221. These stock-exchange shares are very sensitive. Looking back over the list of August quotations, we find that the figure on August 1st was 257 yen, from which point it fell to 220.20 on the 14th, thereafter fluctuating comparatively little for two days but leaping up to 228 on the evening of the 16th. The closing price on the 22nd was 245, at which time rumours were rife that peace was in sight. That belief continued until the afternoon of the 24th when the shares dropped suddenly to 238. Their greatest fall, however, was on the 28th. On the evening of the 26th (Saturday) the closing price had been 239, and on the morning of the 28th (Monday) the opening figure was 218.70, a fall of 20.30 yen in 48 hours. Dabbling in these shares must be an exciting pastime. The Nippon Yusen Kaisha shares fell, between Saturday and Monday, from 93.20 to 91.70. Their quotation on the 1st of August had been 96.80.

According to the Ohio State Journal, there is "something doing" in Chicago. The Journal says that a Chicago newspaper publishes the following interesting catalogue of events transpiring in the city by the lake:—

- A death every fifteen minutes.
- A birth every eight minutes and twenty-seven seconds.
- A murder every seventy hours.
- A suicide every eighteen hours.
- A serious accident, necessitating nurse's or physician's care, every four minutes.
- A fatal accident every five minutes.
- A case of assault and battery every twenty-six minutes.
- A burglary every three hours.
- A hold-up every six hours.
- A disturbance of the peace, to attract attention, every six seconds.
- A larceny every twenty minutes.
- An arrest every seven minutes and thirty seconds.
- A fire every hour.
- An arrest for drunkenness every fifteen minutes.
- A marriage every twenty minutes.
- A case for the coroner every three hours.
- A new building completed every one hour and fifteen minutes.
- A railroad passenger train arrives every fifty-six seconds.
- Sixty passengers, suburban and through, arrive every second at railway stations.
- Seventeen thousand gallons of water a minute pass through the 1,900 miles of city water mains.

The weather obstinately refuses to give promise of completely clearing up. There is a centre of depression near Formosa. It invaded that island on the 28th and caused heavy storm and rain. This unwelcome visitor is now moving in a direction which would carry it across China and away from Japan, but it may at any moment change its mind and head for these islands. If it departs without attacking us, there is just a possibility of a spell of fine weather, but the meteorological authorities are not very hopeful. They expect that other depressions will follow.

It is stated that, according to official returns, the number of Russian naval prisoners from the Battle of the Sea of Japan, totals 6,009, when all those that have been released for various reasons are deducted from the total. Among them are 257 commissioned officers and 115 warrant officers.

PRINCE AND PRINCESS ARISUGAWA ARRIVE HOME.

Their Imperial Highnesses Prince and Princess Arisugawa arrived home on Saturday from their trip to Europe.

THE RECEPTION AT KOBE.

The German mail steamer Preussen, with these distinguished passengers on board arrived at Kobe on Wednesday evening. According to the Kobe Herald the arrival of the vessel off Wada Point was signalled at 8.45 by the firing of a gun. Governor Hattori, the British and German Consuls, Mr. Ota (President of the Municipal Council), Mr. Okada (Deputy Mayor), and Mr. Delacamp thereupon put off in the Water Police steam launch Hongo to welcome their Highnesses. A boat with a band on board proceeded towards the Preussen at the same time, letting off fireworks on the way, but unfortunately both these craft missed the Preussen, which arrived in the Harbour at 9.30, while the launches were still in search of her. The Prince and Princess at once landed at the American Hatoba, where they were received by Mrs. Hattori, Miss Nagai, Mrs. Tsurumi, a number of members of the Ladies' Patriotic Association, Mr. Nagai, Chief Secretary of the Governor, Mr. Shimojio, the Prefectural Inspector of Education, Mr. Kishimoto, Superintendent of the Chamber of Commerce, Mr. Ikegami, Chief Public Prosecutor, Mr. Tamaru, Chief of the Chiho Saiban-sho, and many other officials. After greeting those present and cordially shaking hands with Mr. Hunter Sharp, the American Consul, their Highnesses proceeded to the Otowa Kwadan, Hiogo, in a carriage specially provided by the Prefectural Government. The Ladies' Patriotic Association presented the Prince and Princess with baskets of flowers and fruit, and a basket of flowers was also presented to the Princess on behalf of the German Consulate. Governor Hattori subsequently called on their Highnesses at the Kwadan.

AT YOKOHAMA.

The steamer Preussen, with their Imperial Highnesses on board, anchored at the Quarantine ship on Saturday morning, having been escorted from off Kannonsaki by two torpedo-boats of the Yokosuka Naval Station. The vessel was fully dressed and flew at the fore the Prince's flag. The stay at the quarantine station extended to about an hour and about 10.30 the Preussen started for the harbour. As she steamed in the warships Takao and Fuso, which were also fully dressed and were lying outside, fired a salute of twenty-one guns and frequent day fire-works were displayed from the Customs grounds. Governor Suifu and various high officials of the Imperial Household had gone off in three steam launches to the steamer as she lay at quarantine. About 10.50 the Preussen was alongside the pier and Prince Arisugawa who was joined a few minutes later by the Princess, received a considerable number of distinguished people who had assembled to welcome them. Among those present were Their Highnesses' two children—Prince Tanehito, who is now studying at the Edajima Naval College, the uniform of which he wore, and Prince Miye, who was beautifully attired in a purple crepe kimono, with a pattern of iris shibori, an obi of cha-iro or tea colour; Prince Tokugawa, Marquis Mayeda, Marquis Ito, Admiral Inouye, Commander-in-Chief of the Yokosuka Naval Station; Mr. Tanaka, Minister of the Imperial Household; Mr. Nagasaki, Mr. Masudaira, and Mr. Niwa, the three Masters of Ceremonies; Mr. Hanabusa, Lord High Steward of Prince Arisugawa's Household; Mr. Minagawa, Superintendent of Yokohama Customs; Mr. Tsuchi, Secretary of Kanagawa Kencho, Mr. Watanabe and Mr. Kobayashi, President and Chief Public Prosecutor respectively of the Yokohama District Court, and members of the Diplomatic Corps and the Consular Body.

The Prince wore the white undress uniform of his naval rank, admiral, and the Princess charmingly dressed in white.

At 11.15 the Imperial couple, followed by their children and a very large number of nobles, left the ship and walked along the Pier where carriages were waiting at the Customs Examination Office. Here they entered a carriage, accompanied by the young Prince and Princess, and drove through Honcho-dori without stopping to the Railway Station, which they left by a special train at 11.30 for Tokyo. The street along which they passed was decorated with flags.

There was an abundance of music at the Pier in the bands of the Nippon Red Cross Society and of the Yokosuka Naval Station being reinforced by bands of the Preussen.

Prince and Princess Arisugawa who returned on Saturday from Europe proceeded on the following day to the Palace and had an audience of the Emperor.

THE CHINESE BOYCOTT.

A Shanghai telegram to the Kohoku says:—The Viceroy of Nanking has given orders to Shanghai Taotai to prevent any action threatening the American-Chinese trade.

According to the Asahi, a foreign Consul at Shanghai recently had an interview with the Taotai in connexion with the anti-American movement of the native traders. At the meeting, the Taotai said he was about to issue a notification prohibiting the boycott and advising the natives to resume business with the Americans. The correspondent of the Japanese paper adds, however, that the Taotai is quite incompetent to subdue the vigorous measures of the natives. Consequently, it would seem that he is unable to interfere in the affair.

It is reported by Tokyo journals that when the American steamer from Yokohama recently arrived at Shanghai, the cargo coolies who had formerly been employed in landing and shipping cargo refused to work on her and the ship had to importations of her cargo at Hongkong and Shanghai. She did not ship any cargo at Shanghai.

Mr. Chang Li-tuck, an official of the Tientsin Government office, has arrived in Shanghai with instructions from the Peking Department of Commerce to stop the anti-American agitation. He is conducting negotiations with native merchants.

YOKOHAMA AND TOKYO FOREIGN RESIDENTS' ASSOCIATION FOR THE RELIEF OF SUFFERERS BY THE WAR.

The Committee beg to acknowledge with receipt of the following sums:—

Amount already acknowledged	344.50
N. V. T. S.	100.00
Offeratories of Christ Church	100.00
James S. de Benneville	100.00
Anonymous	100.00
Offeratories of Christ Church	100.00
Offeratories of Christ Church	100.00
James S. de Benneville	100.00

Yokohama, August 30th, 1905.

MONTHLY SUMMARY OF JAPANESE LITERATURE.

It will readily be conceived that the recovery of Saghalien—kwafuku is the term now habitually used in preference to "conquest" or "occupation"—has occupied a large share of attention in literary circles. Historical, geographical, topographical and ethnological essays have been published in considerable number, but the information they contain is, on the whole, second-hand. There have been, however, some interesting references to the name of the island. Dr. Otsuki (author of the "Genkai" dictionary), says that in olden times the inhabitants of the island carried to Soya for purposes of trade with the people of Matsumaye brocades and lapis-lazuli beads which they had obtained from Manchuria. As these itinerant traders wore the Tartar garb they were called "Kara-futo" by the Matsumaye folk, "Kara" being the term generally applied to the Chinese and "futo" being the local pronunciation of "hito" (man). The brocade they brought came to be known as "Yezo-nishiki," though Yezo was only its place of import, a method of vicarious nomenclature for which there are many precedents. The blue beads (awodama) similarly, although their original provenance was Manchuria, were called "Kara-futo-ama." They were not really lapis-lazuli, but only paste imitations, and being honeycombed with little holes, they were commonly spoken of as mushi-no-su (insects' nests). A farther-fetched explanation of the term "Kara-futo," is this: the borignes of the island spoke of anything blocking the flow of water as "Kari"; they called a marsh "to" and they spoken of obstructing as "bu." Regarding then the Gulf of Tartary as a marsh and the Soya Strait as the avenue for its water's eastward exit, the big island on the north the Strait assumed in their eyes the character of an immense dam hemming in the outflow of the marsh, and they called it "Kaributo," a name subsequently corrupted into "Kara-futo." These stories do not by any means exhaust the catalogue. Thus we read that in the aboriginal cabulary Kara stood for "brocade" and futo "big"; and that, again, Kara was the general name applied by the Japanese to "foreigner," while in the language of the northern regions futo signified "river's mouth," which two words being joined, without respect for their original diversity of language, produced the hybrid compound Kara-futo, or "foreign river's mouth," the word in question being thus designated because it faced the embouchure of the Amur. Rin Shihei writes in the "Sangoku Tsūran," that there is a country called "Kara-futo" northward of Yezo and that its original name was "Tarai-kai" or "arai," its inhabitants being called "Taraeka." Dutch map published in 1858 supports this element for it gives "Tarai-kai" as an alternative name for the island. Concerning the name "Saghalien" it is stated that in the language of Tartary word "Saghalien-ura" means "black river" which name the Amur was called (the Chinese name is "Heilung-Kiang" which signifies "the black-dragon river"). Hence the island lying opposite the mouth of the Amur was called "Saghalien-ura-anga-bata" (mountain at the mouth of the black river), which cumbersome appellation was abbreviated by Westerners into "Saghalien." Geographers allege that Saghalien was originally united to the continent by a narrow isthmus, a condition credited by European cartographers down to a comparatively late date.

All this indicates how keenly Japanese literatures are interesting themselves in the story of this island now restored to their country. They are something to say also about the changes of nomenclature effected since Saghalien's invasion. Mr. Okabe Seichi, writing in the Yomiuri Shimbun, observes that while it is very well in its to assign to certain places names commemorating the men historically connected with them, the wholesale application of such a name without expert reference is reliable. Thus the two well-known capes of Notoro and Shiretoko have been designated "Kondō" and "Jūzō" respectively after the celebrated man who first in the days of the Bakufu explored Chishima. But Kondō Jūzō never visited Karafuto. The book which made him famous (Henryō-bunkai-zukō) was in truth compiled from foreign publications, and was not the result of his own travels. The first actual explorer of Karafuto was Mogami Tsunenori; the next, Mamiya Rinsō, and after him came Suzuki Shigenawo, Matzoura Takeshirō and others. It was Mamiya who by actual observation proved the place to be an island not a peninsula. Another questionable choice was that which re-named Cape Terpenia "Kataoka-zaki." The Russian appellation "Terpenia" may have been objectionable but why not retain the better known term "Cape Patience"; or, if that too seemed undesirable, why not go back to the old name "Shin-shiretoko," especially as Admiral Kataoka had never been at the place, and to call it "Ito Cape" or "Yamagata Cape" would have been just as appropriate. In a word, Professor Okabe's view is that the best plan would have been to abolish all the Russian names and restore the ancient nomenclature, giving pure Japanese names to such places only as Alexandrofska, Nikolaiefska, Korsakoff and so forth. He approves the good judgment which adopted the ancient appellation "Taiwan" for Formosa; and which, while abolishing the Russian "Dalny," substituted merely the Japanese pronunciation (Tai'en) of the original name "Talien." Historical geographers can not endorse these reckless changes made in Saghalien. The Nippon fully supports Professor Okabe's criticism.

Those of our readers who frequent Japan society or take note of its phases are aware that there has been of late a marked revival of seventeenth-century fashions. At first the evidences of this disposition were limited to the costumes of dancing girls on special occasions, but gradually the fancy took root. Pictorial postal-cards and photographs showing the new style came to be sold in large numbers, and by and by, a society calling itself the Genroku Kenkyū-kai (Genroku Investigation Society) was formed. To understand this term it is necessary to know that Genroku is the name of the era (1688-1703) when these revived fashions had their first vogue. They are assuredly very beautiful and picturesque fashions, notable above all for an element of piquancy not often seen in modern costumes or coiffures, and the sensation created by their revival finds expression in current literature. Mr. Fukuchi Genichiro has delivered a lecture on the subject to the new society mentioned above. Mr. Fukuchi, as many of our readers know, was once editor of the Nichi Nichi Shinbun, at which period of his career he gained a perennial reputation as a litterateur. Then he disappeared for a time from public observation and was next heard of in connexion with a movement to modernize the Japanese stage. He is a profound student of his country's history, manners and customs. The gist of his lecture was this:—The Genroku era saw the beginning of a decline of bushidō. What until then had been understood as a bushi was a man of virtuous heart who made the acquisition of military arts and sciences a duty and who had the fullest respect for manners and discipline. It can not be said that this kind of person was in the ascendant in the Genroku era. From the days of the Taishō until those of Iyeyasu every encouragement was given to bushidō. But from the time of the third Shōgun there was a decline in this respect, and the Genroku epoch witnessed the advent of the decadent bushi. Dazai Shundai, the celebrated scholar of that epoch, records this fact, and there is no room to doubt that after the death of Iyemitsu (the third Tokugawa Shōgun) bushidō entered a period of decay. Of course there were publicists who sought to revive and encourage the old institution. We recall in this context the names of Kumazawa Banzai, Itō Jinsai, Arai Hakuseki, the great strategist Yamaga Sokō and the poet Bashō. All these made their debut in the Genroku era. But the Forty-seven Ronin can not be called a product of that era. They were rather the last remnant of the bushidō which had survived since the Kan'ei time. Many changes marked this decadence. For example, the fashion of the bushi's armour was altered as were also the style and decoration of his weapons. His sword became an ornament rather than a weapon, light, narrow-bladed and comparatively ineffective. Turning to art and art artizanship, it is seen that the era was marked by skill of detail and by prettiness but that grandeur and strength were wanting. This is seen in architecture: the mausoleum of the fourth Shōgun at Shiba, Zojoji, is scarcely worth looking at. In the realm of the tea clubs, too, elegance became excessive from the time of the third Shōgun. It was for this reason that Kobori Yenshū, whose methods differed essentially from those of his predecessors, became the fourth Shōgun's instructor in this art, but Yenshū himself having fallen into the fashions of his time, Matsumura Chinshin appeared upon the scene. These men, too, were but relics of the former bushidō. They could not arrest the growing taste for the elegant and the pretty. It found expression in all the furniture and art-objects of the time, notably in lacquer ware. The sum of the matter is that the Genroku era witnessed no real development except in the realm of learning. Liberty of education and scholastic emulation were features of the time, but otherwise the tendency was in the direction of luxury.

Such are Mr. Fukuchi's views. They are controverted, however, by the ethnological scholar, Torii Ryūzō. His survey of the history of the Japanese people shows him that in every region of their civilization foreign influence may be traced, and that development along purely Japanese lines is perceptible only from the epochs of the Taira and the Minamoto (Kamakura) to that of the Tokugawa, and in the latter the Genroku era is conspicuous. For the rest, Japanese ideals were derived largely from China, from Korea and from India, just as now-a-days they are moulded on Occidental models. Going back even as far as the Nara and Heian epochs, we find only the civilization of the Chinese or of Chino-Japanese off-spring. The sole period of true Japanese originality began with the Heike (Taira) and culminated in Genroku. Then indeed are found many manifestations of pure Japanese inspiration alike in the domains of religion, of learning, of fine art and of art industries. The student of Japanese genius must direct his attention to that time. There are critics who condemn the Genroku era as an age of sybaritism but that is a narrow view. The people of the present day offer a practical remonstrance. They show their appreciation of the costumes and ornaments of that era and they are right, for without the Genroku developments Japan's retrospect would not include any civilization of her own.

These are eminent authorities, Mr. Fukuchi and Mr. Torii. It appears to us that they are both right and that their difference is one of stand-point only.

To this context belongs a series of articles appearing in the Keizai Zasshi (Economist). The writer recalls how the expression Gwa-shin shōtan (sleeping upon faggots and toiling to exhaustion) and Kinken chōchiku (industry and economy) were on every one's lips at the outbreak of the war and up to the autumn of last year. But since the battle of Liaoyang and the fall of Port Arthur, above all since the great fight at Mukden, and since the newspapers have had nothing to announce except Japanese victories, there seems to have been a reaction. It is illustrated by erotic post-cards, by the popularity of Genroku costumes and by the growing adornment of school-girls' garments. The Genroku dance has made its way to Kyoto and Osaka and a rival has now sprung up in the form of the Momoyama dance. One is reminded of the story of the opening of Hokkaido when women, wine and gambling were supposed to be essential for the solace of settlers in undeveloped regions. Official regulations for preventing the export of loose women to foreign countries are supposed to be very strict, yet the traffic goes on secretly all the same. Numbers have found their way to Mukden, to Port Arthur and to Yingkow. Recent returns show that at Chinnampo in Korea last April there were 90 restaurants, 69 miscellaneous goods stores, 58 carpenters, 52 geisha and 45 dansuses. At Pyongyang the dansuses topped the list with 98 and next came carpenters with 78. Apparently this class of women follow wherever Japanese go. The record looks bad both at home and abroad. Some excuse may be made in the case of the earliest colonists in foreign lands, but the fact is that, unlike the English, Japanese colonists do not take their families with them. Their idea is not to settle permanently in the new country but only to make some money there and get back to Japan. All this shows that the system of Japanese colonization is still undeveloped, and speaks ill for the character of a people who have just gained such successes in war. The Japanese colonist seems to resemble the French in these respects, and it should be the aim of the authorities to restrain the exit of mere adventurers who do not intend to settle but only dream of making one lucrative coup. Folks talk of getting possession of the Maritime Province as a condition of peace or of renting a portion of Manchuria, but if they do themselves so little credit in the places to which they already have access, what hope is there that they will ever achieve such results as England has accomplished in Egypt? The police are making strenuous efforts to exercise wholesome control and the Mayor of Tokyo has warned the citizens to be careful what they send to the soldiers at the front, but these restraints and counsels can avail little unless the people themselves awake to the necessity of remedial measures.

* * *

The great question of the future of Japanese pictorial art, a question which has occupied much attention during the past 35 years, is discussed by the well-known painter Mr. Koyama Shōtarō in the "Proceedings of the Japanese Fine Arts Society." "How can the old pictorial art of Japan be developed?" and "Should foreign methods be introduced and naturalized in Japan?"—these two questions Mr. Koyama answers in the affirmative. Some contend that if foreign methods be introduced into Japan, the art of this country will perish. But that is an idle fear; a misconception. For example, oil-painting is said to have had its origin in Italy or Holland, and to have been thence exported to all lands of the West, yet there resulted an unequivocally different style in each country. France and England are separated by only a narrow strait, nevertheless one can distinguish between a French painting and an English at a glance. Japan, again, borrowed her pictorial art from Korea and China yet her independence is distinct. Japanese scenery and Japanese customs are so special that European art, if introduced here, would soon reflect its environment. The efforts that Japanese painters are making now to develop their art are all vain. It is the Japanese artist who is destroying Japanese art; it is the foreigner who is developing it. What are the grounds of this statement? They become apparent if we analyse the various classes of men who now devote themselves to studying this question. They are, first, the old-time school. These would keep ancient methods inviolate. They are merely representatives of the past. What they advocate is not originality but imitation. There can be no progress in the ateliers of this school. Diametrically opposed to them are the second class of men, the progressists. These would blot out the past altogether and rely solely on their own inventive genius. They would ignore all that the centuries have taught and would create a new knowledge in one generation. Can such a thing be possible. In the third class stand the philosophers. These would construct fine art in accordance with philosophic principles. Mr. Okakura of the Bijutsu-in belonged originally to this school and so did Professor Fenollosa. Their idea was to manufacture artists after their own fancy. First fix the principles of philosophy and then follow them in painting. Was ever such a thing heard of? Would it not result in absolute sameness? A hundred artists, a thousand artists, would all work alike. There would be no development. Genius has always followed its own aims. Thus it is that the world has been enriched with many and various chefs-d'œuvre. The public heard much for a moment about the "Fine Arts Academy" (Bijutsu-in) and the "Fine Arts School" (Bijutsu Gakko), but their founders fell into a groove and have never emerged from it. The Fine Arts School adopted Fenollosa's creed and by painting in obedience to it entered a false route, where now only those that have no original force remain. Art can not thus progress. The fourth class consists of the eclectics, who would take and combine the best features of foreign art and Japanese art. For example, there is no law of perspective in Japanese art, therefore they would borrow this from foreign art; there is no chiaroscuro in Japanese art, therefore they would import it from abroad. Then they lay down the principle of faithfulness to nature, which involves the study of anatomy in order that an artist may be able to represent human bodies, and thus they proceed until finally they reach foreign art pure and simple. Japanese art would perish and in order to achieve that lamentable result, 15 or 20 years would have been spent in reaching foreign art by a round-about route whereas from 3 to 5 years' earnest study might have reached it direct. The fifth class consists of the idealists. These assert that Occidentals photograph nature whereas they themselves aim at transferring sublime ideas to canvas. But who is responsible for the dictum that Western painters are photographers? There could not be any greater misconception. Occidental pictures are without exception ideal. But idealism must have a basis of correctness. That is essential. One must have clear perceptions in order to evoke clear ideals. From that point of view photography is imperative. Take, for example, the case of a man living among mountains who has never seen the sea or a ship, and suppose that such a person is required to depict the horrors of a shipwreck. Could he do it? A very strange affair would his painting be. Thus if photographic accuracy is regarded as a desideratum at the outset in the ateliers of the Occident, it is not because photographic accuracy is the painter's goal but in order that he may have an exact basis for his ideas. Photographic accuracy is the means; idealism is the end. These five classes of theorists labour in vain. They it is, say Japanese artists, who threaten to compass the destruction of Japanese art. Among foreigners, on the contrary, there are men who study Japanese art. They have not yet achieved success but they are on the way. Some are seeking to develop the potentialities of line alone as the Japanese have done. Others are experimenting without outlines at all but with masses of different shades of sepia (the bokkotsu-gumi of Japan), a process by which some lofty ideas have been pictorially expressed. It may end in the transfer of Japanese art excellences to foreigners. What route of study should be followed, then, in order to develop Japanese painting? Mr. Koyama does not apprehend any great difficulty. He maps out an eminently practical course. Thus the pictures of the Tōsa School are unparalleled for softness, wealth and accuracy of colouring. This feature should be diligently studied for a period of from 3 to 5 years so that it may be utilized for the purposes of modern genre pictures. Then turning to the Southern Chinese School we find an extraordinarily restful and lofty method of depicting nature's tints, a method the outcome of long practice. This too should be studied during 3 or 4 years for the purposes of Japanese landscape painting. The Shijo School reproduced Japanese scenery but its productions show no knowledge of the Chinese law of natural tints. Looking next at the Kano School's pictures of figures we find the folds of drapery depicted with strong thick lines showing great power of brush. The subjects chosen being mostly Arhats or mythical beings, these pictures have not much attraction now, but if this style of linear drawing be carefully studied for 5 or 6 years and then applied to historical pictures, the result would be excellent. In Japanese religious pictures, again, we find lines singularly beautiful, delicate and withal firm, which have excited the admiration of foreign artists. Could these be employed in depicting modern female subjects they would be thoroughly suitable. Utamarō's delightful genre pictures seem to indicate that he had studied this quality in religious paintings. Such a course as the above is outlined by Mr. Koyama the simplest route to art development. He promises to discuss hereafter the way to major development.

* * *

Professor Yamada Ichirō contributes to Taiyō a long essay on the Russo-Japanese War and the Great Powers. Speaking of Japan's position prior to the war with Russia, he divides by dividing international law into 3 periods, the first it applied to Europe only; in the second it was extended to America; and in the third owing to the inclusion of Japan, it became international law of the civilized world. Japan's position towards international law is divisible into three periods. The first lasted from 1854 to 1899. During this period she was a framer of international law but a follower. The second period commenced after the war with China, the abolition of the extraterritorial system and the framing of treaties of equality. But this equality did not imply equality of initiative such as Europe and America enjoy. Japan had still to render mute obedience to existing international law. This is shown by the fact that at the International Law Conference of 1900 the delegates of Greece and Italy maintained that international law belonged to Christian countries. The North-China Treaty of 1900 did much to win for Japan the status of a great Far-Eastern Power, but did not enable her to be called a Great Power from the point of international law. This last result was for the first time achieved by the Russo-Japanese war. Such an achievement is almost unique in winning national independence, and its recognition must be earnestly sought by Japan. If we assign 10 as the measure of the world's power wielded originally by the six Great Powers of Europe, it may be said that the rise of the American Republic took away 2½ from Europe and that Japan's sudden ascendancy in Asia means the loss of a further 1½. This remains the figure of 6 to Europe, and it is divided among the six States in the following proportion:—England 2; Germany 1½; France 1½; Russia, Austria and Italy ½ each. Japan's rise has now become a Great Power in Asia, and by any means occupy a situation analogous to that held by the United States in the American continent. There are Japanese who say that a country should follow the example of the United States so as to raise it to a status in Asia equal to that occupied by the United States in the American continent; that the Orient should be for Orientals and so forth. Nothing of the kind is possible. Even within the boundaries of her neighbour, China, there is a German Korea. The three States which compelled her to sign the Liaotung ten years ago, were induced to do so because Japan's sudden elevation threatened to destroy the balance of power in East Asia. Probably there are countries to day which would like to repeat that kind of interference. The Anglo-Japanese alliance puts it out of the question, as the figures given above indicate. The time has passed when the European Powers could impose their will upon the world, and questions will in future be decided by the United States, America and Japan in combination. Japan's business is to see to it that she does not forfeit the opportunities created for her as a result of this glorious war.

* * *

Dr. Kato, whose philosophical views are already pretty familiar to our readers, writes in columns of the Kyōiku Kōhō on the social evolution as applied to the case of nations. In general and Japan and Russia in particular, a doctor thinks that the struggle for existence goes on among countries as among individuals, and that the law of natural selection governs them equally, the fittest surviving, the unfit perishing. Thus a country that is duly adapted to its surroundings lives and one that is not. States that made a business of swallowing up other States were the "fit" of old times, but are no longer so. Russia seems to belong to this category and Japan is happily apart from it. These times differ from the era of Peter the Great.

Facilities of communication have brought countries close together and peace is the order of the day, whereas formerly war was a normal incident and aggression a legitimate occupation. Now-a-days the interests of countries are so closely connected that trespass upon the rights or interests of one affects all and becomes intolerable. But Russia has not appreciated this. She belongs to the epoch of international pillage and is not fit for survival. Her attempt to annex Manchuria signified not only the theft of another State's possessions, but also the closing of the commercial door in the face of the world and the uttering of freedom of faith. In her eyes the interests of other countries had no place. Therefore the world sympathised with Japan, who represents non-aggression and the open door. Russia's system of government is equally obsolete: her despotic Sovereign, her corrupt oligarchy, her oppressed people, her consequent inability to make a united effort, her defective education—all these things are out of touch with the spirit of the age. According to the law of evolution Russia would have been defeated as she has been defeated and Japan should have been victorious as she has been victorious. Probably if proximate causes be catalogued education would head the list. After the Franco-Prussian war Moltke turned thanks to the school-teachers of Germany. Japan's gratitude should be addressed to the same quarter.

* * *

Count Okuma, who has the happy knack of ways making his utterances vivid, contributes the Kokumin Hyoron a remarkable article on Militarism and the rise and fall of States. His intent purpose is to avert the danger of the nation falling down and warshipping armed force the sequel of the war with Russia. The voice of the cannon at Uraga, he writes, woke Japan from her sleep. She set herself to adopt the civilization of Europe and America, and even went so far as to contemplate the complete rebuilding of the national life on Occidental lines. While she was thus engaged she suffered all the while from pressure at the hands of her surroundings. Her treaties with the outer world placed her in an inferior position and when she had gained something from China and the Great Powers of Europe compelled her to give it back in the fair name of the Orient's peace, whereafter they proceeded to take it for themselves. The people bore it all for a time, but at last, no longer able to endure Russian aggression, they drew their swords and achieved a victory which is in part the outcome of the progress made during the past 30 years. In part the outcome of the spirit of bushido nurtured during the past seven centuries. On the other hand the population of the empire has grown rapidly and the national wealth has increased six-fold or seven-fold. Yet compared to European and American development Japan's has been a mere bagatelle. Here then it has been demonstrated that whereas military success is easy to achieve, intellectual progress and the development of wealth are very difficult to compass. On the other hand the successes achieved by military force are hard to preserve. Germany, for example, has accomplished military success and her intellectual and material development has been great. Yet according to a worthy German authority, the German officer now the flower of society and in his own person enjoys all its favour and its honour. The sequence is that he paints and powders his face, wears a corset to refine his figure and goes to the extreme of personal adornment. Japan now broken the Russian strength and wiped the insult she suffered ten years ago, but are there no symptoms that she is getting drunk with success? Let her look abroad for recent examples. People talk as though bushido were the origin of the country's warlike movements. That is extremely foolish. The spirit of bushido is not without good qualities but it is not unduly would be merely to resuscitate the spirit of the feudal age. Violence is the rule of bushido, and on violence it has been nurtured. Out of touch with civilization. In the days of the Kamakura regime when to take by force was virtually the law of the time and when armed disputes were the pursuit of the upper classes, bushido was born and grew up. It is opposed to the spirit of the Japanese polity, for its development took place pari passu with the decline of the Imperial authority, and excepting Kusunoki Masahige and his son, Japanese bushi who earnestly and unflinchingly devoted themselves to the Imperial cause were few indeed. To-day Japan has entered the comity of competitive nations. If she imagines that the sources of a nation's advancement do not lie in civilization but are to be sought in the remnants of feudal ideas, and if she relies on armed victories which encourage militarism and vitiate popular sentiment, she will be injuring her own progress and sowing the seeds of national decay.

THE YOUNG PEOPLE AND MISSIONS.

[WRITTEN FOR THE "JAPAN MAIL" BY DAVID S. SPENCER.]

The readers of the Japan Mail occasionally ask or suggest that the missionary spirit is dying out of the Church in America, and the inference is that as American Christianity is dying, there is no inducement to the non-Christians of Japan, China or other lands to turn from their idols and accept a dying faith. Let me in the briefest possible terms outline a movement which is but one of many indications that Christianity never before had so strong a hold upon the American people.

For several years religious awakenings among the young people of the churches in this country have been manifest in various forms. One of these has been crystallized into the Young People's Missionary Movement, which held a conference at Silver Bay, Lake George, July 21-30.

The place is suggestive. In order to secure a place of assembly for the rapidly developing movements among the young of all the churches, a corporation known as the Silver Bay Association was formed composed of representatives of the Y.M.C.A., the Y.W.C.A., and the Young People's Missionary Movement, and this corporation purchased the Silver Bay Hotel property on the western shore of beautiful Lake George. In the spacious hotel and adjacent cottages some 650 guests in addition to the labouring force can be well cared for. Air, water and scenery are unsurpassed. Capacious steamers bring passengers from railway stations at either end of the lake, which is some 35 miles in length. On the Association farm of some 1,400 acres, with its forest-clad hills, lakelets, ravines and natural springs, the visitor finds abundant recreation entirely removed from the heat and turmoil of the outside world, and yet within a few miles of the centres of the world's business. Here delegated conferences representing the above-named and other Christian bodies assemble one after the other during the summer months for the purpose of studying every phase under the respective movements. Take the Young People's Missionary Movement as an example. The representatives of 14 leading home and foreign mission boards head the movement, and it aims at "the Evangelization of the World in This Generation." They represent 14,000,000 Sunday School scholars and 5,000,000 of members of Young People's Societies in the United States and Canada. Six hundred and three delegates attend the present Conference. Of these 97 belong to the Baptist family, 144 to the Congregational, 28 to the Episcopal, 160 to the Methodist, and 130 to the Presbyterian, with a sprinkling of representatives from other churches. A most careful programme worked out months in advance, and covering the whole ten days of the session, provides for expert teaching upon every phase of the question of world evangelism. The speakers are picked men from all denominations and geographical localities, the brightest men in America.

In a Missionary Exhibit in charge of experts an immense object lesson is presented. Here the literature of missions, the social conditions in foreign lands, the special difficulties to be met in Christian propagation, political conditions, property laws, climate, and every phase of the subject is studied, persons long resident in these various fields being called upon to explain these subjects as they arise. Hundreds of people go away from these exhibits with entirely new ideas as to the nature of the peoples in non-Christian lands, and the requirements of preparation for such fields. This single feature is proving to be of unexpected value and far reaching import. In many instances natives of the very lands in question are present to give force and accuracy to the study.

Due attention is given to recreation as well, and every minute of the time is wisely employed in work or rest.

The delegates are the choice young men or women from the churches of the United States and Canada, and special effort is made to bring to their attention the world's need of Christ, and their obligations to make him known to men. As a result of this sort of work hundreds have been led to offer themselves for service in the foreign field, and more than 1,500 of these volunteers are now engaged in such service in distant lands.

Another result of this movement is the concentration of the thought of the church upon the various mission lands successively, and during this year some 60,000 of the best young people of the churches have been studying every phase of Japanese history and social and religious conditions. An excellent text-book prepared by Dr. De Forest has been used; more than 40,000 copies of it having been purchased by the young people. The movement has spread to England, where the same text-books and literature are being used. Next year the movement will take up Africa as a subject for study; and in this convention the leaders for hundreds of mission study classes are being thoroughly instructed in the work of organizing and teaching such classes. The movement is growing immensely, and is unlimited in its power for good.

Some features of this movement deserve special attention. It is uniting denominations together as never before for the accomplishment of the essential purposes of the gospel. It is compelling the lazy and indifferent pastors churches to inform themselves upon the great work of Christian Missions, or be left behind in essential information by the young people of their churches. It is stirring the millions of Sunday School children with new ideas and ambition for the uplifting of mankind. It is drawing to the support of the church men of financial ability who delight in this aggressive movement. One such man gave $10,000 yesterday toward the expenses for the coming year, and any sum necessary for the conduct of this great work will easily be found. "All things are possible to him that believeth" and these people are the believers.

It must be noted that, a natural consequence, scores of similar institutes or conferences are being organized all over America and Canada. Systematic preparations are being made to carry this educational programme into the Sunday Schools and young people's organizations of all this land, and the work is taking root as well in other lands. There is no telling whereunto this thing may grow.

THE LAW COURTS.

THE "KINJO" COLLISION CASE.

The owner of the steamer Kinjo Maru, which was recently sunk in the Inland Sea by collision with the British steamer Barralong, lodged a petition on Aug. 28th in the Kobe Local Court for the taking and preserving of evidence relating to the accident, as the British ship will shortly leave the port. The owner of the Japanese steamer intends to file a claim in the District Court.

BANKRUPTCY CASE.

H. Iyemura, a merchant of Osaka, lodged a petition on Aug. 29th in the Osaka District Court, against the Kita Bank, asking for a decision of bankruptcy. The purport of the plaintiff's petition is that the bank refused to repay his deposit of yen 316.

THE BOOKSHELF.

■ The Naval Pocket-Book.

Almost simultaneously with news of the death of Sir William Laird Clowes, we have to hand for review a copy of the tenth issue of "The Naval Pocket-Book," upon which he too evidently expended his latest thoughts and expiring energy. "Ill-health," he says in the preface, "has once more prevented me from completing single-handed a new edition of this little work." This well-known naval critic, historical and miscellaneous writer (created a knight in 1902) was born in London on Feb. 1st, 1856, and was educated at Aldenham; King's College, London; Lincoln's Inn; was a gold medallist of the United States Institute in 1892; Fellow of King's College, London, 1895; honorary member of the Royal United Service Institution, 1896; and an associate of the Institute of Naval Architects. He had lectured at the Royal United Service Institution; had written much over the pseudonym of "Nauticus" and had travelled and lived much abroad. His naval works included the Pocket Annual which has now reached its tenth year and "The Needs of the Navy." Of his historical writings "The Royal Navy, a History from the Earliest times to the Present" in 7 volumes, the last of which was issued in 1903, claimed most public attention. Among his works of fiction perhaps his "Cruise of the Mary Rose" was most fascinating, though "Blood is Thicker than Water," published two years later (1894), attracted considerable notice. He had been an extensive contributor to books of reference such as Brassey's and Whitaker's annuals.

The current edition of The Naval Pocket-Book is published rather later than usual, but in consequence its information is brought up to the beginning of June and thus we have a large number of events noticed under the heading of "Errata and Occurrences during Printing," including the Battle of the Japan Sea, May 27-28. In procuring and arranging his facts and figures the Editor was assisted by the leading foreign and British naval authorities, so that the contents of this little work—only relatively small, for though of pocket-book size it consists of 947 pages—may be confidently accepted as correct. There are some changes. Thus Submarines, "which last year were the subject of a special and separate section, are dealt with like other war-vessels, each country's flotilla being described in the place to which it seems most appropriately to belong." Also comparative tables, showing the respective material strength of most of the Powers, and the amount of recent naval expenditure on the part of the more important of them, have been added to the book. Among the other changes are the re-drawing in important details of the plan of the battleship King Edward VII; the substitution of 6-in for 4.7-in guns in the Barfleur and Centurion is indicated, and a plate of the new armoured cruiser Devonshire is introduced. To summarise the contents: there are a list of the navies of the world, notes on torpedoes, comparative fighting strength of the Powers, list of drydocks, personnel of leading navies, plans of ships, table for conversion of measures, trial trip tables, steam trials of foreign and British ships, and a complete index of ships by name,—surely a desirable compendium of naval knowledge.

■ The Far East.

The current number of The Far East has but four articles, but all will be found readable by persons interested in Chinese subjects. The first—"Chinese Etiquette," by F. Wilhelm—explains many points with regard to Chinese social forms and observances. Illustrations are given of the many different styles of obeisance and salutation practised by the Chinese. There is an excellent account by Franz Woas-Wiesbaden of a trip made up the River Min in 1903. Next we have "Twenty-four Examples of Filial Piety" translated from the Chinese by H. Sachse, and finally "The Bells of Mokanshan" by "S. v. F." Mokanshan is a favourite resort of foreigners some seventeen miles from Shanghai on the Whangpoo, and it is written about here and illustrated by photographs in a very appreciative fashion.

YACHTING.

The 39 Raters did not attempt any racing on Saturday, but the smaller craft got under way. Aimee, Edna, Witch and Lily started at 1.45 p.m. with hardly any wind, and it looked very unlikely that they would get round the Widow buoy course before dark. After doing little more than drift for about an hour, during which time a rather smart shower of rain came along to discourage the crews, they picked up a light south-easterly wind, and Edna got away with the lead, which she kept to the end. Coming into the harbour on the return journey, Witch was close behind the leader, and seemed likely to win on the handicap, but the wind again fell very light, and Edna crossed the line with a minute to spare.

Corrected Time.

Edna finish 5.23.53, receives 3 mins. 5.20.53
Witch 5.36.55 " 15 mins. 5.21.55
Aimee 5.44.25, scratch, 5.44.25

Lily came in some time after 6 o'clock, and was not timed. Edna takes the first prize, a pair of silver vases presented by a member, and Witch takes the second prize given by the Club.

Four boats of the Lark Class started, but Nos. 2 & 13 returned after the shower of rain, leaving the other two to complete the course. No. 11 won first prize from No. 5, the latter taking second prize.

LAWN TENNIS.

The final of the Y. C. & A. C. Doubles Handicap was played on Wednesday evening and resulted in Messrs. A. W. Read and H. W. Kilby beating Messrs. N. G. Maitland and E. Quelch. Read won the toss and elected to play with the sun and wind behind him. The players changed sides after every set. The first and second sets were won by Read and Kilby, 6-4 and 6-3 respectively, and they also led in the third set with 5-3. Maitland and Quelch here played well, however, and took the third set with a score of 8-6. The fourth set followed much the same lines, Read and Kilby leading by 4-1, their opponents then coming up till 6 all was called. Read and Kilby won the next two games, thus winning by three sets to one (6-4, 6-3, 6-8, 8-6.)

The following shows the play throughout:—

Bye	Drummond
J. E. Drummond & A. Kingdon
W. B. White & W. S. Moss	Atkinson & Messer
C. W. Atkinson & P. Messer
B. R. Berick & W. T. White (ser.) ..	Drummond & Drummond ..
J. F. Drummond & D. Drummond ..
J. A. Robertson & E. J. Cowan	Maitland & Quelch
N. G. Maitland & E. Quelch
J. M. Mollison & K. Van Smith	Read & Kilby
A. W. Read & H. W. Kilby
M. F. Stephons & H. Grimble	Stephons & Grimble ..
W. H. Ferrier & A. R. Landen
J. McClure and L. S. Hudson	McClure & Hudson
O. M. Poole and C. H. Thom.
B. C. Foster and A. E. Cooper	Foster and Cooper ..
Bye	Cooper

AMERICAN TOPICS.

The New York Graduate Association of the Theta Delta Chi Fraternity, recently sent a letter to Mrs. John Hay in which the fraternity, of which Mr. Hay was a member, offered to erect a statue in New York to perpetuate his memory. Mrs. Hay has declined the offer. President

Willis S. Paine recently received a note from Clarence L. Hay, in which he said that his mother did not think the plan wise, as it would not be in accordance with the Secretary's irrevocable rule of shunning publicity as much as possible.

Frederick L. Cutting, insurance commissioner for Massachusetts, in his annual report just made public, scores severely the methods of conducting business employed by high officials of the big insurance companies, and recommends that the Massachusetts legislature take up the matter with a view of effecting a reformation.

Destruction of mosquito larva by petroleum and the weeding out of shrubbery in moist places in and about the Long Island and New York coast resorts have almost eliminated the pest. Experiments with oil began two or three years ago appear to have been entirely successful. The sprinkling of pools with crude oil has been reinforced by systematic ditching in many places which has completely obliterated the damp spots where the mosquitoes were in former years by the million.

Beginning with September, Leslie's Monthly Magazine will be known as The American Illustrated Magazine. The magazine will continue to be published by Mr. Colver, whose connection with the publication dates from May 1, 1880, and the firm name, for fifty years the Leslie Publishing House, will become the Colver Publishing House. Most of the scores of publications long ago started by Frank Leslie have passed out of existence. After September 1, Weekly will be the only one still carrying the name.

A $3,000,000 contract has been let for double-tracking of the Canadian Pacific from William, Ont., to Lake Winnipeg. The work cost over $6,000,000. General Manager Nicoll states that the work will double the capacity of the road for the grain traffic out of Winnipeg. The company issued $19,500,000 new stock in 1902 and $16,900,000 new stock in October, 1904. It was understood at the time that the double-tracking of the Fort William line was one of the projects financed under the latter issue.

The will of the late Secretary of State Hay was filed for probate in Washington on Oct. 20, in the office of the registrar of wills. The bulk of the estate, which is said to be worth considerably more than $2,000,000, goes to his widow, Clara Stone Hay, during her life, then to be divided among the children, Helen M. Whitney; Alice Hay Wadsworth and Clara Hay, or his heirs. To Leonard Hay and his wife, Woolfolk, brother and sister respectively, the testator, are given the property at Washington and $25,000 each; to Charles Edward Hay, brother, $50,000, and to Harwood Otis Whitney of Keokuk, Iowa, $2,000. Messrs. Whitney and James Wolcott Wadsworth are named executors without bonds.

Secretary Wilson announced on July 28 that the office of chief statistician in the Agriculture Department will be temporarily abolished. The Secretary will personally perform the executive duties of chief, and in his absence these duties will be performed by the acting head of the department. The routine duties of chief statistician will be undertaken by a board composed of four or five division chiefs, with bureaus involving the collection of data. They will receive their reports from field agents and prepare crop reports for the public. Secretary Wilson can abolish the office only until Congress convenes. If an appropriation is made for the salary of chief statistician must select an official to fill the place. Wilson sends out notice that it is useless for anyone to seek the position, as no appointment will be made.

The first and only ship of the United States navy that has exceeded her contract speed in charge of a regular complement of officers and men of the navy is the armored cruiser Uranian, which arrived off Tompkinsville 12

27, having just finished her final acceptance trial. In command of Captain McLean, the Pennsylvania had on board a naval board of inspection and survey. Heavier by 800 tons than on the day of her official trial trip in November last off Capt. Ann, the cruiser for four hours maintained a speed of 22.08 knots. In November, with a displacement of 14,300 tons with picked coal and a picked crew from the works of the builders, William S. Cramp Sons, the cruiser made a record of 22.43 knots.

Savings-bank deposits in New York State showed an unprecedented increase for the twelve months ending with June 30. According to the figures given in a statement by Bank Superintendent Kilburn, the gain in deposits amounted to $36,836,855, which was over $15,500,000 in excess of the increase for the previous record year, viz., 1899. The total deposits on June 30 amounted to $1,252,928,299, and the surplus was $114,139,266, the latter an increase of over $5,500,000 as compared with the corresponding date the year before. The deposits made during the year aggregated $363,213,466, and the withdrawals totaled $17,711,472. The interest paid or credited upon deposits amounted to $41,748,434, the latter representing an increase of over $3,000,000 as compared with the interest allowed the year preceding. It is a striking story of growth that is told in these figures.

Never in the history of the Atlantic freight traffic have times been so bad as at present in Antwerp, Belgium. Never in the memory of the best shipping houses has so little freight been tried between Antwerp and American ports and there seems to be little prospect of a change. Lack of grain is said to be the cause and only hope of a restoration is to discover something that will take its place. Hundreds of ships have built their steamers expressly for the trade, with the result that there is an amazing surplus of tonnage. Steamers are lying in all directions and the sailings of what were star freight liners are being diminished. The result is one of great gravity and threatens to the ruin of many a formerly prosperous house. There were not for the immigrant traffic to America many steamship lines would have to stop their steamers altogether. Owners up to present in the Atlantic traffic are seeking solutions in the Far East for their steamers.

The showing made by the Wall Street Journal in the resources of the national and state banks and trust companies of Greater New York had used 17.6 per cent. in one year is very suggestive of the growth of that city in financial resources. The percentage of increase in resources of national banks of the United States in the time was scarcely more than 10 per cent., the percentage of increase in the resources of national banks, state banks, private banks, and banks and trust companies during the year ending June 30th, 1904, was even less. Financial power, therefore, the city of New York is growing with great rapidity, certainly more speed than its commerce and apparently even its population. Moreover, much of the growth represents investments in productive industries and the clearing of the country's commerce through the medium of international exchange.

Fifteen weeks the teamsters kept up a strike ago, and are to go back to work if they like any. There were 4,250 men thrown out of work, 2,000 are still without places, the others having secured work in other lines or trades that were not affected by strike-bound. Doing business with strike-bound houses. The strike was called on April 6. There are union teamsters in Chicago. The cost of the strike to the unions was $300,000. The cost to the strikers is $750,000. The cost of the strike to the employers is $2,100,000 and the loss of business is estimated at $12,000,000. The cost of the strike to the city is $175,000, and to the county $100,000. Persons injured by the strike number 125. To preserve peace there were 100 policemen, 1,400 specials, and 3,400 deputy sheriffs. The strike started over an attempt to hold sixteen little tailors who went out on a strike. There was at no time any question of wages or hours among the teamsters, but they went out on a sympathetic strike.

During President Harriman's visit to Cheyenne Frank Jones, the young son of Chief Clerk D. A. Jones of the mechanic's office was sent to the private car with a telegram for Superintendent McKeen. Pushing his way into the private car President Harriman, the lad said:

"Hello; I got er telegram fer McKeen."

"You mean Mr. McKeen," interposed Mr. Harriman.

"Yep, I guess so; th' head cheese'th' motive department."

Mr. Harriman smiled and took the telegram and had it sent to Mr. McKeen.

"What do you do?" he asked the lad.

"I'm one 'f th' directors 'f th' Union Pacific."

"What!" exclaimed Mr. Harriman.

"Yep, I direct envelopes over t' th' master mechanic's office," was the laconic reply, as the lad left the car. He left Mr. Harriman and the other magnates in an uproar, and the joke no doubt will follow Mr. Harriman for some time.

By a payment of $1,500,000 to the widow of the late William Ziegler, the Ziegler will contest was settled on August 1st. Justice Giegrich, in the Supreme Court, New York, signed an order authorizing Justice Gaynor, executor of the estate, to pay S. Matilda Ziegler $1,200,000 in cash and 5000 shares of Royal Baking Powder Company stock, valued at $1,300,000. William Ziegler, the fourteen-year-old adopted son of the testator, consented to this settlement, which is a release of all of Mrs. Ziegler's rights and dower and other claims against the estate of William Ziegler. The will, the validity of which this suit was a test, left to Mrs. Ziegler the use of the city and country houses of her husband and an income of $50,000 a year. The remainder of the estate was given to the adopted son. Ziegler left real estate valued at $4,000,000 and personal property estimated at $14,000,000 in New York State, and also about $900,000 in the States of New Jersey and Connecticut. Under the contested will the value of the estate left to the adopted son amounted to about $18,000,000.

The Bureau of Navigation reports 1,054 sail and steam vessels of 263,064 gross tons built in the United States and officially numbered during the year ended June 30, 1905, as follows:—

	WOOD.
	Sail.		Steam.
	No.	Gross.	No.	Gross.
Atlantic and gulf ...	317	68,962	287	11,890
Porto Rico	5	47	—	—
Pacific	23	3,530	122	10,688
Great lakes	14	191	42	862
Western rivers	—	—	168	5,766
Total	359	72,730	619	29,206

	STEEL.
	Sail.		Steam.
	No.	Gross.	No.	Gross.
Atlantic and gulf ...	3	1,773	42	56,777
Great lakes	—	—	29	102,497
Western rivers	—	—	2	81
Total	3	1,773	73	159,355

During the corresponding year ended June 30, 1904, 1,092 sail and steam vessels of 349,573 gross tons were built in the United States and officially numbered.

President Wilson, of Princeton University, announces an interesting innovation in instruction. In Collier's Weekly we read: "A committee of the alumni has assured the university of additional income exceeding $100,000 a year. This money is to be spent in adding to the Princeton faculty fifty preceptors, who are to do, apparently, what tutors do in the older British universities. That is, they will keep in constant touch with the students, as guides, advisers and testers of their learning." Less reliance than formerly is to be placed at Princeton on recitations and examinations, and more on conferences of individuals and small groups of men with their instructors. Not only the new preceptors, but the older members of the faculty are to take part in these conferences. Dr. Wilson proposes, it would seem, to have his young men taught by hand. They are not merely to be led to water. They must drink. It is a very interesting experiment in American college education, and its results will doubtless be closely watched by educators.

Graft, graft, graft! In twenty-five of the thirty-six states and territories from which the New York World has gathered reports, charges of graft have lately been or now are under investigation. Evidence of corruption has been ploughed up in the Department of Agriculture at Washington, and an evil odour about the government printing office has set the graft-hunters sniffing. The unofficial publication of the evidence taken by State Superintendent Hendricks in his inquiry into the affairs of the Equitable betrays something like an orgy of loot. "The underlying evil in the administration of our public affairs," said Mr. Charles J. Bonaparte in a blunt speech, "is simply dishonesty." There you have it—"dishonesty," old-fashioned crime; something to be killed, not by lopping off its boughs, but by digging up its roots. Are you honest? Will you accept a railroad pass if the law forbid? Will you take rebates from the railroads to help your business? Will you, as a government servant, use official information secretly to line your own pockets? Will you bribe an alderman to get a franchise? Do you waver for an instant in answering these questions? There has been a good deal of talk lately about developing a more sensitive public conscience. If we will listen with greater heed to the private conscience, the public conscience will take care of itself.—Public Opinion.

An action was instituted on July 31st by State Attorney General Julius M. Mayer in the Supreme Court of New York County in the name of the people of the State of New York against the Equitable Life Assurance Society and its officers, directors and members of the executive and financial committees, all of whom are named in the complaint. The defendants are the Equitable Life Assurance Society of the United States and the following individuals: James W. Alexander, Louis Fitzgerald, Chauncey M. Depew, Henry C. Deming, Cornelius N. Bliss, George H. Squire, Thomas J. Jordan, Charles S. Smith, Valentine P. Snyder, Alvin W. Krech, Wm. Alexander, John J. McCook, James B. Morgan, C. Ledyard Blair, Brayton Ives, Melville E. Ingalls, James H. Hyde, Alexander J. Cassatt, Jacob H. Schiff, James J. Hill, T. Jefferson Coolidge, Alfred M. Vanderbilt, John Jacob Astor, William C. Van Horne, Gage E. Tarbell, Marvin Hughitt, Chas. B. Alexander, Thomas DeWitt Cuyler, Marcellus Hartley Dodge, Joseph F. de Navarro, Bradish Johnson, Joseph P. Lowe, John A. Stewart, Edward H. Harriman, Levi P. Morton, August Belmont, Darius O. Mills, Robert T. Lincoln, George J. Gould, John Sloane, George T. Wilson, Thomas T. Eckert, Wm. H. McIntyre, Henry W. Alexander, Henry C. Frick, Samuel H. Inman, Henry C. Haarstick, David H. Moffatt, and Henry R. Winthrop.

The condemnation of the traction lines of Chicago as a method of bringing about municipal ownership has run against a stone wall. The plan advocated by Mayor Dunne and his corporation counsel, James Hamilton Lewis, on the stump in the campaign, as an alternative to an amicable purchase of the properties from street railway companies, has come to grief because of a provision in the State laws and the opposition of a determined majority of the Council. For some time it has been the belief in traction circles and in the City Hall among those not on the inside, but who are supporters of the immediate municipal ownership idea, that Mayor Dunne has experienced a change of heart since he took office and that he no longer is an advocate of condemnation as an alternative now that the traction companies have refused to name a price which he considers reasonable. It leaked out on Aug. 2nd in the City Hall that this is not the case—that Mayor Dunne is as much an advocate of condemnation as ever, but that he has met with such opposition as to completely block the way. It is said that he has this desk an opinion the Corporation Counsel on the subject and that the legal department has advised him that condemnation proceedings, unlike an ordinary lawsuit, require Council action. An ordinance directing the law department to start condemnation proceedings is necessary. This completely tied the hands of the administration, because there is no doubt in the minds of Mayor Dunne and his immediate advisers that the majority of the Council is bitterly opposed to condemnation proceedings and would defeat any ordinance adopting that policy.

It was easy to see early in the fiscal year which closed in June that the immigration record into the United States would be a notable one, says Bradstreet's. As a matter of fact the figures for the year broke all preceding records. For the first time in the history of the country the immigration passed the million mark—there having been just 1,027,421 aliens admitted during the twelve months covered. This represented an increase of over 214,000 as compared with the preceding fiscal year, and of over 170,000 over the highest number previously recorded, namely, in 1902-03. As usual, Austria-Hungary, Italy and Russia contributed the largest quota, but in the fiscal year just closed Italy dropped behind Austria-Hungary. It is needless to say that the immigration of the present time differs widely as regards racial character and affinity from that which preponderated fifty or sixty years ago, and that it has brought in its train some problems differing from those involved in the earlier movements hitherward. Students of social problems are alive to the meaning of the large figures to which we have referred, and steps are being taken to concentrate all available light upon the immigration movement and the questions bound up with it. The whole matter is to form the subject of an exhaustive discussion at the conference of the National Civic Federation in New York on December 6 and 7. In particular, inquiry will be directed to the character of the net increase in the population of the United States from immigration, and to the questions whether there are any external influences tending to stimulate the volume of immigration, and whether any changes are needed in existing legislation or methods of inspection looking to the exclusion of undesirable elements. So, also, the conference will deal with the subject of distributing immigration, paying particular attention to the nature, extent and locality of the demand for more labour in the United States; the kind of domestic industries which are most affected by the influx of alien labour; the percentage of immigration which remains in the ports of arrival, and the question what further method can be devised for improving the conditions, both of housing and employment, of alien congestion in large cities. As the result of this gathering and the general interest that will be stimulated in the subject in the meantime, there should be a notable contribution to our knowledge of immigration under modern conditions.

Many of the American newspapers have been making sarcastic remarks for some time about Senator Depew's annual "retainer" of $20,000 from the Equitable Life Assurance Society, and have been intimating that he earned his $20,000 and David B. Hill earned his $5,000 more by lobbying than by legal advice. Both these retainers were promptly cut off by Mr. Morton. A more serious tone of criticism is taken by the press, however, upon the publication of Senator Depew's testimony before Insurance Commissioner Hendricks, which was published in the New York papers of July 11 and 12. It appears from this testimony that Senator Depew was induced to lend his name to the Depew Improvement Company, which developed the town of Depew, near Buffalo; was presented with $100,000 worth of its stock and voted for a loan of $250,000 of the Equitable's money to the company, although he says: "I want to say I didn't advise the loan, and was not consulted about it at all." In 1901, the State Insurance Department appraised the property at $150,000, or $100,000 less than the Equitable's loan, and the manager of the improvement company appealed to the Senator to write to Albany for a reappraisal, which, he says, he did. Then the insurance company foreclosed on the property, and several capitalists tried to reorganize the "improvement" company and save it from the wreck. Senator Depew admits that he made some kind of an agreement to save the Equitable harmless from this bad loan, but when the counsel asked if he considered that that agreement "fixes any liability on you of any kind," the Senator replied, "As a lawyer I don't think so, and I am informed by the counsel of the receiver that it does not." The loan, with interest and expenses, now amounts to $275,000, on property appraised at $150,000. "As a trustee of millions of other people's money," remarks the Boston Transcript (Rep.), the Senator affords "a revelation which places his reputation even for sagacity in question." The Philadelphia Record (Dem.) thinks the Senator should retire not only from the Equitable directorate, but from the Senate; and the New York American (Dem.) would like to see him behind the bars. It says: "United States Senators from Oregon and Kansas are now under conviction of misdemeanours which are trivial in comparison to this colossal offence of Depew's. Is the State of New York going to let this juggler with the moneys of widows and orphans go scot-free?" The Chicago Tribune (Rep.) suggests that the Senator "hand over to the Equitable its losses by the Depew Improvement Company."

LITERARY GOSSIP.

Mr. Richard Le Gallienne's library (says the Athenaeum) has just been sold at auction in New York by the Anderson Company, the total amounting to $4,800. The collection comprised a good many presentation copies and other books with a personal interest, as well as the MSS. of several of Mr. Le Gallienne's publications. That of "The Quest of the Golden Girl" produced $155.

A perusal of the "Memoirs of Lady Fanshawe" (published by Mr. John Lane, of the Bodley Head, London, 5s.), provides the wherewithal whereby one may clothe in flesh and blood the characters who moved across the stage of English history at the time of the Civil War. Lady Fanshawe was the wife of an ardent adherent of the Stuarts, who was deep in the counsels of the first Charles, shared the long exile of that unfortunate house, and was Ambassador to Portugal and Spain in the reign of Charles II. A devoted wife, she did not shrink the privations her husband nobly endured, but wandered with him and apart from him as circumstances demanded; passed many times alone from the Continent to England on various missions, and, when happier days returned travelled with her husband to Portugal and Spain on Ambassadorial duties. It was her lot, therefore, to see much of the lives and manners of many peoples, and being a woman of discernment and judgment, her memoirs are full of facts and reflections, set down in the virile English of the period, that illuminate the history of her time. A number of quaint and valuable illustrations are a notable feature of the book. The description of the last time Lady Fanshawe saw Charles I. at Hampton Court, when her husband and she were about to sail on the King's errand to Spain, is a beautiful and pathetic scene, which sets the unhappy monarch in a light of which historians are sometimes too grudging:—

"The last time I ever saw him, when I took my leave, I could not refrain weeping. When he had saluted me, I prayed to God to preserve his Majesty with long life and happy years. He stroked me on the cheek, and said, 'Child, if God please, it shall be so, but both you and I must submit to God's will, and you know in what hands I am.' Then turning to my husband, he said, 'Be sure, Dick, to tell my son all that I have said, and deliver those letters to my wife; pray God bless her! I hope I shall do well,' and taking him in his arms, said, 'Thou has ever been an honest man, and I hope God will bless thee, and make thee a happy servant to my son, whom I have charged in my letter to continue his love, and trust to you;' adding, 'I do promise you that if ever I am restored to my dignity I will bountifully reward you both for your service and sufferings.' Thus did we part from the old king."

sun, that within a few months afterward murdered, to the grief of all Christians that forsaken by God."

In the archives of the Cabergi family there has just been brought to light a set of documents establishing the real historical basis upon which Shakespeare constructed his tragedy of "Othello." "The Moor," it is stated, was no Moor or man of colour: at a young Venetian nobleman of the Querini to which Desdemona likewise belonged marriage, in fact, was one between cousins; the tragic sequel really took place, according to these documents, in Crete, in 1542, at the Church of Saint Francis, at Candia, in Desdemona had taken refuge. This clear story afterwards transformed into a moor.

There has been some dispute as to the location of one or two houses in Paris which Hugo spent interesting periods of his life in. It will be no cavilling about the house if it died, for the simple reason that it is being torn down. The work is already in progress, a building which not more than thirty years ago was the very heart's core of the intellectual life of Paris, presents that dismal aspect of ruin inseparable from a building allowed to be demolished. The place has for years been marked by a memorial tablet which may perhaps be attached to the new premises. But it will be in memoriam only, to mark the site where once stood the last home of Victor Hugo. His house itself all vestige will have disappeared.

In some notes on the modern guide, Academy points out the growth of criticism in its pages. For example, a guide book will not describe Brussels only from the point of view, but will give information on dental advantages. In the old days, and one famous editor deprecated such. He says that he "Will not insist upon the salubrity of the beauty of the scenery, the pleasantness of the climate, and the cheapness of the provisions; but too much of an Englishman not to feel that the last particular no country can give to a native land. He laments the manner in which now seems to rage, and be convinced that, if an Englishman in dissolute constitution and the society of a nation, he seek for happiness in any other region."

Mr. Justin M'Carthy, in his preface of the five volumes in which Messrs. Windus have just issued Macaulay's History of England, makes the noteworthy statement that the publishers intend to follow these in the same form and type, of his volumes on the Reign of Queen Anne, on the Reign of George the Fourth, and of William IV., and on the History of Our Own Times--thus affording the public, in convenient form and at a low price, a sequential chronicle of our history, from the fall of the Stuarts to the present day. Mr. M'Carthy claims for Macaulay as the author of the virtue--which few of his detractors are disposed to be his--of possessing an interesting and instructive method; and hopes that in this new series he may claim to be not unworthy of association with his predecessor. No one acquainted with Mr. M'Carthy's animated narrations will doubt him this assurance; and the historical works published in the "St. Martin's Library" will bear him out. It is to be hoped that he is to bear so important a part, with a good deal of confidence in the success of the "Macaulay" is a charming prospect. The edition on fine paper, printed in clear type, and bound in chocolate-tinted cloth with gold backs,

Much has been written about the immorality and charm of Court life during Stuart reigns, but, says the Advertiser, seem to realise sufficiently the immensity of power of work which passed within those days. It is, for instance, regarding the naïve confessions and gossip of his diary, to forget the untiring energy of a man who, during the time of the Commonwealth alone all the business of the State who, during a life of sustained work that is little short of marvellous, found time to commit so many folios, and to repent of them, in his own cypher, "by candle-light at four o'clock in the morning."

Another volume of the "Regions of the World" series, published by the Oxford University Press, will be ready immediately. This is "The Far East" by Mr. Archibald Little, who in the course of a lifelong residence in the East has become personally acquainted with the bulk of the countries described, China as a whole and its dependencies; Manchuria, Mongolia, Turkestan, and Tibet; Indo-China, Korea, Siam and Japan. There are nine coloured maps in the volume, and upwards of forty other illustrations.

Two classics, long associated by editorial custom, appear in the pretty form of Messrs. Newnes's Pocket Classics, the latest addition to which "The Poems of Gray and Collins." This charming little book has a decorative design by Mr. Edmund Sullivan, in which the portraits of the two poets are happily combined in what is a noble frontispiece. In the same series Messrs. Newnes issue "Songs and Lyrics from the Dramatists 1533-1777," a collection that embraces the earliest dramatists, Nicholas Udall and Bishop Wilton, the Elizabethans, the Restoration men, and the eighteenth century, Farquhar, and Sheridan. It is a most fascinating anthology, with not a little that is not new to everybody, and nothing that ought not to be in it.

The sacred literature of the Chinese, we are told by M. Emile Bard, is completely free from religious ideas. M. Bard has published a book of the Chinese people, which appears in English under the title "Chinese Life in Town and Country." From this we quote the following sentences: "It must be stated, to the honour of the Chinese, that no people, ancient or modern, possessed a sacred literature more completely exempt from licentious ideas, and that at no time has their worship been associated with human sacrifices similar to those of the Greeks. The traces may be found in the history of every nation. This vitalizing purity is perhaps the reason for the prolonged existence of the Chinese in the order of things."

SOME CHARMING LETTERS.

Among the surprises of the London publishing season this year has been a collection of letters written in the opening of the nineteenth century by Philippine von Griesheim, a young girl belonging to the old Thuringian nobility. On the occasion of the betrothal of her elder sister, in 1804, Philippine made the acquaintance of Countess Auguste von Münchhausen, and a correspondence began between the maidens which was to last for ten fateful years in the history of the German nation as well as in the lives of these two girls.

For nearly a century the letters, seventy in number, which Philippine von Griesheim wrote to her friend, lay in the family archives of the Münchhausens, valued as a record of the early life of a lady who gained the greatest distinction in the course of her long life. Two years ago, however, a granddaughter, coming by chance to these documents, was so impressed by the charm and charm as well as the historic interest of that she obtained permission to prepare for publication. The result is the present volume, wherein is told as charming and touching a story as has ever been put into letters, and at the same time gives a strangely vivid picture of the years preceding and following the French Revolution. The German title is "Briefe einer Thuringerin." Herausgegeben von Edith Freiin von Münchhausen. Beginning with merely girlish chatter, the letters soon develop into virile pictures of life interspersed with thrilling accounts of the Napoleonic wars as they affected the life of the girl and of those nearest and dearest to her. The opposition of her parents she became acquainted with at a young age, Albert von Wedel, her lover, whose period of their happiness was very brief, died before they were married. The eleven other officers who were shot at Wesel in 1809 by Napoleon's order for no greater crime than that of valiantly fighting for their unhappy country. For some time the poor girl was absolutely crushed, but gradually her simple faith reassured itself, and she writes that this blow also is dealt in love by a Father who knows better than His creatures what is best for them. She takes up the burden of life, gently and patiently, and with her sympathies with the suffering of others more quickened than ever. At the end of the year she writes:—

My father is my best physician. He often talks to me with the most touching sympathy about my dear departed. How they said the Lord's Prayer in a loud voice, before the deadly bullets pierced them, and how Albert would not let his eyes be bandaged, but bared his chest to the bullet, and fell, calling "Long live the King!"

Twenty-four hours before the death-warrant was read to them, and, conscious of their own innocence, they listened quietly to it. The few hours remaining to them were occupied with the writing of farewell letters. Albert wrote a few beautiful lines to my father, thanking him for all the love and kindness he had always received, and asking pardon for having grieved him unintentionally. His own people he tried to console, saying that he is proud to be sacrificed for his country, and that he feels lifted above grief for his undesired fate, while he can only pity the blind tyrant who imposes it. An hour before death French wickedness invented a means by which to cause his loyalty to waver. A French officer was sent by the Governor to tell him he would be liberated, as it was illegal to shoot a young man who had not yet reached his twentieth year. But the condition was that he should swear the oath of allegiance to the French Emperor and enter his service. Albert declined the proposal with contempt and told the bearer of it that the most agonising death was preferable to a dishonoured life, and that he would rather leave the world innocently condemned to death than remain in it a perjurer.

The increasing trouble and distress; the care of the wounded and the prisoners of war; the intense anxiety concerning her brother, who was serving in the Prussian Army; and to some extent her own health, which had been indifferent since the calamity of losing her lover had befallen her, filled the girl's life to overflowing; but by degrees her youth and sunny disposition reassert themselves, and the letters are once more filled with sparkling fun and good-humour, which do not leave her even under the most depressing circumstances. At the same time the war, now carried into Russia, is constantly in her mind, and she describes many scenes, of which she has heard from eye-witnesses or which have been enacted under her eyes, in a manner which adds to her quickly penned letters an unusual historic interest. Thus, she draws the terrible retreat across the Beresina, after the burning of Moscow:

The entire retreating army was concentrated on this narrow point. Everybody hastened to fly, and the whole river was filled with dead men and horses, with carriages, guns, and powder-wagons. Most of the men were too weak to swim, and found their death in the river. Their beds have for some time been the very deserts, where the snow was dyed red with blood, and they had fed on the flesh of horses that had died on the road. The few who reached the opposite bank had only one feeling left—disgust of life. Hundreds of those miserable companions in arms often lay down round the camp-fire, and next morning perhaps ten of them awoke, to look enviously upon their dead comrades, and to curse their own lives. Some, whose brains were frozen, have died raving mad, and some in dumb despair. . . . Day after day scenes of misery are before our eyes and make our hearts bleed. Cripples without arms and legs, others who are lifted from the carts on the point of death, and madmen filling the air with curses and groans, and we are not only eye-witnesses of these miserable creatures crippled by frost and hostile bullets, but we have to listen to the horrible tales of the fearful degeneration in the Army. For the sake of obtaining a piece of horseflesh six men were killed, and the survivor, too weak to eat the flesh, lay with it beside him, and died of starvation. Last night an old General told us the story of two officers of his regiment. Two Counts M., near relatives of the Empress Josephine, were the pride of the French Guards by reason of their personal beauty and their fine intellect. One of them was wounded in the head, but he remained fighting by his brother's side till another bullet hit him. During the flight across the Beresina the two noble brothers were still seen, the wounded one leading the horse on which he had tied the other, both of whose legs had been frozen and amputated. Several days later the Chief of the Staff found them lying dead on the ground. The wounded one was all but naked, having covered his brother with his clothes. He had tied him with Turkish shawls to a ladder, to draw him along, as the horse had evidently died. The General told the story with many pauses, for he was still deeply touched by it, though at first his feelings had been so deadened by his own misery that he had not shed a tear of pity. He also told us of several scenes where boys of eighteen had carried their wounded fathers through the flames of burning houses in order to prolong the sad lives of their dear ones, and next morning fathers and sons had been found together, sunk into the sleep from which there is no waking. And those who found them had bitterly envied them.

The last of the seventy interesting letters was written in the autumn of 1813, when peace was in sight. Philippine, with characteristic self-forgetfulness, had buried her own grief, and there is no allusion to her irreparable loss, no complaint that her young happiness has been wrenched from her. She rejoices in the joy of her delivered country, and ends by saying, "It is a long time since I have said 'Good-bye' to you so joyfully." A few years later Philippine von Griesheim, in obedience to her friends' wish, married a member of the old Saxon aristocracy, Philipp Leberecht Cramm, who, however, died after five years of happy wedded life, leaving two children. Frau von Cramm herself only died in 1881, and the esteem and affection which she had gathered round her in the course of a long and noble life were expressed when Brunswick buried her with military honours otherwise only accorded to officers in high position.

YOKOHAMA GENERAL HOSPITAL.

Financial Report on the working of the Yokohama General Hospital for the period from November 1st, 1904, to July 31st, 1905.

WORKING ACCOUNT.

	Dr.	Cr.
	Yen.	Yen.
To Provisions	4,480.53
Wages and Salaries	5,835.07
Medical Fees	1,390.00
Medicines and Drugs	1,164.72
Light and Heating	1,407.29
Laundry	491.72
Sundry	556.78
Infectious Ward	576.26
Interest	27.90
Ground Rent and Insurance	954.08
Balance	1,174.65
By Earnings during the period		18,059.00
	18,059.00	18,059.00

IMPROVEMENTS ACCOUNT.

To Medical Appliances	326.80
Furniture	512.49
Improvements and Repairs	2,963.67
Fare of new Nurse	508.74
Balance	7,217.48
By Donations, &c., as per list	11,529.18
	11,529.18

PROFIT & LOSS ACCOUNT.

To Deficit from 1904	3,531.83
Balance	4,858.30
By Working Account	1,174.65
Improvements Account	7,217.48
	8,392.13
	8,392.13

BALANCE SHEET.

	Liabilities.	Assets.
To Profit & Loss account	4,858.30
Sundry Creditors	1,115.05
By Cash in hand		12.11
Chartered Bank		4,002.16
Sundry Debtors		1,959.68
	5,973.35	5,973.35

DONATIONS, ETC.

	Yen.
Previously acknowledged	11,429.18
Anonymous (per E. W. Frazer) U. S. $50.	100.00

Total to July 31st

RECORD OF PATIENTS.

	Room.	Ward.	Special.	Charity.	Totals.
Admitted to date	97	57	10	6	170
Discharged	84	44	10	6	144
Deaths	4	7	0	0	11
Under Treatment on July 31st	10	5	0	0	15

H. J. NEVILLE, Hon. Secretary.

COASTWISE NAVIGATION OF KOREA.

AGREEMENT.

The Imperial Governments of Japan and Korea, deeming it necessary, for the purpose of improving the trade, and promoting the development of the resources of Korea, to allow navigation by Japanese vessels along the coasts and in the inland waters of Korea, Hayashi Gonsuke, Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of Japan, and I-hayeng, Minister of State for Foreign Affairs of Korea, duly authorized by their respective Governments for the purpose, have agreed upon the following Articles:

Art. I.—Japanese vessels shall be at liberty to navigate along the coasts and in the inland waters of Korea for the purpose of trade in accordance with the stipulations of the present Agreement, which, however, shall not be applicable to navigation between the open ports.

Art. II.—Licenses shall be obtained for all Japanese vessels to be employed in navigation of the coasts and inland waters, upon reporting through the Japanese Consular Officers to the Korean Customs the names and residence of the owners, the names, types and carrying capacity of the vessels, as well as the limits within which such vessels are to navigate.

Licenses shall be available for one year from the date of their issue.

Art. III.—Upon receipt of the licenses, fees shall be paid to the Korean Customs according to the following rates:

	Yen.
For a vessel of foreign type below 100 tons,...	15.00
" Japanese type,	15.00
" foreign type above 100 and
below 500 tons,	50.00
For a vessel of foreign type above 500 and
below 1,000 tons,	100.00
For a vessel of foreign type above 1,000 tons,	150.00

Art. IV.—Japanese vessels may freely navigate within the limits specified, but shall not proceed to any place not in Korean territory, except in case of stress of weather or other emergency, or in case special permission has been obtained from the Korean Customs.

Art. V.—The licenses shall be carried on board the vessels during their voyages, and shall be shown whenever requested by the Korean Customs, or by local officials of Korea, or by the Chiefs of villages duly authorized by such local officials.

Art. VI.—Japanese shipowners shall have liberty to lease land for the purpose of building warehouses in the places where their vessels call.

Such owners may also construct piers or wharves on the banks and coasts with the permission of the Korean Customs.

Art. VII.—In case of infraction of the present Agreement by a Japanese vessel, the Korean Customs may cause the license of such vessel to be confiscated, or may refuse to issue a new one, if the offence be found, upon examination, to be of a grave nature.

Art. VIII.—When a Japanese vessel, or the crew thereof, infringes the stipulations of the present Agreement or of other treaties, or when a member of the crew commits any crime, the Japanese Consular Officers shall deal with the case in accordance with the provisions of the treaties and the laws of Japan.

Art. IX.—The present Agreement shall remain in force for a period of fifteen years from the date of its signature, and after the expiration of such period, further arrangements may be made by mutual agreement.

The two Governments may, however, conclude an agreement by mutual consent even before the expiration of the aforesaid term, when in future the navigation of Korea shall be further developed.

HAYASHI GONSUKE, (Seal)

Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary.

The 13th day of the 8th month of the 38th year of Meiji.

I-HAYENG, (Seal)

Minister of State for Foreign Affairs.

The 13th day of the 8th month of the 9th year of Kwang-Mu.

CORRESPONDENCE.

JAPANESE VERSUS FOREIGN SYSTEMS.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—You said the other day in your valuable paper that the Postoffice people want shaking up. Why? Is it because it takes them 56 hours to deliver a Hiranuma postcard at Yokohama? Well!

I have just been the recipient of a similar finger-longer-on-the-way article, but I don't kick; I know better, and surely, Mr. Editor, you are not going to side with those foreigners who always grumble when things here don't exactly suit them. You know very well that the Japanese in imitating all our inventions, and adopting our various systems have taken the best only, and furthermore improved on most of them. And haven't I read lately in several newspapers that at home they are now contemplating copying Japanese methods and systems and that the world is coming to endorse Japanese theories. If therefore it takes a postcard 56 hours to go from Hiranuma to Yokohama you may satisfy yourself that it is the right time. However, it is not only the postal service that these grumbling foreigners kick about. The other day I heard a friend of mine complain about the Japanese railway service. He went so far as to assert that he has never seen a Japanese railway train which had either started or arrived at the exact hour and minute given in the timetable. Silly juggins! He didn't know that those people who run the trains are not the same people who print the timetables, but need I say that he was another of the kicking kind? And so it is; it is always foreigners who do the kicking; the Japanese, you will have noticed, never kick; they are quite content to have a local letter or postcard delivered to them several days after it has been posted, and as to railway travelling, well! the slower the train moves the better they like it. They take a more human view of things: they are not going to have a messenger break his neck in order to deliver a postcard, and do not want the railway people to tire themselves in order to run the trains in the time printed in the timetables. They know very well that the longer it takes a train to cover a certain distance the more they get for their money. Being a business man, I must tell you, Mr. Editor, that I am rather inclined to take a similar view of things. I had a year's season ticket and travel every day.—Sundays excluded,—and it stands to reason that the more time I spend in the train the more I get out of the Imperial Government Railways, and the cheaper I have my season ticket. You can therefore understand my horror when a couple of months ago the summer service timetable was published and I found that we were now going to get from Tokyo to Kamakura in one hour and twenty-eight minutes; a train would leave Tokyo at 4.20 in the afternoon and arrive at 5.48; what next? Fortunately, as it turned out, it was only the usual joke of the man who had printed the table; the people who run the train knew better and have so far shown that they are quite up to running things in the customary way, so if you make up your mind to travel in that giddy train, they will either give you a rest near Kanagawa, waiting for another train to cross, or give the engine a drink of water when you get to Yokohama. But should those opportunities be missed then Ofuna will be your resting place for a minimum of 10-15 minutes while you wait for the 5.02 train from Yokosuka which is the most reliable train for being late you can wish for. Of course the kicking foreigner was again in evidence the other day.—I saw him,—this time he couldn't understand that when we were playing at express trains and went dashing past Toisuka, at which station we hadn't time to stop,—how it then happened that we had timed longer 10-15 minutes at Ofuna. He wanted to know all about it. I heard him ask the guard, but I am glad to say the latter, who evidently was tickled to death over such a silly question being asked him, only grinned. Of course a Japanese railway official grins when you ask him silly questions, and that was the only answer the inquisitive foreigner got. However, what I wanted to point out in this letter, Mr. Editor, is, that all that hustling and bustling, running trains at top speed and delivering mail almost before you get it written as those foreigners want it is something of the past, and let those who want that kind of thing go home to their own country, to Europe or America, where they still do them in the old fashioned way, but let them hurry up before we at home begin to reform and remodel things on Japanese principles, because I tell you it will come, must come. I saw the other day in your valuable paper that the American Railway Magnate, Mr. Harriman, is expected out here in the East. Let him only see what a charming, easy-going, if-not-today-then-to-morrow way the Japanese have of running their railway trains, and how thoroughly delighted the Japanese travelling people are with it, then good-bye speed, and good-bye American Expresses at 60 miles an hour; at ten nobody breaks his neck, and we get there just the same.

A NON-KICKING FOREIGNER.

We learn that ten of the twenty-two China Subscription Griffins ordered by the N. R. C. are on board the steamer Bemworth, which is due at daylight on Wednesday the 6th inst.

THE BATTLE OF MUKDEN.

EXPERIENCES OF A JAPANESE OFFICER.

The following is the translation of a private letter addressed to his brother, now in England, by a Japanese officer, Lieutenant Tokutaro Oshe, who was at the battle of Mukden and has received two Kanjos for his gallantry. A few words in brackets have been added in one or two places to make the meaning:—

The battle of Mukden really began at Haikotai. Ever since that affair, without rest or respite, dogged the steps of the retreating Russians, and this and now on that side of Korga. Worn by our unceasing pursuit, the Russians turn sharply round with a growl now and again, but the nimble mounted infantry and Dragons sheer off to the right or left and pounce upon him again as he moves out of his position. Ever since January 25 the firing has been our bed-chamber and the clothes we wear our bed and bedding.

From February 24 to 28 we were at Fushun and on March 1 were placed under the command of General Tachibana, and then marched on to the Russian position at Zhenngyoho. Here, as you know, the Russians held a position of great natural strength, supplemented with every device known to the military engineer, and the Russian engineers were splendid. Barbed wire entanglement, abatis complete, and all that could be seen were muzzles of rifles out of the solid masonry of the fort. We advanced very slowly, step by step, through a shower of bullets, rifles and maxims making a continuous sing-song like the singing of a bird thrushes. Now a man on my right goes down, one on my left, then a fellow is blown back before one's eyes, his flesh is scattered, some of it comes upon one's face. Your officer encouraging some wounded men, orders given in a hoarse undertone, or a cry for our Emperor—the last breath of a dying man—all these blended together in the din of battle through one's ears until one might think it a nightmare, but for the evidence of one's eyes the day's exertion the place remained in the hands. We had our colonel wounded, and others placed hors de combat; then, when things were known to the men, their courage and fierce indignation reached the heights. They said that they would not leave the dead battle dead or alive or go into hospital with the colours of the regiment floated above the Russian works. In the night the colonel called upon the officers and said we must take the battle at all costs, or we fail in our duty to the grades of other sections. If unsuccessful, let only one thing for us to do—die. "Gentlemen will attack the enemy now, and I ask you to your bones on this field of battle with me." One breath called out "Banzai! let us die." Orders were given out at once:— "Advance without orders shall be Court-martialled," "No bayonet," "Officers will look for the leaders," "Do not expect to return alive," and so on. At 2 a.m. the attack began. The men stopped and made the final dash then approached within 100 metres of the lines. The enemy poured shot and shell, available rifle and maxim and light machine guns. Though the distance was short and the darkness, at this point the enemy's fire began terribly. A man turned over, letting go of his rifle, so I kicked him gently on the back to see if he had fallen asleep—he was heard a gnashing of teeth behind me. A fellow was discharging blood from his head. Yet not a sound, not a cry of pain, not a muttered moan. They remembered their duty. Reaching a point where we were just about to abatis, we charged with an earth-shaking crash and we rushed it. We—some few of us entered the defence from the enemy's trench. Here there were no entanglements or abatis, we jumped over the trench and over the barbed wire into the interior. A few of the enemy's bayonets were there, but I threw them down into my hands. I had not had my sword yet. It was like the affair at Haikotai when a Russian was killed. The enemy, concentrated all his available force upon the front of the front. The only difference lay in the 230 were forced to engage Mishchenko's brigade, but here the Russians were only a force considerably inferior to their own. I turning round a corner of a heap of kaolin shouting, "Come on, fellows, come on," one ran straight into me, almost throwing the stick. He is a 6-footer, so he is no joke. I gave him a straight cut with the flat of my sword and call upon him to disarm; then tell him himself till the fight is over and then come surrender. Well, he did it. Already I have put out such Japanese words from the direct ront as "Banzai, banzai! You, Russki, surrender, surrender, or you look out." As the overwhelming number of frightened Russians began to stream towards the spot where we few were lying in wait, we had no choice but wield our cold steel as best we could. After this, it was all single combats, a savage warfare. You crouch on the ground, and as a Russian approaches you swiftly despatch him, and throwing yourself down upon the ground again wait for another to come on. "Yamada, Yamada, Oka, Oka, now be careful." "Don't confound friend with foe!" "There they come, there they come. Steady, steady. Banzai, banzai!" In half an hour it was all over, though it appeared half a lifetime.

As the enemy retreated in disorder across the open without arms, without boots, volley after volley was given at the order. I find that most of those who are hit generally receive their wound when rising to charge or in the act of crossing a trench or getting over a breast-work—in fact, just in the act of changing from one attitude to another. What is needed to save the men is that they should be trained to perform such an act in as short a space of time as possible. Still, life or death in no business of ours. If one is to be hit, one will be were one to hide behind a mountain. Fate decides that.

Our casualties were slight. Amongst the officers wounded were the colonel, two captains, two lieutenants, and four second lieutenants; and two second lieutenants; and one sergeant-major, and one Q.M.S. were killed. The sergeant-major killed was, in civil life, the vice-head of one of the best and largest public schools in Japan, and a superb swordsman. Men slightly wounded remain in the rank and refuse to go to hospital; true Japanese. On the next day, March 2, pursuit, pursuit, and pursuit; and then a sudden standstill at Mateiho. Not taken till nightfall, then another Japanese rush. Toward night it began to snow, and the effect was truly beautiful. It was a tableau, a scene from a stage. In the silvery white background, with here and there a red conflagration, marched the men of the 2nd Regiment, men in khaki, their knapsacks packed, their great coats flung away, with the badge of white round their arms, officers in front with drawn swords, the bluish white gleam of bayonets clearly discernible in the show; straight and steady charged the men of Japan. The reflection of the red flickers of fire played upon the drifting snow and upon the spray kicked up by the tramping of feet of the marching host. Shells shrieked, thumped, and exploded with an awful splendour never before realized. The pity that real blood should flow and real living bodies of men be scattered to the winds! Before this determined attack of the Japanese the Russians faltered and broke. The 5th Company of the 2nd had a previous order, so, doubling, and at our fastest pace, beyond the regulation limit, we reached a position along the line of the enemy's retreat. I shall always be trying to efface the scene from my memory, but I shall never be able to do so.

When I gave the word, every rifle in the company spoke at 20 metres distance. It was a harrowing scene. Under the steady sectional fire, the men went down in heaps, and the fleeing Russians actually walked, or, rather, raced along over their dead and dying comrades. You men of Russia, you die for your beloved fatherland, misguided though you may be; we shall deal it out swiftly, for we, too, may see our last day at your hands, and joyously for our enlightened Sovereign. We lay in the snow the whole night, sniping, sniping mechanically. The next day day biscuits and snow-water, and pursuit, without seeing a shadow of a Russian. The 4th ditto, slept in battle array. The fifth, ditto, ditto.

The 6th, the hottest and worst, bloodiest and most savage, of the whole series of the Mukden battles. The Russians held a line from Sansenho to Neng-yoho, while we ranged ourselves in and about Gyorimho, which is about four miles west of Mukden Station. The doggedness of that Russian defence! Heavy guns, all joined in the bombardment of their positions, while the heroic Russian gunners replied shot for shot and shell for shell. Attacks and counter-attacks succeed each other like the figures on a fairy lantern. We fought with rifles, we fought with bayonets, then with grenades, and with shovels and picks, and even with fists. Why, it's no more nor less than a gigantic street brawl. One of the battalion commanders was killed and the colonel wounded severely, and one after another the company officers went down. Once when I whistled to the buglers and the charge was sounded, just barely 40 out of a battalion of skirmishers leaped to their feet, and the rest remained still—no cowards, but dead men—dead at their posts. Those who responded to the call had no right to do so; they ought to have been in the ambulances. That day's doings could never be told vividly enough with my pen, and, perhaps, no words could ever do justice to the bravery of the men, Russian and Japanese, and the hardships they endured. The Russians, five or six times our number, charged time after time so resolutely to our positions that some of them actually passed through the first line—but they never returned. These are the fresh troops from the reserves—determined, because of the knowledge that on their action hangs the fate of Kuropatkin and his army. So that day success remained with the Russians, in spite of all our efforts. Well, they deserved it. At the suggestion of an officer of the staff corps we volunteered to rush the works the same night. Men came to their officers and begged to let them go and fill up the trenches with their corpses, so that others following them might walk over their bodies into the defences. At the men's earnest request a deputation of officers and men was sent to the divisional commander, who gave them the requested permission, not without some hesitation. All the unwounded of our company offered themselves; to a man, and formed up—in fact, they all offered themselves; but we were compelled to take only the unwounded. The men of the Kessai formed up in a square, each man with a tumbler full of water, to drink to the long parting—a parting after which they might never meet again. General Tachimi uncorked some wine, and himself poured just a drop into each man's glass, shaking hands with each. Holding his glass aloft, he said:—"Gentlemen, I have not much to say to you to-night. You know well the despatch of your undertaking, in which success is not certain. You know also the chances against your returning alive to tell the tale. I can only wish you, gentlemen, God-speed. Go, gentlemen, do your best. I do not command it of you, comrades, but only cherish the hope that your resolution and your determination may bear the fruit of success. Farewell, farewell. Long live the Emperor! Long live the Emperor!"

Men we were to leave behind came and pitifully implored me to take them, but, on my refusal, begged me to do their share of the work. Oh! our glorious army of citizen soldiers, men pursuing some peaceful avocation in some obscure corner of Japan, living and dying unknown, never doing harm to a living creature, contented and happy to be a simple peasant or an artisan in the piping times of peace, and yet they are heroes all, every one of them! It is an overwhelming honour, and a responsibility almost too great, to lead men such as these to dangers and destruction, men to whom in age I am but a younger brother, and in point of experience a mere child. "I have got seven yen in my bag, Honda, take it out when I am gone, and send it up to the war fund office, will you?" "Now these are my last vestiges, keep them for my sake, Oka!" "Good-bye, Tori, meet you at Shokonsha" (the shrine of those fallen for the nation and country).

These are bits of sentences I catch as I pace to and fro in the front waiting for the signal to advance. It made me think, I have seen almost all the important actions since the war began, yet I am here still and about to lead my trusted and tried heroes to almost certain annihilation. Perhaps this time tomorrow I shall be no more. I wanted to do so much. Has the time come to pay the blood-tax? Well, there will be many more worthy sons of the country, so I shall face it without regrets, happy in the thought of dying for the nation and for the country, and for our Imperial master.

At midnight men threw off the great winter coats, and white distinguishing bands were put on the left sleeves in readiness to move. With drawn swords the officers lead, with fixed bayonets the men follow, in our usual formation. First grenade-men in a line at certain intervals, then main body in column of sixes with a grenade-man at every few paces in the ranks. And with a tremendous yell we stormed into the earth-work. What followed I cannot bear to recite. How many of us returned? A few, a very few. And the works? Intact still? As we receded came the enemy's counter-attack—the officer in command of this section knows his business well. But there is nothing so ridiculously easy as to repel a Russian counter-attack.

The next day, the 7th, went on much the same, but with a slight indication of wavering in the Russian ranks. On the 8th they commenced their favourite move, "a prearranged advance to the north," so taking the opportunity we rushed, capturing the position with much slaughter and a large number of prisoners. This was the final signal for the rout of Kuropatkin's Mukden army. That night we slept as best we could and where we stood. On the 9th we cleared the enemy out of Taisiekio (three miles north-west of Mukden), thence advanced to Teisankashi, and there we bivouacked in battle formation.

The 10th was the happiest day of the battle of Mukden. After half a day's desultory firing and leisurely fighting our battalion received an order to take Tahoshitu, which the enemy held in force. In this my company formed the first line. I talk of battalions and companies, but a battalion, particularly ours, at this stage furnished about as many men as a company. We moved through a hail of rifle and machine-gun bullets, which now began to resemble some perfectly natural phenomenon, as of sunshine or of rain, and it was mere child's play compared with the experiences of that awful night of the 6th. We lost a few before coming within 200 mètres of the Russian first line of trenches. As I leapt on my feet and stepped out to the front the men closed up behind (we give no word of command, they watch their officers), and elbow to elbow we charged. As I entered the village about 20 paces in front of the wall of bayonets I caught sight of the Russians running helter-skelter out at the other end of the village high street. Ten men were unable to get away, among them a one-year volunteer. These men came up to me, and, saluting, spoke to me in Chinese. "Toshei, toshei, thanks." Then fetching out lump sugar, vodka, &c., with "Sinku, well done, Sir, well done." The humour of it!

Here we joined the reserve and marched to the Mukden Station. To Japanese bred and born on the top of a mountain, cramped up between the Sea of Japan and the Pacific, the Manchurian plain, where, as the Chinese have it, "one sees for a 1,000 miles," seems vast and desolate, but magnificent, and makes one feel as if oneself were expanding. Upon this vast magnificent plain moved countless shapes of undefinable masses. Some move this way and others that, with momentary pauses and occasional delays, moving backwards sometimes, but never for long. The broad line of the direction of these movements may be given as toward the City of the Dragon Throne. Some of these bodies had the appearance of a dark, evil-looking snake, or of a dragon winding its tortuous way to its place of refuge, and vomiting fire and smoke. At closer quarters this dissolves into a brigade of infantry on the march with its regiment of skirmishers. Further away yonder is a huge grey clouded mass, irregular in shape, neither square nor round, but rather like the shape of a jelly-fish, for it is elastic and closes and uncloses and varies between the two shapes. As a heavy shell from a 15 cm. gun, lately their own, now in the hands of the victorious Japanese, plumps straight down into the centre of the mass, scattering its death dealing charge all round, this mass opens out in a hurried movement, to close up again into a semblance of a square under the relentless patter of our Meiji imps. Bang, it opens. Clang, clang, clang of machine guns, and pit-pat, pit-pat of rifles, it closes up again. Each time it closes one notices that its size shrinks. That is the Russian rearguard.

What a relief to see it break and run. "Ah!" came from many a mouth. By this time bullets were flying from all directions, from right and left, front and rear. The flying remnants of the Russian soldiery were firing as they ran. At 7 p.m. we entered the station. Well, they must have been in a hurry! Behind them they left quantities of whisky, brandy, champagne, burgundy, vodka, rum, &c., the things to them most precious next to ikons. Some tables were laid as if company were about to sit down. What a sight for men who had had nothing but dry biscuits and snow water for all those days! But wait, the Russians have fouled wells with filth, and concealed dynamite under the floor of the houses they had left. Should they be trusted? There is a box of cigars with the lid open, so inviting, and chocolates, oh so tantalizing! I have an idea. "Here, Inouye, bring a prisoner along, one captured in this neighbourhood." "Yes, officer, this is the table for the transport column. I know it because I am the servant of a paymaster lieutenant. . . . I think the food is all right. . . . Don't throw it to the dogs, Sir, I will eat it for you. . . . I have not had a square meal for the last five days," he adds. We eat the Russians' food, sleep in their houses on Russian beds with Russian blankets that night. It was like having January and June holidays together (both great festival seasons). How can outsiders know the delight of such an event? On the morrow we had a few brushes with the retreating Russians. In one of the engagements I found a pretty little Pekinese spaniel wandering about between the two fires. It came to me when I whistled; it evidently belonged to some Russian officer, and was tame and affectionate. I am keeping it for myself. I suppose the owner is not likely to return to claim it. Once when we charged a Russian shelter trench successfully the little fellow could not keep up with us with his short legs and long coat, so my kanemitsu (sword) in my right hand I held the little creature panting under my left arm, and charged. The grave sergeant-major laughed. Well he might. We only heard faint sounds of firing all the next day, the 11th. I took some bearers and surgeons out into the fields, distributing biscuits, water, hot tea, and other comforts to the Russian wounded.

What an ugly goddess is the goddess of war? Among the wounded Russians upon the field was a boy of barely 16 or 17, a drummer boy, shot through both legs. He held a rosary in his hand, praying. Poor mite, the pity of it. Pointing to the red cross upon the arm of a bearer I called out in Chinese, "Surgeon, my brave little fellow." No answer. Then in Russian, "Doctor." And told him he was safe. This in German—that was about my stock of languages. He was a Pole, I believe, as he spoke German. He was so thirsty that my bottle was not enough for him, so another half of the bearer's bottle was given to him, too, and he had some biscuits. I had a strong yearning to ask him about his home, but no, he is weak, and his spirit must be kept up. "Your wound is nothing, the Japanese hospital attendants will be here soon and take you away. And soon you will be able to go home to your parents." Covering him up with blankets and coats taken from the Russian dead, I was just walking away when he cried out after me. "A moment, officer, a moment. Kind officer, I have something to give you—this book. It was given to me by my father when I was leaving home for the front. I have nothing more valuable to offer you, Sir. It is the most precious thing I possess." And he kissed my hand repeatedly, crying bitterly.

I accepted the book; and without a word turned away to find another sufferer. I would not have broken down for a colonelcy before those bearers and my own men.

The book was entitled "Himmelsbrød" or "Ein Gebetbuch für Jugend."—The Times.

THE SINKING OF THE "KINJO MARU".

TAKING OF EVIDENCE.

Evidence was taken on board the steamship Baralong at Kobe on Monday in connection with an action for damages which is being brought by the owners of the Kinjo Maru, which was sunk in a collision with the first named vessel in the Inland Sea. The enquiry, says the Kobe Herald, was conducted by Judge Tachibana, and commenced at 2.30 in the afternoon. Mr. Matsumoto acted as interpreter. Dr. Okumura, of Tokio, and Messrs. Yoshida and Suganuma, of Osaka, appeared for the owner of the Kinjo Maru, and Mr. Hirata, of Osaka, for the owners of the Baralong. Mr. Nakamura was present on behalf of the N. Y. K., and Mr. W. M. Royds attended as the representative of the British Consul. The proceedings commenced with the examination of Mr. Edward Deason Jenkins, the master of the Baralong. In answer to the Judge, Captain Jenkins stated that the Baralong is a British steamer and belongs to the Bucknall Steamship Line, Limited. She has a gross tonnage of 4481 while her registered tonnage is 2661. Her ordinary speed is between 10 and 10½ knots, her full speed and slow speed being 6 and 3 knots respectively. At the time of the collision the deviation of the compass was barely half a degree, which meant no appreciable deviation at all. The Baralong left Kobe on the 22nd at 5.30 a.m. for Moji. It was at about 10.18 on the night of the 22nd that the Baralong sighted the Kinjo Maru for the first time. The Baralong's course was then west by north. When the Baralong caught sight of the Kinjo Maru's starboard light, the vessels were about a mile and a half apart, and the first mentioned steamer was proceeding at the rate of about 9 knots an hour against the current. There was no wind but rain was falling in torrents. Shortly after the sighting of the Kinjo Maru, the latter sounded a whistle, and the witness' vessel then went hard-a-port and her engines were put at full speed astern. At that time half the crew were on the deck on watch. As soon as witness heard the whistle from the Kinjo Maru, he signalled to her. The collision took place at an acute angle at 10.23, about four miles and a half from Himeshima, on the Moji side of the island. The Baralong was then steaming in a south-easterly direction. According to a statement made by the Captain of the Kinjo Maru, that vessel was struck about fifteen feet from the stern. At this point a diagram was put in showing the positions of the vessels at the time of the accident. Proceeding, the Captain gave some information as to the members of the firm of Bucknall Ltd., the owners of the Baralong, and he was then examined by Mr. Yoshida, one of the Counsel representing the owner of the Kinjo Maru. In answer to Mr. Yoshida's questions, he said that the Baralong passed Yashima at 7.55 p.m., steaming west by north, quarter-north. When six miles from Uwajima she changed her course to west by north, three quarters north and continued on this course until the lighthouse on Himeshima was sighted right a beam at just 10 p.m. The course was then altered from west by north, three quarters north, to west by north, half north. At 10.18, the light on the Kinjo Maru was sighted at half a point to starboard ahead. It was a red light, no white light being visible. At that time the pilot was on the bridge, in command of the vessel, and the third officer was with him, and they were immediately joined by the witness. When the light was seen, it was concluded that it belonged to a sailing vessel, and, as there was no wind, the Baralong did not change her course. It was only when the whistle was blown that it was known that the vessel was a steamer. About a minute and a half elapsed between the blowing of the whistle and the collision. It all passed so quickly that there was no time to ascertain what course the Kinjo Maru was steaming. Witness could not say what position the Baralong was in relative to Himeshima at the time of the collision, as after the sounding of the whistle he was occupied in having the helm put hard over and the engines set at full speed astern, and in watching the movements of the Kinjo Maru. This concluded the examination of Captain Jenkins, and an engineer from the Kawasaki Dockyard then made an investigation of the damage to the Baralong, with a view to obtaining light on the circumstances of the collision. At 6.50 p.m. the examination of the pilot, Mr. Katsura Genzaburo, Kusunokicho, Kobe, was commenced. As his evidence was mainly to the same effect as that of Captain Jenkins, it is not necessary here to give it in full. The following passage contains the most important of the Pilot's statements apart from his corroboration of the Captain's testimony:—When I first saw the Kinjo Maru, she was showing only a red light, and I therefore supposed that she was a sailing vessel. I consequently intended to cross her course. After a minute or two I heard a short sharp whistle from the direction of the red light, and instantly caught sight of the hull. I at once turned the engine room indicator to full speed astern and sounded three sharp whistles. The collision occurred at 10.22 p.m., after the Baralong had steamed about three miles and a half west of the Himeshima light house. At the time of the collision, her course, witness believed, was between north west half west, and north west by west half west. The angle at which the collision took place may have been about 45°. The bows of the Baralong struck the Kinjo Maru at about fifteen feet from the stern. Replying to questions put by Mr. Yoshida, the Pilot said that at 10.18, when he saw the red light, the Baralong was about half a mile away from it, at an angle of about a point and a half or two points. About ten minutes after passing Himeshima, the Baralong sighted a steamer showing a white light, and got out of her way, afterwards resuming her former course. Replying to Mr. Okamura, who also represented the owner of the Kinjo Maru, the witness stated that about eight minutes after passing the vessel above mentioned, the Baralong sighted the red light. There were then two or three fishing vessels with white lights to the right of where the red light was seen. Replying to the questions put by Mr. Suganuma, witness said that, at the critical moment, he gave orders for the vessel to be put hard a port, and for full speed astern, but he did not know to what extent these orders were carried out. In reply to further questions by Mr. Yoshida, the witness stated that he did not know whether the vessel's chronometer was regulated at Kobe. In response to an enquiry by Mr. Hirata, counsel for the owner of the Baralong, the witness said that about half a minute would be required to turn the vessel a point to starboard. He added that when steamers are set astern while steaming at full speed, they generally turn to starboard to some extent even if the helm is left alone. This concluded the proceedings.

The date of the enquiry to be held at the British Consulate has not yet been fixed, but it will probably take place in the course of the present week.

HONGKONG AND SHANGHAI BANKING CORPORATION.

HALF-YEARLY MEETING.

The eightieth ordinary half-yearly meeting of the Hongkong and Shanghai Banking Corporation was held at the City Hall, Hongkong, on August 19th.

Mr. H. W. Slade was in the chair.

The Chairman—Gentlemen, it gives your Directors great pleasure to come before you with another good result of six months' working of the Bank. I feel sure that the report which I have just read will be considered satisfactory, and I trust the distribution of profits which we recommend will also receive your approval. From the statement of accounts, which has been in your hands for some time, you will have seen that, in addition to placing $5 lacs to the Silver Reserve, raising that Fund to $8,500,000 and carrying forward some $2 lacs in excess of last half year, we propose, on this occasion, to pay a dividend of £1 15/- per share, being an increase of 5/- on the dividend which you have regularly received for the past six and a half years. At first sight 5/- per share does not seem a large increase, but it amounts to £40,000 a year, and in percentage you will find that at present exchange it represents fully 4½ p.a. on the Capital, which I think you will admit is a very substantial addition to our dividend. Your Directors fully recognise, as I am sure you must all do, the inadvisability of raising the dividend unless there are reasonable grounds for feeling confident of being able to maintain it. The proposal has, therefore, not been made without due consideration and only after careful observation of the steadily increasing earning power exhibited by the various branches of the Bank, not only in the Far East, but also in other parts of the world where we are established. But though we feel justified in thinking that the time has come for shareholders to receive a higher dividend, we are also alive to the necessity of ensuring that the Bank shall be prepared to take advantage of the increased opportunities certain to accompany the great impetus to enterprise in China which is expected to follow the close of the war, and we, therefore, fully realise the prudence of continuing to add to our reserves. This is the sure way of maintaining the strong position in which the Bank at present stands, and your Directors have no intention of departing from the general line of policy in that respect which has been pursued with so much success in the past and of which we are today reaping the benefit. Turning now to the balance sheet and comparing it with that of 31st December last, you will notice that the total figures are considerably higher. This is to a large extent accounted for by the increase of some two and a half millions sterling in the temporary deposit of proceeds of Loans recently floated. There is no appreciable change in gold fixed deposits; silver current accounts show an increase of $5,300,000 and silver deposits are also a little higher. Bills payable have increased by $5,000,000. There is a slight difference in our note circulation, compared with a year ago it has gone up about $11 lacs. On the other side of the account coin lodged with the Government against the excess note issue remains unchanged at $8,500,000, but Cash, and Bullion in hand and transit, amount to $49,336,683.16 against $43,204,418.57. Our Holdings of Indian Government Revenue Paper and Consols, Colonial and other Securities have both been slightly increased; Bill discounts, Loans and Credits stand at $104,214,418 against $5,601,394.98 in December and Bills receivable are nearly twelve million dollars more at last half year. Far Eastern commerce has pursued a comparatively even course throughout the past year considering the importance of the political events which have marked the period. The end of the war upon trade has not changed in a striking manner since we last met. Things seem to have adjusted themselves fairly comfortably to the temporary conditions. We have certainly witnessed a marked depression of trade contraction in the credit in the South of China; this, however, has been mainly due to local causes which we may hope before long to see disappear; but, viewed as a whole, the foreign trade of China continues to expand while that of Japan has shown remarkable progress notwithstanding the continuance of hostilities. The happy event of peace resulting from the conference now being held in America there is good reason for anticipating a general revival of trade throughout the Far East and we may look forward with confidence to the future. (Applause)

There were no questions and the Chairman proposed the adoption of the report and accounts.

Mr. Orange—I feel sure the report and accounts placed before us cannot fail to be satisfactory to the shareholders. The increase in dividend will be welcomed, especially in view of the remarks of the Chairman that this would not have been made without the prospect of it being continued. We all feel that the close of the long war is near, bringing about a more secure feeling in trade and business generally. I have much pleasure in seconding the adoption of the report and accounts.

The motion was carried.

Mr. Saunders proposed the confirmation of the appointments of the Hon. Mr. C. W. Dickson, G. H. Medhurst and Mr. F. Salinger as Directors.

Mr. Barton seconded and the motion was carried.

Mr. G. Murray Bain proposed the re-election of Messrs. W. H. Potts and A. G. Wood as auditors.

Mr. Jupp seconded and the motion was carried.

The Chairman—That is all the business; directors' warrants will be ready on Monday.

Mr. Cruickshank proposed a very hearty vote of thanks to the Board of Directors, Chief Managers, other Managers and staff and congratulated them on the satisfactory work during the past six months. Gratifying as the results were he said they must not overlook the fact that they owed the very substantial rise in the value of the shares to the able management, care and interest shown by those who bore the heat and burden of the day during the past six months (loud applause).

The Chairman briefly returned thanks and the meeting closed.—China Mail.

The sailing vessel Sanjo Maru arrived on the 26th at Nemuro, Hokkaido. According to the crew, on July 31st they met a gale on their way to Alaska and consequently took refuge in Otokosk, on the west coast of Kamchatka. Six of the crew landed here to get water but three Russian soldiers attacked them. Three of the Japanese including the captain were killed and three injured.

TELEGRAMS.

(REUTER'S SPECIAL SERVICE.)

RUSSIA'S ATTITUDE.

London, August 25.

Count Lamsdorff, Russian Minister of Foreign Affairs, has authorized Reuter's correspondent at St. Petersburg to declare that Russia will pay no direct or indirect monetary contribution and make no cession of territory. Seemingly the negotiations are no longer in the hands of the Russian delegates. The issue rests with the Tsar, who yesterday had a three hours' conference with the American Ambassador.

RUSSIAN DOMESTIC LOAN A FAILURE.

Hitherto the Russian internal loan has been a failure, only seven million roubles having been taken up.

RUSSIA CANNOT PAY.

It is wired from Portsmouth that an authoritative Russian statement says that the proposal for the purchase of Northern Saghalien, although a new form, is identical with the proposal already rejected, and merely amounts to the insistence of war costs under the name of purchase money. Russia cannot pay an indemnity under whatever name, and peace will not be assured unless Japan withdraws her demand for war costs.

PEACE PROSPECTS.

London, August 26.

The Morning Post's Portsmouth correspondent reiterates his confidence in peace being arranged. He asserts that Russia is willing to pay fifty millions sterling.

RUSSIAN OFFICIAL CHANGES.

The Czar has accepted the resignation of M. Bulyguine, Minister of the Interior. He will probably be succeeded by General Ignatieff, Ex-Governor of Kieff.

AMERICAN OPINION ON JAPAN'S DEMANDS.

The Times' New York correspondent (Mr. G. W. Smalley) says that Americans regard Japan's demands as fair, and if the Tsar decides upon the continuance of the war, Americans will make him absolutely responsible for the further loss of life.

THE TSAR'S OBJECTIONS.

Later.

At Portsmouth it is learnt that the American Ambassador's audience with the Tsar, though unsatisfactory, left the door open. It appears that the Tsar's principal objection to the Japanese compromise was the insertion of the price for the purchase of Saghalien. It is understood that President Roosevelt is now endeavouring to secure acceptance of his previous proposal, made on the 24th inst., leaving the price for future adjustment.

FAMINE IN RUSSIA.

London, Aug. 27.

The export of grain from Russian Black Sea ports is paralyzed as the Government retains all the rolling stock for purposes of troop transportation and also in view of feeding the population of 28 provinces Central Russia, where famine is imminent.

THE CONFERENCE AGAIN ADJOURNS.

London, Aug. 27.

No fresh development has taken place in the situation at Portsmouth. The Russian attitude is unchanged. Japan has made no fresh proposals. It is understood that President Roosevelt is continuing his efforts.

The Conference adjourned on Saturday, after sitting for an hour and a half, until Monday.

The American Ambassador is to have a conference with Count Lamsdorff this afternoon.

PESSIMISTIC RUSSIA.

London, August 29.

The tone in St. Petersburg is now pessimistic. The Russian Government still ostensibly affirms its refusal to concede an indemnity in any form.

THE CHINESE BOYCOTT.

It is stated in Seattle that the Chinese boycott of American goods has paralysed the Pacific flour trade. Orders for September shipments have been cancelled.

REASONS FOR POSTPONEMENT.

London, August 30.

The Peace Conference at Portsmouth was postponed till Tuesday at the request of Mr. Takahira, who explained that he had received no information from Tokyo.

The Times' Portsmouth correspondent quotes a high Russian authority who says that a far stronger influence than President Roosevelt, namely that of England, is working for peace. A new treaty of alliance between England and Japan was signed not many days ago. This is one reason why new proposals may possibly be forthcoming at the Conference.

"NOT HOPELESS—BUT ALMOST."

London, August 30.

Mr. Takahira was interviewed at Portsmouth and asked if the situation was hopeless. He replied, not hopeless—but almost.

THE SINGAPORE DOCK SCHEME.

Sir Michael Hicks-Beach, the umpire in the Tanjong Pagar Dock arbitration, left New York on the 16th for Vancouver, en route for Singapore.

RUSSIAN MOBILIZATION.

The extensive mobilization of reservists at Riga and in other centres is considered significant.

RUSSIA MOBILIZING.

London, August 31.

The Tsar issued a proclamation on the 29th August ordering mobilization in 13 Governments in order to reinforce the army in the Far East. This proceeding was reported at Portsmouth.

THE CONFERENCE.

On Thursday Japan offered President Roosevelt to waive the question of an indemnity or reimbursement and to refer the question of the price of the half of Saghalien to arbitration. This was misunderstood at St. Petersburg, hence the delay in the negotiations.

[SPECIAL TELEGRAM.]

PEACE.

London, Aug. 29, 6.55 p.m.

Received 1.20 a.m. }
Delivered 9 p.m. } Aug. 30.

The Conference has arrived at a complete agreement.

[Received by the Imperial Military Headquarters on the afternoon of the 29th Aug.]

MOVEMENTS IN THE FIELD.

A Japanese force at 9 a.m. on the 27th drove back the enemy near Yulingtsz, which is 33 miles north-east of Hsiang-king. The enemy's force consisted of several hundred cavalry and infantry who retreated westward. The same day at 10 a.m. a battalion of Russians with 4 guns advanced towards Nanshanchintsz, which is 10 miles northwest of Yulingtsz, but was at once driven back by our men, who afterwards pursued them in the direction of Yukwanchiang. On the same day at 10 a.m. a regiment of Russian infantry opened an attack at a point 5 miles east of Ying-ching, but was at once repulsed and pursued. In the Taolu region, on the 27th, a Japanese force drove back several hundreds of the enemy's cavalry and occupied a point 20 miles S.E. of Taolu. Another force at noon occupied a point 15 miles S. of the same place and advanced thence towards Taolu. A third body of Japanese troops drove back a battalion of Russian infantry to a point 10 miles S.W. of Taolu and pursued them northward.

[Received by the Naval Head Quarters from Admiral Kataoka, Commander of the Northern Squadron; p.m. 25th instant.]

MORE NAVAL CAPTURES.

According to a report from the officer commanding the detached squadron sent to the Sea of Okhotsk some time ago, the squadron, on the 14th instant, captured an old-pattern gun, 3 rifles and some ammunition in the harbour of Ayang (on the north-west coast of the Sea of Okhotsk.—Ed. J.M.). The same squadron on the 17th instant seized 58 rifles and some ammunition in the harbour of Okhotsk. On the 13th instant in Saghalien Bay the squadron captured the British steamer Anteop, 1,486 tons, en route for Nikolaietsk (on the Amur.—Ed. J.M.).

[Report of the officer commanding the detached squadron sent to Kamchatka; received on the afternoon of the 25th.]

On the 16th instant this squadron captured in the harbour of Nikolisk in the Kommandersky Islands, the Russian transport Montara (2,562 tons).

[Received by the Naval Department; 27th a.m. from Admiral Kataoka, Commanding the Northern Squadron.]

NAVAL ACTION.

The detached squadron sent towards the Amur River having observed that the enemy had increased his forces at the guard-stations of Tsaoru and Lazareff, bombarded and destroyed those places.

(Received by the Naval Department.)

THE DISASTER IN THE INLAND SEA.

The transport Kinjo Maru, which was run down by the British steamer Baralong, had on board the cadres of a battalion of artillery and one company. Those that are known to be saved are: one second lieutenant, one surgeon, one veterinary surgeon, one sergeant-major and eighteen rank and file, besides two invalids. Of the crew the Master, eighteen sailors and two coolies were saved. Search is being made for the others.

(RECEIVED AT THE FOREIGN OFFICE.)

HOPEFUL BERLIN.

On the Berlin Exchange it is still believed that a peace convention will be speedily concluded between the Plenipotentiaries at Portsmouth. This has greatly influenced Japanese securities. For several days they have been gradually rising and on the 24th they reached 94. The price of the Russian 4½ per cents raised in Germany last spring has, on the contrary, remained stationary and now stands at 94.70.

THE CONFERENCE AND OTHER TOPICS.

The Novoe Vremya, the Slav, the Rassvied- chick and the Russ continue day by day to publish articles in the following sense:—"Russia is not a conquered country seeking peace. Her military force in Manchuria is not in the least degree debilitated. Inasmuch as Russia desires peace she does not grudge making to Japan any concessions within the limits of her honour and her integrity. But it is quite inconceivable that she should seek to obtain peace on such disgraceful terms as the cession of Saghalien and the re-imbursement of Japan's war expenditure."

Wolff's agency has published a telegram from Berlin which is said to embody the reply made by the German Chancellor to an inquiry addressed to him on the 26th inst. by the representative of a certain telegraph agency. The gist is as follows:—"From the commencement of President Roosevelt's action the German Emperor and the German Government have rendered what assistance they could in the cause of peace when an opportunity offered. Germany does not differ from America in wishing to terminate the danger and uneasiness inseparable from such a great war. The German Emperor and the German people most earnestly hope that President Roosevelt's efforts may be crowned with success."

The Russ of the 25th says:—"The result of the Palace Council held at Peterhoff is that the future of the peace conference is now hopeless. An Imperial proclamation will be subsequently issued, setting forth the facts of the conference."

According to the Slav and other newspapers the Russian Government will, in a few days, raise a loan to be called the "agricultural loan," the proceeds to be applied to bettering the condition of the farmers, which is essential for the purpose of improving the agricultural administration.

According to news from St. Petersburg the Tsar is disposed to grant a general amnesty simultaneously with the proclamation of the laws relating to the constitution.

The meeting of the Peace Plenipotentiaries, which was to have been held on the 28th inst., has been postponed till the 29th.

REINFORCEMENTS.

A Wolff's telegram despatched from St. Petersburg on the 28th says that the Minister of War, in accordance with Imperial instructions and for the purpose of increasing the forces in East Asia, issued orders for mobilization in Wilna and 12 other districts and at the same time directed that horses be requisitioned.

THE AMOY CUSTOMS RIOT.

The inhabitants of six districts south of Amoy have been much displeased at being placed under the control of the Amoy Customs, complaining of excessive imposts and the illegal methods of levying them. During the past week the mob made a threatening demonstration, and on the 30th ult. they sent round circulars calling on every one to stop trade pending some improvement in the Customs methods. The Chinese authorities have unsuccessfully endeavoured to restore order. On the 30th August all traders in Amoy closed their stores. On that day a body of rioters attacked the Customs House, which is in the English Settlement, and smashed all the boats. There was a struggle between the Customs House officials and the mob and the latter had three or four wounded. Things being so quiet 40 bluejackets were landed from a British man-of-war and are protecting the Customs in view of emergencies.

MAIL STRAHERS.

DEPT MAIL IS DUE.

From	Line	Steamer	Date
Hongkong	B. T. Co.	Hyades	M. Sept. 4
Europe	N. D. Lloyd	Rion	Sa. Sept. 9
Europe	B. T. Co.	Pleides	Sa. Sept. 9
America	P. M. Co.	Alongolia	Tu. Sept. 19
Europe	M. M. Co.	Polynesian	W. Sept. 23
Hongkong	P. M. Co.	Korea	Tu. Sept. 26
Hongkong	C. P. R. Co.	Yan. of China	M. Sept. 28
Hongkong	C. P. R. Co.	Coptic	F. Sept. 28
Hongkong	P. M. Co.	China	Sa. Sept. 28
Hongkong	C. P. R. Co.	Em. of Japan	Th. Sept. 29

Left San Francisco on the 26th ult.

NEXT MAIL LEAVES

For	Line	Steamer	Date
Europe	N. D. Lloyd	Preussen	Sa. Sept. 9
Hongkong	P. M. Co.	Siberia	Sa. Sept. 9
Europe	B. T. Co.	Hyades	Tu. Sept. 19
Hongkong	P. & A. Co.	Nicomedia	W. Sept. 23
Shanghai	N. Y. K.	Pennorlich	Th. Sept. 26
Seattle	N. Y. K.	Iyo Maru	F. Sept. 28
Europe	M. M. Co.	Ernest Simons	Fa. Sept. 9
Hongkong	B. T. Co.	Pleides	Su. Sept. 10
Hongkong	P. M. Co.	Monjolia	W. Sept. 13
America	P. M. Co.	Korea	Su. Sept. 17
Hongkong	C. P. R. Co.	Yan. of China	M. Sept. 18
America	O. & O. Co.	Coptic	Sa. Sept. 28
Vancouver	C. P. R. Co.	Em. of Japan	F. Sept. 29

LATEST SHIPPING.

ARRIVALS.

Candia , British steamer, 4,195, Owen Jones, 25th Aug.—London via ports, and Kobe, 23rd Aug. Mails and General.—P. & O. S.N. Co.	Wakanoura Maru , Japanese steamer, 1,556, J. Arakawa, 25th Aug.—Hakodate, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.
Achilles , British steamer, 4,484, Robt. C. Thompson, 25th Aug.—Liverpool via ports and Kobe 24th Aug. General.—Butterfield & Swire.	Anhui , British steamer, 1,350, A. H. Harris, 26th Aug.—Shanghai via ports, Mails and General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.
Peik , Norwegian steamer, 744, J. Lorentzen, 26th Aug.—Taku and Newchwang via ports, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.	Richmond , British steamer, 2,059, F. T. Nicolle, 26th Aug.—Muroran, Coal.—Hokkaido Tanko Kaisha.
Arbia , German steamer, 2,868, H. Metzenlin, 26th Aug.—Hongkong via ports, and Kobe 24th Aug. Mails and General.—P. & A. S.S. Co.	Raven , Norwegian steamer, 795, Edw. Th. E. Olsen, 26th Aug.—Tamsui, Rice.—Drabble & Co.
Syfang , German steamer, 1,147, U. Degener, 26th Aug.—Rangoon, Rice.—Simon Evers & Co.	Merionethshire , British steamer, 1,950, C. H. Burch, 26th Aug.—London via ports, and Kobe 25th Aug. General.—Samuel Samuel & Co.
Preussen , German steamer, 3,276, R. Meyer, 26th Aug.—Hamburg and Bremen via ports, and Kobe 25th Aug. Mails and General.—H. Ahrens and Co. Nachf.	Belgian King , British steamer, 2,153, J. Hayton, 27th Aug.—Kobe, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.
Sleipner , Norwegian steamer, 1,387, Holm, 28th Aug.—Moj, Coal.—Drabble & Co.	Empress of Japan , British steamer, 3,003, H. Pybus, 28th Aug.—Vancouver, B.C., 14th Aug. Mails and General.—C. P. R. Co.
Peachon , British steamer, 1,721, John James, 28th Aug.—Middlesbro via ports, and Hongkong, 20th Aug. General.—Dodwell & Co., Ltd.	Skuld , Norwegian steamer, 947, Olof Odd, 27th Aug.—Moj, 25th Aug. Coal.—Asada.
Persia , Austrian steamer, 3,843, P. Craglietto, 28th Aug.—Trieste via ports, and Shanghai, 24th Aug. Mails and General.—Heller Bros.	Skamstad , Norwegian steamer, 860, O. Hansen, 28th Aug.—Yokkaichi, 28th Aug. General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.
Machao , British steamer, 4,277, G. W. Long, 29th Aug.—Glasgow and Liverpool via ports, and Kobe 28th Aug. General.—Butterfield & Swire.	Manchuria , American steamer, 8,750, J. W. Saunders, 29th Aug.—Hongkong via ports, and Kobe, 28th Aug. Mails and General.—P. M. S.S. Co.
Seneca , British steamer, 3,171, W. Grimes, 29th Aug.—Shanghai, General.—Standard Oil Co.	Aldershot , British steamer, 1,354, W. W. Adam, 29th Aug.—Kobe, 27th Aug. Ballast.—Dodwell & Co., Ltd.
Higo Maru , Japanese steamer, 882, N. Nielsen, 29th Aug.—Yokkaichi, 29th Aug. General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Forwhellan, British steamer, 1,640, Turner, 29th Aug.—Middlesbro. and London via ports, and Kobe, 27th Aug. General.—Dodwell & Co., Ltd.

Deramore, Norwegian steamer, 1,496, Oleishvrig, 30th Aug.—Awamori, Timber.—Tanmichi & Co.

Woodford, British steamer, 1,860, Jas. Seddon, 30th Aug.—Muroran, Coal.—Hokkaido Tanko Kaisha.

Frya, Norwegian steamer, 1,149, R. Pawlsen, 30th Aug.—Anping, General.—Yamagata-ya.

Bjorn, Norwegian steamer, 722, A. N. Christensen, 30th Aug.—Wakamatsu, Coal.—Drabble & Co.

Babelsberg, German steamer, 1,378, H. Wendt, 30th Aug.—Formosa, General.—Osaka Shosen Kaisha.

Oopack, British steamer, 2,517, J. Barber, 31st Aug.—Glasgow and Liverpool via ports, and Kobe, 29th Aug. General.—Butterfield & Swire.

Braemar, British steamer, 2,316, S. L. Saxby, 31st Aug.—Kobe, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Empress of India, British steamer, 3,003, E. Beedham, 31st Aug.—Hongkong via ports, and Kobe, 30th Aug. Mails and General.—C. P. R. Co.

Cape Corrientes, British steamer, 1,660, Jas. Ishester, 31st Aug.—Kobe via Shiotsu, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Abergeldie, British steamer, 2,438, Keith, 31st Aug.—Antwerp via Suez, and Singapore, 17th Aug. General.—C. Illies & Co.

Samara, British steamer, 1,790, W. Lewis, 31st Aug.—Muroran, Coal.—Hokkaido Tanko Kaisha.

Siberia, American steamer, 5,655, J. T. Smith, 31st Aug.—San Francisco via Honolulu, 16th Aug. Mails and General.—P. M. S.S. Co.

DEPARTURES.

Inga, Norwegian steamer, 578, O. P. Spinnang, 29th Aug.—Wakamatsu, Ballast.—Drabble & Co.

Higo Maru, Japanese steamer, 882, N. Nielsen, 29th Aug.—Yokkaichi, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Tartar, British steamer, 2,768, W. Davison, 29th Aug.—Hongkong via ports, Mails and General.—C. P. R. Co.

Iyo Maru, Japanese steamer, 3,918, Wm. Thompson, 29th Aug.—Kobe, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Armand Behic, French steamer, 2,819, Guinore, 29th Aug.—Marseilles via ports, Mails and General.—M. M. S.S. Co.

Corn Exchange, British steamer, 2,476, H. C. Bacham, 29th Aug.—Kobe, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Unda, Norwegian steamer, 879, A. Hansen, 29th Aug.—Kobe, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Pavnee, British steamer, 1,167, John G. Cartwright, 27th Aug.—Kobe, General.—Dodwell & Co., Ltd.

Oro, British steamer, 2,147, W. Ransome Coleman, 27th Aug.—Otaru via ports, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Arabia, German steamer, 2,868, H. Metzenlin, 27th Aug.—Portland, Oreg. Mails and General.—P. & A. S.S. Co.

Saxonia, German steamer, 3,316, Hoppe, 27th Aug.—Kobe, General.—C. Illies & Co.

Empress of Japan, British steamer, 3,003, H. Pybus, 28th Aug.—Hongkong via ports, Mails and General.—C. P. R. Co.

Beutels, British steamer, 2,509, J. Potter, 28th Aug.—London via ports, General.—Cornes & Co.

Peik, Norwegian steamer, 744, J. Lorentzen, 28th Aug.—Taku and Newchwang via ports, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Wakanoura Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,556, T. Arakawa, 28th Aug.—Kobe, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Candia, British steamer, 4,195, Owen Jones, 29th Aug.—London and Antwerp via ports, Mails and General.—P. & O. S.N. Co.

Skamstad, Norwegian steamer, 860, O. Hansen, 29th Aug.—Yokkaichi, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Pakling, British steamer, 3,875, G. A. Rodway, 29th Aug.—London, Amsterdam and Antwerp via ports, General.—Butterfield & Swire.

Lord Antrim, British steamer, 1,954, A. Cordner, 29th Aug.—Moj, General.—Yamashita.

Brid, Norwegian steamer, 645, J. Folkman, 29th Aug.—Wakamatsu, Ballast.—Drabble & Co.

Scandia, German steamer, 3,135, von Doehren, 29th Aug.—Havre and Hamburg via ports, General.—C. Illies & Co.

Belgian King, British steamer, 2,153, J. Hayton, 29th Aug.—Otaru via ports, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Ganges, British steamer, 2,721, W. Sibbald, 29th Aug.—Kobe via Ujina and Moj, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Ashui, British steamer, 1,350, A. H. Harris, 30th Aug.—Shanghai via ports, Mails and General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Manchuria, American steamer, 8,750, J. W. Saunders, 30th Aug.—San Francisco via Honolulu, Mails and General.—P. M. S. S. Co.

Skuld, Norwegian steamer, 947, Olaf Odd, 31st Aug.—Karatsu, Ballast.—M. Asada.

Steipner, Norwegian steamer, 1,387, Holm, 31st Aug.—Mojji, Ballast.—Drabble & Co.

Richmond, British steamer, 2,059, F. T. Nicolle, 31st Aug.—Muroran, Coal.—Hokkaido Tanko Kaisha.

Hogo Maru, Japanese steamer, 882, N. Nielsen, 31st Aug.—Yokkaichi, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Pavia, Austrian steamer, 3,843, P. Craglietto, 31st Aug.—Trieste via ports, General.—Heller Bros.

PASSENGERS.

ARRIVED.

Per British steamer Tartar, from Vancouver B.C.:—Mr. R. Morris, Mr. and Mrs. F. C. Bowles, Miss M. L. Mackenzie, Mrs. M. L. Edwards, Mr. H. J. Rinderkuecht, Mr. F. W. Field, For Shanghai:—Mr. J. A. McLaughlin, For Hongkong:—Mr. E. J. Evans, Miss M. Jarrell, Mr. J. N. Anderson, Mrs. A. Vanscoy, Mrs. Corrington and 2 children, Rev. and Mrs. J. E. Snook, Dr. and Mrs. Preston and child, Mr. and Mrs. F. K. Stickle, Mrs. H. L. Strong, Mrs. E. Farrow, Mrs. Sun, Mrs. E. M. Morrison, Miss A. Wallace and Mr. and Mrs. J. Salvador in cabin; 2 in steerage.

Per German steamer Pessen, from Hamburg and Bremen via ports:—H. H. Prince and Princess Arisugawa, Mr. M. Saito, Mr. S. Ito, Capt. K. Osawa, Major K. Hishida, Mr. Kinsaku Maruo, Dr. J. Mimura, Mrs. Koto Hashiguchi, Mr. K. Takahashi, Mr. Goncalves Pereira, Mr. and Mrs. Terry, Mr. B. A. Hammond, Mr. J. O. Reynolds, Mr. O. Becker, Mr. and Mrs. Miss Humann, Mr. Camborn, Mr. and Mrs. J. Ho, Mr. Bandow, Mr. Hoinann, Mr. and Mrs. Eastman, Mrs. Summers and baby, Mr. F. W. Franks, Mrs. Schmidt, Mr. and Mrs. Dell Clarke, Mr. H. Lefebvre, Prof. Fischer, Mrs. Fischer, Mrs. A. C. Hawkins, Mrs. C. R. Seit and baby, Mr. W. F. Gray, Mr. W. W. Putane, 2 Japanese officers, Mr. Alfr. Pahl, Mr. Otto Reiffen, Mr. Dury, Mr. H. L. Cadish, Mr. Wee Chow Sian, Mr. Wee Kuei Gai, Rev. W. J. Leverett, Mr. and Mrs. R. Pescio, Mr. R. Kani, Mr. R. Heise, Mrs. R. L. Dowlin, Mr. K. Kobasli, Mr. K. Holzberger, Mr. K. Mida, Mr. K. Karamula, Mrs. Kojima Asa, Mr. K. Fuyo, 18 Japanese soldiers, Mr. E. V. Hartmann, Mr. E. E. Haveo, Mrs. S. Kurosaki, Mrs. Ebe Mural, and Mrs. Suen Kah in cabin.

Per British steamer Empress of Japan, from Vancouver, B.C.:—Mr. W. L. Greenalls, Mr. A. F. Bory, Mr. C. A. Bullitude, Mr. and Mrs. Woodward, Misses Woodward (2), Mrs. E. Clement, son & 2 daughters, Mr. G. Borkowski, Mr. G. P. Mumsley, Mr. G. Rosenthal, Mr. and Mrs. von Briesen, Mr. E. Hahn, Mr. C. M. Hong, Prince Eniwha, Miss A. Timberlake, Mrs. A. Pinent, Miss A. W. Allan, Mr. J. R. Geary, Mr. and Mrs. Blake, Mr. F. Farman, Mr. H. Rose, Mr. C. G. Fletcher, Miss M. A. Robertson, Miss N. A. Veazey, Mr. J. G. Fletcher, Mr. R. Ro, Mr. N. G. Evans, Mr. K. Ando, Mr. T. Medford, and Mr. J. A. Kammerer, in cabin; Mr. J. Markers, and Mr. T. A. Lord, in intermediate; 5 Japanese, in steerage. For Kobe:—Mr. J. R. Frampton, in cabin; Mr. G. Horn, in intermediate; 7 Japanese, in steerage. For Shanghai:—Mr. W. O. Leitch, Mr. H. Madier, Miss E. M. Gough, Rev. and Mrs. D. McGillivray and child, Rev. E. J. Lee, Dr. E. L. Woodward, Mr. W. G. Bayne, Mr. R. H. G. Moore, Mr. A. S. Harvey, Mr. F. Clayton, Mrs. R. Clayton, Mr. J. R. Patterson, and Mrs. J. Ling, in cabin. For Hongkong:—Mr. C. Bridgewater, Mr. A. W. Bain, Miss E. B. Ross, Mr. J. M. Ross, Mr. and Mrs. J. Ross, and Mr. H. Morgan Brown, in cabin; Mr. F. C. Toy, Mr. Chin Gee Hee, and Mr. Chang Gue Boe, in intermediate; 169 Chinese, in steerage.

Per American steamer Manchuria, from Hongkong via ports:—Judge E. E. McCall and wife, Miss E. G. McCall, Miss C. M. McCall, Miss Alice Walsh, Mr. M. Sugimoto, Mrs. T. K. Kow and ayah, Mr. W. P. Scott, Mr. I. Taguchi, Mr. E. W. Rutter, Lieut. F. C. McConnell, U.S.A., Mr. F. E. Shaw, Mr. E. Peterson, Mr. C. S. Lee, Mrs. C. S. Lee and 2 infants, Mr. W. P. Hubbard, Mr. J. S. Van Buren, Mrs. J. S. Van Buren and ayah, Dr. A. G. Smith, Mrs. E. H. Smith, Mr. S. Wolff, and Mr. E. M. Thomas, in cabin. For Honolulu:—Miss S. L. Hyington, in cabin. For San Francisco:—Mr. Juan R. Alvano, Mr. Adriano Alcazar, Miss G. F. Asturias, Mr. Angel Arguelles, Mr. Antonio de las Alas, Mr. Geo. E. Anderson, Miss E. C. Adams, Mr. Santiago Bautista, Mr. Francisco Benitez, Mr. J. H. Beziat, Mr. L. J. Campbell and wife, Mr. T. H. Gulenden, Mr. Mariano Cameno, Mr. Adriano Cruz, Dr. Chung Wan Fang, Mr. Manro M. Datu, Mr. E.

H. Denike, Mr. Silverio Dinosio, Miss Pilar Elumba, Mr. Manuel Forondo, Mr. Ambrosio Gison, Mr. F. R. Cadd, Mr. Fred Goble, Mr. Rufino Garcia, Mr. P. Gutierrez, Mr. Edward W. Hill, Mr. Clemente Hidalgo, Mrs. S. Herzog, Mr. J. J. Healy, Mrs. E. S. Joseph, Dr. H. D. Kneeder and wife, Dr. W. Kampratt, Rev. F. A. Kellar, Mrs. F. A. Kellar and maid, Mr. Ramon Licup, Mr. Fabrian Lopez, Mr. Mauricio Lazo, Mr. John Lakeness, Mr. Thos. W. Meacham, Mr. R. C. McGregor, Mrs. W. W. Murphy and child, Mr. S. S. McVay and wife, Mr. Federico J. Munoz, Mr. Gregorio Nuque, Mr. Victor Oblesan, Mr. W. C. Ogan, Mr. Camilio Cruz, Mr. Maurice J. Oteyza, Mr. Juan Piedad, Mr. Daniel de la Paz, Mr. Claro Pendon, Mr. Francisco Pena, Mr. H. J. Robinson, Mr. Camilio Reyes, Mr. A. L. Ramoso, Miss Olivia Salamanca, Mr. J. C. Schultz, Mr. Phil Seldner, Mr. Pedro Sindico, Mr. Oscar Soriano, Mr. Proceso Sanchez, Mr. J. Suckermann, Mr. Pedro Tuazon, Mr. Antonio T. Iedo, Mr. H. S. Townsend, Mr. Teodilo Topacio, Mr. Mariano Tolentino, Dr. Ying Young Tsui, Mr. J. Underwood, Mr. J. W. Vreeland and wife, Mr. Vicente Villanueva, Mr. W. E. Wilson, Mr. James Wilson, Mrs. C. F. Wiley, Mr. Geo. B. Wicks, Mr. W. B. Wright, Mr. W. R. Watson, Mr. G. P. Wolfiron, Mrs. Lilla Wunderlich, and Dr. Yuen Ho Kan in cabin.

Per British steamer Empress of India, from Hongkong via ports:—Mr. C. C. Cline, Mrs. M. Dobbins, F. R. Hathway, Mrs. Crockett-Imboden, Mr. T. C. Scrutton, Capt. C. Fenton, Mrs. Hughes, Mr. C. S. Leavenworth, Mr. A. Taylor, Mr. and Mrs. H. Parsons, Mr. T. B. Law, Mr. R. M. Lopes, Mr. O. Fischer, Mr. R. E. Toeg, Miss E. Janssen, Mr. L. Andersen, Mr. L. H. N. Stewart, R.N., Miss J. Adams, Mr. H. Cunliffe Owen, A. P. Simpson, Mr. C. Thiel, Rev. Dr. J. L. Levy, W. Broad, Mr. and Mrs. W. Schneider, Mr. W. Araki, For Yokohama:—Mr. H. T. Wilgress, Comdt. Withrop, Mr. Mr. A. G. Potter, Dr. and Mrs. Hunter, Mr. and Mrs. Forbes and child, Mr. and Mrs. Currie, Mr. and Mrs. P. V. Davies, Mrs. Anton, Mr. A. H. Collins, Mr. and Mrs. Whittle, Mr. H. Von Rucker, Mrs. Thoresen, Mr. H. Kronenberg, and Dr. and Mrs. Mailr, Mr. and Mrs. Rudolph, children and nurse, Mr. H. A. J. Macray, Mr. and Mrs. Cornford, Miss E. Goudge, Mr. and Mrs. Russell, and children, Mr. H. G. White, Mr. H. A. E. Jathne, Mr. and Mrs. F. E. Barto and Dr. G. B. Pearl in cabin.

Per American steamer Siberia, from San Francisco via Honolulu:—Mr. F. E. Barr, Mr. C. Bates, Prof. Borden P. Bowne, Mrs. Borden P. Bowne, Mr. E. M. Brookfield, Mr. W. A. Dowley, Miss Daisy Ena, Mr. R. A. Eddy, Mrs. R. A. Eddy and maid, Miss S. K. Elverson, Mr. A. J. Frey, Mr. G. W. Fouke, Mrs. G. W. Fouke, Mr. R. C. Gillis, Mr. Robt. Goelt and Valet, Mrs. Robt. Goelt and Maid, Mr. Leo Goodkind, Miss M. Hayden, Mr. E. H. Harriman and Valet, Mrs. E. H. Harriman and Maid, Miss Mary Harriman, Miss Carol Harriman, Miss Cornelia Harriman, Master Roland Harriman, Master Averell Harriman, Mrs. B. C. Howard, Miss Gladys Howard, Mr. E. R. Kellogg, Mr. L. O. Kellogg, Dr. W. G. Lyle, Mr. J. C. McKnight, Mr. John G. Meyere, Mr. David Minkinen, Mrs. David Minkinen, Miss Ida T. Morrison, Mr. H. Neill, Mr. H. P. Boach, Mrs. H. P. Boach and Son, Mr. R. P. Schwiner and Valet, Rev. D. P. Schneider, Rev. W. J. Seiple, Mrs. W. J. Seiple, Mr. J. F. Steiner, Mr. J. Suzuki, Mr. K. Winter, Miss C. Bartholomew, Miss Julia Larned, Miss C. C. Phelps, Mr. Edward Schmal, Mr. L. Rosenfeld, Mr. A. Yamaguchi, Mrs. K. Matsubara, Mr. John Ena, Mrs. John Ena, Mr. Quincey Pond, Mr. D. G. May, Mr. R. Seki, Mr. B. H. Geits, Mr. E. Poor, Mrs. E. Poor, Mr. M. A. Cheek, Mrs. M. A. Cheek and two children, Mrs. J. P. Sisson and Infant, Mr. J. P. Sisson, Mr. Gustav Pfordt, For Kobe:—Miss Christine B. Cameron, Miss Maria L. Chase, Miss Lucy Floy Donaldson, Miss Anna R. Coffin, Rev. Geo. S. McCune, Mrs. Geo. S. McCune, Rev. E. F. McFarland, Mrs. F. F. McFarland, Miss Louisa A. Smith, Miss Nettie Trumbauer, For Nagasaki:—Capt. Robt. H. Balf, U.S.A., Mrs. Katherine Willsher, For Shanghai:—Miss Abbie Chapin, Miss May H. Chapin, Mrs. W. B. Hamilton, Miss M. L. Hamilton, Mr. J. L. Hendrey, Mrs. J. L. Hendrey and two children, Miss E. V. Inness, Mr. L. G. Martin, Miss M. C. Moffatt, Mr. B. H. Pierce, For Hongkong:—Mr. S. J. Best, Mr. E. C. Best, Mr. H. O. Boyer, Mr. W. B. Burt, Miss Mary E. Coleman, Mrs. F. Dowley, Mr. Chester C. Fuson, Mr. W. H. Gallagher, Comdr. J. C. Gilmore, U.S.N., Mr. J. M. Gambill, Mr. E. C. Gee, Mrs. E. C. Gee, Miss P. Grandstand, Mrs. E. P. Hammersley, Mr. E. R. Hay, Mr. Kirby S. Heck, Mrs. Kirby S. Heck, Mrs. F. P. Holcomb, Miss Marion Huff, Mr. Thos. G. Ingalls, Miss H. E. Jones, Mr. Clinton N. Laird, Mr. J. A. Katsch, Miss A. L. Lowrie, Dr. Isabella Mack, Mr. Chas. H. Magee, Mr. W. W. Marquardt, Mrs. W. W. Marquardt, Mr. Ralph McCullough, Miss Maud H. Mill, Rev. J. R. Peale, Mrs. J. R. Peale, Rev. P. W. Picher, Mr. O. E. Pomeroy, Miss Mayme Quinn, Mr. W. J. Scruton, Miss Margaret Strathie, Mr. Rudolph I. Turner, Mrs. Rudolph I. Turner, Mr.

Chas. A. Weige, Mrs. Chas. A. Weise, Mrs. V. O. Willis and two children, Mr. J. G. Williamson, Mr. Geo. H. Wright, Mrs. Geo. H. Wright, Mr. S. J. Wright, Mr. Lee Pal, in cabin.

DEPARTED.

Per British steamer Tartar, for Hongkong via ports:—Mr. D. Nichol, Mr. W. R. P. Scott, Mr. A. Hamilton, Mr. J. H. Baker, Mr. P. N. H. Jones, Mrs. P. N. H. Jones, Lt. J. T. Clark and Mr. W. F. Lumsden in cabin; 3 in steerage.

Per British steamer Anhui, from Shanghai, via ports:—Mr. E. M. Platt, in cabin.

Per French steamer Armand Belic, for Marseilles, via ports:—Mr. Richter, Mr. and Mrs. Schultz, Mr. J. B. Roche, Mr. E. Pugh, Mr. Hayberg, Mr. and Mrs. Saumarez, Mr. W. M. Hick, Mr. and Mrs. Bougonin, Mr. and Miss Strange, Mr. T. Kono, Mr. Moriz Eichborn, Mr. Alfredo Rizzini, Mrs. L. Camera, Mr. Gerimal, Mr. C. Tornaghi, Mr. Woo Gong Fang, Mr. and Mrs. Raymond, 2 Chinese, and 76 Russians, in cabin; 3 Chinese and 102 Russians, in steerage.

Per British steamer Empress of Japan, for Hongkong via ports:—Mr. F. A. Crailsham, Misses Harris (2), Mr. G. Bidwell, Dr. and Mrs. Wright, Mrs. Groundwater, Mrs. and Miss D. MacHaffie, Mr. A. L. Skin, Mr. B. Moss, Mrs. B. Moss and son, Mr. Wong Lin Ting, Miss Mendelson, Mr. and Mrs. S. D. Hepburn, Mr. and Mrs. Schwyzer, Mr. A. Hahn, Mr. A. Linton, Mr. H. S. Sweeting, Mr. Percy Tilley, Mrs. Townsend and child, Capt. C. A. Hunt, Mr. E. Nissim, Mr. S. Nissim, Mrs. G. D. Clarke, Count A. Matsura, Mr. A. Diesking, Mr. and Mrs. J. Cooper, Mr. J. Morgan Phillips, Mr. A. Shewan, and Misses K. and E. Hall, in cabin; Mr. S. Izima in intermediate; 2 Japanese in steerage.

Per American steamer Manchuria, for San Francisco via Honolulu:—Miss E. C. Adams, Mr. A. de las Alas, Mr. Adriano Alcazar, Mr. D. C. Alexander, Mr. Juan R. Alvano, Mr. Geo. E. Anderson, Mr. N. Aoki, Mr. Angel Arguelles, Miss C. F. Asturias, Mr. R. Han, Mr. W. S. Bartlett, Mrs. W. S. Bartlett, Mrs. J. A. Bartlett, Master Gordon Bartlett, Miss M. F. Bartlett, Mr. Santiago Bautista, Mr. T. Becker, Mr. R. J. Beechiner, Mr. H. H. Bigelow, Mr. Francisco Benitez, Capt. H. Bettelheim and servant, Mr. J. H. Beziat, Mr. John Boit, Mrs. John Boit and maid, Capt. S. F. Bottoms, Mr. G. J. Brockman, Miss S. L. Byington, Mr. Mariano Cameno, Mr. L. J. Campbell, Mrs. L. J. Campbell, Mr. T. H. Cullenham, Mr. Adriano Cruz, Mr. Mauro M. Datu, Mr. E. H. Denicke, Mr. Silverio Dinosio, Mr. A. M. Easton, Miss A. M. Easton and maid, Master Lawrence Easton, Mrs. M. H. Eddy, Miss Pilar Elumba, Dr. C. E. Ferguson, Mrs. C. E. Ferguson, Mr. Manuel Forondo, Mr. Rufino Garcia, Mr. F. R. Gadd, Mr. Ambrosio Gison, Mr. F. A. Glasgow, Mr. Fred. Goble, Mr. N. A. Gribnitzky, Mr. W. J. Gudrie, Mr. P. Gutierrez, Mr. J. J. Healy, Mrs. S. Herzog, Mr. Clemente Hidalgo, Mr. Edward W. Hill, Dr. Yuen Ho Kan, Mr. Frank H. Houlder, Mrs. Frank H. Houlder, Mr. A. G. Hoyt, Miss Horstmann, Mr. Hong Quon, Mrs. Hong Quon and infant, Master Chup Hong Quon, Master Foo Hong Quon, Miss Ngan Hong Quon, Miss Sai Hong Quon, Mrs. E. S. Joseph, Dr. W. Kampratt, Mr. H. Kawasaki, Mr. W. J. Kehoe, Miss May Kehoe, Rev. F. A. Kellar, Mrs. F. A. Kellar and servant, Mr. C. G. King and 2 servants, Mr. S. Kinoshita, Mrs. S. Kinoshita, Dr. H. D. Kneeder, Mrs. H. D. Kneeder, Mr. T. D. Knight, Mrs. T. D. Knight, Master Duerson Knight, Mr. B. Dobayashi, Mr. John Lakeness, Mr. Mauricio Lazo, Mr. Ramon Licup, Mr. Cheuk Poy Lum, Mr. Fabrian Lopez, Mr. Thos. W. Meacham, Mrs. E. T. McCormick, Mr. R. C. McGregor, Mr. S. S. McVey, Mrs. S. S. McVey, Mr. H. Minakuchi, Mr. S. Mori, Mr. I. Morimura, Mrs. I. Morimura, Mr. K. Morimura, Mrs. K. Morimura, Mr. Federico J. Munoz, Mrs. W. M. Murphy and child, Mr. K. Nakano, Mr. Master S. Nakano, Mr. G. F. Norton, Mr. Gregorio Nuque, Mr. Victor Oblesan, Mr. W. C. Ogan, Mr. Camilio Osias, Mr. Maurice J. Oteyza, Mr. Daniel dela Paz, Mr. Claro Pendon, Mr. Francisco Pena, Mr. Juan Piedad, Mr. G. E. Rockwood, Mr. E. I. Ramoso, Mr. Camilio Reyes, Miss S. Robertson, Mr. H. J. Robinson, Mr. Proceso Sanchez, Mrs. O. B. Sarre and 2 maids, Miss Olivia Salamancas, Mr. Frank Seaman, Mr. P. Seldner, Mr. Alfred Schellenberger, Mr. Carl Scheuer, Mrs. Carl Scheuer, Mr. J. B. Schulz, Mr. Pedro Sindico, Miss A. Slater, Mr. Appleton Smith, Mr. Oscar Soriano, Mr. Ernest G. Stillman, Mr. J. Suckermann, Mr. M. Sugimoto and servant, Mr. F. M. Swansy, Dr. J. B. Thomas, Mrs. J. R. Thomas, Mr. F. O. Thompson, Mr. O. P. Thompson, Mr. Antonio Toledo, Mr. Tedul Topacio, Mr. Mariano Tolentino, Mr. H. S. Townsend, Mr. Pedro Tuazon, Mr. Lum Tuck Chee, Mr. P. J. Uchmann, Mr. J. M. Underwood, Mr. Chas. Van Buren, Mr. Vicente Villanueva, Mr. J. W. Vreeland, Mrs. J. W. Vreeland, Mr. M. Wake, Mrs. M. Wake, Dr. Chung Wan Fang, Mr. W. R. R. Watson, Mr. Jas. Wilson, Mr. W. E. Wilson, Mr. C. F. Wiley, Mr.

Original from

Geo. B. Wicks, Mr. G. P. Wolfson, Mr. W. B. Wright, Mrs. C. A. L. Yate, Mrs. L. Wunderlich, Mr. H. Yamamoto, Mr. I. Yoshida, Dr. Tsing Ying Young, and Mr. T. H. Yua, in cabin.

SILK SHIPPERS.

Raw and Waste Silk shipped per steamer
Armand Behic:-

	RAW.			WASTE.
	Marseilles	Lyons	Milan	Marseilles	Italy	Russia.
Siber, Wolff & Co.	—	32	40	—	—	—
Otto Sirelli & Co.	—	26	—	—	—	—
H. Bernardin & Co.	—	16	—	—	—	—
Carlowitz & Co.	—	5	—	—	5	—
Sieber & Co.	59	—	—	—	—	—
Boyer, Mayet Guil-	—	—	—	—	—	—
lee.	5	—	—	—	—	—
Sulzer Rudolph & Co.	33	—	—	—	—	—
Dell'Oro & Co.	—	—	—	44	—	—
Jardine, Matheson	—	—	—	—	—	—
& Co.	20	—	—	5	—	—
	117	69	40	49	—	—

Silk shippers by steamship Arabia, for Portland, Or., 27th inst:-

	Bales.
R. Schmidt-Scharff & Co.	70
China and Japan Trading Co.	39
F. Strahler & Co.	30

Total 139

Per British steamer Candia, for London via ports:-
—Raw Silk for Europe, 20 bales.

Silk shippers by steamship Manchuria, for San Francisco on the 30th inst:-

	Bales.
Vivanti Bros.	246
Jardine, Matheson & Co.	66
Mitsui Bussan Kaisha.	287
Kiito Gomei Kaisha.	265
Doshia Kaisha.	26

Total 890

VESSELS ON THE BERTH.

For KRELUK, via Moji (from Kobe), 3rd, and 18th every month, at Noon, the "NAGATO MARU."—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

For KRELUK, via Moji (from Kobe), 10th and 25th every month, at Noon, the "KOSHUN MAOR."—Osaka Shosen Kaisha.

For CANADA, United States, and Europe, via Vancouver, B.C., Sept. 1st, at Noon, the "EMPEROR OF INDIA."—C. P. R. S.S. Co.

For GENOA, Marseilles and Liverpool, Sept. 1st, the "ACHILLES."—Butterfield & Swire.

For VICTORIA, Seattle, Tacoma, Wash., Sept. 1st, the "MACHAON."—Butterfield & Swire.

For HONGKONG, via Kobe, Nagasaki, Shanghai, and Manila, Sept. 1st, the "MINNESOTA."—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

For TRIESTE, via Kobe, Hongkong, Singapore, Penang, Colombo, Bombay, Karachi, Aden, Suez, Port Said, and Fiume, about September 1st, the "PERSIA."—Heller Bros.

For BREMEN and Hamburg, via ports, Sept. 2nd, at 9 a.m., the "PREUSSEN."—H. Ahrens & Co., Nachf.

For BONIN ISLANDS via ports, Sept. 5th, the "HIJOCO MARU."—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

For HONGKONG, via Kobe, (Inland Sea), Nagasaki, and Shanghai, about Sept. 5th, the "SIBERIA."—P. M. S.S. Co.

For VICTORIA, B.C., and Tacoma, Wash., Sept. 5th, the "HYADES."—Dodwell & Co., Ltd.

For HONGKONG via Kobe, Moji, Nagasaki and Shanghai, Sept. 6th, the "NICOMEDIA."—P. & A. S.S. & Co.

For SYDNEY, via Hongkong and New Guinea, Sept. 5th, the "WILLRHAD."—H. Ahrens & Co., Nachf.

For SHANGHAI, via Kobe, Moji, and Nagasaki, Sept. 7th, at 2 p.m., the "BENVOLICH."—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

For SEATTLE, Wash., via Victoria, B.C., Sept. 8th, at 2 p.m., the "IVO MARU."—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

For NEW YORK, via ports, and Suez Canal, Sept. 8th, the "SENECA."—Standard Oil Co.

For MARSEILLES, London, and Antwerp, via Kobe, Moji, Hongkong, Singapore, Penang, Colombo, and Port Said, Sept. 9th, at Noon, the "BAROTSE."—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

For LONDON, Amsterdam and Antwerp, Sept. 12th, at Daylight, the "ANTENOR."—Butterfield & Swire.

For HONGKONG, via Kobe, Moji, and Manila, about Sept. 10th, the "PLEIADES."—Dodwell & Co., Ltd.

For MARSEILLES, via ports, and Shanghai, Sept. 9th, at 7 a.m., the "ERNEST SIMONS."—M. M. S.S. Co.

For MARSKILLES, London, and Antwerp, via Kobe, Shanghai, Hongkong, Straits, Colombo, and Port Said, Sept. 12th, at Daylight, the "CEYLON."—P. & O. S.N. Co.

For HAVRE, Hamburg and Bremen via ports, Sept. 14th, at Daylight, the "SILESIA."—C. Illies & Co.

For NEW YORK, via ports, and Suez Canal, Sept. 16th, the "VANDALIA."—Carnegie & Co.

For SAN FRANCISCO, via Honolulu, Sept. 17th, at 3 p.m., the "KOREA."—P. M. S.S. Co.

For HONGKONG, via Kobe, Inland Sea, Nagasaki, and Shanghai, about Sept. 18th, the "EMPEROR OF CHINA."—Canadian Pacific Railway Co.

For AUSTRALIA and New Zealand Sept. 22nd, the "CHINGTU."—Butterfield & Swire.

For CANADA, United States, and Europe, via Vancouver, B.C., Sept. 23rd, the "TARTAR."—Canadian Pacific Railway Co.

For SAN FRANCISCO, via Honolulu, Sept. 23rd, the "COPTIC."—O. & O. S.S. Co.

For AUSTRALIA, via ports (from Kobe), Sept. 26th, the "AUSTRALIAN."—Carnegie & Co.

For HONGKONG, via Kobe, Inland Sea, Nagasaki, and Shanghai, about Oct. 7th, the "ATHENIAN."—Canadian Pacific Railway Co.

For HONGKONG, via Kobe, (Inland Sea), Nagasaki, and Manila, about Oct. 8th, the "DORIC."—O. & O. S.S. Co.

SHIPPING IN YOKOHAMA.

STEAMERS.

Achilles, British steamer, 4,484, Robt. C. Thompson, 25th Aug.—Liverpool via ports, General.—Butterfield & Swire.

Aldershot, British steamer, 1,354, W. W. Adam, 29th Aug.—Kobe, Ballast.—Dodwell & Co., Ltd.

Auchenblae, British steamer, 2,597, Geo. Mair, 15th Aug.—New York via Suez and ports, General.—Dodwell & Co., Ltd.

Babelsberg, German steamer, 1,378, H. Wendt, 30th Aug.—Formosa, General.—Osaka Shosen Kaisha.

Braemar, British steamer, 2,316, S. L. Saxby, 30th Aug.—Kobe, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Rjukan, Norwegian steamer, 722, A. N. Christensen, 30th Aug.—Wakamatsu, Coal.—Drabble & Co.

Cape Corrientes, British steamer, 1,660, Jas. Isbester, 31st Aug.—Kobe via Shioitsu, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Carl Menzell, German steamer, 984, G. Cornand, 3rd Aug.—Manila, P.I., Sugar.—Simon Evers & Co.

Deramone, Norwegian steamer, 1,496, Oloshuvig, 30th Aug.—Awonori, Timber.—Taninichi & Co.

Frya, Norwegian steamer, 1,149, R. Pawlsen, 30th Aug.—Anping, General.—Yamagata-ya.

Machao, British steamer, 4,277, G. W. Long, 29th Aug.—Glasgow and Liverpool via ports, General.—Butterfield & Swire.

Monkseaton, British steamer, 1,776, Davies, 21st May.—Antwerp via Kobe, 19th May, General.—Dodwell & Co., Ltd.

Oceano, British steamer, 1,739, D. A. Cave, 18th July.—Liverpool via ports, General.—Dodwell & Co., Ltd.

Oopack, British steamer, 2,517, J. Barber, 31st Aug.—Glasgow and Liverpool via ports, General.—Butterfield & Swire.

Freussen, German steamer, 3,950, R. Meyer, 26th Aug.—Hamburg and Bremen via ports, Mails and General.—H. Ahrens & Co., Nachf.

Pachoutas, British steamer, 1,721, John James, 28th Aug.—Middlesbro via ports, General.—Dodwell & Co., Ltd.

Porwhaitan, British steamer, 1,640, Turner, 29th Aug.—Middlesbro. and London via ports, General.—Butterfield & Swire.

Raven, Norwegian steamer, 795, Edw. Th. E. Olsen, 26th Aug.—Tamsui, Rice.—Drabble & Co.

Syfang, German steamer, 1,147, U. Degener, 26th Aug.—Rangoon, Rice.—Simon Evers & Co.

Valetta, British steamer, 1,937, J. McMorran, 20th Aug.—Sakata, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Woodford, British steamer, 1,860, Jas. Seddon, 30th Aug.—Muroran, Coal.—Hokkaido Tanko Kaisha.

SAILING VESSELS.

Mabel Rickmers, German ship, 1,895, H. Schenmann, 6th Aug.—New York, Kerosene Oil.—Standard Oil Co.

Prussia, American barque, 1,131, A. Johnson, 24th Aug.—Vancouver, B.C., Timber.—Jardine, Matheson & Co.

Rickmer Rickmers, German barque, 1,839, H. Schwegmann, 6th Aug.—New York, Kerosene Oil.—Standard Oil Co.

LATEST COMMERCIAL.

IMPORTS.

Yokohama, September 1.

A few good contracts in White and Grey Shirtings have been done for arrival next year, but otherwise business is limited.

COTTON PIECE GOODS.

White Shirting—{ 40 yds. 36 in. } ... 0.10 to 0.16
{ 50 yds. 36 in. } ... 0.35 to 0.50

Grey Shirting—8 1/2 yds. 36 inches V. 4.00 to 4.50
Grey Shirting—9 1/2 yds. 45 inches 4.50 to 5.15
Prints—Assorted, 24 yards, 30 inches... 1.85 to 1.25

Cotton Italians and Salteens... 0.20 to 0.40

WOOLLENS.

Flannels... V. 0.50 to 0.65
Italian Cloth, 32 in... 0.35 to 0.50
Mousseline de laine, Crape, 24 yards, 30 inches... 0.16 to 0.22

Cloths—Pilots, 54 to 56 inches... 0.50 to 1.00
Cloths—Presidents, 51 to 65 inches... 0.50 to 1.00
Cloths—Union, 54 to 56 inches... 0.50 to 1.00

Blankets—Scarlet and Green, 3 to 5 lb per lb... 0.60 to 0.66

Velvets—Black, 35 yards, 28 inches... 5.20 to 12.50
Victoria Lanes, 12 yards, 42-3 inches... 0.90 to 1.15

Turkey Reds—2.8 to 3.0 lb 24-25 yards, 30 inches... 1.90 to 2.35
Turkey Reds—3.8 to 5 lb, 24-25 yards, 32 inches... 2.50 to 3.65

COTTON YARN.

Nos. 16/24, Singles... V. Nominal
Nos. 28/32, Singles... —
Nos. 38/42, Singles... —
Nos. 32, Doubles... Nominal
Nos. 42, Doubles... Nominal
Nos. 2/60, Plain... Nominal
Nos. 2/80, Plain... Nominal
Nos. 2/100, Plain... Nominal
Nos. 2/60, Gassed... 300.00 to 310.00
Nos. 2/80, Gassed... 350.00 to 360.00
Nos. 2/100, Gassed... 430.00 to 440.00

RAW COTTONS.

American Middling... 27.00 to 27.50
Indian Broach... 25.50 to 26.00
Chinese... 24.00 to 24.50

METALS.

The Metal market is inactive.

Round and square 1 1/2 inch and upward... V. 4.00 to 4.25
Iron Plates, assorted... 4.35 to 4.50
Sheet Iron... 4.70 to 4.85
Galvanized iron sheets... 10.05 to 10.25
Wire Nails, assorted... 6.85 to 7.25
Tin Plates, per box... 7.40 to 7.80
Pig Iron, No. 3... 2.40
Hoop Iron (3/4 to 1 1/4 inch)... 5.00 to 5.50

KEROSENE.

Market dull and unsettled.

American... 23.00 to 25.00
Russian... 2.50 to 3.00
Langkat... 2.90

SUGAR.

The market has been weaker and prices have declined. On Aug. 26th 4,300 bags were sold by auction at the Tokyo Refinery at a decline of 19 3/4 sen per picul.

Brown Takao... V. 9.70 to 10.10
Brown Manila... 10.10 to 11.10
Brown Daitong... 8.00 to 8.50
Brown Canton... 10.00 to 11.00
White Java and Penang... 12.80 to 13.50
White Refined... 14.40 to 15.10

INDIGO.

No change to note. Market steady.

Java, Medium to best... 150.00 to 160.00
Calcutta, Medium to best... 140.00 to 150.00
Madras (Korpa), Medium to best... 90.00 to 100.00
Madras (Dry Leaf), Medium to best... —

Milkmaid Milkmaid Milkmaid

TRADE MARK.

BRAND
Milk

As a guarantee of
Quality, see the
MILKMAID
on every Tin.

LARGEST SALE
in the
WORLD.

TRADE MARK.

BRAND
Milk

TRADE MARK.

BRAND
Milk

As a guarantee of
Quality, see the
MILKMAID
on every Tin.

LARGEST SALE
in the
WORLD.

Lea and Perrins' Sauce.

By Royal Warrant
to
His Majesty the King.

THE ORIGINAL AND GENUINE WORCESTERSHIRE.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT

IS A HOUSEHOLD NECESSITY

It cures Rheumatism, Sciatica,
Stiff Joints,
Glandular Swellings,
Sore Throat, Quinsy, Mumps,
Burns, Piles, Fistulas, &c.

AND EVERY
FORM OF SKIN DISEASE.

Manufactured only at 78, New Oxford St. (late 652, Oxford St.),
London. Sold by all Chemists and Medicine Vendors.

"Here's to the health of every man, woman, and child in the land."

BOVRIL

VESSELS TO ARRIVE.

STEAMERS.

NAME.	FROM.	REPORTED.
Agamemnon	Liverpool	Passed Canal	Aug. 4
Alcinous	Liverpool	Left Spore	Aug. 16
Andalusia	Hamburg	Left	July 31
Antenor	Liverpool	Left Spore	July 25
Atholl	New York	Leaves	Aug. 25
Barotse	London	At Kobe	Aug. 13
Bayern	Hamburg	Leaves	Aug. 1
Bengloe	London	Leaves Kobe	Sept. 1
Bendleuch	London	Passed Canal	July 27
Borussia	Hamburg	Left	Aug. 13
Ceylon	London	Leaves Kobe	Sept. 3
Coulsdon	New York	At Shanghai	July 31
Cr'n of Arragon	New York	Leaves	Aug. 20
Dakota	Seattle	Leaves	Sept. 20
Den of Crombie	Liverpool	Leaves Kobe	Aug. 16
Diomed	Liverpool	Leaves	Aug. 5
Ernest Simons	Marseilles	Leaves Kobe	Aug. 17
Glenroy	London	At Shanghai	Aug. 11
Indrani	New York	Leaves	Aug. 12
Indrasanha	New York	Passed Canal	July 14
Jason	Liverpool	Passed Canal	Aug. 4
Lowther Castle	New York	Leaves	Aug. 7
Mongolia	San Francisco	Left	Aug. 26
Nicomedia	Portland	Left Astoria	Aug. 17
Orestes	Liverpool	At Shanghai	Aug. 12
Peleus	Liverpool	Left Spore	Aug. 12
Pera	London	Passed Canal	Aug. 1
Pocasset	Middlesbro	Left London	July 14
Polynesian	Marseilles	Leaves Spore	Aug. 19
Pyrhus	Liverpool	Passed Canal	July 22
Quito	New York	Leaves	Aug. 1
Radnorshire	London	Leaves Nankai	Aug. 17
Ras Dara	New York	At Port Said	July 14
Redhill	New York	Left	July 24
Roon	Hamburg	Passed Canal	Aug. 2
Satsuma	New York	Leaves Kobe	Sept. 1
Serbia	Hamburg	Left	Aug. 13
Siberia	San Francisco	Left	Aug. 16
Silesia	Rotterdam	Left Spore	Aug. 16
Silesia	Trieste	Passed Canal	Aug. 4
Slavonia	Haven	Passed Canal	Aug. 5
Suevia	Hamburg	Passed Canal	July 22
Sophie Rickmers	Antwerp	Left	Aug. 5
St. Fillans	New York	Left	Aug. 7
Swazi	London	Left Spore	Aug. 23
Teenkai	Liverpool	Passed Canal	Aug. 13
Vandalia	New York	At Spore pr.	July 14
Willehad	Sydney	Left	Aug. 1
Wray Castle	New York	Passed Canal	July 22
Yangtze	Tacoma	Due Y'hama	Aug. 22

(毎土曜日一發行)

編輯人 エフ プリンター
發行兼印刷人 エーゼーアラゴン
發行所 横濱市山下町五十五番
シャツパンモール新聞社

The Japan Weekly Mail

毎土曜 日 A REVIEW OF JAPANESE COMMERCE, POLITICS, LITERATURE, AND ART. 一回刊行

No. 10.]

REGISTERED AT THE G.P.O.
AS A NEWSPAPER.

YOKOHAMA, SEPT. 9TH, 1905.

明治廿五年三月廿日
第三千三百四十四号

[VOL. XLIV.]

CONTENTS.

Summary of News	269
Notes on the Peace	270
Historical Distortion	271
China	271
The Chinese Press and the War	271
The Japanese Press on the Peace	271
Opinions of the Foreign Press	271
Business Men's Views	271
The Political Parties and the Peace	271
Protests against the Peace Terms	271
Korea	271
The Amniscie	271
The Rice Crop	271
Rioting in Tokyo	271
Mr. Sato	271
"Blood is Thicker than Water"	271
Notes on Current Events	271
Cricket	271
Lawn Tennis	271
Yachting	271
Chinese Boycott	271
Plague in Kobe	271
Leading Articles	271
Tokyo and the Peace News	271
At. Witte and Russia	271
Korean Question	271
Mr. Witte's Bombast Again	271
The "Why of the Terms"	271
The "Kino Maru" Disaster Faded	271
In the Land of Sunshine	271
The Bank of Formosa	271
The Law Courts	271
News of the Week	271
America's "Opic"	271
Correspondence	271
Foreign Residents' Relief Association	271
Yokohama Harbour	271
The Broken Cables	271
Utilitarian Religion	271
Yokohama Yarn	271
Bye-Laws for the Enforcement of the "Secured Delinquents"	271
Just Law	271
Irrigation in Northern Luzon	271
Telegrams	271
Latest Shipping	271
Latest Commercial	271

"FAIS CE QUE VOUS: ADVIENNE QUE POURRA!"

NOTICE TO CORRESPONDENTS.

No notice will be taken of anonymous correspondence. What is intended for insertion in the "JAPAN WEEKLY MAIL," must be authenticated by the name and address of the writer, not for publication, but as a guarantee of good faith.

It is particularly requested that all letters on business be addressed to the MANAGER, and Cheques be made payable to same; and that literary contributions be addressed to the EDITOR.

YOKOHAMA: SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 9TH, 1905.

BIRTH.

On the 3rd instant, at 84 B. Bluff, the Wife of JATHANIEL GEORGE MAITLAND, of a Son.

SUMMARY OF NEWS.

AN armistice was agreed to on September 1st.

THE peace treaty was signed on September 5th.

COLONEL OBATA and SAITO were promoted on Sept. 4th to Major-General.

MESSRS. KINOSHITA and OKUBO, Governors of Aitama and Oita prefectures respectively, changed positions on Sept. 4th.

DURING three days ended Sept. 3rd, a terrible storm raged in Shanghai. A godown and other buildings were damaged.

THE annual general meeting of the Japan Red Cross Society will take place at the beginning of October in the Hibiya Park, Tokyo.

SINCE ARISUGAWA has presented the Emperor and Empress with some costly woven goods and pieces of fine art brought by him from Europe.

THE total estimated cost of the Hongkong Dockyard Extension is £1,500,000, and the work is to be completed in the financial year 1907-8.

VERE rioting occurred in Tokyo on the 5th and 6th in consequence of the police interfering with a meeting organized to protest against the peace treaty. A hundred police boxes, three Christian preaching places, thirty tramcars, a fire engine and some buildings were burnt. Three hundred arrests were made. The city is now under martial law.

THE wounds of Admiral Rojestvensky having healed he will shortly remove from the Saselko Naval Station to the Fushimi detention house near Osaka.

ON Sept. 5th, a number of railway coolies in Nagasaki attacked the Kawakishi police station and caused damage to the building. Five of the coolies were arrested.

THE Minister for the Navy notified on Sept. 4th that the steamer Kichin Maru (formerly Gylin, floated at Port Arthur) is assigned to the Yokosuka Naval Station.

DR. T. OTAKE, President of the Senju Woollen Cloth Factory, has been ordered by the Government to investigate the tissue industry in Germany, Great Britain and America.

THE Jiji says that the Army Department decided on Sept. 3rd to stop the purchasing of military requirements for the front and to cancel, if possible, unexecuted contracts.

M. KATO, an official of the Tobacco Monopoly Bureau, and seven tobacco dealers of Tokyo were arrested on Sept. 4th on a charge of having secretly manufactured and sold cigarettes.

MR. DOWLING, Chief Steward of the P. M. steamer China, died suddenly on the last trip of the steamer homeward, when only a few days out of Yokohama. He was seized with hæmorrhages.

FIRE broke out on board the German bark Rickmer Rickmers in Yokohama harbour on Tuesday morning but with the assistance of the Water Police was got under. The damage is not serious.

A PROMINENT Buddhist temple, the Nishi-Hongwanji, has decided to establish a branch in Saghalien. Mr. Yamada and some other priests left Yokohama on Sept. 7th by steamer for the island.

SEPT. 4th being the anniversary of the occupation of Liaoyang, a grand festival was conducted in the castle in honour of the heroes who fell in the battle. Letters from Marshal Oyama and other commanders were read.

THE Kokumin has a telegram under date of Sept. 1st from Hongkong stating that the German cruiser Seeadler (1,640 tons displacement) went ashore the previous day on Trident Shoal. She was en route to the German colony in East Africa.

EIGHT freight cars and a passenger carriage of a train which left Utsunomiya, Tokyo, at 5.50 p.m. on Sept. 5th were derailed and overturned at a point between Konosu and Fukiage. Fortunately no one was injured. The cause was a defect in the permanent way.

OWING to a storm, on the night of Sept. 2nd, sections of the Shinjima-Shimomatsu and Tōmi-Mitajiri lines on the Sanyo Railway were damaged. Traffic was interrupted. The section between Kawatana and Kinema, on the Kyushu Railway, were damaged by flood.

AT 2.03 a.m. on Sunday, Sept. 3rd, a severe shock of earthquake was felt in Yokohama. According to the Yokohama Meteorological Office, the duration of the shock was one minute and thirty-four seconds, and the direction was from N. N. E. to S. S. W. The shock commenced with a slight oscillation which lasted for ten seconds and then changed to a severe motion which continued for sixteen seconds. The shock then gradually grew weaker and died away. We have not heard of any damage having been done, though most of the inhabitants of Yokohama were awakened by the shock.

A TELEGRAM was received on Sept. 4th at the head office of the Seoul-Fusan Railway Co., Tokyo, to the effect that owing to a storm, severe damage has been sustained and traffic is temporarily interrupted. The nature of the damage is not yet known.

THE Government intends to release shortly the merchant-men converted into armed cruisers. The transports will for the present be kept for a certain mission. The America Maru was recently discharged. She is shortly to resume service on the American line.

SHORTLY after the M.M. steamer Ernest Simons left Saigon on her present outward voyage, nine Chinese stowaways were found on board, and the well-to-do Chinese passengers on board subscribed enough to pay their fares and save them from condign punishment.

ON Sept. 1st, Y. Kurushima attempted to murder his wife in an upstairs room of the law-office of Mr. Sawaki, Chōjō-machi, Yokohama. He cut her about the face and right arm with a sword. The cause is jealousy. The man was arrested the following day and removed to the District Court.

THE inauguration of the Yokohama Shoko Club (consisting of foreigners and Japanese) had been fixed for the middle of September. The date, however, has been postponed on the ground that high officials will be unable to be present on the occasion as they are now busily engaged in diplomatic affairs.

THE Formosa Government has decided to raise about seven hundred thousand yen during two years commencing the latter half of this year by increasing the income, business and local taxes and to donate this special income to the funds of the Volunteer Ship Society. The Government has asked the Society to allot one of its steamers to the service between Japan and the island.

THE China Mail says that as the British naval authorities at Hongkong, owing to Sir John Fisher's reforms, had no vessel to send to the wreck of the British barque West York off Palawan, application was made to the American authorities at Manila, and within four hours of the receipt of the telegram, the U.S. transport Nanshan was on her way to Flat Island to succour the captain and crew.

WE learn that Mr. Hudson, Secretary of the Y. C. & A. C., has received a communication from Kobe announcing that the K. C. C. will be able to play the Interport Cricket and Baseball matches in the week beginning October 9th. The first three days (if necessary the fourth) will be devoted to cricket and the 13th and 14th to baseball. The suggestion of holding an Athletic Sports meeting during the same week also finds considerable favour.

A TAIPEH telegram reports that a terrible storm swept Formosa from Aug. 28th till Sept. 2nd. In Anping and other districts, over twenty thousand houses were flooded, and cultivated fields sustained damage. On the morning of Aug. 30th, on the southern coast of the island, a tidal-wave swept in and many junks were lost. Another telegram received on Sept. 4th at Nagasaki says that the Nippon Yusen Kaisha's steamer Suoi (4,940 tons), met the storm in the Formosan Channel on her way from Hongkong to Japan and drifted for six days, having sustained severe damage to the hull. She returned to Hongkong for temporary repairs.

NOTES ON THE PEACE.

Friday, September 1.

The armistice question still remains uncertain. Some authorities say that it has been considered by the Plenipotentiaries and that they have agreed to submit it for decision by the home governments, but others allege that no such arrangement has been made. The normal course would be to proclaim an armistice from the day of the treaty's signature, which is spoken of as a week distant, but if peace be certain, as seems to be the case, there is no reason to risk needless loss of life by delaying the armistice for even an hour.

It appears that there has been a very severe censorship of incoming telegrams. The Nichi Nichi Shinbun alleges that out of 351 words sent to it across the wires from Washington 180 only were allowed to reach it and 171 were suppressed. Our contemporary complains that it is unreasonable to hide from the Japanese nation things which are known to the whole world. That depends, we should say. It was most desirable and necessary that the Japanese nation should keep a cool head throughout these negotiations, and that popular opinion should not be worked up to a degree of excitement which would have interfered with a peaceful settlement. All repression of free speech is liable to abuse, but there are certainly times when it becomes advisable, and we are bound to say that newspapers in many cases have not justified their title to full liberty.

The Fiji Shimpō gives the following synopsis of the terms upon which agreement has been reached:—

I.—Japan's predominant position in Korea, political, military and economic, is recognised, as is also her right to supervise that country's affairs and to protect it, and Russia undertakes not to obstruct Japan's proceedings in any respect.

The High Contracting Parties agree that neither will erect fortifications on the Russo-Korean frontier (i.e. along the Tumen).

Japan further agrees to recognise Russia's title equally with other Powers to most-favoured-nation treatment in Korea.

II.—Russia pledges herself to withdraw her troops completely from Manchuria. (This, of course, involves evacuation of Kirin, Harbin, &c.)

Japan similarly agrees to evacuate Manchuria with the exception of the leased area in the Liaotung Peninsula.

Each of the High Contracting Parties shall be entitled to post guards for the protection of its railways in Manchuria, a certain ratio of men per mile being fixed.

The High Contracting Parties agree to take the same steps for opening Manchuria to the trade of all countries on equal terms. (This includes the opening of Harbin and Kirin).

III.—The island of Saghalien shall become Japanese property from the 36th parallel of latitude southward, the High Contracting Parties mutually agreeing not to maintain any military establishment on the island.

Russia agrees to surrender her lease of the Liaotung Peninsula to Japan.

IV.—Russia agrees to surrender the East Chinese Railway to Japan from Changchun southwards. Russia further agrees to lend assistance to Japan in dealing with any claims that Chinese subjects have in this railway. (These claims are merely nominal. —Ed. J. S.)

Russia pledges herself not to employ for military purposes the railway crossing Manchuria and proceeding to Vladivostok, and Japan similarly pledges herself with regard to the Manchurian Railway south of Changchun. This restriction shall not apply, however, to the railway guards mentioned in Art. II.

V.—Japanese subjects shall enjoy the same fishing privileges as Russian subjects along the shores of Russia's East-Asian dominions.

VI.—Russia shall defray the expenses incurred by Japan in connexion with the Russians held prisoners in Japan.

(The amount is not yet fixed, but is expected to be 150 million yen.—Ed. J. S.)

Japan withdrew all her other demands, and it is apparently certain that she has not insisted on any payment for the rendition of the northern half of Saghalien.

According to the most accurate maps, the portion of the East-Chinese Railway retained by Russia, namely, from Changchun to Port Arthur is 502 miles. Japan gets the Fushun coal mines and if a railway be built to Kirin, Changchun would naturally be its point of departure.

The little band of agitators headed by Mr. Kono Hironaka have held a meeting and decided that the new treaty surrenders all the advantages gained by Japan's victories, and that steps must be taken to punish the Cabinet and the Plenipotentiaries. They have also decided to send a vehemently discontented telegram to Baron Komura, but we should think that the censor will come in there.

Saturday, September 2, a.m.

The time for the evacuation of Manchuria by the Russian and Japanese armies is to be fixed by Marshal Oyama and General Linevitch in consultation.

There is some uncertainty as to whether Changchun or Changtu is to be the northern terminus of the Japanese portion of the East Chinese Railway. Changchun was originally stated and the latest telegrams confirm the statement. But some correspondents name Changtu. The latter place is 75 miles south of Changchun, and since, moreover, Changchun is the point whence a branch line to Kirin would naturally start—there is already a military railway—it will be seen that the difference is not one of distance merely. Undoubtedly it would be much more advantageous for the Japanese to possess the road up to Changchun than to stop short at Changtu. In the latter case, the Russians would remain in possession of 213 miles of road within Manchuria, and as the treaty is said to provide for the posting of railway guards, it is to be feared that if such a length of line remained in Russian hands, northern Manchuria would again become the scene of aggressive intrigues. That is true even though the Japanese part of the road runs as far as Changchun, but in the latter case Kirin would come within the Japanese sphere of influence, an important consideration. The distances are Port Arthur to Changtu 427 miles; Changtu to Changchun 75 miles; Changchun to Harbin 138 miles.

It is agreed that pending the renewed operation of the old treaty Russia shall enjoy most-favoured-nation treatment in Manchuria.

M. Witte invited the newspaper representatives to dinner (?) on the 29th ultimo and, telling them that he had accomplished the task assigned to him by his sovereign, thanked them for the assistance they had rendered. He is said to have been much applauded.

President Roosevelt, replying to a telegram of congratulation sent to him by Emperor William, speaks in most unequivocal terms of the assistance rendered by the Kaiser to the cause of peace, and expresses a sense of the honour felt by the President in having worked together with the Emperor to achieve such a purpose. This telegram must finally silence those who endeavour to create an impression that the Kaiser's weight was secretly thrown into the war scale.

Marquis Saionji speaks with conspicuous wisdom. He precludes his statement by saying that the Emperor's desire to give full weight to the principles of humanity had been clearly demonstrated. Then he goes on to explain the exceptional considerations that applied to this case. Russia was not beaten in anything like the sense that France was beaten by Prussia. The Russian capital was not menaced nor was her territory invaded. From the Japanese point of view she had suffered defeat after defeat and had lost virtually her whole navy, but from the European point of view she still possessed an immense residuum of strength and was bound to swallow Japan's terms on the spot. It is unfortunate that an indemnity could not be obtained and that only part of Saghalien is to be recovered, but, on the other hand, Japan has obtained everything on account of which she drew the sword, and it is now her people's part to put their hands boldly and resolutely to the work of making their country materially strong in proportion to the great glory she has achieved instead of lamenting over the inevitable.

If the sentiments of the Seiyukai, which Marquis Saionji leads, may be inferred from his language, they will prove a steadying element in the situation. But it is said that such is not the case. At any rate the two parties' committees are to meet today (2nd) and we shall then have a definite clue as to their views.

Count Okuma does not speak with absolute assurance pending the official publication of the terms. But he thinks that the nation has good reason to complain that it was misled by the Government into expecting very much more than has actually been obtained. Apart from that he doubts whether the object of the war has been attained. If Russia has been obliged to withdraw from Manchuria, so has Japan. If Russia gives up the East Chinese Railway, she retains a large part of it. If Japan's preponderating influence in Korea is recognised, there may possibly be a danger of restricting its exercise to limits not destructive of Korean sovereignty. In short, the field is open for a renewal of the intrigues which precipitated this war and there is only too good reason to fear that after the lapse of ten years another war will have to be fought. Count Okuma then passes to politics and finds a main cause of the trouble to be the unconstitutional nature of Japan's Government. People criticise and condemn the Russian bureaucracy but how much more is Japan's system? The Ministry made it the purpose of the people so long as it suited their purpose to do so, but at the crucial moment they threw the people overboard and made peace in defiance of the national will. There is nothing to choose between St. Petersburg and Tokyo in this respect.

Sunday, September 3rd, a.m.

Telegrams from Portsmouth say that the American journals, which had been disposed to attribute a diplomatic victory to Russia in connexion with the peace conference, have now changed their tone, and calmly examining the terms they are agreed in declaring that not only does the victory rest with Japan but also that the material gains are very large. Her soldiers have shown remarkable power of estimating the true inwardness of the situation both from a domestic point of view and from a foreign, and have also displayed a remarkable capacity of self-restraint and cool judgment in the hour of victory. In short, these journals have nothing but praise for Japan.

On the 30th ultimo the Russian Plenipotentiaries approached the Japanese subject of an armistice, and urged that time should be lost in arranging this. It would seem, however, that the Russian instructed General Linevitch to discuss question with Marshal Oyama independently, though it is evident that the Japanese Commander-in-chief can not act without his Government's order.

The Yomi has a message from Newcastle to the effect that the treaty will be signed on the 5th and that it consists of 15 articles.

It will be some time before the question of payment for prisoners is settled, as each side has to present its account and the Russian outlays have to be deducted from the Japanese in order to reach a final figure.

Telegrams of congratulation from all the Occidental heads of States are reaching the Mikado.

Tuesday, September 5.

It was expected that the draft treaty would be ready for signature on Saturday last, but there was a possibility of its being delayed until Monday. If any difference of opinion arose between the drafters, the Plenipotentiaries were to meet for the purpose of discussing it. Meanwhile we do not gather that an armistice has been concluded: it is said to be under consideration. Seeing that the war must be costing from seven to eight million yen daily, the two Powers can not but be anxious to see it finally brought to a close.

HISTORICAL DISTORTION.

In a recent issue we quoted from The Times some statistics relating to the German war with the Hereros, and expressed the hope that their experiences in this struggle would teach our Teutonic friends the injustice of their very loud strictures on British operations in South Africa. Incidentally we observed that England would probably have terminated this Hereros war in six months, which had been "her extreme limit of time in Egypt, in the Sudan, in Ashantee, in Zululand, in Burmah, in Thibet, on the Indian frontier and elsewhere." To this our German contemporary, the Japan Herald, takes exception on historical grounds. It cites the case of Osman Digna, who besieged Kassala on the 18th of February, 1884, and was not finally subdued until the middle of 1898. "In this case," says the Japan Herald, "it took fourteen years to completely quell the rising." That is a very singular distortion of history. The impression plainly conveyed, and intended to be conveyed by our contemporary, is that Great Britain was engaged for fourteen years dealing with Osman Digna. Nothing of the kind. Great Britain did not really undertake to subdue the Mahdi or his lieutenant, Osman Digna until 1898. The expedition to Suakin in 1893-4, had for its sole purpose to guard the littoral of the Red Sea, and was not in any sense intended to extend its operations to the Sudan. General Gordon, who in 1884 proceeded to the Sudan, was not at the head of any English force. His mission was merely to report on the condition of affairs in that region. When his circumstances became perilous and when he was isolated at Khartum, Wolseley was sent to relieve him, but before the latter reached Khartum Gordon had been murdered, and Mr. Gladstone's Government, not recognising any obligation to avenge his death and not being disposed to interfere actively in the Sudan, recalled Wolseley. Things remained thus until 1898. During 14 years Great Britain left the Sudan severely alone, her theory being that her duty of preserving order in North Africa was limited to the boundaries of Egypt proper. But in 1898 Lord Salisbury's Government adopted a larger policy. It decided to extend the Anglo-Egyptian rule over the Sudan, and then for the first time a determined step was taken with that object. An expedition was sent from Egypt under Sir Herbert Kitchener, and the Sudanese suffered final defeat at Omdurman. Thus when our German contemporary writes that "it took 14 years to completely quell Osman Digna's rising" and unequivocally suggests that Great Britain was engaged all that time in the effort, it distorts history quite ludicrously. Not until 1898 did Great Britain undertake to extend Anglo-Egyptian rule to the Sudan, which she had previously left to its own devices, and within a very few months from the date of her resolution Kitchener accomplished the task.

Our German contemporary is only a trifle less misleading with regard to the Ashanti war. It says:—"On January 22nd, 1873, an Ashanti force crossed the Prah and invaded British territory, but it was not until the 4th of February, 1874, twelve and a half months later, that Sir Garnet Wolseley, with the British troops occupied Coomassie." Here the plain suggestion is that Great Britain was occupied for 12½ months subduing the Ashanti insurgents. Nothing of the kind. In the part of Africa where Ashanti lies only a small part of the year is climatically possible for operations by white troops. That part of the year had to be awaited before a British force was sent to Africa to attack the Ashantis. When the force did set out, a very brief period carried it to the Ashanti capital, and so accurately timed were its movements that it had returned to the coast and re-embarked before the dangerous season set in. The truth is that this Ashanti expedition is precisely one of the conspicuous cases that might be cited by way of flagrant contrast with the story of the present German campaign in south-eastern Africa. England managed the whole thing with a neatness, a thoroughness and a despatch which she alone seems able to compass in long over-sea expeditions. Our German local contemporary, in a didactic vein, "points out the duty of a journalist to see that the facts given are correct and that no half truths are served up with a view to arousing racial antipathy." Such a moral is entertaining in the sequel of such a text.

CHINA.

It is now stated that the trouble at Amoy is in connexion with the collection of likin. Some 5,000 persons surrounded the likin office. And there was a general strike of the labouring population as well as a closing of shops. Illegal methods of collecting and the taking of bribes are charged against the officials. At first the mob did not resort to violence, but ultimately there was throwing of stones, and boats were smashed. The marines which had been landed to guard the place were obliged to have recourse to ball cartridge, whereupon the rioters fled. These marines appear to have been distinct from the British blue-jackets subsequently landed. At Swatow the Custom-house is said to have been smashed.

A telegram from Peking says that the German Minister in that city is busying himself in a manner inimical to Japan. He has represented to Prince Ching that as China contributed 5 million taels to the East-Chinese Railway she is now entitled to demand re-imbursment of that sum from Japan, the latter having compelled Russia to surrender the line.

Can any one seriously believe that the German Representative has tendered such ridiculous counsels?

Another proceeding attributed to the Minister is an attempt to induce China to demand that Port Arthur shall not be used by Japan as a naval station.

There is to be a Palace Council in Peking to consider the Manchurian question. It is stated that the magnanimity shown by Japan at the eleventh hour is not appreciated in China, and that strong suspicions are entertained of some secret understanding between Tokyo and St. Petersburg.

Shanghai seems to have suffered severely from a flood such as is without precedent during the past sixty years. Apparently the place was visited by a typhoon which caused a deluge lasting from the 1st to the 3rd and ended in a heavy storm. Some of the streets are said to have been knee-deep in water and the warehouses were flooded in many instances. From Woosung casualties to life and limb are reported, and it is estimated that the losses will amount to a million yen, which is probably an exaggeration. Hongkong also is believed to have suffered severely, but owing to the interruption of the telegraphic service between Shanghai and Nagasaki no late news is obtainable. The above particulars were brought by steamer.

The coming of this typhoon to Japan was apprehended for a time, but its centre turned westward from Formosa, and sweeping up the China coast, invaded Korea, emerging finally in the Hokkaido direction. Telegrams from Korea show that Chemulpo and Fusan experienced the full force of the gale. Bridges were swept away on the Seoul-Fusan Railway and the service of trains is interrupted.

THE CHINESE PRESS AND THE WAR.

Chinese newspapers do not at all appreciate Japan's action. The Shin Wan-pao says that she has showed herself more desirous of peace than Russia, and that it now devolves on China to undertake and carry through such measures of reform as shall restore her national strength pending Japan's recovery of political influence. Among other things Japan must be required immediately to evacuate Manchuria. The Nan-fang-pao alleges that Japan's so-called long-suffering is another name for disgrace. If she wanted to show to the world her magnanimity, there were ways of accomplishing the feat other than by throwing away thousands of lives and spending hundreds of millions of treasure. It is not likely that Japan feared defeat at Russia's hands if the war went on; nor is it likely that her finances did not permit its continuance; nor is it likely that the spirit of the nation was opposed to it. What seems probable is that the arrangement includes some element not visible on the surface, namely, the recovery of an indemnity from China. But, having delivered this opinion, the Chinese journal proceeds at once to contradict it by saying that Japan, who has gained the respect and admiration of the whole Chinese nation, will not now adopt a policy effectually calculated to alienate that sentiment. The Chinese of to-day are not the Chinese twenty of years ago, and however powerful a State may be, it can not recklessly impose its will on them.

On the night of Aug. 29th, fire broke out in the district of Naka-Kambara, Niigata prefecture, destroying seventy-four houses, including a post office and two banks.

THE JAPANESE PRESS ON THE PEACE.

Friday, September 1.

The Jiji Shimpō does not pretend to be content. It fails to see what has become of the results of 20 months of successful fighting, and it fails to see how permanent peace has been assured. The desire of the whole nation would have been to continue the war rather than to agree to a peace so little creditable. There is no help now. The thing is done. What may at least be hoped is that the treatment of the army and navy will be worthy of the great deeds they have accomplished for their country.

It was altogether unexpected, says the Nichi Nichi, that one half of Saghalien would have been surrendered and that the indemnity would have been waived. Profound disappointment will permeate all classes of a nation which had made such great sacrifices and achieved such great successes. The concessions made by Japan exceed all the limits of moderation and amount to a craven and discreditable surrender. What can have induced the Government to agree to such terms? Had there been any necessity to abandon the indemnity, then Saghalien at least should have been retained in its entirety; or, if its surrender were contemplated, the whole should have been surrendered in consideration of a monetary payment. By retaining half and restoring half, the seeds of future trouble are sown. Is it not greatly to Japan's disadvantage that she should acquire the reputation of being strong in war and incur the discredit of being weak in diplomacy?

The Asahi Shimbun takes the line that Russia has conceded nothing at all in the Conference. All her so-called concessions were made before she entered the Conference chamber and as a matter of necessity. Japan it is that has made concessions. She has yielded virtually everything. Out of her four cardinal demands she has obtained only a part of one. She has herself removed the crown of victory from her brows. The further expenditure of her people's blood was not desired by any one, but it is only by resolution in such matters that a country achieves real greatness. If the Government imagined that the people would rather have obeyed Russia's commands than make any further sacrifices, the Government insults the nation.

The Hochi contends that there is nothing for it but to refuse ratification of such a treaty. It was a disgrace to Japan that she had to surrender the Liaotung Peninsula, but she was then confronted by an overwhelming force, whereas now her opponent is beaten, she herself is in the full tide of victory, the nation is united, all are ready to continue the struggle and at her back is a powerful ally. Any excuses that the Government may make will be merely throwing dust in the people's eyes. Japan would lose something internationally by refusing to ratify the treaty, but no other course offers.

The Niroku Shimbun takes the same line. It advocates measures such as shall induce the Emperor to refuse ratification. The main argument advanced is that Russia has not been punished for forcing Japan into an utterly unjustifiable war, and that, in effect, she has been encouraged to repeat the experiment. The Privy Council should make every possible effort to advise the Emperor to withhold ratification of the treaty.

The Miyako Shimbun takes the extraordinary line that the army and navy should decline to evacuate Saghalien and should defy Russia to recover it. There is some consolation in the thought that if the advantages Japan has secured in Manchuria and Korea be resolutely utilized Japan will have gained a substantial success. But who can trust the present Government to take steps in that direction. If they are not taken, then the Emperor should refuse to ratify the treaty.

In anticipation of some wild ebullitions of discontent on the part of excitable people, the Yomiuri urgently advises its countrymen to confine themselves to lawful discussion and to refrain from all violence. The Yomiuri is as vehement in its condemnation of the peace terms as any of its contemporaries, but it has the wisdom to utter a warning against acts of violence; a reversion to the old days of daggers and desperation.

The Nippon, while declaring that so disappointing a result of a great national effort was never experienced by any other country, finds comfort in the thought that just as the loss of Liaotung in 1895 had a wholesome sobering effect on the nation at large, so this great chagrin will check the tendency obviously displayed of late, the tendency to undue exaltation and excessive luxury. Our contemporary also credits the rumour that whereas Marquis Ito showed himself very strong at the final council of statesmen, Marquis Yamagata took a weak line. The former advocated the surrender of the indemnity, if any surrender were necessary, and the retention of the whole of Saghalien; or, if Saghalien were to be given up, then that it should be given up in its entirety and a monetary payment exacted. But the Marquis stoutly opposed the idea of partition, which he regarded as sure to lead to future trouble. Marquis Yamagata, however, was for accepting the arrangement now concluded, and the Nippon says that the military Marquis has now forfeited the prominent place he had won in connexion with the war.

The Shogyo Shimpō (business organ), while admitting that the terms are below reasonable expectation, reminds the nation that the object of the war has been fairly obtained, and that there was no reason to fight on. Japan has secured what she set out to secure, and now in deference to the world's desire to see peace restored and in deference to the dictates of humanity, she sheathes her sword though at no small sacrifice. She has driven Russia from Manchuria; she has established her own position in Korea; she has recovered Liaotung and she has obtained possession of that highly important asset, the East-Chinese Railway. Why should she have continued the war? She may have been led to hope for more. Her continued victories encouraged such a hope. But would she have been justified in fighting for more.

The Kokumin takes virtually the same line, the eminently sensible line. The object of the war has been attained; more than attained. Why should the terrible conflict have been continued? To continue it would have been merely to fight for money. That is what must become plain to every thoughtful person when he reflects calmly. Japan did not enter the fight in pursuit of pecuniary gains, and she could not think of continuing it for such an object.

Saturday, September 2.

Sounds of discontent and dissatisfaction continue to be loudly heard in Japan. The Jiji Shimpō writes with more moderation than it showed when the news first reached Tokyo, but its language is none the less unequivocal. To abandon the monetary payment, it says, would have been endurable but to give up one half of Saghalien when the island was actually in Japan's military occupation and when the nation's desire for its recovery was so strong—that can not be understood. In the case of the rendition of Liaotung the excuse offered was that Japan yielded to force majeure, but no such extenuation exists in the present case. The Asahi says that an explanation is imperatively necessary. What reason existed for this sudden debacle? Why was Japan strong at the outset and utterly weak in the finale? There was no military reason; there was no financial reason. The nation wants to be told why. The Nichi Nichi Shimbun writes in most pessimistic terms about the post-bellum finance. It fails to see how things can be adjusted. The people's taxes are only $\frac{1}{2}$ yen per head when the war was on; they are now 6 yen. The national debt amounted then to 12 yen a head; it is now 40 yen. Taking everything into account there will be an outflow of specie to the extent of 100 million yen annually. How is to be met? The foundations of the convertible currency will be shaken. The Yomiuri Shimbun calls upon the Ministry not to sit in the shadow of the Throne, but to acknowledge their responsibility and take the consequences. The Nippon thinks that all the reproaches heaped upon Russia now belong to Japan. Russia was not a nation of the word; Russia asked more than she intended to take; Russia would yield to a firm line. It is all the other way.

It is unnecessary to quote at great length. One after another the newspapers sound the same note with the exception the business organs as well as the Kohoku Shimbun and the Chuo Shimbun.

From numerous provincial quarters the leading journals of the capital are receiving vehemently worded messages denouncing the peace and declaring that the high and low, old and young, are profoundly disappointed and down-spirited.

The Chuo Shimbun calls upon the nation not to lose heart. The terms obtained are not closely scrutinized by our contemporaries. It dismisses them briefly as unfortunate. But it points out that Japan has now great opportunities and that it rests with herself to utilize them instead of giving way to despondency because things are not as bright as they might have been. The Kohoku repeats the unanswerable argument that the objects of the war have been obtained; more than obtained, and that Japan, though she has not secured an indemnity, stands before the world not less unequivocally as victor. It is folly to kick against the inevitable.

Sunday, September 3.

The Kokumin Shimbun opportunely recalls the many predictions uttered at the commencement of the war, namely, that Japan could never bring it to a satisfactory conclusion inasmuch as it would be impossible for her to produce any sensible effect upon the Russian Empire. Yet, after less than two years of fighting, she has fully achieved the purpose for which she drew the sword. To continue fighting merely for the sake of an indemnity, that indeed would have been to pursue a wholly unattainable object. Our contemporary also adduces many historical instances to show that the receipt of an indemnity is by no means wholesome for a nation. Even in her own brief experience of foreign wars Japan should have learned that lesson.

The Chuo Shimbun reminds its countrymen of the events that followed the receipt of an indemnity from China and asks them whether they desire to repeat those experiences. They were prepared, they alleged, to continue the war; therefore they must still have a large reserve of financial competence. Let them apply it to the development of the country's resources and cease to lament over not obtaining what never was obtainable.

The Nichi Nichi Shinbun continues its opposition on the ground that ample margin has been left for Russia to renew her aggressive designs in the Far East. At the same time our contemporary admits that no definite opinion can be formed on this question until the terms are published in detail, and it urges upon the Cabinet the advisability of publishing the details as quickly as possible so as to calm popular apprehensions.

The Fiji Shimpō devotes itself now to considering the question of finance. It opines that the present rate of war-taxes will have to be continued, and it is very anxious to know what views the Cabinet Ministers entertain on this point.

The Asahi calls upon the Government to explain why the Japanese Plenipotentiaries yielded so suddenly and so completely, and it also desires to know why the disarming of Vladivostok was not insisted on as a set-off to Japan's understanding not to fortify the Soya Straits.

The Yomiuri declares that the time has now come to put to practical proof the question of the ability of the political parties to oust a Cabinet which has become emphatically distasteful to the nation.

The Yorozu Chōhō is acting the most mischievous part that lies within the compass of a newspaper's abilities. In a recent issue it advocated assassination in terms that no reader could misunderstand. The police forbade the sale of the number containing this murderous suggestion. And now the Yorozu is crying out that the Cabinet endeavours to save itself by muzzling free speech.

The Niroku Shinbun writes in a more cunning strain than that adopted by the Yorozu, but its article is none the less a plain incentive to assassination. It pretends not to advocate recourse to such measures, but it declares that experience shows them to be customary, and that they can be averted only by the Cabinet advising the Sovereign not to ratify the treaty.

The Yorozu and the Niroku do more to bring disgrace on their country than any peace treaty could possibly do. They must be recognised as Japanese representatives of that type of journal which merits and receives the execration of all sober-minded people.

The Hochi Shinbun is equally disgracing itself and its country. It prints pictures which import personal scandal into the question and are calculated to render Count Katsura and Baron Komura objects of hatred and contempt. If any deed of violence marks this crisis in Japan's career, there can not be the least question that the Yorozu Chōhō, the Niroku Shinbun and the Hochi Shinbun will be largely responsible.

For the rest the columns of the Tokyo press abound with letters from all quarters condemning the peace terms in the most unequivocal language. Not one discusses the question gravely or judicially. On the other hand not one rises above the level of mere abuse. We find it surprising that a journal like the Asahi should grant the hospitality of its columns to such productions.

Monday, September 4.

The Fiji Shimpō urges the Cabinet to resign. It is true that the Ministers have worked hard and deserved well of their country during the past twenty months. In their own hearts they have nothing to reproach themselves with. But they have made a failure at the crucial moment. An indemnity may not have been procurable, but Saghalien at least should have been retained in its integrity. Its partition has shocked the nation. Therefore the peace must be pronounced a failure and the Ministry has forfeited the confidence of the people. On the other hand, Japan is confronted by the heavy task of putting her financial house in order. More than ever is frank cooperation between rulers and ruled an absolute necessity. There can be no such co-operation while the present Cabinet remains in office. The Ministers may be disposed to wait until the storm blows over. They may recall the proverbially ephemeral nature of rumour, and they may naturally be unwilling to forfeit the rewards that would have accrued on account of their successful conduct of the war. But such temporizing will be bad for their own reputation. They owe it to the country to step aside and make room for men who have the people's confidence, and they further owe to the country not to let the world imagine that Japan is content with these peace-terms.

The newspapers publish opinions expressed by Mr. Inukai Ki, the Progressist leader, and by Professor Terao, of septemvirate fame. These publicists, though strongly opposed to the treaty, deny the possibility of withholding ratification. That, they say, would be a breach of faith which must provoke the condemnation of the world.

The Nichi Nichi condemns the Government for not at once publishing the exact terms of the treaty so as to appease the people's dissatisfaction. What is the use of paying great sums for telegrams embodying the views of foreign journals? Foreign countries are undoubtedly pleased that peace has been made. Japan's troubles are nothing to them. Yet even among the utterances of foreign journals there are plain indications that the diplomatic victory is regarded as resting with Russia.

The Nippon says that the nation has gone through a very bitter experience. The people are grievously disappointed. Their sense of triumph is exchanged for one of defeat. They have scarcely a remaining desire to welcome home the troops. But of what use is it to lament the past. Now is Japan's hour of trial. Now it is that she has to show herself worthy of future successes. She has undoubtedly risen high in the estimation of the world. Let her people remember that whom heaven designs for great achievements it always subjects first to great trials. Expectation had run too high. Men had persuaded themselves to think that the only loss suffered by the country would be a loss of life. But the mirage has disappeared and the nation is confronted by the stern reality. If now the people face the situation boldly and labour earnestly for a few years, they will have derived a wholesome lesson from this disappointment and will have fully recouped their losses. It is a time for manly effort not for useless repining.

The Kokumin strenuously combats the idea that the peace is in any sense disgraceful to Japan. The disgrace is all on Russia's side who, in the sequel of repeated defeats, has been compelled to abandon everything to which she laid claim before the war. No complaints, however tumultuous, will now obtain an indemnity. Russia in the Far East can not be punished so as to compel her to pay indemnities. That is recognised by all thoughtful observers.

The minor journals do not argue. They merely continue their abuse.

Tuesday, September 5.

Japanese journals seem unable to lay aside the thought of the peace terms. Their minds are filled with it. Perhaps it is just as well that telegraphic news is temporarily suspended by the break in the Shanghai-Nagasaki cable. Nothing later than the 2nd instant is to hand, and that is a cablegram to the Kokumin saying that the Tsar has thanked the President for the latter's exertions in the cause of peace, but that His Majesty has not yet made any reply to M. Witte's report. Perhaps the Tsar is trying to digest M. Witte's difficult proposition—evidently formulated in a moment of unreasoning exultation—that Russia remains as ever a great Power in the Far East. Russia herself, that is to say the Russian nation, appears to be pleased at the conclusion of the war, but is not pleased by the peace terms, which include a cession of territory. Indeed, considering how loudly and vehemently the Tsar had announced his determination not to pay any indemnity or sign away any territory, the honours of making a large concession in the cause of peace are divided between him and the Mikado.

The Fiji Shimpō calls upon the Government to take some steps such as shall dispel the perplexity under which foreigners labour. It is inevitable, our contemporary thinks, that the sudden weakening of the Government in the conference chamber should be attributed by semi-informed foreign observers to financial difficulties, and thus the credit of the country will be impaired at a time when the free inflow of foreign capital is most desirable. The Asahi Shinbun takes much the same line. But we can assure these two journals that they labour under a baseless fear so far as foreigners are concerned. It may be safely asserted that every thoughtful foreigner fully comprehends the situation and approves the course taken by the Japanese Government. The choice lay between continuing the war and abandoning the indemnity. To continue the war would not have brought Japan one inch nearer to getting an indemnity and would have probably doubled her debt. Meanwhile all the objects for which the war was undertaken had been gained. Then why go on fighting? Would it not have been little short of madness.

The Yomiuri condemns the Government for interfering with the press. It compares such procedure to putting a lid on a volcano. The explosion will be all the worse and the responsibility will rest on the Government.

The Nichi Nichi writes as though an indemnity might have been obtained. But how? We entirely agree with our contemporary that there is a lack of ingenuousness on the part of journals which adduce historical instances of failures to obtain indemnities or of States refraining from the attempt to obtain them, but we can not but wish that a journal of the Nichi Nichi's great weight would seriously explain the process that Japan should have pursued to obtain an indemnity.

The Nippon, whose manly tone at this crisis cannot be too much praised, advises one of two courses. Either the present agitation is based on ignorance or it is founded on reason. If the former, then no moment should be lost in publishing the terms of peace. If the latter, then the Cabinet should sacrifice itself to popular indignation, for should the nation emerge from this great struggle with a conviction that its efforts have been rendered nugatory by the ineptitude of its officials, the people will lose heart and the splendid spirit that has contributed so much to the empire's successes will be chilled.

Original from

Professors Oda and Inouye of the Kyoto University declare themselves strongly opposed to the settlement. There is nothing specially new in their arguments so far as we can see. Professor Inouye thinks that no merchant abates his price more than fifty per cent., but Japan has greatly exceeded that figure.

Professor Hayashi, of the Keio Gijuku University, condemns the whole procedure followed by Japan, the consent to enter the conference before Russia's willingness had been definitely ascertained; the meeting of the Plenipotentiaries without any preliminary discussion; the order in which the terms were debated, and so on. He does not attach importance to the questions of the interned vessels and the limitation of Russia's naval force but he declares that the nation's amour propre is badly wounded by the surrender of one half of Saghalien.

Viscount Tani was opposed to the war originally, but he affirms that the sword having once been drawn should not have been sheathed until the object of the contest was fully obtained. What seems to trouble him most is the clause binding Japan not to fortify the Russo-Korean frontier or the Soya Straits. He evidently believes that the present Cabinet has entirely lost credit and is not qualified to undertake the serious task now lying before the nation.

Wednesday, September 6.

The Jiji Shimpō very strongly recommends the speedy resignation of the Cabinet as the only means of appeasing the nation. It takes a very grave view of the occurrences of Tuesday night. The metropolis was for a time entirely out of hand. The police could not preserve order and the military had to be called out. Such a thing is unprecedented in Japan, and when the news reaches the provincial cities they will certainly respond to Tokyo's excitement in a greater or less degree. It is too much that the scenes enacted in St. Petersburg should be transferred to Tokyo. The only remedy is immediate resignation of the ministry. They have made a mistake and must accept the consequence. As to the peace, however, there could be no greater mistake than to regard it as a failure. Japan has obtained more than what she proposed to herself when she drew the sword. Materially her gains have been very large, and immaterially they have been still larger, for from the position of a small Oriental State she has sprung to that of a great world Power. Her squadrons have virtually annihilated the Russian fleet, and her armies have again and again triumphed over the forces of a country hitherto regarded as almost invincible in the field. Her situation now is that of a suitor who has won his case but has not been awarded his costs. It is merely a question of money, and economical problems are always open to solution. France, though beaten in her war thirty-five years ago, very soon recovered from the effects of the immense indemnity she had to pay, and Japan too will very soon recover. She stands in the position of Germany as victor but in the place of France with regard to finance. From many points of view she has to congratulate herself sincerely, and the matter of money need not greatly trouble her.

It is very re-assuring to find the Jiji

Shimpō taking this line. Such articles will soon exercise a soothing effect.

OPINIONS OF THE FOREIGN PRESS.

(RECEIVED BY THE FOREIGN OFFICE.)

The London journals express profound admiration for the manly self-control shown by Japan. The Times attributes the restoration of peace to her magnanimity and long suffering. It doubts greatly whether any European Power placed in Japan's position would have acted as she has done. She has shown herself possessed of the faculty of judging with perfect wisdom what is best for her own interests. Her powers of decision and of insight are irreproachable. She is unquestionably the leader of the Far East.

The Daily Telegraph declares that the loss of indemnity is certainly a serious thing for Japan but that, considered from the point of view that her adversary is a Power which can not be pushed to extremes, in any East-Asian War, her decision is proper, and the world is bound to applaud her.

The French press also applauds. The Petit Parisien thinks that this peace treaty will truly restore good relations between the two Powers. The Figaro praises the wisdom of the Tsar.

The German press welcomes the restoration of peace with the utmost satisfaction, and praises in the highest terms the attitude taken by Japan. The Allgemeine Zeitung considers that the restoration of peace is due to the profoundly wise resolution of Japanese statesmen, who have acted in a manner worthy of the highest dictates of civilization. All enlightened nations must applaud the moderation and self-restraint shown by Japan. It is now to be hoped that really friendly relations will be re-established between Japan and Russia. The German journal also expresses high appreciation of President Roosevelt's action.

Another telegram describes the German press as declaring that although Japan has not obtained an indemnity, her success is in no respect tarnished, and that the world's policy must now be recast.

The Russian press is profoundly disappointed. The Novoye Vremya declares that this peace is merely a matter of temporary necessity and that when Russia has rested, she will resume her journey. It considers the peace treaty an unprecedentedly unlucky treaty from a Russian point of view. The Russ proclaims that a new Russia must now be constructed which shall not be liable to these humiliations. The Svet laments the loss of Saghalien.

The Temps says:—This peace treaty shows that on the one hand Japan has obtained the utmost advantages to which she was entitled; on the other, Russia has obtained the special advantages that her geographical position conferred. Japan had gained victory after victory but she had not yet menaced the life of her enemy. Moreover, the geographical situation rendered it impossible for her to attain that point. With regard to financial weakness both sides were in a similar position and this may have influenced the attitude of the Plenipotentiaries. At all events so far as Japan was concerned the fact is that in spite of her repeated victories she could not deal a vital stroke to Russia, and thus the latter was able successfully to oppose the Japanese demands, which Japan, at the last moment, had only to withdraw. It is thus quite unreasonable to contend that the effect of Japan's repeated victories has been nullified by diplomacy. Japan is to be congratulated on her combined strength and moderation, Russia on her determination. We must appreciate that both were confronted by financial necessities and practical impossibilities, and that the Plenipotentiaries on each side adopted the course most conducive to their country's interests.

The Journal de Debats says that the principal reasons why Japan accepted these terms were that, in the first place, America and England brought pressure to bear on her; in the second her statesmen had the wisdom to appreciate the financial necessity of peace, and in the third Russia showed all her habitual obstinacy. Thus both sides are to be congratulated on the issue, and Russia has to thank M. Witte for having protected her interests to an unexpected degree.

The Aurore considers that by abandoning her claims for the payment of indemnity and the cession of Saghalien Japan has exhibited to the world a fine example of moderation. Such procedure conduces to the world's peace. By her act the people of Asia, who have hitherto been condemned as uncivilized and covetous, have now established their title to be regarded as highly civilized. They have added the victories of peace to the victories of war.

The National Zeitung considers that the treaty does not impair the reputation of either of the signatories, and that it consequently furnishes an important guarantee for the future. The indemnity question can not be regarded as of specially great importance to Japan, since she has obtained Liaoning and Korea as well as an open market in trade in north China. She has become the great Power of the Far East, and no one will hereafter venture to speak of the "Yellow Japanese." A people so brave and possessing such a power of self-control will long be respected by the whole world. "I continue the war would have brought glory to her flag, but would also have involved further sacrifices of life and treasure."

The Berlin Lokal Anzeiger says that the cruel war has ended and that it has resulted the rise of a victorious Power in Asia which has a full right to be reckoned among the great States. This peace has removed any apprehension of another conflict in the Far East in the near future. Russia had been badly beaten, but she had not entirely lost her political power in the Far East. The Japanese Government, appreciating this fact and putting restraint upon itself, withdrew demands which the Japanese people had considered proper and necessary in the sequel of a victorious war, especially the demand for an indemnity. Such forbearance is to be greatly applauded and it further demonstrates sagacity of Japan's leading statesmen as well as their firm confidence in themselves. By this act Japan has secured the applause of the world as a peace-loving Power. It is further satisfactory that the Russian Government, while yielding all Japan's demands resulting from the war, succeeded at the same time in resisting every thing that would have endangered Russia's position as a great Power.

The Vossische Zeitung says that if a basis for peace has been found it is because of Japan's pacific attitude in abandoning her demand for an indemnity and being content with a part of Saghalien. Japan has made some concession but she has obtained every thing that constituted an object of the war. There is no country that does not now recognise her as the victor. The post-humous Japan truly stands head and shoulders above all others in the Far East. Of what consequence was her abandonment of the indemnity question? Her people may be disappointed, but the only alternative was to spill more blood and waste more treasure. She has attained the ends for which she drew the sword. Russia probably flatters herself that the fight has ended without her complete discomfiture, but the world sees clearly that this war has compelled her to completely abandon her aggressive policy in the Far East.

The Berlin Bourse Courier declares that the world can not but appreciate the broad-minded and moderate attitude assumed by Japan's statesmen in the face of their country's glorious victories and of the patriotic valour of their army. It can not be doubted that there were good reasons which led Japan to make the utmost possible concessions to the vanquished State and to abandon greater advantages which were uncertain and could not have been secured without further suffering. Yet considering that such successes had been obtained on sea and on shore and that the nation did not shrink from further sacrifices of life and treasure, these great concessions, which will certainly create popular discontent, must have some conspicuous value. The result of the Portsmouth peace-treaty is that Japan stands pre-eminent in the Eastern Pacific and that Russia will be unable to shake her mailed fist for some time to come.

The Tageblatt thinks that in making these great concessions to a beaten foe Japan must have had in mind the Treaty of Prague when, for the sake of converting Austria into a permanent ally, Prussia yielded much. However that may be the results are clear. Japan has gained a firm footing on the Asiatic continent and has secured the predominance in Korea which is a matter of prime importance to her. She will probably share the administration of Manchuria with Russia. At a heavy cost of life and treasure she has obtained the position she coveted, has become a great Power and has unquestionably a right to be considered in the future policy of the world. The questions of an indemnity, of Saghalien, and of the surrender of the interned vessels were not vital. It will be all the better for her by and bye that she abandoned these points.

The Norddeutsche Allgemeine Zeitung thinks that it must have cost Japanese statesmen a severe effort to make such concessions but that their sagacity is more than established. Japan, the newly risen great Power of Asia, enters the comity of the old civilized States, having exhibited, not only in war but also in peace-making, conduct which is in accord with the best traditions of Western enlightenment. If His Majesty the Emperor of Japan and his Government abandoned their severe demands and adopted a conciliatory attitude, it was because of their own magnanimity, not because of any pressure from without. They deserve all the more credit.

The Neue Frei Press considers that Japan, by avoiding a continuation of the war merely for the sake of money, has given evidence of moderation which adds brilliancy to the series of victories won by her arms since the spring of last year.

Another German paper remarks that a new great Power has arisen in Asia, whereas in Europe a great Power has been defeated by its internal corruption. The immemorial belief in Russia's invulnerability has now been dispelled.

A telegram from St. Petersburg to the Neue Frei Press alleges that the liberal journals either keep silence about the treaty or make only brief allusions to it.

The Nouye Vremya affirms that among all the treaties made by Russia since ancient times this is the most disadvantageous. It is the product of diplomatic incompetence, official error and social corruption. The wounds inflicted by the war are not slight, but far more severe are the wounds inflicted by this peace.

When the fact became known that Japan had withdrawn her claim for an indemnity and had agreed to the partition of Saghalien, thus securing a practicable basis for a treaty, the satisfaction expressed by the American people at the restoration of peace was mingled with astonishment at Japan's concessions. But as they came to consider the matter coolly they not only recognised Japan's great immaterial gains, but also saw how large had been her material profit. Above all, the wisdom of making these concessions rather than continue the war was fully appreciated. The New York Tribune says:—Japan has gained a crowning victory. The terms of peace are more honourable to her than either the Battle of Mukden or the fight in the Sea of Japan. It is only a great people who, on the morrow of a succession of armed triumphs could be magnanimous enough to concede due advantages to a beaten enemy. Japan has actually done this. Her demands for the rendition of the interned ships and the limitation of Russia's naval forces were not crucial: they were probably advanced for the purposes of the conference. But, on the other hand, it was within her proper right to ask for an indemnity and the cession of territory. We are persuaded that to abandon these demands rather than continue the war was the wisest course. Their abandonment is to her advantage, and we fail to see how her wise magnanimity in giving them up can inure in any way to her loss.

The Russ is of the opinion that the Plenipotentiaries of both sides are to be congratulated on their success, but the main success is on Japan's side who has obtained all the important advantages. It then goes on to say:—"Up to the present Russia has suffered continuous losses. This last affair can not be called a success for her. How can such a treaty be termed a diplomatic success? Nothing more can be said of it than that a diplomatic failure has been avoided."

The Slavo considers that such humiliating terms of peace are inevitable when a country has been defeated.

The Naschafiane rejoices at the restoration of peace but says that no Russian will be pleased with the terms.

The Sinatshija says that in the sequel of an unsuccessful war there can be no reason why diplomacy should score a success. Nevertheless it believes that Russia has obtained the best terms she could have expected.

The Freundenblatt writes:—"It must be admitted that Japan has exercised much self-restraint, but that does not mean that the results obtained by her are small. On the contrary, she has got almost everything she sought. Preponderance in Korea, the opening of Manchuria, the expulsion of the Russians from southern Manchuria, the possession of Liaotung, the annexation of a part of Saghalien—these are the gains she has made."

Thirty-seven members, including two Russians, of the crew of the American steamer Montara, captured at Petropavlovsk, were released on Sept. 9 and in Yokohama.

BUSINESS MEN'S VIEWS.

Baron Shibusawa's views are published by the Nichi Nichi Shinbun. They are eminently sober views. He does not deny that there seems to be justice in the view which attributes a diplomatic defeat to Japan. The indemnity does not disturb him, but he bitterly regrets the partition of Saghalien. He evidently thinks that a little more firmness on the part of the Plenipotentiaries would have carried this point. But for the rest he strongly deprecates any pessimistic spirit. The country will do very well. Many enterprises wait to be undertaken: there is money in the banks, and foreign capital will surely flow in. There will not be a sudden burst of activity, as there was after the war with China, but neither will there be a period of depression and distress such as followed that brief season of prosperity. If the people put their shoulder to the wheel, all will go well.

Mr. Kondo Rempai recognises the great disappointment of failing to obtain an indemnity, and the consequent addition to the people's burdens. But he entertains no apprehension for the future. He describes himself as one of those that advocated war with Russia. Visits paid by him to Manchuria, Korea and Vladivostok before the conflict, showed him plainly that unless Japan drew the sword her integrity and independence would be seriously threatened. It was necessary for her to fight, and happily she won the day. This peace may not be entirely satisfactory but it certainly secures the objects on account of which Japan entered the arena. She has obtained full recognition of her status in Korea. She has recovered Liaotung. She has compelled Russia to evacuate Manchuria. She has come into possession of a large part of the East Chinese Railway and she has obtained other advantages. The future now rests with the people. Instead of girding against the inevitable their duty is to apply themselves to earnestly developing the country's resources and utilizing its opportunities. They must keep constantly before them the prospect that Russia will labour strenuously to equip herself for the task of revenge. It is for them to create a nation so strong that this danger will become inappreciable.

Mr. Ikeda Kenzo, President of the Rooth Bank, takes, on the contrary, a most pessimistic view. He does not believe that the country will easily or quickly recover from this shock, and he fails to see how funds are to be obtained for the immediate needs of the situation. One may observe en passant that if Mr. Ikeda's views be correct as to the difficulty of financing the finale of the fight, it is hard to see how means to continue the war could have been forthcoming.

Count Okuma, though not to be placed among the business men of Japan, may be quoted here as a great financier. He recalls his own prediction that the end of the war would see the national debt carried to 2,000 million yen and he recalls how he was then blamed for pessimism. Yet it is probable that the final figure will exceed his estimate. The interest and sinking fund alone will be a very heavy burden and in addition it will be inevitable to keep the country's armaments at a due standard. The prospect is formidable, yet Count Okuma is not one whit daunted by it. He foresees an immense development of the country's foreign trade and of her material resources of every kind, and he believes that under able administration she will easily weather the storm.

THE POLITICAL PARTIES AND THE PEACE.

The Council of the Seiyu-kai held a meeting at their headquarters in Tokyo on the 2nd instant to discuss the terms of peace. Marquis Saionji opened the proceedings with an address. He said that the restoration of peace was a matter for sincere congratulation in the interest of humanity. The exact terms had not yet been published, but as to the general fact there could be no doubt. It was necessary to remember the special character of the conference held at Portsmouth. Owing to the invitation of the President of the United States and their duty towards humanity, the Plenipotentiaries had entered the conference chamber on equal terms, and not in the mutual relation of victor and vanquished. No comparison could be set up, for example, between this case and that of the Franco-Prussian conference, when France, her country over-run by the enemy and her capital virtually in his hands, had been obliged to sue for peace. Further it had not been possible for Japan to ignore the trend of foreign opinion. From Japan's point of view it might appear that Russia was thoroughly beaten and should sue for peace. But such was not the view of Western States. They recognised that the war had not been in any sense a vital one for Russia and that there still remained to her a large residuum of strength. Further, they unanimously desired the restoration of peace. Just as the Russian Government had been urged by France and Germany to make every possible concession in the cause of peace, so Japan had been urged by the President of the United States acting as the spokesman of Occidental Powers. It would therefore have been the worst possible policy for Japan to break off the conference and run directly counter to this weight of public opinion merely because one or two of the conditions imposed by her failed to obtain the consent of the other side. As to an indemnity, the Tsar had refused again and again to consider it and had declared that he would be entirely content to continue the war. It can not be imagined that His Majesty was altogether insincere, and the fact must be accepted that he abandoned his desire to go on with the war in deference, as he said himself, to the solicitations of the President in the cause of humanity. He (Marquis Saionji) asked his hearers to consider which policy had produced the better impression upon the moral sense of the world; the policy of the Tsar who, after repeated defeats, declared himself for continuing the war rather than make a small concession in the conference chamber, and the policy of Japan who, victor in every fight on sea and on shore, had nevertheless waived her demand rather than cause fresh bloodshed. They had also to consider whether the moment had not come to make peace. Some, indeed, advocated going on with the war, but had not Russia's aggression been amply chastised? If so, was it not the moment to sheathe swords, clasp hands of friendship and devote themselves earnestly to the pursuits of peace? Looking at the matter from a material point of view, what was to be gained by continuing the war? Much might be lost in life and treasure, but no visible advantage would accrue. They had fully accomplished what they set out to accomplish and therefore from that point of view also the time for peace had come. It was not to be denied that so far as Manchuria and Korea were concerned Japan had fully achieved her original aim. She had indeed been obliged to abandon her claim for compensation altogether, and in part for the cession of Saghalien. That was most regrettable nor was it altogether unreasonable to say that it represented a diplomatic failure. But what did it avail to lament the past? Their plain part now was to avail themselves of this hardly won peace for purposes of political and commercial development so as to place the Empire on stronger foundations than ever. Many things had to be done in the future; many things had to be avoided. Great responsibilities and heavy duties devolved on the nation and any false step might lead to disastrous consequences. He earnestly hoped that the great Party whose representatives he addressed would treat the situation calmly, and would contribute its influence and assistance to promote the numerous enterprises now awaiting the application of the nation's peaceful energies.

The meeting then discussed the question and finally adopted a resolution in the sense that while the terms of peace could not be considered satisfactory, it seemed advisable to refrain from any immediate expression of definite opinion and to submit the question for discussion at a general assembly of the Party on the occasion of the pending extraordinary session of the Diet. They fully endorsed, however, the President's advice that all energies should now be directed to the active development of peaceful enterprises.

A very different tone was adopted at a meeting of the non-parliamentary members of the Seiyu-kai held the same day. They declared that the peace just concluded was dishonourable to Japan and calculated to work lasting evil. They further determined that the Cabinet should be called on to resign, that circulars should be distributed to rouse popular opinion, and that the Party's Council should be urged to demand the convening of a special session of the Diet.

The standing committee of the Progressists, also held a meeting, and it appeared that the minor differences which have of late somewhat impaired the unity of the Party are now laid aside in view of this great event. Dr. Hatoyama gave expression to that sentiment when he said that although he had matter for complaint, he waived all smaller issues at this crisis and gave his unqualified support to the policy of resolute opposition to a Cabinet which had concluded such a treaty and of earnest application to the post bellum measures. Mr. Inukai Ki followed. He protested, with reference to Dr. Hatoyama's opening remarks, that the Party's Council had not been inactive vis-a-vis the Government in the preliminary stages of the peace negotiations, but he declared that they had never expected such a disgraceful treaty as this. Some talked of endeavouring to prevent ratification. That was out of the question. What they had to do was to take such action in the approaching special session of the Diet as would fix the responsibility on the authors of this failure. Mr. Kurosu strongly censured the perfunctory methods hitherto pursued by the Committee and vehemently urged severing all connexion with the Seiyu-kai and refraining from all conferences with the Cabinet. Various other members spoke, all with similar emphasis, and it was finally decided to announce the results of the exchange of views with the Seiyu-kai, to denounce the peace treaty, to open a meeting for the purpose of compiling a manifesto declaring the Party's opposition to the terms obtained, and to confine themselves for the moment to an emphatic declaration of dissent, irrespective of the Seiyu-kai's views. The resolution passed by the meeting was this:—“The peace concluded by this Empire's Plenipotentiaries loses sight of the objects of the war and is contrary to the views of the nation. Therefore we consider it an unprecedented disgrace to the country.”

There is also another party in the field. It consists mainly of malcontents who formerly seceded from the ranks of the Seiyu-kai and the Progressists. They call themselves the Rengo Doshi-kai (party of united fellow-thinkers) and they are led by men like Messrs. Yamada, Otake and Oyama. They have decided to hold a mass meeting in the Hibiya Park on the 5th instant and afterwards to open a political-lecture assembly in the Shitomi theatre. The aim of this Party is to prevent the ratification of the treaty, and they have opened negotiations with the Seiyu-kai and the Progressists for that purpose. The Seiyu-kai, of course, will not consent, but the reception given to the delegates of the Doshi-kai by Mr. Inukai Ki in behalf of the Progressists forcibly illustrates the great defect of party organization in Japan, namely, the curiously wide liberty of individual action permitted to the members. Mr. Inukai said that while the Progressists as a party could not cooperate with the Doshi-kai for such a purpose, many of their members shared the latter's views, and there would be no objection to such members associating themselves as individuals with the Doshi-kai. Indeed, so far from objecting, the Progressists would welcome such procedure. Thus we have Mr. Inukai declaring openly to his own Party that any endeavour to prevent ratification of the treaty must be fruitless, and at the same time openly informing the members of the same Party that they are free to agitate for the attainment of that impossibility and that the Party will approve of their doing so. That is certainly a conspicuous case of facing both ways.

Seventy-three members of the House of Representatives met in Tokyo on the 7th instant. They included Messrs. Matsuda, Sugita, Oishi, Inukai, Shimada and Inouye (Kakuro) and may thus be said to have represented all parties. They passed two resolutions; one that not a day should be lost in summoning an extraordinary session of the Diet; the other that greater freedom of speech, publication and meeting should be established. A committee of five was appointed to carry these resolutions to the Prime Minister and to learn his views.

At 10 a.m. on the 7th a meeting of Tokyo Barristers took place on the premises of the Tokyo Local Court. They passed resolutions condemning in unequivocal terms the erroneous and unlawful measures adopted by the police to restrain the crowd on the night of the 6th, calling upon the public prosecutor to take into his own hands the examination of the citizens who have been arrested, thus removing it from the hands of the police; advising that measures be adopted for averting any spread of the trouble; advising that the constables should either be deprived of their swords or forbidden to draw them; and urging that everything possible be done to bring to justice such members of the police as had acted in excess of their instructions or their duty, thereby causing the death or wounding of innocent citizens.

Thereafter a smaller meeting of barristers was held. It adopted a resolution declaring that the terms of the peace treaty are at variance with the Imperial purpose as expressed in the Declaration of War; that they annul the results of Japan's consecutive victories; that they bring contempt on Japan abroad and dispirit her people at home, and that no effort should be spared to prevent the treaty from coming into existence.

A mass meeting was held in Kyoto on 4th inst. to protest against the peace. Ten thousand citizens are said to have present. Resolutions were passed calling for the punishment of the Ministry, the rejection of the treaty and the vindication of Japan's honour. That evening some disturbance arose, but it appears to have been of a comparatively trivial character.

There have been meetings in various other districts. All were unanimously opposed to the peace-terms which were generally denounced as disgraceful.

PROTESTS AGAINST THE PEACE TERMS.

Monday, September 4.

On the 3rd instant a meeting was held at Osaka to protest against the terms of peace. Some three thousand five hundred persons are said to have assembled. The principal promoter was Mr. Matsumura, whom we do not identify, but it is observable that Mr. Mitani, chairman of the City Assembly, and Mr. Hino, chairman of the Prefectural Assembly, took part in the proceedings. The approaches were decorated with white lanterns and the flags displayed were festooned in black. Many of those present wore sprays of shibumi and altogether the intention of imparting a funeral character to the proceedings was very thoroughly carried out. Resolutions of an extreme nature were voted amid the greatest excitement. It was agreed that rather than submit to such a disgraceful peace Japan should fight to the death. The resolutions said, first, that the members of the present Cabinet and the Elder Statesmen responsible for the peace should resign in order to satisfy the nation; and secondly that this treaty should be rejected and the war continued. It was further decided to send a telegram to Baron Komura informing him that the treaty he was about to conclude could not be endured by the nation and must be rejected; and a telegram to Marquis Oyama declaring that the nation would work for the overthrow of the peace treaty and that the army should continue the fight and break the enemy.

Another meeting was held on the same day in Nagoya. Here, too, about 3,500 people are reported to have assembled in the Misono theatre. They passed a resolution to the effect that the proposed terms of peace forfeit the successful results of the war and are inimical to the permanent interests of the State. Therefore the Ministry must be called on to resign and some measure to correct the situation must be adopted.

The Rengo Doshi-kai have issued their circular. It is a violently worded document. The peace is called disgraceful; the object of the war is declared to have been forgotten; the Emperor's orders to secure lasting tranquillity are said to have been disobeyed; the spirits of a hundred thousand brave soldiers who gave their lives for their country are declared to have been insulted; the nation is invited to rise in protest; and the Emperor is asked to hearken to the voice of the people as His Majesty has always hearkened to it.

These occasions call to the front the restless spirits. Our old friends Messrs. Abe Hankon, Nakajima Shakuin, Suzuki Shigetō and others, have presented to the Throne a document which they call the petition of the aged. Its contents are easily conceived, but they differ from the somewhat unreasoning utterances of other protesters. The line taken is that Russia's obduracy in the negotiations shows her to be entirely unsubdued and that until she is taught a severe lesson there can be no hope of permanent peace. Therefore the petitioners pray the Sovereign to withhold ratification of the treaty and to continue the war. The document is long, but this is the kernel of it. The rest is merely a reference to the great efforts made by the nation and to the extreme inadvisability of disappointing the people who have sacrificed their lives and their treasure for the sake of securing a peace which, under this treaty, must be quite illusory.

The sale of the Niroku Shinbun of the 3rd has been interdicted—a thoroughly well deserved sentence.

Mr. Ozaki Yukio, who was always an opponent of the war, remains so still. He does not now attach much importance to either Saghalien or an indemnity. The possession of Saghalien is not of any serious moment because Japanese expansion must be in a southerly direction, and the loss of an indemnity was always to be expected since the fact that Russia would not or could not pay one was apparent from the first. But the nation fought for permanent peace and it has not obtained that object. The division of Saghalien and the provisions restricting the carriage of troops and the fortification of certain regions will be fruitful causes of dispute and many easily precipitate another struggle. Mr. Ozaki has always been a prominent advocate of an entente with Russia rather than of one with England, and we are not surprised to find him now saying that jealousy drove Japan into this war; jealousy of Russian enterprises in Manchuria and Korea, though the Japanese themselves are not prepared to take up these enterprises. He has always been also an advocate of party Cabinets, and therefore the colour of his criticisms on the present occasion might have been predicted. But apart from these biasing preoccupations his arguments have at least the merit of being intelligent and intelligible.

Professor Amano, who distinguished himself by predicting from the first that an indemnity could not be obtained, discusses the peace in a manner worthy of his prescience. He ridicules the idea propounded in some quarters that the army desired peace finding itself unable to win a final victory. If there were any such preponderance on the Russian side, Linevitch would have assumed the offensive, especially when any victory won by him must have been of such immense advantage to his country with regard to the peace conference. He also ridicules the notion that Japan hesitated to provoke Russian enmity to an implacable degree lest the great Northern Power should turn on her after the expiration of the Anglo-Japanese alliance. The real cause of the acceptance of such terms was economical. What the Cabinet felt was that the time had come to cease further outlays and to obtain some re-imbursement of those already incurred. Russia divined this object. Therefore she contrived to begin the negotiations from the other end, and to settle all the minor questions leaving to the finish the great problems of an indemnity and cession of territory. Then suddenly when these problems came up for discussion, she adopted an adamant attitude. The Japanese Plenipotentiaries might have reasonably looked for something in return for abandoning the indemnity, but there was nothing to get: everything else had been disposed of. (Professor Amano forgets Saghalien). That was the mistake made by Baron Komura. He should not have agreed to such an order of procedure. The Government, however, naturally concluded that if an indemnity could not be obtained, the next best thing was to stop the outlay of further monies. In fact the gold standard may be said to have been the basis of the whole arrangement. But as for those who cry out that Japan is ruined because she has not obtained an indemnity, they are wholly inconsistent since they are the very men who advocate continuing the war and therefore incurring further expenses, and they are unpatriotic because, for the sake of attacking the Government, they give to the world the false information that the country's resources are exhausted and they encourage Russia to resume her aggressions.

Tuesday, September 5.

Mr. Kono Hironaka, who has ever been the stormy petrel of Japanese politics since the day when he came into notice as one of the Fukushima agitators and received a sentence of 7 years' imprisonment, naturally comes to the front at this juncture. As representative of the Doshi Rengo-kai he has addressed to the Emperor a petition calling for the summary punishment of the Cabinet Ministers and the Plenipotentiaries. The document is of medium length. It does not reason at all. From first to last it consists solely of rhetoric. There is indeed a hint that the object announced in the Emperor's Declaration of War has not been obtained, but even this is not elaborated. It stands as a mere ipse dixit in a profuse frame-work about the thousands of widows and orphans made by the war, about the petitioners' inability to get an answer from the sky when they cry to it or from the earth when they consult it, and about other matters tabulated for the sake of exciting passion and obscuring intelligence. Of course Mr. Kono Hironaka and his friends are sincere, but their phrensy only indicates how necessary it is in the State's best interests that cooler heads should look after its affairs.

The newspaper men have stirred up the honorary officials of the City, the Prefecture and the Wards of Tokyo, and a monster meeting is to be held in the Yurakucho region on the 7th inst. Doubtless a vehement resolution will be passed and copies of it are to be sent to the Cabinet, to Admiral Togo and to Marquis Oyama. Evidently reason has been pulled off her throne and prejudice established in her place. How much there is wanted at this juncture a strong man to raise his voice in the cause of common sense!

The minor journals continue their campaign against the ratification of the treaty. They do not tell their readers anything about the probable results of withholding ratification and continuing the war. Indeed it is observable that no newspaper, great or small, the Kokumin and the Chuo excepted, devotes any attention to this essential phase of the problem. All seem to be possessed by the absorbing notion that the country has suffered some disgrace, and since human passion generally appeals to physical force under the influence of such a conviction, they are quite persuaded for the moment that to continue fighting would have been preferable.

Wednesday, September 6.

The impression appears to be that popular discontent does not really take the form of desiring either the non-ratification of the treaty or the continuance of the war. What is wanted is merely that the Cabinet should acknowledge its failure and accept the responsibility by retiring from office. The Nippon, which has distinguished itself at this crisis by its manly and thoughtful writing, declares that the people's anger against the Kokumin Shimbun is because that journal, instead of acknowledging that there has been a diplomatic failure, writes as though there had been a great diplomatic success, and at the door of the complainants lays the charge of wanting to continue the war. All sensible men, says our contemporary, recognise that ratification of the treaty can not be withheld and that the war could not have been continued for the sake of an indemnity or for the sake of one half of Saghalien. On the other hand they are persuaded that such large concessions need not have been made by Japan so hurriedly and they think that one further effort might have secured a better settlement. They are the more convinced of this when they read in European journals like the Debats statements that Russia has not lost much and that M. Witte is to be congratulated. What they want, then, is a manly confession of failure and a corresponding recognition of responsibility. Even the Chuo, hitherto remarkable for its moderation, advises the resignation of the Ministry as the only means of allaying popular discontent. The Asahi takes the same line. It says that it would like to see the treaty broken and so would the people. But that is impossible, and the proceedings of the mob on Tuesday night will not bring them any nearer to such an end. There is nothing for it except a Ministerial resignation. General Viscount Takashima, formerly Minister of War in the Okuma-Matsukata Cabinet, evidently thinks that these popular demonstrations have their use as showing plainly that the nation does not shrink from continuing the war and that there is no question of inability to do so. He therefore recommends that steps be taken to appease the people. As to the terms, what seems to trouble him most is the condition that the Soya Straits are not to be fortified. Since there is no restriction upon the fortification of Vladivostok there ought not to be any on that of Soya.

But General Takashima does not state whether, in his opinion as a military expert, there would be any use in fortifying the Strait. We can not for our own part see that there would. Land-forts could not do anything towards sealing the passage: it is too wide to be commanded by gun-fire from the shore. The only object then in building forts would be to protect a dockyard or naval station, and presumably there cannot be any intention of establishing either the one or the other. The argument as to inequality of treatment is specious. At first sight one is disposed to agree entirely with Viscount Takashima that if no such restriction applies to Vladivostok, neither should it apply to Soya. It will be observed, however, that there is a corresponding provision with regard to the Russian half of Saghalien. In that region also no forts are to be erected. The Plenipotentiaries seem to have regarded the Saghalien as one distinct from questions relating to other parts of the field.

KOREA.

It is confidently asserted that Mr. McLeavy Brown is about to depart for England, and that the Korean Customs will pass under the superintendence of Mr. Megata. If that be effected there will be an end of the anomaly of the Customs standing entirely independent of the Treasury.

Some Koreans who, like the gladiators of old, call themselves morituri, have addressed a circular to "Japanese of intelligence and benevolence, official and private." The memorialists attack the methods pursued by Japanese civil and military officials in Seoul with regard to the problem of the exchange of nickel coins and the rendering of assistance to Korean merchants and with regard to the problem of requisitioning land for military purposes. We learn that this question of the nickels is being dealt with by Mr. Megata in a manner approved by the Government of Japan, and that the proposed scheme for rendering assistance to the merchants having been improper, their demand was quite unreasonable. It will be remembered that they asked for an unsecured loan for an indefinite period without interest. As to the problem of land requisition, it is stated on the best authority that the Japanese civil and military officials are in consultation with Korean officials and are doing everything in their power to save the owners of the land from being subjected to any inconvenience or loss. The manifesto therefore is a baseless document. It is supposed to have been compiled and circulated by some of the agitators who recently broke into the private residence of the Minister of Home Affairs with reference to the land problem, or by some of those who assaulted the Foreign Minister in connexion with the coast-trade convention. No importance whatever is officially attached to the document.

Subsequent reports confirm the intelligence that Mr. McLeavy Brown is about to leave Korea. When the custom house was established in that country—in the days of Yuan Shih-kai's residency, if we remember aright—Korea was in effect a tributary of China and the customs there were treated as a branch of the Chinese Imperial Maritime establishment. By and bye the China-Japan war asserted the peninsular Kingdom's independence—it was then a Kingdom—but by a curious anomaly it had the effect of asserting the custom's independence also, for Mr. McLeavy Brown became a species of imperator in imperio and administered his department unfettered by any Korean Governmental connexions. Very fortunate for the country was it that this able official took that line, for the customs under his management became the one bright spot amid a welter of financial mismanagement and corruption. So soon, however, as Japan took hold and set herself, through Mr. Megata, to reorganize Korean finances, it became evidently necessary that the customs should be absorbed into the general scheme, and should lose its independent character. This is what seems to have now happened, and Mr. McLeavy Brown, who has served in China and Korea for some thirty-odd years and is moreover of mature age, seems to have preferred retirement to subordination. We do not doubt that his great services have been duly recognised.

With reference to the alleged expropriation of land in the suburbs of Seoul, the latest information from Korea suggests that the ground in question is a site intended for the Seoul-Wiju Railway's metropolitan terminus. We are assured that there is no intention whatever of taking any land except upon payment of a just sum, and as to the pretence that three square miles of space are required for such a purpose it is absurd on the face of it. Persons well acquainted with Seoul inform us that the only place in the suburbs of Seoul where there are "hundreds of tiled houses," as described by the formulator of the charge against the Japanese, is the land lying between the city wall and the river front, and in that region no area three miles square could be blocked out that does not contain valuable property owned by foreigners and Japanese as well as summer residences of Korean dignitaries. It is plainly silly to imagine that the Japanese military authorities would seek to gain possession of such property without paying an adequate price. The only credible hypothesis is that the writer of the letter about this land question heard an extremely exaggerated rumour as to what is really intended to be the site of the railway station, and believing the story en bloc, greatly over-stated the size and mis-stated the object.

THE ARMISTICE.

The Foreign Office announces that on the 1st inst. the peace Plenipotentiaries signed the following Armistice Treaty:—

The undersigned Plenipotentiaries of Japan and Russia, duly authorized to that effect by their Governments, have agreed upon the following terms of armistice between the belligerents pending the coming into force of the Treaty of Peace:—

- 1.—A certain distance (zone of demarcation) shall be fixed between the front of the armies of the two Powers in Manchuria, as well as in the region of the Tumen River.
- 2.—The naval forces of one of the belligerents shall not bombard territory belonging to or occupied by the other.
- 3.—Maritime captures will not be suspended by the armistice.
- 4.—During the term of the armistice reinforcements shall not be despatched to the theatre of war. Those which are en route shall not be despatched to the north of Mukden on the part of Japan or south of Harbin on the part of Russia.
- 5.—The commanders of the armies of the two Powers shall determine in common accord the conditions of the armistice in conformity with the conditions above enumerated.
- 6.—The two Governments shall give orders to their commanders, immediately after the signature of the Treaty of Peace, in order to put this protocol in execution.

(Signed) KOMURA JUTARO
TAKAHARA KOGORO
SERGE WITTE
ROSEN

Dated Sept. 1st, 1905.

THE RICE CROP.

The Department of Agriculture and Commerce has issued its first estimate of this year's rice crop. It is believed that the yield will be 21.7 per cent. less than that of last year—which was altogether extraordinary—and 9.2 per cent. below that of an average year. That is the state of affairs at present, and if the weather continues fine an average crop may be anticipated. The figures published are as follow:—

	Koku.
1895.....	39,060,798
1896.....	36,240,351
1897.....	33,039,393
1898.....	47,387,666
1899.....	39,668,458
1900.....	41,466,422
1901.....	46,914,434
1902.....	35,932,266
1903.....	46,473,293
1904.....	51,430,221
1905 estimate.....	40,292,653
Average.....	44,388,016

The average is obtained by taking the 7 years from 1898 to 1904, inclusive, and omitting the worst of the series (1902) and the best (1904).

RIOTING IN TOKYO.

Tuesday, September 5.

The mass meeting of Tokyo citizens announced for the 5th instant took place under some difficulties. All the gates of Hibiya Park had been shut and mounted police and gendarmes had been posted to prevent ingress, but when the crowd attained sufficient dimensions to defy control, a portion of the Park railings were torn up and thousands of people surged into the enclosure. Mr. Kono Hironaka, always to the fore when any violent agitation is on foot, seemed to be at the head of the mob. At all events he read a resolution which was warmly applauded amid much excitement. We have not yet received a copy of the document. Thereafter the crowd, followed by a number of constables, made its way to the bridge on the east of the Palace, whence there was talk of its proceeding to the Foreign Office and the official residence of the Prime Minister.

The resolutions adopted by the meeting called for the non-ratification of the treaty. Subsequently a portion of the meeting proceeded to the office of the Kokumin Shinbun and caused considerable destruction there. On their way back they called at the official residence of the Home Minister, whose procedure in closing Hibiya Park to the meeting had caused much umbrage. They smashed a gate and attempted to set fire to the railings, but there was no serious result.

Wednesday, September 6.

Long accounts are published by Tokyo journals about the mass meeting in Hibiya Park on the 5th. The general impression is that had the police refrained from attempting to block the entrances to the Park no trouble would have arisen. It was felt that in thus acting the police exceeded their legitimate functions, inasmuch as the Park is in the hands of the Tokyo Municipality whose consent to the closing of the place had not been obtained by the police. Members of the City Assembly took the lead in tearing away the obstacles, and thus the mob were excited to commit excesses. They made a deliberate attempt—three attempts it is said—to burn the official residence of the Home Minister, whom they held responsible for the Government's procedure in essaying to prevent the gathering. At one moment it seemed that the building must be destroyed, especially as the fire-engines coming to save it were deliberately obstructed, one being wrecked. Ultimately it became necessary to summon the assistance of the military, and when these—the Guards—appeared upon the scene order was quickly restored. A section of the mob made their way to the official residence of the Prime Minister, but finding it thoroughly guarded, they did not attempt anything. During the night, they occupied themselves destroying police-boxes, twenty of which—some say twenty-three—were pulled out into the middle of the street and burned. The police seem to have studiously refrained at first from using their weapons, but when their own safety was very seriously compromised they were obliged to draw their swords. So far as is known at this moment (Wednesday morning) fifteen citizens were wounded and eighteen policemen. The lecture-meeting in the Shintomiza theatre did not come off. The police had closed the building and shut the gates, and although one of the latter was broken down, the resolute demeanour of the constables restrained the crowd, who probably consisted of the less violent section of the citizens. One orator attempted to address the people from the balcony of a tea-house opposite the theatre, but after a struggle he was silenced. It would seem that the leading men left the streets at a comparatively early hour and proceeded to the Maple Club, where they held a friendly gathering under the presidency of Mr. Kono Hironaka. The great object of the agitators being to bring about the Emperor's refusal to ratify the treaty of peace, the addresses delivered and the resolutions passed were directed to that end. Probably the great mass of the people assembled in the Hibiya Park did not clearly know what they were voting, but at any rate the resolutions nominally passed and read aloud by Mr. Kono Hironaka were these:—

"We, the united people of Japan, insist that this humiliating treaty must be abolished."

"We earnestly desire that our armies in the field advance boldly and destroy the enemy."

The above two resolutions were to be forwarded to the Commander-in-chief in Manchuria, but unless the telegraphic regulations be violated Marquis Oyama will never receive them by wire, inasmuch as they partake of the character of private messages, which may not be transmitted over military telegraphs.

There was also a resolution addressed to the Privy Council. It prayed the Council to move His Majesty to withhold ratification of the treaty. At the Maple Club, Mr. Yamada Kinoshige, one of the old seceders from the Suiyu-kai, argued vehemently against the idea that it would be a breach of national good-faith to withhold ratification, and urged that His Majesty be strongly petitioned in that sense. Mr. Otaki Kanichi spoke in a similar tone and proposed a number of measures for securing the rejection of ratification. These measures took the form of petitions, lectures, meetings, visits to members of the Privy Council and of the two Houses and so forth. They were enthusiastically adopted. Representatives of the following prefectures also spoke, namely, Kanagawa, Hyogo, Fukushima, Shizuoka, Osaka, Hyogo, Ehime, Niigata, Saitama and several others. Mr. Anjoji Kyoshi declared that the mistaken foreign policy of 1874 had led to the war of 1894-5; the mistakes of 1895 had led to the war of 1904; and now the present blundering would surely plunge the people in a worse war than ever five or six-years hence. At this stage a barrister whose name is not given, rose and deliberately reported that the residence of the Home Minister had just been burned; a number of police-boxes destroyed, and an attack on the Foreign Office was about to take place. This announcement was received with cheers. Then Mr. Ota Suketoki invited those present to rise and say a prayer for the souls of the brave men who had perished in a war that threatened to be fruitless. While this ceremony was in progress news arrived that the Guards had surrounded a large body of citizens in Hibiya Park and the meeting thereupon broke up in disorder. The Nippon says that flames were seen in some 13 places in Tokyo before 2 a.m., but these were doubtless the burning of police-boxes. The police-station at Kyobashi was also burned.

The newspapers may thank themselves for this disturbance. With few exceptions their writings about the treaty of peace have been such as could scarcely fail to cause popular excitement. The reign of reason seems tardy in coming. It is to be noted, however, that so far as actual deeds of violence are concerned, there would probably have been none at all had not the authorities taken the unwise step of attempting to close the Hibiya Park. The original programme did not extend beyond the voting of resolutions in the Park, the singing of the National Anthem outside the Palace and the holding of a lecture meeting in the Shintomi theatre as well as a convivial gathering in the Maple Club. It is more than probable that had no attempt been made to interfere with these proceedings, the whole affair would have passed off in an orderly manner.

Judging from what we saw yesterday of the partial destruction of a police-box outside the Sakurada Gate in Tokyo at 11 a.m., it appeared to us that this work was done entirely by a party of lads, seemingly students, from 17 to 20 years of age or perhaps a little older. They formed a kind of flying detachment, moving rapidly along the streets and stoning the police-box as they passed. Of course the damage done was trifling. It did not extend beyond the smashing of glass windows and the cracking or denting of boards. In fact the affair suggested a demonstration rather than a riot. No policemen were visible. Half an hour subsequently a force of ten constables moved at a leisurely pace towards the Sakurada Gate, but not one could be seen at the time of the occurrence. A mounted gendarme stood quietly in the gateway observing the doings of the lads, and a crowd of citizens looked on from the parapet of the moat, but on the whole it was evident that these students, some thirty in number, constituted the whole active force in this quarter of the city. Probably there were other bands similarly occupied in other districts. The action of the police during the night of the 5th seems to have produced very bad feeling among the citizens. Not only did these resent the attempt to exclude them from the Hibiya Park, but they were also much exasperated by the constables' subsequent use of weapons. The constables themselves suffered severely, mainly from stone-throwing, and having received orders to close the park their duty left them no choice. But the death of three citizens and the wounding of several others make a novel record in the Japanese capital, and do not tend to allay the excitement already caused by the peace treaty. It is a difficult problem is that of dealing with these mass meetings. The British authorities have had their own share of trouble. On the whole, with people naturally so orderly as the Japanese the best plan seems to be a minimum of official interference.

We learn that some 200 citizens are in custody. About 80 were arrested within the compound of the Home Minister's official residence, and 40 in the Hibiya Park at 8 a.m. on the 6th. It is said that four police-stations were burned, namely those at Fukagawa, Shitaya, Asakusa and Yorozyo-bashi.

Members of the Tokyo City Council, the City Assembly and others held a meeting on Wednesday and passed resolutions condemning the terms of the peace treaty as not calculated to assure permanent peace, and condemning also the action of the Government in interfering with expressions of public opinion.

Five members of the House of Representatives have been prosecuted by the Public Prosecutor on a charge of disturbing the public peace. It is stated that the police station at Nihonbashi was burned on Wednesday at 4 p.m.

Thursday, September 7.

The meeting of the Privy Council held yesterday and that of the Council of Ministers at the Palace was for the purpose applying the 9th and the 14th Articles of the Martial Law to the city of Tokyo and its suburbs. The import of these Articles is to place the districts in question under military control. This will apply especially to the case of newspapers and magazines. If they publish any matter calculated, in the opinion of the Home Minister, to subvert the Government or to incite the people to violations of law and order, they are liable to restraints of various kinds, including suspension and suppression.

This is a great disgrace to Tokyo, but it must be regretfully admitted that the newspapers are fully responsible. Their unreasoning attitude, or at all events the unreasoning attitude of many of them, in connexion with the peace-terms has been quite astonishing. That popular excitement should have been raised to a very high pitch by the vague conception of having yielded in the conference-chamber to a country which Japan had thoroughly beaten in the field was natural enough, but it is precisely at such a time that respectable newspapers should lend their aid to the cause of reason, and should endeavour to recall the people from passion to logic. It is hard to say which journal is most blameworthy. We are inclined to pick out the Hochi Shimbun, which published one of the most disgraceful pictures we have ever seen in the columns of a newspaper. It is not to be denied that if leading statesmen do not recognise the duty of keeping their private lives free from moral blemish, they place in the hands of their enemies a weapon which is sure to be wielded against them. But the Hochi Shimbun's picture was not inspired by any solicitude for social morality. It was one of the most terrible incentives to violence and hatred that could possibly be conceived, and when we remember that the journal is owned by Mr. Minoru Katsudo, a member of the House of Representatives, the offence becomes doubly disgraceful. But if the Hochi is a conspicuous sinner, it must be admitted that the Asahi also has sinned badly. It has filled whole pages with subscribers' letters many of which are totally unfit to appear in journalistic columns. One expects very different action on the part of a journal like the Asahi, but we are obliged to confess that with a very few honourable exceptions the press of Tokyo has shown few commendable qualities at this crisis.

For the present the city will be under the control of General Viscount Sakuma.

On the 6th inst. there were some further ebullitions of riotous spirit. Nothing could better illustrate the unreasoning character of the proceedings than the fact that the mob destroyed some 30 carriages belonging to the Shigwai Electric Railway Company. This was plainly the work of jinrikisha coolies and had nothing to do with politics. Some disposition was displayed to resume the attempts against the residence of the Home Minister, but the place being under military guard nothing could be accomplished. A lighted torch is said to have been thrown over the gate. At 1.20 on the morning of the 7th, a party of roughs succeeded in setting fire to the Kanda Police-station, which was destroyed.

The Asahi Shimbun affirms that 139 police-boxes were burned and 29 were smashed, but on examining the Asahi's list we observe that several police-boxes are shown as burned though our own personal observation contradicts the statement.

The police returns state that 60 constables were wounded (10 of them severely) and 6 gendarmes. The number of citizens said to have been injured is 73. Concerning this last number there are many versions, some authorities alleging that as many as 4 or 5 citizens were killed in addition to those wounded. Eight persons have been prosecuted as leaders of the mob.

It is thought that the number of arrests exceed 300, but there will be much difficulty in adducing proofs of guilt, and there is a strong conviction that many wholly innocent onlookers were arrested. So far as we can ascertain the rioters consisted chiefly of students and workmen; in fact, of folks whose ideas of the political situation must be extremely obscure. The general opinion is that had the police refrained from all attempts to close the Hibiya Park or obstruct the demonstration, there would not have been anything in the shape of a disturbance. In short the affair closely resembles one of the experiences not uncommon in London, where by seeking to exclude the people from a rendezvous—Hyde Park for example—the police have inspired a spirit of outrage. Virtually the whole resentment of the people was directed against the police whom they usually regard as excellent friends. It is certainly an excessive exercise of authority to interdict a meeting at the eleventh hour when the object of the meeting is in no sense seditious. The usual course is to wait until the meeting develops a dangerous character. The police on this occasion not only sought to prevent the very holding of meetings, but adopted that course at such a late hour as to leave no sufficient interval for warning. In the Asakusa district of the city there was no rioting nor any demonstration against the police, simply because the latter appealed to the people's reason and refrained from all violent measures of repression.

The mass meeting under the auspices of the City Assembly which was to have been held on the 8th instant, has been abandoned, owing to apprehension of fresh disturbance.

The Governor of Tokyo has issued a very wise proclamation recognising the patriotic motives that inspire the people but pointing out that they can only injure themselves and their country by proceeding to acts of violence, by breaking the law and by destroying public or private property. Baron Senge notes specially the extremely regrettable feature that students should wreck their career by making themselves instruments of riotous procedure.

As Mr. Harriman and his party were proceeding to the residence of the Minister of State for Finance on the 5th instant, having been invited to dinner by Baron Sone, one of their number was struck on the back of the head by a stone; and as they were returning, another of the party, whose jinrikisha had got ahead of the carriages, was hustled and might have been roughly handled but for the activity and presence of mind of his drawers. The Hochi Shimbun writes very hotly about this disgrace to the city, but while endorsing our contemporary's strictures we desire to ask with whom does the responsibility rest primarily. Can it be imagined by the Hochi Shimbun that its own writings and the shocking caricatures it has published have not been fully as subversive of peace and good order as are the outrages committed by students and working men? To Japan's friends nothing could have been more profoundly disappointing than the conduct of the newspapers at this crisis. We think very little of the commotion caused by the citizens of Tokyo. Indeed we have no hesitation whatever in laying the blame on the police, who having committed the great initial blunder of interfering with perfectly legitimate expressions of public opinion, supplemented their error by recourse to excessive violence, thus converting Tokyo into a species of St. Petersburg. But we do think most seriously of the extraordinary vertigo which seized the whole of the Tokyo press—with the notable exceptions of the Kokumin, the Chuo and the Nippon—and thus not only betrayed the papers into a display of such unreasoning prejudice as has seldom been paralleled but also perverted them into instruments of fear and incendiarism. It is upon the shoulders of the press that the prime responsibility rests on this most unhappy occasion, and we address these words without reservation even to the great leading journals, the Fiji Shimbun, the Asahi Shimbun and the Nichi Nichi Shimbun. There is not the slightest doubt what the verdict of the future will be about their conduct.

General Sakuma, who is now in charge of the city of Tokyo, has issued orders to the troops enjoining the necessity of restoring and maintaining order. He points out that though the rioters act without any professed purpose, they must be restrained. The troops on guard are first to exhaust every pacific means of preserving tranquillity and preventing outrages; if these means fail they are to fire blank cartridge, and in the last resort they are to use bullets. It is specially enjoined that care must be taken not to injure mere spectators.

MR. SATO.

Mr. Sato Airmar has achieved quite a reputation in connexion with the peace negotiations. Whether it can be called an altogether enviable reputation is perhaps questionable, though an excellent likeness of him has appeared in American journals over the legend, "The talkative member of Baron Komura's suite, whose loquacity has delighted newspaper men and perplexed the diplomats." The Literary Digest devotes nearly two columns to the subject, and its comments will interest Mr. Sato's friends we reproduce them:—

Slavonic stolidity and Oriental secretiveness are proverbial. As the Russian and Japanese plenipotentiaries and their attachés are representatives of their respective countries it was naturally expected that they would display these peculiar qualities and envelop themselves during all the course of their mission in a veil of impenetrable reserve and silence. But they did nothing of the kind. They submitted to be interviewed, were tempted into answering statement with counter-statement, and then into contradicting themselves in a way that completely surprised and delighted the newspaper men with whom they came in contact. Says the New York Evening Post: "There have been peace conferences many, and plenipotentiaries have met before, but we doubt if the world's business up till now can show the sort of diplomatic scenery from house-tops to which we are to-day listening."

Mr. A. Imara Sato, of Baron Komura's suite, began the talking, and he kept it going even after Mr. Serge J. Witte, the Czar's senior peace envoy, landed at New York last week. On August 2, however, he seemed to realize that he had overstepped the limits of discretion, and so he expressed his regrets to the reporters who had assembled at the Waldorf Astoria Hotel and informed them that their day's meeting with him must end. "It has been very pleasant," he politely said, "but now we must stop. I shall be so very busy." But before he announced this resolution (which was soon broken) he had about all that a diplomat could tell. Says the New York World—

"Mr. Sato—speaking absolutely for himself—had given a ready answer to almost every question, but now it was all over. His ideas as to what Japan should demand had been very thoroughly aired and a good many things that otherwise would not have been made public have been spread broadcast over the world. Some of them have even reached St. Petersburg, and comments thereon have been cabled back to this country."

On August 5 the peace plenipotentiaries departed for Oyster Bay. But before they left Mr. Sato was unable to refrain from imparting a few final "confidences" to his newspaper friends. If he is correctly reported by the New York Tribune, he publicly and freely discussed with his interviewers again all the more important problems to be solved at the conference at Portsmouth. So it appears that Mr. Sato is the person whom the world has to thank for the information that Japan will insist upon keeping Saghalien and demand an indemnity of $500,000,000 as the first terms of any treaty of peace. The announcement that he was speaking "absolutely for himself" was not made until time was given to find out what effect his remarks would have upon the authorities at St. Petersburg and the world at large. Newspapers are now asking what object, if any, Baron Komura had in attaching to his suite such a talkative man as Mr. Sato, for they are in doubt as to whether they have been grossly deceived or have been made the unwitting instruments for conveying "bluffs" and threats to Russia. Thus the New York Sun, in a half-humorous vein, says:

"The masterly skill with which Mr. Sato screened his force in its journey from the Pacific coast to the Atlantic, the strategic genius he has displayed in keeping it perfectly covered ever since it occupied and entrenched itself in the Waldorf-Astoria, a week ago yesterday, can not be overpraised."

"The selection of such a man for a post of such peculiar difficulty, moreover, is only another evidence of the astuteness of Baron Komura himself. Knowing the Japanese genius for anticipating with minute preparation all future contingencies that may be humanly possible, it can not be doubted that the newspaper interview feature of the peace conference expedition to America was studied and perfected before leaving Tokyo with as much minuteness of detail as were the more vital plans involved in the contest."

If the purpose of Mr. Sato was to elicit expressions of opinion from Russian officials, he must feel greatly satisfied with his success, for the Czar, if a special cable to the New York Times be true, took occasion to publicly declare "his approval of the recommendation to continue the war till the enemy is crushed, and, above all, not to think of the cession of territory or the payment of an indemnity, and to make no peace unworthy of great Russia"; and Mr. Witte, while en route to this country, was reported to have said:—"I am afraid peace negotiations will be ended in a week. The Japanese conditions are too intolerable to admit discussion." Mr. Witte, however, upon landing, declared, through an interpreter, to the reporters assembled to meet him, that if he made this remark, "it was in a private capacity, and he had no knowledge that it was to be used for publication."

"BLOOD IS THICKER THAN WATER."

Mention in a recent note on "The Naval Pocket-Book" of the title of one of the late Sir William Laird Clowes' works of fiction may have brought to the minds of some of our readers a famous incident that occurred in the China Seas in the late fifties. Though various accounts of the affair have been published, the following letter and comments which appeared in the Spectator of July 15th are so good that they seem quite worthy to be added to the list:—

SIR,—An old man residing in this town is one of the few living men who saw the American flag raised at Monterey in 1846. He was a warrant officer on the sloop-of-war Cyane, a ship that was presented us by the Mother-country in the early days. In 1857 he was in the Far East, and I am sending you the following extract from his reminiscences in hopes that it may prove of interest. I have made no attempt to improve on his diction:—

"Ten years afterwards, in '47, I was again with Admiral Dupont on the U.S. frigate Albatross on our cruise in China, Japan, and India. The Albatross was a new ship, and the finest one that had ever been in East India up to that time. We took the American Minister-Plenipotentiary. His name was John William B. Reid. We arrived in Hongkong, here we met the English-French squadrons preparing to go up and take the city of Canton, which they did, and also took Governor Yeh a prisoner and brought him out to India. We followed them up as far as the Bogue Forts, and then we took the small boats and landed in Canton in the city proper, then returned to Hongkong after the English had finished their fighting. We then prepared to go to Peking:

At the mouth of the Pello River are the Taku or Mud Forts. The English took them in about two hours. They then pushed on up to Tientsin, which is at the mouth of the Grand Canal from Peking. The Chinese Government sent down Commissioners to give us the treaties. We got ours first, so we did not enter the Grand Canal. We went up the Peiho River in boats, as our ships lay off about eight miles on account of shallow water. After receiving our treaty we had to have it ratified in Shanghai. Our vessel lay down at Wusung, about eighteen miles from Shanghai. There the treaty was ratified.

In 1859 Admiral Hope went in with the English navy to take the Taku Forts. He thought to take them in two hours, but instead the Chinese nearly took him. After fighting about four hours, having had several of his vessels destroyed, he sent a midshipman over to our ship to see Commodore Tattnall in regard to lowering their six hundred men into action. Our Commodore said: 'No; it is worth more than my commission. We are at peace with China; that is a declaration of war. No matter what my feelings are, I cannot do it.' The midshipman went over the side of the vessel, bearing a very down-hearted expression on his face. The Commodore was watching him, and sang out: 'Avast! young man. Lay aft! You say the Admiral is wounded?' 'Yes, Sir.' 'If he had those six hundred men towed into action, he thinks he can withdraw?' 'Yes, Sir.' This is when that celebrated expression was uttered: 'Blood is thicker than water.' 'A brother-sailor is in distress; I will help him out.' We were lying about seven miles out of range; we had a small steamer called the Taney Wan and we towed those six hundred men into action. We then retired from the range of the fighting. The Commodore wished to go over and see the English Admiral, who was lying wounded, having had both of his legs broken. Just as we got alongside a shot struck the stern of our boat and killed the coxswain, Hart, Lieutenant Trenchard, flag officer, who is now Admiral Trenchard, was wounded. Our boat was smashed, and we were all thrown into the water. That was the first time the English ever had the pleasure of fishing for Yanks. Every time they threw the line over a Yank bit at it, and they hauled them on board. The Commodore and Trenchard went aft to see the Admiral, who was lying on a settee, giving orders the best he could. And we, as naturally as ducks take to water, went forward. The bulwarks were shot away, the guns destroyed, and the decks bloody. The decks had been sanded down to absorb the blood. We went to the bow gun—a pivot gun on the forecastle—and stood a-lookin' at those four men fighting that gun, where they ought to have had fourteen. They had to act as train tacksman, side tacksman, handspikenant, loaders and spongers. They could not fire the gun very often. We stood there a-watching them a-straining themselves to fire that gun. One after another of us dropped in and fought that gun for them, and made the English stand back. We went as white Yanks and came out as black ones. We fought that gun for two hours. That is the way in which I served under two flags in one day.

I was in the United States Service, enlisted, and fought under the English flag, and served in the English Navy at that time. We then returned to Hongkong, from there to Bombay, through the Mozambique Channel, and around the Cape of Good Hope, and back to the United States, and got in just before the Civil War broke out."

Some years ago there were some letters published in your columns in regard to this incident, but I have not the files at hand, and so cannot say whether this account is essentially different.—I am, Sir, &c.,

Los Gatos, California.

[We publish with great satisfaction this spirited account of a memorable incident by one who took part in it, and congratulate the gallant old seaman on the vigour and picturesqueness of his description. We knew, of course, that the American bluejackets had worked one of our guns, but this first-hand account of one of the actual combatants is of unrivalled interest. We published correspondence on the subject on June 25th, 1898. The comment of the American Navy Department on the action then quoted by us, if properly understood, is one of the most striking things in the whole story. It was in the following terms that the Department acknowledged the receipt of Commodore Tattnall's despatch:—

"Navy Department, Washington, S. C. 59.

SIR,—I have received your No. 36, dated July 4th, 1859, relating principally to the action between the Chinese forces and the allied squadrons of England and France at the mouth of the River Peiho, on 25th June 1859, and to your proceedings on that occasion. Your course as indicated in your dispatch meets with the approbation of the Department.—Your obedient servant,

ISAAC JONCEY, Secy. of the Navy."

The spirit of this despatch is indeed what Swift called "right English," and worthy in its splendid reserve of the best naval traditions of the race. The American Navy never "slops over."—Ed. Spectator.]

NOTES ON CURRENT EVENTS.

There appears to be fighting in Manchuria. On the 26th ultimo, according to an Asahi telegram, the Russians made an advance in considerable force from the Pung-hwa direction. The Japanese made a semblance of retreat in order to draw on the enemy, and then attacked fiercely on the 1st instant, driving him back effectually and inflicting heavy loss. This waste of life is pitiful.

According to the Shogyo Shimpō the news of peace having been concluded created a great sensation on the Stock Exchange in London and New York. Buyers of Japanese and Russian securities presented themselves in crowds and the following quotations were recorded on the 30th:—

Japanese Securities, London.

4 per cents.....	£90.10s.	£2 2s.6d. rise.
War-bonds 5 per cents.....	£104.2s.0d.	£2 0s.10d. "
5 per cents.....	£102.11s.11d.	5s.2d. "
6 per cents.....	£104.15s.0d.	15s.2d. "
New 5 per cents.....	£103.15s.0d.	15s.0d. "
Four and a half's.....	£94.15s.0d.	£2 15s.0d. "

Japanese Securities, New York.

6 per cents.....	£104.11s.6d.	15s.0d. rise.
New 6 1/2 per cents.....	£103.2s.6d.	12s.6d. full.
4 1/2 per cents.....	£94.2s.6d.	15s.0d. rise.

Russian Securities, London.

4 per cents.....	£92	£2 17s.0d. rise.
------------------	-----	------------------

It is stated that the convention for the new Anglo-Japanese alliance will be published simultaneously with the peace terms.

According to a Jiji Shimpō telegram from London there has been a non-official statement as to the new treaty of alliance between England and Japan. The treaty provides for the preservation of the status quo in East Asia. It pledges Japan to assist in the defence of India, and it engages each Power to come to the assistance of the other in the event of war.

Messrs Rothschild and Sons have sent a congratulatory telegram to Count Katsura. The message says:—"We beg that you will convey to His Majesty the Emperor our most respectful congratulations on the conclusion of peace. The illustrious victories achieved by your country's forces are almost unparalleled, and the magnanimity and forbearance shown by His Majesty in the hour of triumph add another jewel to his crown of glory."

It is widely rumoured that a special session of the Diet will be convened next month.

American papers give prominence to the following telegram, dated New York, August 15:—

A special to The Times from Berlin says:—"Although it is hard for me, as a German, to admit it, I am nevertheless of the opinion that if the war had been between Germany and Japan, instead of between Russia and Japan, the Japanese would have been victorious, the only difference being that they would have paid more dearly for their victory."

This admission was made to-day by Professor Baelz, who was formerly medical adviser to the Emperor of Japan, and who is regarded as the foremost German authority on the Mikado's country. He has just arrived from Japan.

The Japanese victories, in Baelz's opinion, have been due partly, but only partly, to the domestic troubles in Russia and to the demoralized condition of the Czar's army. He says these are not the chief reasons. The chief reasons are to be found in the character of the Japanese people.

The New York Times publishes the following:—

It has become almost an axiom that Japan possesses all the military virtues and China all the mercantile virtues. That remarkable exposition, "The Soul of a Nation," published in The Times, gave mankind at large its first notion of the Japanese version of "chivalry." It is the notion one would expect of a nation in which the trading class is traditionally despised, and, like any class in that category, becomes despicable.

But the military class in Japan is as clean in pecuniary matters as in any others. The Samurai is as free from smirches and scandals of a sordid kind as the officers of the United States Army, and we cannot put it more strongly. "Graft" is quite unknown and unsuspected in the administration of this war. We have just received a striking illustration of this truth. An American concern which made a specialty of "salving" vessels, thought that there should be something for it in the raising of the sunken Russian warships, and communicated with an American concern engaged in business in Japan. The reply of the head of this latter concern is worth printing. Here are the essential parts of it:

"In reply to your letter the Japanese appear to be quite able to take care of all the ships which they desire to raise, and I do not think there is the slightest chance of any foreign concern being requested to assist. There is no doubt that our Japanese friends, the Government officials, are past masters in the art of doing things economically. War with them does not mean an era of extravagance and corruption such as seems inevitable in more civilized countries! We have had many dealings with the various departments and put through some very large transactions, and in no case has there been the slightest hint of any bribery. The officials work for a reduction of price in exactly the same way as if their own pockets were concerned, and as their experience grows they are becoming the keenest of traders. No foreign concern would undertake the raising of sunken ships unless on terms which would give them very good and safe profit. The Japanese prefer to keep that profit for themselves. I am sorry to send you such a discouraging report, but cannot help the facts."

It is hardly necessary to point out the contrast between the Japanese and the Russian official methods, nor to indicate how much that difference may and must have had to do with the operations of this war.

There has been a discharge of sulphurous matter from Shirane-zan and the outflow has entered the river at Kusatsu, thence making its way to the Azuma and the Tane. Great destruction of fishes is said to have resulted.

Captain Macmillan has resigned his position in the Nippon Yusen Kaisha in order to take up the post of Surveyor to Lloyd's Underwriters in Kobe. He has a long and distinguished record of service in the Nippon Yusen Kaisha, having been the pioneer commander on three lines, the Australian, the Bombay and the English. He is universally liked and esteemed by those with whom he comes into contact, and Kobe is to be congratulated on becoming his residence.

A Cabinet council was held at the Palace on Wednesday. The Privy Council was invited to discuss an important question.

Belated telegrams to the Kokumin Shinbun say that an armistice was signed on the 1st instant, and that the measures for giving effect to it are to be left to the Commanders-in-chief at the front. It is curious that on this very day there should have been a conflict of some magnitude in Manchuria.

A telegram to the Hochi Shinbun from Moji—presumably carried by a ship from Shanghai—says that General Dessino is going round proudly claiming that in the end the victory lay with Russia. Victory forsooth! The kind of victory that a man might claim who, having been flogged repeatedly during a year and a half, was about to be stripped of his garments when, owing to the clemency of his judges, it was agreed to leave him in possession of his shirt. We really do not believe that General Dessino has been so foolish.

CRICKET.

The cricket match on Saturday afternoon, played in the pleasantest of weather, might be called a game between Slows and Swifts. The Rest were painfully slow in compiling their 101, and only three of them (Strome, 25; Kingdon, 11; and Abbott, 24) managed to get into double figures, though the bowling had little sting in it. The Eleven pursued quite different tactics, hitting out freely and piling up the runs as briskly as possible, so that it was not long before they had topped their opponents' total. Some of the fielding was good and matters seem shaping well for the Interport week. Scores:—

THE REST.

O. Strome, c. Duff, b. H. W. Kilby	25
B. C. Foster, b. Emerson	1
D. Cox, b. J. McClure	5
F. G. Correa, b. J. McClure	3
L. S. Hudson, b. Emerson	0
E. E. Eddison, c. Edwards, b. Emerson	0
A. E. Cooper, c. & b. Emerson	0
S. W. Argent, c. Hunt, b. Mollison	7
W. E. J. Detmold, c. Lambert, b. Mollison	1
A. Kingdon, c. Lambert, b. Emerson	2
F. J. Healing, c. & b. Mollison	2
F. J. Abbott, bowled Moon	24
C. T. Mayes, run out	1
W. F. Worden, b. Dixon	3
H. G. Bell, run out	0
J. G. Gonzales, c. Kilby, b. Moon	4
A. J. McClure, not out	0
Extras	7

Total

BOWLING ANALYSIS.

	B.	R.	M.	W.
Dr. Emerson	96	19	7	5
Johnstone McClure	66	17	5	2
W. D. S. Edwards	30	10	2	—
J. T. Dixon	51	16	2	1
J. M. Mollison	60	14	3	3
H. W. Kilby	18	10	1	1
Dr. Moon	12	8	—	2

AN ELEVEN.

H. W. Kilby, c. A. J. McClure, b. Cooper	26
Dr. Emerson, c. Correa, b. Kingdon	20
J. T. Dixon, b. Cooper	13
A. J. McClure, l.b.w. b. Foster	1
J. M. Mollison, not out	43
E. N. Lambert, not out	10
W. D. S. Edwards	—
C. M. Duff	—
Dr. Moon	—
H. J. Hunt	—
Extras	7

BOWLING ANALYSIS.

	B.	R.	M.	W.
A. E. Cooper	66	53	1	2
A. Kingdon	36	27	—	1
B. C. Foster	36	19	2	1
F. J. Abbott	6	16	—	—

LAWN TENNIS.

The final round of the Y. C. & A. C. Singles Handicap was played on Wednesday evening at the Cricket Ground. The competitors, as stated in our issue of Tuesday, were Messrs A. W. Read and E. Quelch.

Play began punctually at 4, and the strong glare from the sun bothered both players. Owing to the wind sides were changed after alternate games.

The first set was won by Mr. Quelch, with a score of 6-3, and the second by Mr. Read with 6-1. The third set, after Quelch leading by 5-3, eventually fell to Read with a deuce 7-5, and he also took the last set with 8-6, thus winning by three sets to one (3-6, 6-1, 7-5, 8-6).

The winner is to be congratulated on winning both the Doubles and Singles Handicaps, and should be heavily penalized next season.

YACHTING.

The 39 Raters and Cruising Class all started together at 1.30 on Saturday afternoon to race over the Kawasaki buoy-Lightship course. The wind was light, south-east, at first, but improved later, veering to south. Mary soon took the lead, and was never headed all round the course. At the Kawasaki buoy they were timed:—

Mary	2.25.00
Maid Marion	2.28.45
Kingfisher	2.30.25
Nina	2.28.00
Surprise	2.39.15
Asagao	2.40.20
Wanderer	2.45.20
Kathleen	2.47.20

Returning from the outer mark closehaunched, they all had to make a short tack to clear the Lightship. Wanderer, however, elected to make a long board out into the tide, adding unnecessarily to the distance she had to cover. Rounding the Lightship, the order was the same, and the times at the finish were as follows:—

	Finish.	Handicap.	Corrected.
Mary	3.53.00	scratch.	3.53.00
Maid Marion	4.07.58	22 mins.	3.45.58
Kingfisher	4.08.21	30 mins.	3.38.21
Nina	4.40.50	scratch.	4.40.50
Asagao	4.47.55	"	4.47.55
Surprise	4.56.14	21 mins.	4.35.14
Wanderer	5.09.25	21 mins.	4.48.25
Kathleen	5.18.45	27 mins.	4.51.45

Kingfisher takes first prize for 39 Raters; Surprise first prize for the Cruising Class.

The 21 Raters raced round the Widow buoy course, the times at finish being:—

Aimée	4.23.23	scratch.	4.23.23	Second prize.
Edna	4.24.12	3 mins.	4.21.12	Winsome Cup .
Pele	4.25.14	1 min.	4.24.14
Winsome	4.26.37	4 mins.	4.22.37
Sunbeam	4.35.21	8 mins.	4.27.31
Yugao	4.46.57	20 mins.	4.26.57
Lily	5.03.23	25 mins.	4.38.23

Edna takes the first prize, the Winsome Cup, on handicap; Aimée the second prize given by the Club on Club time allowance.

Four Larks started and finished; No. 11 winning from No. 5.

CHINESE BOYCOTT.

A Peking telegram under date of Aug. 31st says that an Imperial Decree has been issued to the viceroys throughout the Empire ordering them to suppress the anti-American movement of the native traders.

A Shanghai telegram to the Kokumin, under date of Sept. 1st, says that an Imperial Decree ordering the stoppage of the anti-American movement by the native traders has produced excellent effects. Business is going on briskly so that fears of serious disturbances seem to be fading away. The Imperial message was very urgent, pointing out to the people the long friendship which had existed between America and China, and to the readiness of America to amicably negotiate a new treaty with regard to Chinese emigrants. Discussion in native circles is still going on.

PLAGUE IN KOBE.

On Sept. 3rd, two fresh cases of plague appeared in the Kobe branch factory of the Kanegafuchi Cotton Spinning Co. The patients are female workers. The cases number four since the first appearance on Aug. 28th in this factory.

On Sept. 4th, a fresh case of bubonic plague appeared in the Kobe Kanegafuchi Cotton Spinning Co. This time the patient is a male worker, 17 years old.

The plague is not yet stamped out in the Kobe branch factory of the Kanegafuchi Cotton Spinning Co. On Sept. 5th, two fresh cases were reported. The patients are workmen employed at the factory.

A Kobe telegram says that three fresh cases of bubonic plague appeared there on Sept. 6th.

TOKYO AND THE PEACE NEWS.

THERE had not been the smallest demonstration of rejoicing in Tokyo about the peace news up to the evening of the 1st instant. No flags were hung at the places where they have been so often flaunted on occasions of victory, and the lanterns were not lit that have so often done duty during the past 18 months. One would be inclined to infer that the issue of the negotiations is not regarded with pleasure. Yet our information goes to show that in business circles the course adopted by the Government in the Conference chamber is approved. It is felt that if Russia was determined not to pay an indemnity now, there would be no reasonable prospect of compelling her to pay one hereafter. It appears to us that such is eminently the sensible view. With tremendous loss of life and after a protracted struggle Vladivostock might have been taken and another colossal and sanguinary effort might have carried the Japanese to Harbin, whereafter the invasion of the Amur region and the Maritime Province could have been undertaken. But what then? Supposing that even after such defeats the St. Petersburg Government decided to persist in its refusal to re-imburse the Japanese, would there have been any means available for collecting the money? One can not perceive that there would. Besides there is another contingency. This continuous succession of military disasters with their cumulative burden of debt and misery, might have precipitated the crisis which has long been threatening Russia: a rebellion might have broken out; the ROMANOFF dynasty might have fallen and the empire might have lapsed into a condition so chaotic that Japan would have found none to negotiate with. In that event she would have fared ill for continuing the war, and not upon herself alone but upon Europe also would she have brought calamity. Russia holds a place in European regard by the magnitude of her liabilities. She presents the strange anomaly of a country whose integrity is helped by debts. Anything that drove her to repudiation would be a world-wide catastrophe. Japan is not under any very binding obligation to consider that phase of the question, but it is certainly her duty to pay some attention to the interests of the nations whose comity she has now finally entered under such brilliant circumstances. To make herself an object of execration by pursuing a selfish policy of self-aggrandisement would be extremely short-sighted. The fact is that when this question of continuing the war is calmly considered it assumes one of two aspects: the aim would be either to recover a sum of money or to achieve territorial aggrandisement. The former, even assuming that any civilized country were justified in fighting for such a purpose, would be virtually impossible of achievement. For, as has already been said, no reverses inflicted on Russia in Far-Eastern Asia could beat her to her knees.

She could not possibly be reduced to the position of having to purchase her imperial safety. To accomplish that Japan would have to carry her arms into Europe, a feat of inconceivable magnitude. Suppose that the war were continued with unbroken success until the close of 1906, and suppose—an almost extravagant hypothesis—that Russia was by that time driven beyond Lake Baikal, Japan would still be as far as ever from obtaining re-imbursement of her outlays, which would then aggregate something colossal. She would find herself burdened with a crushing weight of debt and would have to choose between one of two courses, either fruitlessly abandoning the hardly won regions or retaining there a vast and costly army, since Russia would certainly not purchase their evacuation. The St. Petersburg statesmen, well appreciating the dilemma into which Japan had thrust her head, would quietly leave her to extricate herself as best she could. All this must be quite plain to thoughtful Japanese. Granted then that by continuing the fight Japan could not hope to recoup her outlays, it results that victory would only bring an accretion of territory, and this empire would stand convicted of pursuing the policy which above all others she has most persistently disavowed, the policy of territorial aggression. On the other hand, she has already achieved the declared objects of the war, more than achieved them. She has driven Russia wholly from Manchuria. She has re-instated herself in Liaotung. She has obtained unequivocal recognition of her exceptional position in Korea. And she has gained other material advantages of no small value—the ownership of 500 miles of railway with the adjacent coal-fields; the acquisition of valuable fishery privileges, and the addition of half of Saghalien to her empire. No war waged against Russia in Far-Eastern Asia offers opportunity for greater achievements than these. Japan has proved herself to be possessed of incomparable soldiers and generals. She has also now proved herself to be possessed of great statesmen. And we accurately foretell the verdict of history when we say that no deed of daring, no feat of leadership, accomplished on sea or shore during the past two years exceeds the high courage and profound patriotism of the officials who, undeterred by the outcry of the unthinking mob, have not hesitated to be wise in their country's interests by concluding this unpopular treaty. They well knew that it would be unpopular; not because it deserves to be, but because its provisions necessarily fall short of the extravagant dimensions to which men's hopes had been raised by a succession of brilliant victories. Incomparably easier would have been the course of blind obstinacy involving a renewal of the war. But the Elder Statesmen and the Cabinet Ministers to whose direction Japan's affairs are happily now confided, have braved unpopularity for their country's sake and have seized the psychological moment to conclude peace.

M. WITTE AND RUSSIA.

IT is a pity that M. WITTE could not crown his good work at Portsmouth by refraining from bombastic utterances. His telegram to the TSAR spoils everything. "Russia remains ever, as hitherto, a great Power in the Far East." What has happened to justify this cry of exultation? Nothing whatever except that Russia has escaped the obligation of paying an indemnity. She has not re-established her military reputation or her naval reputation. There has been no break in the continuity of her series of defeats. Two years ago she refused to abandon her aggressive designs in Manchuria and refused to recognise Japan's position in Korea, and she has been forced to do both of these things—forced at the point of the bayonet. But she has not been compelled to re-imburse Japan's outlays, and accordingly M. WITTE declares that she "remains as ever a great Power in the Far East." It is very inconsequential and in exceedingly bad taste. One is impelled to conclude that to talk big is a constitutional necessity with Russian statesmen, even the best of them.

In truth when the effects of this war are carefully considered they stand out in very striking outlines. Russia has received an immense set back. Once again she has been thrust away from ice-free seas. Her long years of patient progress down the Amur; her advance step by step towards temperate regions from Petropavlovsk to Nikolaievsk; from Nikolaievsk to Vladivostock; from Vladivostock to Port Arthur; all her colossal enterprise of railway building; all her astute diplomacy in Peking; all her daring aggressions in Manchuria—all these things have been rendered fruitless. Once again she is relegated to arctic waters. It is a portentous event in the history of the world. If she could begin entirely de novo; if the same lines of least resistance were open to her, she might feel comparatively little disappointment. But the whole situation has changed. A strong State which has proved itself more than a match for her biggest armies and her most powerful fleets now stands across her path, and she must be content to abandon her large programme in East Asia or to re-pursue it by an effort too colossal to be contemplated even though the prize were many times as valuable. If in this record a clever statesman like M. WITTE finds material to construct a Russia not less powerful than ever in the Far East, he must be looking through very special spectacles, above all when we remember that this radically altered situation is the outcome of an eighteen months war in which Russia suffered innumerable defeats at the hands of an Oriental nation and never gained one victory. Until the exact terms of the treaty are published it is not possible to know what opportunities, if any, remain available for the renewed pursuit of Russian aspirations in Eastern Asia. But it is easy to see that, being excluded from Liaotung and from Manchuria, her sole point d'appui is Vladivostock. From Vladivostock she must work if at any future time she desire to menace Korea. It may, be, of course, that she will one day seek to approach China through Mongolia or from the north-west, but that belongs to a range of contingencies not directly affected by this war. If we limit our outlook to the results of the conflict now brought to a close, we see plainly that Russia's only practicable avenue of aggression must be across the Tumen and into north-eastern Korea. But by way of preliminary to achieving that purpose, she would have to build the line of railway originally contemplated by her before Manchuria became accessible, the line along the bank of the Amur, since the Treaty forbids her to carry troops to Vladivostock over the now-existing line. Many people were sufficiently prescient to foresee that when the Trans-Asian road was finished, the peace of the East would probably be disturbed unless Japan consented to self-effacement. A similar guide to the future will be furnished should Russia commence work on her original Amur line. There will be the fullest warning. But there do not seem to be any reasonable grounds for anticipating anything of the kind. Russia would never have entered upon the recent war had she possessed any appreciation of Japan's belligerent strength. She has a very clear appreciation of it now, a hardly earned appreciation. The last thing to be looked for among probable events is that she will strike Japan's shield again, unless this country be completely debilitated by the operation of some factors not now apparent. M. WHITE, when he speaks of Russia's great potentialities in the Far East, seems to overlook the fact that she has now to reckon with a State which has proved itself more than her match, and that she has bound herself by a treaty which practically excludes her from all the spheres of fruitful ambition. Not only is her East-Asia expansion thrown back twenty years, but there is no prospect of its feasible resumption.

A KOREAN QUESTION.

A FEW days ago a foreigner—English or American, we can not distinguish which—addressed from Korea to a Kobe newspaper a letter which has been reproduced in the columns of one of our local contemporaries. It contains a very striking statement, namely, that a tract of land three miles square in the suburbs of Seoul has been requisitioned by the Japanese for military purposes, and that the compensation promised to the owners by the Korean Authorities does not amount to one-thirtieth of the value of the property. The writer of the letter expresses much indignation at this procedure and declares that "I voice the sentiment of almost every Westerner in Korea when I say that these actions are unworthy of a Power which, together with the prowess of the West, lays claim to something of its chivalry."

This charge being very serious, and the proportions of the alleged wrong-doing very considerable, we have made inquiries in responsible quarters and the result is a conviction that the statements of the writer of the letter have no foundation in fact. Had such a project been contemplated as the appropriation by the Japanese authorities in Korea of a tract of land three miles square "including almost all of the valuable river front opposite Seoul," there would certainly be some official record of the circumstance. So far as we can ascertain there is no report, suggestion or intimation from any responsible quarter of any plan of the kind. It would seem either that the writer of the letter is credulous enough to believe the rumours with which Korea is rife and unfair enough to repeat them without due inquiry, or that he has intentionally misrepresented the facts. The latter supposition finds apparent support in the statements, manifestly absurd on their face and withal inconsistent, that a stated sum has already been offered for the land in question and that its occupants have been notified to "vacate their homes and fields, trusting to the promise that at some future time they will receive compensation."

During the war the Japanese military authorities surveyed and staked the country in and about the environs of Seoul. This operation appealed to Korean ignorance as preliminary to a seizure of the land, and the explanation that it was merely a strategical measure in anticipation of a possible necessity for the erection of defences finds little or no credence among the Koreans. We learn that in cases where Korean land-owners have been obliged to remove because their land was required for military uses they have invariably been compensated. This is true of the land taken for the Seoul-Wiju line. In some instances dishonest Korean officials, acting as intermediaries, pocketed the money, and no doubt cases of injustice arose from this cause. In the midst of a great war and in a country like Korea, where peculation is so common, such occurrences were to some extent unavoidable. But we are assured that no act of injustice of this nature has been allowed to pass unremedied where the facts became known.

It can not be denied that many Japanese of the lower orders in Korea do not behave well towards the people. For that matter brutality of Korean to Korean is a common spectacle, and among many Europeans and Americans resident in Korea the dominant idea, as evinced in daily practice, is that a kick or a cuff is the most natural method of appealing to Korean reason. This is deplorable of course and certainly should be corrected, though we do not observe that any protest is made with reference to foreign violence of this nature by those who are so ready to cry out against the Japanese. So far as these latter are concerned a remedy will no doubt be applied so soon as their Government can devise means for efficiently controlling the horde of adventurers of all kinds and descriptions whom the war has naturally brought to Korea. Even as it is, a very fair degree of orderly control has been maintained, we are assured. The conduct of the troops, according to all accounts, is irreproachable, and so far as the strict enforcement of law could accomplish it the Japanese resident in the country have been compelled to behave in a decent manner. The trouble is that those who criticise Japan in this regard ignore the difficulties of the task. They lose sight of the fact that she has been engaged in a war of gigantic proportions, and they apparently expect that with that great burden upon her shoulders, she can give infinite pains to the minutest details of her people's relations with the Koreans. Persons familiar with conditions in Korea denounce this critical attitude as extremely illogical. It can of course be forgiven in men whose mental vision and powers of reasoning are bounded by the Korean horizon, and who in all sincerity believe, as some of them evidently do, that the quasi-control which Japan has exercised over Korean affairs since the war began is greatly deficient because it has not resulted in a kind of millennium. We, who have faith in the uprightness of Japan's intentions and the justice of her methods, are confident that in the end Korea's true friends will be satisfied with the condition of affairs which the amended relations of the two countries must create.

As to critics of the other class, then who carp and sneer at everything the Japanese have done or are doing in Korea, who ascribe base motives to every action and distort and magnify the most trifling occurrences, there is but one thing to be said: either they are deliberate mischief-makers—which is difficult to believe—or they belong to a class of foreigners, unhappily too common in Korea, who, having found their account in the deplorable condition of affairs hitherto prevailing in that country, now see that the advent of a new regime is gradually lessening even to the point of total disappearance their opportunities for dishonest gain. We do not suggest that the letter which forms the text of this article was written by a person of the latter class. We ascribe it rather to one who has taken rumour for gospel truth, but has not had the fairness, one might even say the honesty, to seek authentic information.

MR. WHITE'S BOMBAST AGAIN.

ACCORDING to Reuter's telegraphic information—now dribbling in very slowly owing to the break in the cable between Shanghai and Nagasaki,—M. WHITE, in telegraphing to the TSAR the result of the peace negotiations, said "Japan agrees to Your Majesty's demands." The world has already listened to this same statesman sending foolish fanfares across the wires about Russia remaining, as ever, a great Power in the Far East, but this prattle about Russian "demands" and Japan agreeing to them is really too fresh from the nursery. Yet WITTE has won the reputation of being a sane statesman. What then are we to conclude, apart from the scarcely tenable supposition that Reuter is romancing? Evidently there is only one conclusion: M. WITTE is trying to soften the ground for the Tsar's fall. Some dust has to be thrown in the eyes of the Russian public. Something has to be done to conceal the bitter fact that Russia has been set back fully half a century in her programme of East-Asian expansion, and that the day when she will be able to "resume her journey"—as the Novoye Vremya puts it—is not now within range of reasonable vision. Undoubtedly she has had to pass under the Caudine forks in humiliating fashion. M. WITTE may seek to gild the pill with deceptive euphemisms but the hard fact remains that a State, formerly supposed to be the greatest military Power in the world, has been compelled to sheathe its sword after a series of crushing defeats without winning one single victory, and has been forced at the point of the bayonet to concede everything which it peremptorily and haughtily refused to concede prior to the war. We wonder whether Mr. KONO HIRONAKA and his fellow-agitators think of these things. We wonder whether the flying columns of youths who make Aunt Salleys of the police-boxes in Tokyo think of them. It is not easy to conceive oneself, in the position of another individual and to picture to one's own mind the sentiments appropriate to that position, but the least imaginative of us all can form a rough estimate of the feelings of a great Power condemned to quit the lists without scoring a single success. That must have been worse to Russia than all the concessions she had to pay for peace. If even on one field her prowess had been vindicated, if even in one solitary fight she had justified the world's estimate of her military strength, then would she have had some small salve for her wounded pride. But not one triumph amid a year, and a half of defeats; not one ray of light throughout the long night of mishap and rout. Under such grievous circumstances large allowances must evidently be made for every grain of comfort, however fictitious, that M. Witte and his friends seek to blow into the eyes of their painfully crest-fallen nationals. Cataloguing the results of the Portsmouth Conference we have to place at the head of the list the fact that Russia made peace at all. M. WITTE has to play to a great many galleries—the Romanoff gallery, the bureaucratic gallery, the war-party gallery and the national gallery. It is a difficult performance and he deserves sympathy rather than criticism even if he does make large incursions into the realms of fancy.

THE WHY OF THE TERMS.

ONE hears the question seriously asked why did Japan ask for an indemnity if she had no intention of insisting on the demand. And one hears, also, the correlated question, how can Russia have been expected to pay an indemnity. It appears to us that these queries are not difficult to answer. In the first place, Japan asked for an indemnity, not merely because she had a just title to do so, but because it was quite within the range of possibilities that she might get one. She was warranted in looking for reimbursement of her outlays: that has been universally admitted, and the fact alone is perhaps sufficient to justify her in having advanced the claim. But it would not have been sufficient could she have clearly foreseen that the claim would be refused to the death, since assuredly she never had any intention of continuing the war for the sake of an indemnity alone, and to be obliged to forego any important demand after formulating it must tarnish her success in other directions. No such clear foresight was possible, however. To the shrewdest observers Russia was in many respects an unknown quantity. Had she really reached the conclusion that peace was necessary to her? Were her domestic troubles so serious or was her financial embarrassment so crippling that she could persuade herself to abandon a combat in which her arms had suffered defeat after defeat and only defeat? If she had indeed learned such a lesson then the chances of her consenting to buy peace were not so remote. To the least penetrating observation it was clear that, if she had any stomach for continuing the fight, then she would prefer to spend her funds on continuing it rather than hand them over to her enemy at his bidding. But it was equally clear to the least penetrating observation that if she could swallow the humiliation of abandoning the fight with a record of unvaried defeats, then she must be engrossingly anxious to abandon it and would probably not gibe at the comparatively easy obstacle of an indemnity. To most nations the task of disbursing a sum of money would appear much less painful than the shame of quitting the lists without having scored a single success, and the moral anguish of the latter performance might be counted particularly poignant when the vanquished side was nominally the greatest military State in the world and the victor a little insular nation of the Far-Orient. Thus there was a strong psychological reason for thinking that if Russia meant to make peace at all, she would not be deterred by a mere indemnity. Then there is another feature in the case. The indemnity demand must not be regarded as standing alone; in its immediate context must be placed the demand for the cession of Saghalien. The two were mutually related in this that whereas Japan may not have expected to obtain both, she probably felt pretty sure that she could not get either if she asked for one only. In that it appears to us that she was right. Had she demanded only an indemnity or had she demanded only Saghalien, it is extremely likely that she would have had to choose in the end between waiving the demand in toto or continuing the war. Relieved from the necessity of paying an indemnity Russia might be content to surrender a moiety at any rate of Saghalien, or relieved from the necessity of giving up Saghalien she might have been content to pay an indemnity, whereas without any such relief the pain of conceding either demand would probably have been too much for her. In short it looks as though Japan contemplated setting off the two claims against one another, though we are not prepared to say which of the two she would have been better content to sacrifice for the other.

There is one other consideration too. Is it not very conceivable that the menace of these two demands hanging over her head may have materially influenced Russia's mood in the early stages of the Conference? Her Plenipotentiaries certainly yielded to the demands about Manchuria and Korea with remarkable alacrity, as though they sought to remove all material for a compromise about the re-imbursement and the territorial claim. Had not these two last been waiting in the background, we can not think that Russia would have shown herself so complacent about the first. It comes to this, in short, that Japan's programme must be viewed as a whole, not article by article independently. She left herself a margin for concessions, knowing that a conference must either fail altogether or end in a compromise, and that a compromise involves concessions.

THE "KINJO MARU" DISASTER FUND.

We beg to acknowledge receipt of the following sums on behalf of the widows and orphans created by the Kinjo Maru disaster in the Inland Sea:—

	Yen.
H. E. Sir Claude and Lady Macdonald	200
Mr. J. T. Hamilton	100
Capt. and Mrs. Brinkley	50
Mr. E. M. Hobart Hampden	25
M. N. Gobhai & Co.	25
Capt. and Mrs. Young	20
Mr. Geo. H. Barclay	50
Mr. V. A. Caesar Hawkins	10

Per Mr. Montague Beart:—

Mr. Montague Beart	5
Mrs. Beart	5
Staff of "Home Circle"	5
Mr. T. H. R. Shaw	5
Mr. A. E. Pearson	5
Mr. C. W. Cooper	5
Mr. J. T. Dixon	2
Captain Lycett, R. S. "Yangtze"	5
Captain Chrimes, S. S. "Orestes"	5

The Emperor and Empress presented on Sept. 4th the following sums to the families of officers and men who died in the sinking of the steamer Kinjo Maru:—

	YEN.
Major T. Obori	75
Captain T. Yasuno	50
Lieutenant Y. Shimauchi	35
Surgeon-Lieut. S. Sekiya	35
Ensign	25
Surgeon-Second Lieut. M. Kishita	25
12 non-commissioned officers	120
111 men	550
21 military coolies	63
29 sailors	150

IN THE LAND OF SUNSHINE.

[WRITTEN FOR THE "JAPAN MAIL" BY HENRY B. SCHWARTZ.]

As the newcomer in Japan astonishes the old residents by the wonderful "discoveries" he makes everywhere, so one who has been away from the home land for five or six years finds his sensitiveness to impressions greatly increased and that he is interested in many things which have become an old story to the people about him.

His home friends bear with his ignorant enthusiasm and curiosity for a while but gradually they begin to regard him as a hopeless "back number" and dodge him when they see him coming, so that he longs for Japanese friends with whom to talk it over.

My first impression came to me before I left the steamer at San Francisco. The anti-Japanese immigration movement seems to have weakened. San Francisco people say it was never more than a newspaper agitation. But it affected the conduct of United States immigration officers, and made it uncertain whether a Japanese would be allowed to land. As we had a young Japanese woman with us we had been apprehensive of trouble but to our surprise we did not have the slightest difficulty. Secretary Taft's attitude and President Roosevelt's order promising dismissal from the service to any man guilty of arbitrariness in enforcing the immigration regulations, probably explain the change.

I had scarcely reached Los Angeles before I was informed that reporters from two newspapers wished to interview me. The next day, another reporter, a young woman this time, called us up over the almost universal telephone and wanted to interview the Japanese lady who had come with us. She wanted her photograph for the Sunday edition of her paper. We were old fashioned enough not to care for such things and declined, but the reporter was not to be put off in that way. The next day she appeared at the house in a picture hat, accompanied by a very subdued young man with a camera, and wanted to take the photograph then and there.

I hardly know yet what to think of the telephone. There are two companies here and everybody seems to have one and many people have two. Ours is of the automatic variety. We make our own connections with the number we wish to call and eliminate the central exchange entirely. The cost is two dollars a month. There is no doubt about the convenience, but the incessant ringing of the telephone bell is not conducive to the great object in life of one who has come home to rest. Two other conveniences are electricity and cheap gas. Los Angeles has always been one of the best lighted cities in America and there has been no falling behind in recent years.

Horse and cable cars have entirely disappeared and the electric cars run not only all over the city but to all the neighbouring cities and towns. The suburban cars run on a track of the same width as the steam roads, carry mail and express parcels, and at night run freight trains. The best of them running over a track of their own make about thirty miles an hour.

Gas is now only ninety cents for a thousand feet, and in this city where wood and coal are scarce and high, it has nearly superseded all other fuel for household use. The gas stove on the one hand and the scarcity and high price of domestic help on the other have made that kind of living known as "light housekeeping" almost universal. I doubt if any other city in the United States has as many laundries and bakeries in proportion to the population, and "delicacy stores," shops where food may be bought ready for the table, are almost as common as real estate agencies. The directory just issued has over eight hundred of these. They lead all other kinds of business.

There has been a great boom in Los Angeles property for the past two or three years and everything for miles around is now laid out in town lots. Just before I arrived this boom struck beach lots. And for a few days men and women pushed and scrambled for the privilege of buying sand lots at a thousand dollars apiece. At San Pedro and Redondo even lots below high water mark sold at these figures. The newspapers, especially the hundred page Sunday editions, have page after page of real estate advertisements and every block has houses marked "For Sale." Indeed, all Los Angeles seems to be for sale, and every man, woman and child to be interested in selling it.

A few days ago, a young woman came to the door and asked if Miss —, a public school teacher who formerly boarded in the house, was at home. Being informed that Miss — was out of the city, the young woman told me she was a school teacher and that a real estate agent in the eastern part of the city had let a number of the lady teachers have some lots at a reduction of from fifty to one hundred dollars a lot, and she had called to see if Miss — would not like to take an interest in them. When I assured her that Miss — would not be back in time she began on me. Wasn't I interested? Wouldn't I like some of the lots? Did I own the house in which I lived? Couldn't she show me a nice house that was for sale cheap? &c., &c.

None of the children with whom she plays have yet offered to let my six-year-old daughter "in on any deal" they have in hand yet but I am hourly expecting to hear of it.

Los Angeles has certainly been growing at a wonderful rate. Twenty years ago its population was hardly twenty thousand; it now has nearly two hundred thousand and bill boards everywhere predict two hundred and fifty thousand in 1910. Why, it is not easy to say. There is little manufacturing and not much of any business except retail trade and real estate. Its climate fits it to be the great winter resort for all the United States, and the sanitarium for everybody with pulmonary diseases.

For me, at least, the city has lost much of its charm by its growth. There are no more orange orchards or walnut groves in the city limits and it looks very much like any other city. The Chinese, who used to bring fresh vegetables so cheaply to the door every morning, have disappeared, and both vegetables and fruits are high and none too fresh. Indeed, nothing seems to be cheap and one on a moderate salary is in constant fear of meeting the fate of a poor fellow whose death notice announced that he died of "acute insufficiency." The summer temperature here reminds me of Karuizawa. The nights are very cool, most of the mornings have been foggy, while noon day is very hot. There has been no rain since last March, but in the city watering goes on incessantly, and the tracks of the steam and electric rail roads and many of the country roads are oiled; which keeps down the dust for a long time. Where this is not done the dust is simply stifling.

A few days ago I had an opportunity of seeing a little of the unique side of California life. Friends of ours who are interested in a large ranch at San Fernando, about twenty miles from this city, took us to see it.

The superintendent was waiting for us with a three-seated covered wagon and four horses. He took us first to see a harvester at work. The way lay through an apricot orchard from which this year two hundred tons of fruit had been dried. On many of the trees, however, fruit still hung dead ripe and luscious with a fine flavour always lacking in Japanese fruit.

The wheat and barley harvest here begins as soon as the grain is ripe and lasts about three months or until the great fields are all cut, for there is no rain to beat down the straw and spoil the grain, and it may wait until the harvesters are ready to cut it. This company has two harvesters, one drawn by thirty-two horses and mules and the other by a traction engine.

The mule power engine we found at work. The animals are latched in five rows, six abreast with two leaders. The machine cuts off the heads of a strip of grain thirty-two feet in width, and threshes it as it goes along, delivering the cleaned grain into sacks which only need to be sewed up by hand.

After watching this wonderful machine for a while we were taken to see the largest olive orchard in the world, two thousand acres of olives, with all the latest appliances for picking the crop and making the oil. The ripe olives from which the oil is made are bitter and astringent in taste and in colour range from chocolate brown to a deep purple black. They are picked and placed in boxes which are carted to the mill where they are run through a cleaner which removes all the leaves and dust. They are then passed between knives which cut them finely, after which they are lightly pressed, which removes the virgin oil. The cakes are then run under two rollers weighing about two tons each and the pulp is again subjected to hydraulic pressure which removes the last trace of oil and juice. The juice is pumped into glass lined vats where it is allowed to stand until the oil rises when the water is drawn off from the bottom leaving the pure oil behind.

On another part of the ranch this company have planted an avenue of olive trees two miles and a half in length for a windbreak, from which they cleared $5,000 last year.

As there are olive trees 130 years old in the grounds of the San Fernando Mission near by which are still in full bearing, it would seem that the owners of such an orchard have something better than a gold mine.

On the way back to the ranch house we saw the artesian wells which furnish all the water used for miles around and without which the whole valley would be little better than a desert.

After dinner we drove four or five miles to another ranch where we saw a steam harvester at work. It requires seven men to operate it and it cuts, threshes and sacks the wheat at the rate of 120 to 150 acres a day. In a corner of the field we saw the entire wheat crop piled up, without any cover over it at all, but perfectly safe from weather, until its owners were ready to load it to the railway.

In the village at San Fernando I met Rev. Dr. Maclay, the founder of the Methodist Episcopal Mission in Japan, who has lived here ever since his return. He was the same courtly gentleman that those who knew him in Japan will remember. Though rather feeble at 81 years of age, his eyes flashed as he talked of Japan and the old days and old friends there. On our remarking that he and Mrs. Maclay must feel this dry, dusty country a great change from Aoyama, he said "It is,—appalling."

Los Angeles, Cal.

THE BANK OF FORMOSA.

On Sept. 1st, the 12th semi-annual general meeting of the Bank of Formosa was held in the Bankers' Club, Sakamoto-cho, Tokyo. Mr. Nagahama, Director of the Bureau of Banking Affairs, in the Finance Department, Mr. Nagao, a secretary of the Imperial Household, Mr. Yokida, an official of the Imperial Treasury, etc., were present. Mr. Yagi, President of the bank, made a speech regarding the first half year's business, after which he submitted to the shareholders details of the accounts as follows:—

Net Income	Yen. 201,687.77
Balance brought over from the previous account	47,743.49
	349,431.26

Of the foregoing the following allotments were made:—

Reserve	Yen. 45,500,000
Reserve, for equalization of Dividend	10,000,000
Special reserve	5,000,000
Bonus to employees	14,000,000
Dividend (Yen 2.50 per share or at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum)	125,000,000

The remainder was carried forward to the next account.

The steamer Souchin Maru (1,538 tons), on the night of Sept. 5th, came in contact with a floating mine on her way from Yingkow to Dairen and sank. The crew and passengers were saved by the 26th Kawanon Maru with the exception of the chief engineer and a cook who are missing. The ship belonged to Mr. T. Hamamoto, of Nagasaki.

THE LAW COURTS.

SENTENCE ON MR. L. E. DAVIS

Judgment in the charges brought against Mr. L. E. Davis in connection with the business of Messrs. Arthur and Bond, was given in the Kobe Chihō Saibansho on Monday, says the Kobe Herald. It was pronounced by the Presiding Judge, Mr. Yamanouchi, and was to the effect that the accused had taken money amounting to yen 2,680.53, the property of Messrs. Arthur and Bond, without authority, on several separate occasions since June, 1904. These offences, the Court held, were proved by the evidence of Mr. Abraham and the accused himself. The accused would therefore be sentenced to one month's major imprisonment under the first clause of Art. 395 of the Criminal Code. The Judge added that, as this was the first occasion on which the accused had been convicted, and as there were circumstances of an extenuating nature, the Court did not consider it necessary to order the immediate commitment of the accused to prison. The execution of the sentence would consequently be suspended for two years, in accordance with Art. 3 of the Law No. 70, 1905.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

It is reported by a Peking telegram dated Sept. 5th that the Empress Dowager is ill.

About Sept. 25th, a meeting of local governors throughout the Empire will be held in the Home Office.

During five days ended Aug. 27th, twenty-one cases of cholera appeared in Manila. Seventeen proved fatal.

The body of a Russian naval officer was washed ashore on Sept. 6th in the district of Himi, Toyama prefecture.

Another fresh case of plague appeared on Sept. 2nd in the Hyogo branch factory of the Kanegafuchi Cotton Spinning Co.

On Sept. 6th, 145 invalids arrived in Tokyo from the front via Osaka, and 726 arrived by the steamer Karafuto Maru at Ujina.

The Hon. W. Taft and party left Hongkong for Japan on Sept. 6th by the steamer Korea. They are expected to reach Yokohama about the 15th.

The steamer Kilin (1,444 tons) floated in Port Arthur has been renamed Kichirin Maru. She had been employed by the Russians as a transport.

During August, 201,460 tons of coal were exported from Moji. The figures show a decrease of 22,222 tons over those of the previous month.

The new destroyer Kasagi was launched at Yokosuka on Sept. 6th. She is one of twenty-five boats of the same type now under construction.

Prince Higashi Fushimi, Commander in the army, returned on Aug. 31st from the front. On Sept. 1st, he was received in audience by the Emperor.

A united meeting of the Chambers of Commerce throughout the Empire will be held at the beginning of October in Tokyo to discuss post-illum finance and to present views to the Government.

Russian coins amounting to a hundred thousand roubles and gold bullion valued at two hundred and forty thousand yen were brought on Sept. 4th Shimonoseki. These were consigned to the Osaka Mint.

According to a telegram under date of Aug. 6th from Mr. Narita, Japanese Consul at Manila, Hon. W. Taft and party—sixty-four in all—left for Japan and Miss Roosevelt has decided for Peking.

Even of the captured ships were renamed on Sept. 6th as follows: the Kedington, Wakamiya Maru; Rosaki, Takasaki Maru; Oakley, Thosaki Maru; Easby Abbey, Isobe Maru; Venus, Benten

Maru; Aphrodite, Etorofu Maru; Harberton, Moyori Maru.

At 3 a.m. on Aug. 30th, the steamer Mikuni Maru, (745 tons) collided with the Osaka Shosen Kaisha's steamer Yeiho Maru (410) about a hundred miles off Songching, Korea. The latter sustained severe damage amidships and sank. The crew and passengers were saved by the Mikuni Maru.

K. Nakayama, a sergeant, recently released from the First Division, Tokyo, committed suicide on Aug. 30th in a wood near Kanagawa by cutting his throat with a sword. The man had been reading in a newspaper the news of the conclusion of peace and feeling that the terms were disgraceful he decided to commit suicide.

A telegram was received in Yokohama on Sept. 5th that fire had broken out on board the steamer Sanpo Maru (134 tons) which was then off Kamchatka. Four of the crew, twenty-six in all, were killed. The others were saved by the steamer Nemuro Maru.

The cargo was lost and the vessel sank.

According to the latest official report, the Russian prisoners in Japan are as follows:—

Generals and Admirals	11
Staff Officers	98
Petty Officers	1,226
Non-commissioned officers	9,131
Men	56,172

Beside, there are a little over five thousand men from Saghalien, still on their way to Japan. The Japanese prisoners in Russia are: 503 combatants, 301 civilians, including refugees, and 229 men whose cases are still under investigation.

At a meeting of the Directors of the Men's Reading Room held on Monday, Dr. Dearling in the chair, the programme and proceedings for the coming session were considered. It was decided to hold a further photographic open competition particulars of which are to be announced later. Various proposals with regard to entertainments, lectures and debates were brought up and after discussion were referred to the various sub-committees concerned to carry into effect.

A London telegram received on Sept. 6th at the Specie Bank gives the quotation for Japanese bonds as follows:—

		Rise.
4 per cent.	£91 ¾	¾
War	103.17.5	—17.3
5 per cent.	103.12.4	—12.4
6 per cent.	105.	stationary
New 6 per cent.	104.5.0	¾
4½ per cent.	95.15.0	¾
New bonds	prem. of 4½	1½ per cent.

The message adds that the 4 per cent. Russian bonds fell to shillings, making the price £95.10s.

Hongkong was visited by a typhoon on August 30th. Due notice of the approach of the storm having been given by the Observatory the harbour was almost clear of junks and shipping. Some steamers however preferred to brave it out, and among them the American gunboat Callao, moored off Murray Pier monopolised a large share of attention, as she strained at her moorings and tossed about even though she had steam up and was working her engines about half speed ahead. The harbour presented a fine but very turbulent appearance: the force of the wind churning the sea into waves of no mean dimensions. The water was beaten up until it was a dull muddy colour, and when the waves struck the corner made by the junction of Blake Pier with the Praya the water shot up into the air, like a water-spout, for fully 40 feet.

Many residents will be interested to learn of the fine record which Maurice Walter, son of Mr. and Mrs. James Walter, has been making at home. According to the master of his school (Merchiston Castle, Edinburgh) Walter has made a capital showing in his studies during last term and in athletics he has done very well indeed. At the school games he won the championship cup which is decided by points given for firsts in the open events. He won throwing the cricket ball (91 yds. 5 in.), the long jump 19 yds. 8 in.), and the hurdles (19 sec.), and gained the cup with 13 points. Walter, who is captain of cricket, has played in all the big matches which resulted in the school getting into the last game with Loretto for the championship. He has already made a couple of centuries, one this last season, and just fell short of his thousand, which has only been made once before in the history of the schools. He intends to go forward for the Consular Service in Japan. There are several other lads from Japan at Merchiston.

AMERICAN TOPICS.

Dr. W. C. Tilden, at one time chief chemist in the Army Medical Museum, attached to the Surgeon-General's office, has died in Washington. It was he who discovered the poison in the bouquet sent to Guiteau the day before his execution.

A big American syndicate headed by Mr. Charles W. Morse, the New York banker and ice king, has practically completed the purchase of the famous Continental Hotel, Paris. It is the purpose of the syndicate to demolish the present building and erect an up-to-date skyscraper hotel which will be the finest in Paris and conducted on the most advanced plans. Morse, it is reported, has invested $5,000,000 in the project.

The Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Bonaparte, after a thorough examination of the records in the case of Raphael Cohen, the coal passer on the converted cruiser Yankee, whose death resulted from injuries received in a boxing contest held on the American war ship in Dominican waters on July 9th, declares that from an investigation of the records he saw nothing wrongful, although, of course, it was extremely deplorable that Cohen should have lost his life. He added, that boxing and athletics generally, are encouraged in the service because of their beneficial influences on the health of the men. The Court found that neither Cohen's adversary nor any other person was in any way culpable, and recommended no further action be taken.

The party of the United States Geological Survey levelmen, under Topographer R. A. Farmer, which has been running a line of levels to the summit of Mount Whitney, completed their work on August 11th and found the true height of the mountain to be 14,502 feet. While this shows Mount Whitney to be the highest measured mountain in the United States, it makes the true height twenty feet less than the figure that has generally been accepted, and thirteen feet less than that indicated by the barometrical reading made by Professor A. G. McAdie of the United States Weather Bureau, and Professor J. N. Le Conte of the University of California, in 1903. The party under Farmer met another Government party at the base of the mountain, closing a circuit of about 400 miles. The survey was based on a precise level line from Benicia to Mount Whitney station, and a double level line from Mount Whitney station to the summit.

The interest taken in Mr. J. D. Rockefeller's affairs by the newspaper press of America is rather amusing to outsiders. Here is the latest story concerning him:—In the last three months John D. Rockefeller has been giving away money faster than the Standard Oil has brought it in to him. The Standard Oil Company to-day declared its quarterly dividend of $6 a share, amounting to $6,000,000. Of this Rockefeller will get $2,400,000 as his share next month. Rockefeller's disbursements for the quarter that has brought him in $2,400,000 have been about $11,500,000, or $9,000,000 more than his income. On June 29th last Rockefeller gave $1,000,000 to Yale University as a permanent endowment fund. On June 30th, the next day, he gave $10,000,000 to the general education board. He has made a number of smaller gifts of sums ranging from $1000 to $100,000 since last May, which aggregate more than $500,000. This in spite of the difficulty of getting rid of "tainted money." In all Rockefeller will probably receive $16,000,000 this year as his share of Standard Oil profits. If his other investments yield him $10,000,000 his total income will be $26,000,000. Within three months he has given away $17,500,000. In the preceding five months he gave away about $2,500,000, or a total of $14,000,000 so far in 1905. If he makes a $50,000,000 gift to Chicago University, the total will be $64,000,000 at least for the year, or about two and a half times his income.

On August 9th it was said that Dr. William Rainey Harper had decided to relinquish the duties of president of the University of Chicago. He was in Cleveland consulting with John D. Rockefeller regarding affairs of the great institution. As a prelude to his retirement Dr. Harper announced officially that he had abandoned his classes in the theological school of the university. Dr. Kellogg, the noted Battle Creek specialist and close friend of the university president, after consultation, is said to have advised Dr. Harper to lay down the duties of president and devote all his time and energy to battling with the cancer that threatens his life. The consultation, it is said, revealed that, instead of diminishing, the cancer has grown in size, and that the general vitality of the educator has been much impaired. This statement has since been denied.

With the passing of the Fair store to Mrs. E. J. Lehman, two of the great department stores of Chicago are owned entirely by widows. The Fair store is worth probably in excess of $7,000,000. The other is the Boston store, a $5,000,000 property, owned by Mrs. Mollie Netcher. Both properties have grown to immense proportions from small concerns. E. J. Lehman began the Fair store with $1,000 capital. Now it employs more than 3,000 persons. Charles Netcher, the founder of the Boston store, began his mercantile career as a package boy. Both establishments now require 100 waggons and 250 horses in the delivery department alone. Otto Young, who held a $3,000,000 equity in the Fair, has closed it out to Mrs. Lehman. Her son will be a "silent partner" in the new concern and she will direct the establishment through him. Mrs. Netcher, who is somewhat younger than Mrs. Lehman, personally conducts her own mammoth store.

The late Secretary of State John Hay left at his death a large number of unpublished manuscripts, which he bequeathed to his daughter, Helen Whitney. Mr. and Mrs. Payne Whitney, who were on their way to Europe when Mr. Hay died so suddenly, have been abroad ever since, the greater part of the time at Aix-les-Bains with Mr. and Mrs. Almeric Paget, the latter being a sister of Payne Whitney. On their return after a brief visit to Mrs. Hay at her summer home on Lake Sunapee, they will go to their country place near Manhasset, L.I., where Mrs. Payne Whitney will devote herself to the preparation for publication of the manuscripts left to her by the author of "The Bread Winners," "Little Breeches" and "Jim Bludsoe." During her absence abroad she has caused a kiosk of quaint design to be built on the shores of the shady side of the lake at Manhasset, and it is there that she intends to do most of her work in the preparation of her father's unpublished manuscripts.

More wives are deserted in Chicago in proportion to population than in any other city in the world. Nearly 7,500 husbands abandon their wives every year in Chicago, against 7,700 in New York. These statements are based on official statistics estimated from the records of charity organizations, the Police Department and the divorce court. "About 1,500 different deserted wives come to this office during the year," said County Agent John W. Belmont, "and I estimate that the number who ask aid is not more than 20 per cent. of the number deserted. That makes 7,500 in all Chicago, against New York's 7,700, giving us a far greater percentage. Drinking is the chief cause, with all its attendant evils, with gambling a close second and horse gambling the worst form. The pitiful incompetency of many girls from stores and factories to keep house also is a factor, bad cooking and ill-kept houses sending the men to the saloon and free lunches and the women to the street."

Here is one of those stories which the "yellow press" delights in. When "Swede Pete" Jorgeson, the brother of "Swede Sam," one of the F. Augustus Heinze group of Butte, Mont., miners, and many times a millionaire, pushed back his chair from the faro table in a newly opened and pretentious club at Saratoga at 5 o'clock on August 2nd, yawning and sleepily inquiring what time it was, there were in checks before him and markers on the check rack $34,000, his winnings at an all-night sitting at the bank. "Swede Pete" went out of Butte in the Klondike rush with the backing of the Heinze crowd, and has been in Alaska almost constantly since. The moment he stepped into the gambling club, one of the proprietors, who had lived in Butte, welcomed him cordially. Pete sat down to amuse himself for a time and frittered away $1,500 in cash. "Am I good for $5,000?" he asked the proprietor. "Any amount," was the quick answer, and Pete began to play in earnest. At 12 o'clock he was about $15,000 loser. Then his luck turned and he won and lost until he was about even just before daylight. "Lift the limit?" he inquired. "Sure." Then Pete leaned over the layout and planted checks like a farmer sowing wheat, and in three deals he had won $34,000. This is the largest individual winning against the bank since the lid was lifted.

General Roy Stone, aged 69, a veteran of the Civil and Spanish-American wars and a distinguished civil engineer and road builder, died at his home in Mendham, N.J., on August 6th. General Roy Stone did most valuable service during the Civil War, when he commanded the Pennsylvania regiment of sharpshooters known as the "Bucktails." General Stone was wounded several times, and at Gettysburg he was left on the field for dead. In that decisive fight he commanded the remnants of a brigade. On the first day of the great battle his brigade was stationed in the cutting of a roadway, the banks of which served as protection. He was ordered to hold his position against an enemy advancing in force. He said he could not do it. He was told that he must, else the day would be lost. Instead of waiting to be run over, as was inevitable had he stayed in the roadway, General Stone advanced his small force toward the approaching enemy. The enemy naturally thought that this advance was a general movement, and that this small body was supported in force. So the enemy stopped to see what was coming. When the enemy moved on again General Stone's command was practically wiped out of existence, but he had caused delay and so gained time for a proper disposition of troops to meet the advance. After the close of the war General Stone left the Army and later became chief of the division of roads in the Department of Agriculture. He was very prominent as an advocate of good roads, and at the outbreak of the Spanish war in 1898 he was commissioned a Brigadier-General, with the special task of supervising the work of road building. He accompanied General Miles to Porto Rico for that purpose.

The death of Rear-Admiral Andrew Elliott Kennedy Benham (retired) at Lake Mahopac, N.Y., was reported to the Navy Department, Washington, on August 11th. Rear-Admiral A. E. K. Benham was born in New York on April 20, 1832. At the age of 15 he entered the Navy, and followed the old custom of getting his practical education at sea before entering upon his studies at the Naval Academy. When he entered the academy in 1853 he had already been six years in the service as acting midshipman, receiving his promotion to passed midshipman on June 10, 1853. Before the Civil War he had seen service in the Pacific squadron, on the Coast Survey, on duty in Brazilian waters, and in the Paraguayan expedition. As Lieutenant of the side-wheel steamer Bienville, Captain Steedman, he took part in the capture of Port Royal in November, 1861, receiving his promotion to Lieutenant-commander the following July. From 1863 to 1865 he commanded the gunboat Penobscot to the West Gulf blockading squadron. Since the war Admiral Benham has been in command of the Susquehanna, Canonius, Saugus, Portsmouth and Richmond, on duty as Light-house Inspector, and at the Portsmouth and Mare Island Navy yards, concluding with his command of the South Atlantic station, where he won such honour for himself. He was promoted to the rank of Commander in 1867, became Captain in 1875, and in 1885 was made Commodore and put in command of the Mare Island Navy Yard. In 1890 he was promoted to the rank of Rear-Admiral. Admiral Benham commanded the American vessels participating in the Spanish Columbian celebration, and his last notable service before assuming command at Rio was to tow the Columbian caravels from Spain to Havana. During his forty-six years' service Admiral Benham was twenty-two years at sea, eighteen years on shore duty, and five and a half years on leave or unemployed. He was a member of the Schley court of inquiry. His son, Lieutenant Henry K. Benham, United States Navy, died on April 19, 1904, at the naval station at Key West, Fla.

CORRESPONDENCE.

FOREIGN RESIDENTS' RELIEF ASSOCIATION

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—The Executive Committee of the Yokohama and Tokyo Foreign Residents Association for the Relief of Sufferers by the War came into existence on February 29th, 1904, when the following gentlemen were elected to take entire charge of the funds contributed by foreign residents:—Messrs. J. W. Copmann, E. C. Davis, N. F. Smith, L. Motter, V. A. Caesar Hawkins, J. Williams Jones, E. W. Frazar, N. W. McIvor, Rev. W. Weston, Jas. Walter, and M. Pors. The Committee organized the same afternoon, when Mr. Walter was elected Chairman, Mr. Copmann, Vice-Chairman, Messrs. J. Williamson-Jones and V. A. Caesar Hawkins, Joint Treasurers, and Mr. A. Bell-Brown was asked to serve as Secretary. The Committee soon realized that to effectually carry out the wishes of subscribers and to use the money to the best advantage it was necessary to work in harmonious accord with the Japanese Committees and Associations organized with the same objects in view and enquiries were at once set on foot through the Chairman, Secretary and various members of Committee as to the most efficient method of cooperation to adopt. In the sequel these investigations, and at various times as the Committee deemed advisable, the following action have been voted from the funds at our disposal and have been disbursed through the medium of the undermentioned Associations, all of whom are seeking to aid sufferers by the war:—

	Yen
Yokohama Jizenkai	500
Teikoku Gunjin Engokwai	500
Kanagawa Ken Gunjin Kazoku Kyogokwai	500
Yokohama Shohei Gikwai (1st Vote)	700
do do (2nd Vote)	120
do do (3rd Vote)	200
Yokohama Circle of the King's Daughters, Maimed and Wounded Fund	100
Special disbursements through other channels	33
Sundries	5

The grant to the Jizenkai was made to enable hospital to supply medicines free to the families of soldiers and sailors recommended by committee; the grant to the Teikoku Gunjin Engokwai was coupled with the condition that the disbursement in Kanagawa Ken, which H.E. Government undertook to see done; the grants to the Yokohama Shohei Gikwai (Society for the Relief of the Families of Soldiers and Sailors) were made unconditionally, the committee by personal observation having found that the money has been most faithfully and carefully applied to relieving real cases of distress by various subcommittees of Japanese ladies who have taken its distribution. Various sums which have been subscribed to our funds by foreign children and their parents, and which have been placed in the hands of Madame Watanabe for distribution. The grant to the Yokohama Circle of the King's Daughters was made to enable them "to convey aid to the maimed and crippled soldiers and sailors and assist in alleviating distress and furnishing etc."

ment to those upon whom the burden of the war has fallen most heavily." Out of the sum of yen 31,826.18 placed in our hands we have now distributed yen 20,061.50, leaving yen 11,764.68.

The distress in the coming winter will undoubtedly be very acute and any further donations and subscriptions which the public may feel disposed to give on behalf of the cause which the Committee represents will be thankfully received. The Committee lost, owing to resignations due to pressure of business in one case and departure from Japan in others, four of its original members, viz., Messrs. E. W. Frazar, J. Williamson Jones, M. Pors, and the Rev. Walter Weston, and their places have been taken by Messrs. J. Archer, M. Blumer, B. C. Howard and Rev. W. P. C. Field.

Yours faithfully,

JAS. WALTER,
Chairman.

Yokohama, Sept. 6th, 1905.

YOKOHAMA HARBOUR.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—In recent issues of the Japan Mail I have noticed several articles referring to an improved harbour accommodation for the Port of Yokohama. Being somewhat interested in harbour accommodation I would suggest that the tide flats, in the neighbourhood of Kanagawa station, be dredged out, and converted into a large wet dock to admit of taking in steamers of large tonnage, and hydraulic cranes, and other modern appliances be installed for the rapid handling of freight. I think that with dock charges, and harbour dues, this could be a paying scheme.

The growth of the shipping business during the last ten years has been very marked, and with the further development of the Trans-Pacific trade, I think that there is an immense future for Yokohama as a shipping port, so that it is not the present alone that has to be provided for, but the distant future.

By having good dock accommodation, cargoes could be handled in all kinds of weather, and with railway connection the facilities would be equal to anything in the East.

Of course I am not acquainted with the difficulties connected with utilising the ground referred to, but I think that no effort should be spared to make Yokohama a safe shipping port.

The class of vessels using the dock might be restricted to foreign going vessels, and this would leave the buoys in the harbour available for coasting vessels, vessels in ballast, and others making short stays in port. This would relieve the traffic at the Customs pier, which could be utilised for the landing of passengers and mail only. Small tow-boats and berthing masters to be used in the handling of vessels, and charged for as constituting part of the dock dues.

I think that dock accommodation is what is wanted, as the limit has been reached in building piers out on the present limited water area.

There may be engineering and other difficulties which may tend to make the foregoing scheme impracticable, but I offer the suggestion for what it is worth. Apologising for encroaching on your space.

Yours faithfully, "HARBOUR TRUST."

Yokohama, September 4th, 1905.

THE BROKEN CABLES.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—I am in receipt of advice from Nagasaki in the sense that one of the lines of the Nagasaki-Shanghai cable, which has been interrupted from the 1st, was re-opened for communication this morning at 4.10.

As the opened line is expected to be greatly pressed for communications for the time being, some delay will be inevitable with every telegram to and from abroad.

I am, Yours faithfully,

Y. ODANI.

Superintendent of Telegraph Department.

Yokohama, September 6th.

UTILITARIAN RELIGION.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—If I were not afraid of getting into an interminable controversy, I would like to say something on a contributed article on the subject of the moral text books now in use in Japan, which appeared in the 1st of July number of the Japan Weekly Mail. The writer of the article says:—"The four text books before us are essentially utilitarian from beginning to end. * * The finest code of morals the world has known, have all been based on the principle of utility, understanding utility in its highest sense (!) There is no higher authority required for any set of rules designed to control and influence human conduct, than that derived from benefits to be obtained from their observance."!!

It is really a wonder to me that such extraordinary statements should have remained so long unchallenged.

Indeed it is a sign to me of the moral effete-ness of the body of the Christian missionaries in the Far East that not one of them has raised a voice of protest against such extraordinary statements. In the same number of your paper in which these extraordinary statements are made, there appeared a full report of an eloquent sermon by a reverend gentleman on the Forward Movement of the Kingdom. It is really passing strange that upon me, a Chinaman and heathen, should devolve the task of telling the Christian missionaries that when such extraordinary statements are made and believed, it is a distinct sign of not a forward, but a backward movement of the Kingdom. When some years ago, the Reverend Timothy Richard publicly stated that he considered "all education which has not a commercial value, to be utterly worthless," I said to a missionary lady in Shanghai that the Reverend Timothy Richard was slapping Jesus Christ in the face and calling him a liar.

But in all sober seriousness, I too, happen to have a bowing acquaintance with many systems of religion and codes of morality and I do not know of one single code of morals seriously recognised by the world as such, which is based upon the principle of utility. I have, however, somewhere read of a philosophic negro, who, in my opinion, enunciated in the purest form a code of morals founded on the principle of utility. This negro, I think, belonged to the 9th Illinois, one of the most gallantly behaved and heavily losing regiments at the battle of Fort Donelson in the American Civil War. Some one asked this negro:—"Were you in the fight?" "Yes, Sah, had a little taste of it." "Stood your ground, did you?" "No Sah; I run." "What, run at the first fire, did you?" "Yes, Sah, and would have run sooner had I known it was comin'." "But have you no regard for your reputation?" "Reputation is nuffin to me by de side ob life." "Do you consider your life worth more than other people's?" "It is worth more to me, Sah." "Then you must value it very highly." Yes, Sah; I does—more dan all dis wuld,—more dan a million ob dollars; for what would dat be to a man with the bref out of him. Self-preserbushum am the first law wid me."

You will remark here that this negro really understands utility too in its highest sense; he does not even value a million of dollars, for, as he philosophically says, what would dat be to a man with the bref out of him!

If the above is negro philosophy, the following is what Carlyle calls pig philosophy or pig code of morals.

1. The Universe, so far as sane conjecture can go, is an immeasurable swine's trough, etc.
2. Moral evil is unattainability of pig's wash (i.e. benefits to be obtained from the observance of pig code of morals); moral good, attainability of ditto.
3. Define the whole duty of pigs.

It is the mission of Universal Pighood and duty of all pigs at all times to diminish the quantity of unattainable and increase that of attainable. All knowledge and device and effort ought to be directed thither and thither only. Pig Science, Pig Enthusiasm, Pig Devotion have but this one aim. It is the whole duty of pigs.

Many people now often try to discredit Carlyle and his teaching by saying that he exaggerates. But Carlyle never exaggerates; only he writes in strong angry language. But here is Emerson's account of what Carlyle in the above calls pig philosophy, in calm temperate language. Emerson says:—"The brilliant Macaulay who expresses the tone of the English governing classes of the day, explicitly teaches that good means good to eat, good to wear, material commodity; that the glory of modern philosophy is its direction and 'fruit': to yield economical inventions; and that its merit is to avoid ideas and avoid morals. He thinks it the distinctive merit of the Baconian philosophy, in its triumph over the old Platonic, that it disentangles the intellect from theories of the 'all-Fair and all-Good and pins it down to the making a better sick chair and a better wine whey for the invalid; this not said ironically, but in good faith; that solid advantage, as he calls it, meaning always sensual benefit, is the only good. The eminent benefit of astronomy is the better navigation it creates, to enable the fruit ships to bring home their lemons and wine to the London grocer. It was a curious result in which the civility and religion of England for a thousand years end, namely denying morals and reducing the intellect to a sauce-pan. The critic hides his scepticism under the English cant of practical."

Now against those who protest against this pig philosophy, practical utilitarians generally hurl the sneer that it is very well for transcendental philosophers to theorise about the all-Good and all-Fair, but philosophers too require meat and drink and when philosophers get sick, they are glad enough to avail themselves of the usefulness of the new sick chair and the patent wine whey bottle. But people who hurl such sneers are generally one-sided shallow men who try to hide their shallowness under what Emerson says, the English cant of practical.

Philosophers too believe and know that food, solid and liquid, are necessary to human beings as well as to pigs. But then philosophers hold that whereas the one thing needful and important to pigs, is pig's wash, human beings on the other hand, while requiring, it is true, food solid and liquid, require something more than that, something without which human beings would cease to be human beings and become pigs. Philosophers further hold that when human beings become pigs, then there is really no necessity for such human pigs to exist at all. "Il faut vivre" said some one to Talleyrand. "Non, Monsieur" replied the latter, "Je ne vois pas la nécessité."

Novalis says:—"Philosophy will bake no bread; but it gives us our souls." Now the difference between human beings and pigs lies even in this that whereas pigs have not, human beings have souls; and it is because human beings have souls, that they require a higher authority for rules of conduct than that derived from benefits or pig's wash to be obtained from the observance of those rules.

Goethe says:—"Every gift is valuable and ought to be developed. When one encourages the beautiful alone and another encourages the useful alone, it takes them both to form a man. The useful encourages itself, for the multitude produce it and no one can dispense with it; but the beautiful must be encouraged, for few can set it forth and many need it." What Goethe here means by the beautiful includes all that which is necessary to satisfy the higher moral nature, the soul of man. Mencius says, "He who develops his higher nature, belongs to the higher class of men (養其大體者爲大人); he who develops only his lower nature, belongs to the lower vulgar class of men (養其小體者爲小人)."

It is not my intention to enter into a criticism of the moral text books here in question. For that task my knowledge of the Japanese language and literature is utterly inadequate. But what I should like to call the attention of serious thinking Japanese to, is this. Although Goethe says the useful encourages itself and therefore does not require much encouragement from the State, yet I admit that there are times when it may be necessary for the State to encourage, direct and even assist the people to develop useful arts and industries. But that encouragement and direction should come from the State Department for Public Works and not from the State Department for Education. For the true and proper function of a State Department of Education in a nation is to encourage and help the people in the nation, to develop what Mencius calls their higher nature. Therefore for a State Department of Education and that too in carefully prepared moral text books, to exhort the people to start industries and add to the national wealth; that, to say the least, is really something very incongruous; and when a State Department of Education does such incongruous things, it is a sign that that State Department of Education does not know what education, what moral education, really is.

When Marquis Ito visited Wuchang, I took the occasion to ask him what the Japanese Imperial Japanese Government, while granting large subsidies to steam boat companies, was doing for the encouragement of liberal education, as apart and distinct from professional education. The answer of Marquis Ito was very characteristic. It was in effect the same as that made by a famous British Prime Minister. "Liberal education" said Marquis Ito "must take care of itself." I of course did not make the retort "Yes, and of you too, as you will see."

Since I last saw Marquis Ito, Japan has risen to be a great Power. The possession of power brings with it great responsibility. The peace, civilisation and welfare of the people of the Far East depend now upon the way in which the Japanese nation will make use of their power. I am of opinion that the Japanese nation will not be able to make a beneficent and long use of their power, unless all serious thinking men among the Japanese people attend urgently and seriously to the present state of the department of Education in Japan. It is true, as the writer of the contributed article says, a nation must have a national ethical ideal and it is for the Educational department to give expression to and direct that national ethical ideal. But I should be sorry to believe that these High class primary school moral text books are an impartial and a pretty thorough representation of the Japanese national sentiment on ethical questions. What Mencius says of individuals, is also true of nations:—"The men or nation who make the development of their lower nature their ideal, will deteriorate, degenerate and sink lower and lower until they become a low class of men or nation; the men or nation on the other hand who make the development of their higher nature (養其大體) their ideal, will improve, progress and rise until they become great men or a great nation."

Since Japan has risen to be a great nation, there are not wanting men to sing her praises. But I think the Japanese people should learn to distinguish false friends from true friends. The man who tells the Japanese people that the publication of these moral text books by the Department of Education marks a new era in Japan is not a true friend. An eminent teacher of girls in America once said to Emerson, "The idea of a girl's education is, whatever qualifies her for going to Europe." This made Emerson say, "Can we never extract this tape-worm of Europe from the brains of our countrymen?"

Japan has now secured her political independence. But the Japanese people must strive further, strive for intellectual independence. Now if the Japanese wish to secure intellectual independence, the first thing they have to do is to extract this tape worm of Europe from their brains.

Indeed I think persons in authority in Japan should now give encouragement to the study of Chinese books, history and literature. The intellectual home of the Japanese is China. I should like to point out here how the modern Japanese newspapers and crude Japanese translations of European books brought now into China are mutilating our Chinese language. People do not know what irreparable harm this does to the cause of true culture and civilisation. If this goes on without check, I for one would rather that the Russians or, as that now is improbable, the European Powers should come and divide up the Chinese Empire. To me the breaking up of China is a small evil compared with the mutilation and destruction of the Chinese language.

But there is one way to put a stop to the present mutilation now going on and that is for the Japanese to study Chinese thoroughly, and thus make the true idiomatic Chinese as a standard in their use of the Chinese ideographs.

In short the Japanese nation have arrived at a critical period in their history when they must make a decision. The decision which the Japanese nation have to make is:—whether in adopting a national ethical standard or ideal they wish to choose that of the European Christian civilisation or that of the Chinese Confucian civilisation. In other words, whether the State Church and State education in Japan shall be Christian or Confucian? Japanese children in their games say, Kara ka? Nippon ka? The question before the Japanese nation is Seiyo ka? Kara ka?

The Japanese nation must seriously soon come to a decision. For the trouble and weakness in the moral education of the people in Japan at the present day is that it is neither Christian nor Chinese; it is or tries to be up to date modern European. But up-to-date modern Europe has no ethical ideal. Emerson has told us that the English governing classes have reduced the intellect to a sauce-pan. Modern Europe is now passing through a transition period and I think it is very foolish for persons in authority in Japan to deliberately adopt the confused moral ideas of a transition period as their national ethical ideal, and that too by forcibly destroying the foundation of their original national ideal which is distinctly Chinese or Confucian.

But men like Marquis Ito will say that Chinese civilisation is effete and Chinese books are all obsolete and not up to date for the requirements of modern times. Now what a curious idea in the modern man's mind, this of up-to-dateness in the world of ideas and morals! The rule of the multiplication table surely holds good to-day as it did when the Universe began to exist. In fact this curious idea of up-to-dateness in things moral in the modern man's mind only shows that he has never entered into the world of ideas and morals. The Greek Sophocles speaking of moral laws which in the highest heaven had their birth, says:—"the power of God is mighty in them and groweth not old."

Apologising for the length of this letter,
I am, etc.

KU HUNG-MING.

Wuchang, 18th August, 1905.

"YOKOHAMA YARNS."

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—As it has now been represented to us many of the chapters of this work are of such a nature that they constitute unfounded attacks upon the private characters of individuals resident or lately resident in this city, we express our profound regret that any book or article published by us has been made to serve such a purpose.

We undertook the publication of this work in good faith and in the full belief at the time it would fulfil the promise of the prospectus and prefaces and attack no individuals.

We are, sir, Yours faithfully,

KELLY & WALSH, LTD.

Yokohama, September 7th, 1905.

BYE-LAWS FOR THE ENFORCEMENT OF THE "SECURED DEBENTURES TRUST LAW."

TRANSLATED BY J. E. DE BECKER.

ORDER NO. 35, OF THE DEPARTMENT OF FINANCE.

Bye-Laws for the Enforcement of the "Secured Debentures Trust Law" are determined as follows:—
31st May, 1905.

(BARON) SONO ARASUKE,
Minister of Finance.

BYE-LAWS FOR THE ENFORCEMENT OF THE "SECURED DEBENTURES TRUST LAW."

Art. 1.—Companies desirous of engaging in the trust business in connection with secured debentures must file an application for a charter, annexing thereto a copy of their Articles of Association.

In addition to the documents mentioned in the preceding paragraph, in the case of a Gōmei-Kwaisha (an ordinary unlimited partnership having a corporate existence) or a Gōshi-Kwaisha (an ordinary partnership having a corporate existence and formed by limited and unlimited liability members), a document showing the paid up amount of contributions; in the case of a Kabushiki-Kwaisha (limited share company) the documents mentioned in Nos 2 to 6 and No 9 of paragraph 2 of Article 187 of the Law of Procedure in Non-contentious Matters; and in the case of a Kabushiki-Gōshi-Kwaisha (a share Company with limited and unlimited liability members), documents corresponding thereto must be annexed.

Art. 2.—When an already established company desires to engage in the trust business in connection with secured debentures, an application for a charter must be filed, and to such application must be annexed the following documents:—

- (1) Copy of the Articles of Association or Company Contract;
- (2) Copy of the minutes of the General Meeting of Shareholders concerning the alteration of the objects, or a document containing the resolution passed at a general meeting of the members;
- (3) Latest balance sheet.

Art. 3.—When a Trust Company has entered into an agreement of trust, the fact must be promptly reported to the competent authorities, the following papers being annexed to the report:

- (1) Copy of the deed of trust;
- (2) When the whole amount of the debentures have been taken up, if a separate written agreement exists in respect to the undertaking a copy of such written agreement;
- (3) Document specifying the reason for inviting subscriptions to the debentures.

Should the deed of trust mentioned in the preceding paragraph require the sanction of the competent authorities, the copy must be one bearing a seal certifying to official sanction having been obtained.

When the sanction mentioned in the preceding paragraph has lost its validity, a report must be made to the competent authorities and a document stating the cause must be affixed to such report.

Art. 4.—When any change has occurred in the matters contained in the trust agreement, it must be promptly reported to the competent authorities by the Trust Company.

Should the change mentioned in the preceding paragraph be one in respect of which the sanction of the proper authorities is required, a copy of such written sanction shall be affixed to the notice.

Art. 5.—When a Trust Company has invited subscriptions to debentures in accordance with the request (delegation) of the Trustor Company, if the subscription to the debentures has been settled, the fact shall be promptly reported to the competent authorities and to the said report shall be affixed documents specifying the following particulars:—

- (1) Number of subscribers, total face value and total subscribed value.
- (2) Number of allotted subscriptions, total face value and the total value (id est the sum of money to be actually received by the Company).

Art. 6.—A Company which intends entering into a trust agreement with a Foreign Company must file an application for permission, attaching thereto the following documents:—

- (1) Draft of the deed of trust;
- (2) Copy of the Minutes of the General Meeting of Shareholders concerning invitations for subscriptions to the debentures;
- (3) Documents containing the particulars mentioned in numbers 5 to 7 of paragraph 1 of Article 22 of the Secured Debentures Trust Law, and the reason for inviting subscriptions to debentures;
- (4) Copy of the Articles of Association of the Foreign Company intending to undertake the trust, or a document sufficient to clearly show the nature of the Company;
- (5) Document stating the capital or the total amount of contributions (having cash for their subject) of the Foreign Company mentioned in the preceding number, and the amount of money paid up thereon.

Art. 7.—The report mentioned in paragraph 4 of Article 17 of the Secured Debentures Trust Law must be accompanied by a document certifying to the capacity of the representative.

Art. 8.—With regard to a Foreign Company which has entered into the trust agreement mentioned in Article 6, the provision of Articles 3 to 5 apply mutatis mutandis thereto.

Art. 9.—When a meeting of debenture-holders has been convened, the Trust Company shall promptly send in a report thereof to the competent authorities accompanied by a document specifying the object, place, and time of the meeting and the reason for convening such meeting.

When the Trust Company has prepared the minutes of the meeting of debenture-holders, or when it has received delivery of a copy of the minutes, such copy of the minutes, together with a document specifying the proceedings of the meeting, shall be sent in to the competent authorities without delay. The same applies when a resolution has been judicially declared to be null and void, or when such declaration has been cancelled.

When a resolution of a meeting of debenture-holders has been carried into effect, the person executing the same must promptly send in a report thereof to the competent authorities accompanied by a paper containing the particulars of performance.

Art. 10.—The application for permission to be made in accordance with paragraph 2 of Article 2 of the Secured Debentures Trust Law must be accompanied by the following documents:

- (1) A document specifying the object of the meeting and the reason for which it has been convened.
- (2) A document specifying the fact that a party who was called upon to convene the meeting has not taken steps for its convening within two weeks after such demand was made.

Should the applicants mentioned in the preceding paragraph be debenture-holders holding in the aggregate one-tenth of the whole amount of the debentures, besides the documents specified in the preceding paragraph, the face value of the debentures held by each of such debenture-holders, and the total amount of debentures actually held by the debenture register must be stated, and a document proving the fact must be annexed; and the application for permission must be signed by each of every one of such debenture-holders. Provided any debentures to bearer must either be tendered to the Trust Company or deposited in a Bank designated by the Minister of Finance, the receipt so tendered to the Trust Company.

Art. 11.—Application to be made in accordance with Article 89 of the Secured Debentures Trust Law must be accompanied by, besides the Minutes of the Meeting of the Debenture-holders, the following documents:—

(1) In the case of paragraph 1 of Article 8 of the Secured Debentures Trust Law, a document proving the fact that the act which ought to have been performed has been neglected.

(2) In the case of paragraph 2 of the said Article, documents specifying the fact that the interests of the debenture-holders and of the Trust Company are in mutual conflict and the necessity of a judicial act or act of the Court for the benefit of the whole of the debenture-holders owing to such fact.

Art. 12.—Application to be made in accordance with Article 94 of the Secured Debentures Trust Law must be handed in together with the following papers: provided that should the application be made at a Meeting of Debenture-holders, a copy of the Minutes must also be affixed.

(1) A document proving the fact that the extinction of the security or the decrease of the value thereof has occurred in consequence of the act or negligence of the Trustee Company;

(2) Written statement of account relative to the extinction of the security, or the decrease of the value thereof.

Art. 13.—When the Trust Company has deposited in accordance with the provisions of paragraph 3 of Article 88 and paragraph 1 of Article 97 of the Secured Debentures Trust Law, notice must be sent in to the competent authorities without delay, together with a copy of the receipt for money so deposited.

Art. 14.—When the Trust Company has undergone inspection in accordance with Article 91 of the Secured Debentures Trust Law, a report must be promptly sent in to the competent authorities on the date thereof and the state of the inspection.

Art. 15.—When an agreement relative to the succession of trust business is intended to be entered into with a Foreign Company in accordance with paragraph 2 of Article 97 of the Secured Debentures Trust Law, the Trustor Company must affix to the application for permission the following documents and those specified in numbers 4 and 5 of paragraph 1 of Article 6:—

Original from

UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

LATEST SHIPPING.

ARRIVALS.

Ernest Simons, French steamer, 2,162, Ailland, 1st Sept.—Marseilles via ports, and 31st Aug., and Mails and General.—M. M. S.S. Co.
Den of Crombie, British steamer, 2,895, Andrew Low, 1st Sept.—Liverpool via ports, and Kobe, 30th Aug., General.—Dodwell & Co., Ltd.
Breconshire, British steamer, 2,323, G. E. Elliott, and Sept.—Otaru via ports, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.
Macduff, British steamer, 1,882, John B. Muir, 3rd Sept.—Kobe, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.
America Maru, Japanese steamer, 3,463, Going, 3rd Sept.—Mojito, Ballast.—Toyo Kisen Kaisha.
Kilburn, British steamer, 2,111, E. Le Templier, 3rd Sept.—Otaru via ports, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.
Romford, British steamer, 1,930, M. H. Scott, 3rd Sept.—Yokosuka, 3rd Sept.—Dodwell & Co., Ltd.
Ceylon, British steamer, 2,537, C. F. Lockstone, 4th Sept.—London via ports, and Kobe, 2nd Sept.—General.—P. & O. S.S. Co.
Kanagawa Maru, Japanese steamer, 3,813, J. W. Wale, 4th Sept.—Seattle, Wash., Mails and General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.
Bengloe, British steamer, 1,933, H. W. Bee, 5th Sept.—London via ports, and Kobe, 3rd Sept.—General.—Comes & Co.
Chitwick, British steamer, 2,072, G. W. B. Woods, 5th Sept.—Muroran, Coal.—Hokkaido Tanko Kaisha.
Orantes, British steamer, 2,992, T. Chrimes, 5th Sept.—Liverpool via ports, and Kobe, 4th Sept.—General.—Butterfield & Swire.
Tenzer, British steamer, 1,803, A. Stevens, 5th Sept.—Takao, Formosa, General.—Osaka Shosen Kaisha.
Marco Polo, Italian cruiser, 4,500, Com. Costantino Verde, 5th Sept.—Shanghai.
Nicomedia, German steamer, 2,808, A. Wagner, 5th Sept.—Portland, Oregon, and Astoria, 17th Aug., Mails and General.—P. & O. S.S. Co.
Villehad, German steamer, 3,012, E. H. Obnauer, 6th Sept.—Sydney via ports, and Hongkong, 31st Aug., Mails & General.—H. Ahrens & Co., Nachf.
Vandalia, German steamer, 2,641, Hasse, 6th Sept.—New York via Suez and ports, General.—C. Illies & Co.
Vanglaze, British steamer, 4,149, W. C. Lycett, 6th Sept.—Puguet Sound ports, Mails and General.—Butterfield & Swire.
Radnorshire, British steamer, 1,889, J. M. P. Haffner, 6th Sept.—London via ports, and Kobe, 4th Sept.—General.—Samuel Samuel & Co.
Pocasset, British steamer, 1,726, James, 6th Sept.—Middlesboro and London via ports, and Hongkong, 28th Aug., General.—Dodwell & Co., Ltd.
Anno, Norwegian steamer, 779, Olaf Olsen, 6th Sept.—Newchwang, General.—Osaka Shosen Kaisha.
Hyades, American steamer, 2,932, George Wright, 7th Sept.—Hongkong via ports, and Kobe, 5th Sept., Mails and General.—Dodwell & Co., Ltd.
Antenor, British steamer, 3,503, R. Williams, 7th Sept.—Liverpool via ports, General.—Butterfield & Swire.
Hounslow, British steamer, 1,860, H. Adshead, 7th Sept.—Otaru, General.—Tanimichi & Co.
Dagrad, Norwegian steamer, 788, S. Steensen, 7th Sept.—Newchwang, 1st Sept., Beans and Bean Cake.—Drabble & Co.
Iyo Maru, Japanese steamer, 3,918, Wm. Thompson, 7th Sept.—Mojito via Kobe, Mails and General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.
Braid, Norwegian steamer, 645, J. Folkman, 7th Sept.—Wakamatsu, Coal.—Drabble & Co.

DEPARTURES.

Seneca, British steamer, 3,171, W. Grimes, 1st Sept.—New York via ports, and Suez, General.—Standard Oil Co.
Alerionethshire, British steamer, 1,950, C. H. Burch, 1st Sept.—London via ports, General.—Samuel Samuel & Co.
Achilles, British steamer, 4,484, Robt. C. Thompson, 1st Sept.—Genoa, Marseilles and Liverpool via ports, General.—Butterfield & Swire.
Empress of India, British steamer, 3,003, E. Beetham, 1st Sept.—Vancouver, B.C., Mails and General.—C. P. R. Co.
Minnesota, American steamer, 13,323, J. H. Rinder, 1st Sept.—Hongkong via ports, Mails and General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.
Babelsberg, German steamer, 1,378, H. Wendt, 1st Sept.—Kobe, General.—Osaka Shosen Kaisha.
Rjort, Norwegian steamer, 722, A. N. Christensen, 1st Sept.—Suminoe, Ballast.—Drabble & Co.
Aberdeenshire, British steamer, 2,438, Keith, 2nd Sept.—Kobe, General.—C. Illies & Co.
Machaon, British steamer, 4,277, G. W. Long, 2nd Sept.—Puguet Sound ports, General.—Butterfield & Swire.

Braemar, British steamer, 2,316, S. L. Saxby, 2nd Sept.—Otaru via ports, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.
Siberia, American steamer, 5,655, J. T. Smith, 2nd Sept.—Hongkong via ports, Mails and General.—P. M. S.S. Co.
Freussen, German steamer, 3,950, R. Meyer, 2nd Sept.—Bremen and Hamburg via ports, Mails and General.—H. Ahrens & Co., Nachf.
Aldershot, British steamer, 1,354, W. W. Adam, 2nd Sept.—Otaru, Ballast.—Japanese.
Violetta, British steamer, 1,937, J. McMorran, 2nd Sept.—Fusan via Moji, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.
Raven, Norwegian steamer, 795, Edw. Th. E. Olsen, 2nd Sept.—Uraga, Ballast.—Drabble & Co.
Skaunstad, Norwegian steamer, 860, O. Hansen, 3rd Sept.—Taku and Newchwang via ports, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.
Breconshire, British steamer, 2,323, G. E. Elliott, 4th Sept.—Kobe via Yokkaichi, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.
Isleworth, British steamer, 1,716, Cox, 5th Sept.—Muroran, Ballast.—T. Inouye.
Oopack, British steamer, 2,517, J. Barber, 5th Sept.—Batavia, Ballast.—Butterfield & Swire.
Hugo Maru, Japanese steamer, 882, N. Nielsen, 5th Sept.—Bonin Islands, Mails and General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.
Freyja, Norwegian steamer, 1,149, R. Pawlsen, 5th Sept.—Kobe, General.—Osaka Shosen Kaisha.
Deramoe, Norwegian steamer, 1,496, Oloshuvig, 5th Sept.—Kobe, General.—Tanimichi & Co.
Macduff, British steamer, 1,882, John B. Muir, 6th Sept.—Otaru via ports, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.
Samara, British steamer, 1,790, W. Lewis, 6th Sept.—Otaru, Ballast.—Hokkaido Tanko Kaisha.
Kilburn, British steamer, 2,111, E. Le Templier, 6th Sept.—Kobe, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.
Kanagawa Maru, Japanese steamer, 3,813, J. W. Wale, 7th Sept.—Kobe, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.
Nicomedia, German steamer, 2,808, Wagemann, 7th Sept.—Hongkong via ports, Mails and General.—P. & O. S.S. Co.
Hyades, American steamer, 2,932, George Wright, 7th Sept.—Tacoma, Wash., via Victoria, B.C., Mails and General.—Dodwell & Co., Ltd.
Picahontas, British steamer, 1,721, John James, 7th Aug.—Kobe, General.—Dodwell & Co., Ltd.

PASSENGERS.

ARRIVED.

Per Japanese steamer Kanagawa Maru, from Seattle, Wash.:—Mr. G. R. Bedinger, Mr. Tomikawa, Mr. Henry Fuller, Mr. Saito, Rev. and Mrs. Walwoods, and Miss C. T. Jewett, in cabin. For Kobe:—Mr. Fujikawa, and Mrs. Kuwata, in cabin. For Moji:—Mr. and Mrs. Graham, Mr. N. H. Graham, and Miss H. Graham, in cabin.
 Per German steamer Villehad from Sydney via ports:—Mr. and Mrs. Cardew, Mr. J. Kojima, Mr. E. Jellinek, Mr. H. Bacon, Mr. P. Joss and Mr. Ng. Seck Chee in cabin.

DEPARTED.

Per American steamer Minnesota, for Hongkong via ports:—Dr. E. Bowes, Mrs. E. Bowes, Miss M. Bowes, Mr. B. F. Whipple, Miss F. Montgomery, Mrs. H. I. Childs, Mrs. A. Abt, Mrs. J. Hamilton Lewis, Miss L. Forsyth, Miss B. Shaffer, Judge W. S. Giffin, Mrs. W. S. Giffin, Mr. H. W. Wilder, Mrs. H. W. Wilder, Master J. Wilder, Miss J. McCollum, Mrs. W. B. Walker, Master W. B. Walker, Jr., Miss M. Lanyon, Mr. S. McClinck, Mr. Q. S. Peabody, Mr. J. W. Dorris, Mr. J. Anderson, Mr. G. B. Schell, Mrs. G. B. Schell, Miss M. Schell, Mrs. A. E. Whipple, Miss O. Liddell, Mrs. E. Gray, Mr. O. G. Elder, Miss F. Grayum, Miss M. O'Leary, Mr. G. A. Williams, Miss M. Gillman, Mr. C. H. Storms, Mr. W. J. Hutchinson, Mr. J. B. Boutelle, Rev. C. S. Deming, Rev. A. W. Martin, Mrs. A. W. Martin, Capt. H. P. Howard, U.S.A., Capt. O. B. Meyer, U.S.A., Mr. F. D. Cloud, Mrs. M. A. Whitten, infant and amah, Mrs. N. E. Irwin and child, Lieut. N. E. Irwin, U.S.N., Mr. J. K. Goodrich, Mrs. J. K. Goodrich, 3 children and amah, Mrs. Knowles, Miss Brunet, Mr. Fenwick, Mrs. Fenwick, Mrs. J. B. Milton, Miss Milton, Mrs. Wakefield, Miss Wakefield, Mr. H. Goldman, Mr. E. L. Van Nierop, Mrs. E. G. Hoolbrook, Miss F. Hoolbrook, Mrs. J. D. Longueur and amah, Mr. G. A. Derby, Mrs. G. A. Derby, 2 children and amah, Mr. A. S. Hay, and Mr. Jas. Hayes, in cabin.
 Per British steamer Empress of India, for Vancouver, B.C.:—Mr. J. Achtschin, Miss J. Adams, Mr. L. Anderson, Mr. W. Arake, Mr. T. J. Bourne, Mr. W. Broad, Mr. Ed. A. Brown, Mrs. Ed. A. Brown, Mr. H. Cambon, Mr. W. C. Carl, Mr. C. C. Cline, Mrs. Crockett-Turboden, Mrs. Max Dobbins, Capt. C. H. Fenton, Mr. O. Fischer, Mr. H. Gordon, Mrs. H. Gordon, Mr. A. E. Grace, Mrs. A. E. Grace, Mr. C. A. Griscom, Mr. C. A. Griscom, Mr. A. Haes, Mr. F. O. Hanbury, Mrs. E. O. Hanbury, Mr. F. R. Hathaway, Mrs. W. A. Hood, and Child, Mrs.

Hughes, Miss E. Jensen, Mr. R. Kurokawa, Mr. T. R. Law, Mr. C. J. Leavenworth, Dr. J. Leonard Lory, Mr. R. M. Loper, Mr. H. Parsons, Mrs. H. Parsons, Mr. G. W. S. Patterson, Dr. J. J. Power, Admiral D. M. Riddell, R.N., Mrs. D. M. Riddell, Mr. O. Saenger, Mr. Jos. Sayers, Mr. W. Schneider, Mrs. W. Schneider, Mr. T. S. Scrutton, Mr. Max Seidel, Mr. A. P. Simpson, Mr. W. J. Smith, Lieut. H. K. Stewart, Mr. A. Taylor, Mr. C. Thiel, Mr. R. E. Toog, Col. W. Western, Mr. Howard Wood, Miss Rachel B. Wood, and Miss Marion B. Wood, in cabin.

Per American steamer Siberia, for Hongkong via ports:—Mr. E. C. Best, Mr. S. J. Best, Mr. R. O. Beyer, Mr. W. B. Burt, Miss Christine H. Camron, Miss Maria L. Chase, Miss Abbas Chapin, Miss Mary E. Coleman, Miss Anna E. Coffin, Miss Lucy Floy Donaldson, Mrs. F. Dowley, Mr. Chester C. Fason, Mr. W. H. Gallagher, Mr. J. M. Cambill, Mr. E. C. Gee, Mrs. E. C. Gee, Com. J. C. Gilmore, U.S.N., Miss P. Grandstand, Mrs. W. B. Hamilton, Miss H. L. Hamilton, Mrs. E. P. Hammersley, Mr. E. R. Hay, Mr. Kirby S. Heck, Mrs. Kirby S. Heck, Mr. J. L. Hendrey, Mrs. J. L. Hendrey and 2 children, Mrs. F. P. Holcomb, Miss Maria Huff, Mr. Toss G. Ingalls, Miss E. V. Inness, Miss H. E. Jones, Mr. Clinton H. Laird, Mr. Lee Pat, Miss A. L. Lawrie, Dr. Isabella Mack, Mr. Chas. H. Magee, Mr. W. G. Marquardt, Mrs. W. V. Marquardt, Mr. L. W. Martin, Rev. Geo. S. McCune, Mrs. Geo. S. McCune, Mr. Ralph McCullough, Rev. E. F. McFarland, Mrs. E. F. McFarland, Miss Maud H. Miller, Miss M. C. Moffat, Rev. J. R. Peale, Mrs. J. R. Peale, Mr. B. Pierce, Rev. P. W. Pitcher, Mr. O. E. Pomeroy, Mayme Quinn, Capt. Robt. H. Rolf, U.S.A., Mr. W. J. Scruton, Miss Louisa A. Smith, Miss Margaret Strathie, Miss Nettie Trumbauer, Mr. Rodolph I. Turner, Mrs. Rudolph I. Turner, Mr. Chas. A. Weise, Mrs. Chas. A. Weise, Mrs. V. G. Willis and 2 children, Mr. J. G. Williamson, Mrs. Katherine Willsher, Mr. Geo. H. Wright, Mrs. Geo. H. Wright, Mr. S. J. Wright, Mrs. Ada Allen, Master Goffrey Allen, Miss Allen, Mr. F. E. Bano, Mrs. F. E. Bano, Mr. J. A. Barrett, Mr. D. H. Blake, Mr. W. A. Dowley, Mrs. J. C. Epperly, Mrs. R. P. Corbitt, Rev. D. T. Huntington, Miss Huntington, Rev. W. B. Hamilton, Mr. Paul Mosser, Mr. P. E. Noike, Mr. J. L. Parks, Mr. C. B. Perl, Mr. S. Tanaka, and Mrs. V. Turner, in cabin.

Per German steamer Freussen, for Europe via ports:—Mr. Zell, Mr. E. W. Maitland, Mr. J. K. Mr. A. W. Bain, Mr. W. Held, Capt. Ingendi, Mr. N. G. Maitland, Mr. Sakio Choh, Mr. and Mrs. Stueremann and daughter, Mr. C. R. Leitz and baby, Mr. O. Dissen, Miss E. Goudge, Mr. E. Bendt, Mr. H. P. Wilkinson, Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Frick, nurse and child, Capt. Geo. Huchnauer, Vice Consul Mezgard, Capt. Watkins, Major and Mrs. Painter, Mrs. E. H. Sharp and 3 children, Mrs. Mercier, Mr. Hawkins, Mr. Graves, Marquis and Marquise d'Adda and child, Miss K. Dodge, Rev. W. E. Towson, Mr. W. K. Matthews, Mr. Harro, Mr. Ray, Mrs. Griffin, Mr. Koik, Mr. and Mrs. G. Rigby and 2 children, Mr. W. B. Buyers, Mr. B. Bode, Capt. W. K. Sparks, Mrs. B. Votias, Miss Stevens, Mr. Ed. Kann, Mr. Neumann, Mr. Teck kuschew, Mr. Kaliukin, Mr. Faure, Mr. Brjuck, Mr. Besais, Mr. Rogdanowitsch, Mr. Coggeyev, Mr. Sobolew, Mrs. Numann, Mr. and Mrs. Hadow and 3 children, Mr. and Mrs. Denberg, Rev. and Mrs. J. B. Ost, Mr. Knoch, Mr. Mikolowicz, Mr. Baranics, Dr. Newmann, Mrs. Moskalenko and child, Mrs. Wersbientzel and child, Mrs. Tcherenetz, Mr. S. S. Mann, Mrs. Beattie and baby, Mr. Lee Son Ton, Mrs. Beauchamp and baby, Mr. Masum Chikashige, Mr. S. Kitamura, Mr. Quincy Paul, Mr. S. Oba, Capt. Seaborne, Mr. Maras, Mr. Franz, Mr. Jefferly, Mr. Nikolai Perlachkewez, Mr. Tsuchiya, Mr. T. Tihon, Mr. F. Parker, Mr. Humes, Mr. A. Gregory, Mr. A. Gonias, Mr. T. Dominguez, Mr. G. Alokeya, Mr. L. Navarin, Mr. D. Juites, Mr. F. Carrones, Mr. S. Franz, Mr. Choochel, Mr. A. Corrin, Mr. G. Rones, Mr. T. Reutera, Mr. H. Mastapha, Mr. S. Hassam, and Mr. H. Ghim, in cabin; 269 Russian, in steerage.

CARGO.

Per British steamer Empress of India, for Vancouver:—

From.	TEA.				To.
	Canada.	West.	East.	Coast.
Hongkong...	470	170	—	180	—
Poochow...	1,193	700	—	—	—
Shanghai...	1,591	1,549	2,381	—	—
Kobe...	558	532	31	—	—
Yokohama...	2,331	1,765	746	—	—
Total...	6,643	4,716	3,058	180	—

From.	SILK.				To.
	Easton.	Phil.	Sou.	Me.
H'kong & Canton...	280	—	—	—	—
Shanghai...	538	—	—	—	—
Yokohama...	1,016	78	—	—	—
Total...	1,834	78	—	—	—

LATEST COMMERCIAL.

IMPORTS.

Yokohama, September 8.
Small business with no special feature.

COTTON PIECE GOODS.

White Shirting—{ 40 yds. 36 in. } ...	PER YARD	0.10 to 0.16
Grey Shirting—8 1/2 lb. 38 1/2 yds. 36 inches V.	PER PIECE	4.00 to 4.50
Grey Shirting—9 lb. 38 1/2 yds. 45 inches		4.50 to 5.25
Prints—Assorted, 24 yards, 30 inches...		2.85 to 4.25
Cotton Italians and Satteens...	PER YARD	0.20 to 0.40

WOOLLENS.

Flannels ...	PER YARD	0.50 to 0.65
Italian Cloth, 32 in. ...		0.35 to 0.50
Mousseline de Laine—Crape, 2 1/2 yards, 30 inches...		0.16 to 0.22
Cloths—Pilots, 54 to 56 inches ...		0.50 to 1.00
Cloths—Presidents, 51 to 65 inches ...		0.90 to 1.00
Cloths—Union, 54 to 56 inches ...		0.50 to 1.00
Blankets—Scarlet and Green, 3 to 5 lb per lb ...		0.60 to 0.66
Velvets—Black, 35 yards, 22 inches ...	PER PIECE	9.20 to 12.50
Victoria Lawns, 12 yards, 42-3 inches...		0.90 to 1.80
Turkey Reds—2.8 to 3.0 lb 24-25 yards, 30 inches...		1.90 to 2.25
Turkey Reds—3.8 to 5 lb, 24-25 yards, 32 inches ...	PER YARD	2.50 to 3.65

COTTON YARN.

Nos. 16/24, Singles ...	Y.	Nominal
Nos. 28/32, Singles ...		—
Nos. 38/42, Singles ...		—
Nos. 32, Doubles...		Nominal
Nos. 42, Doubles...		Nominal
Nos. 2/50, Plain ...		Nominal
Nos. 2/80, Plain ...		Nominal
Nos. 2/100, Plain...		Nominal
Nos. 2/60, Gassed ...		300.00 to 310.00
Nos. 2/80, Gassed ...		350.00 to 370.00
Nos. 2/100, Gassed ...		430.00 to 460.00

RAW COTTONS.

American Middling...		27.00 to 27.25
Indian Branch...		25.50 to 26.00
Chinese ...		24.00 to 26.50

METALS.

Nothing to report.

Round and square 1/2 inch and upward...	PER PIECE	4.00 to 4.20
Iron Plates, assorted ...		4.35 to 4.65
Sheet Iron ...		4.70 to 6.95
Galvanized Iron sheets ...		10.05 to 10.95
Wire Nails, assorted ...		6.85 to 7.15
Tin Plates, per box...		7.40 to 7.65
Pig Iron, No. 3 ...		2.40
Hoop Iron (3/4 to 1 1/2 inch) ...		5.00 to 5.50

KEROSENE.

Market still dull.

American ...		$3.00 to 3.26
Russian ...		2.90 to 3.02
Tanaka ...		2.90

SUGAR.

A weak market and little doing.

Brown Takao ...	PER TON	V. 6.70 to 10.10
Brown Manila ...		10.10 to 11.10
Brown Daitou ...		8.00 to 8.50
Brown Canton ...		10.00 to 12.10
White Java and Penang...		12.80 to 13.80
White Refined ...		14.40 to 17.20

INDIGO.

No change to note.

Java, Medium to best...	PIECE	190.00 to 240.00
Calcutta, Medium to best ...		140.00 to 200.00
Madras (Karyak), Medium to best ...		90.00 to 120.00
Madras (Dry Leaf), Medium to best ...		—

EXPORTS.

RAW SILK.

The market has been quieter this week, the interruption of the cables and the disturbances in Tokyo having interfered with business to a considerable extent. Prices are easier for one or two lines, and until things get a little more settled we cannot look for any good business.

Filatures—Extra Best, Coarse ...		1,130 to 1,140
Filatures—Extra, Fine ...		—
Filatures—Extra, Coarse ...		1,100 to 1,120
Filatures—No. 1, Fine ...		—
Filatures—No. 1, Coarse ...		1,080 to 1,095
Filatures—No. 1 1/2, Fine ...		1,090 to 1,120
Filatures—No. 1 1/2, Coarse ...		1,050 to 1,070
Filatures—No. 2, Fine ...		1,050 to 1,060
Filatures—No. 2, Coarse ...		—
Common—Coarse ...		—
Re-reels—Extra ...		—
Re-reels—No. 1 ...		1,090 to 1,100
Re-reels—No. 1 1/2 ...		1,070 to 1,075
Re-reels—No. 2 ...		1,040 to 1,050
Kakadas—Extra ...		1,055 to 1,060
Kakadas—No. 1 ...		1,020 to 1,030
Kakadas—No. 1 1/2 ...		990 to 1,000
Kakadas—No. 2 ...		970 to 980
Kakadas—No. 2 1/2 ...		940 to 950

QUOTATIONS.

WILD WITH ECZEMA

And Other Itching, Burning, Scaly Eruptions with Loss of Hair.

Speedy Cure Treatment.

Bathe the affected parts with Hot Water and Cuticura Soap, to cleanse the surface of crusts and scales, and soften the thickened cuticle. Dry, without hard rubbing, and apply Cuticura Ointment freely, to allay itching, irritation, and inflammation, and soothe and heal, and lastly take Cuticura Resolvent Pills, to cool and cleanse the blood. A single set is often sufficient to cure the most torturing, disfiguring, itching, burning, scaly, pimply humours, eczemas, rashes, irritations, and chafings, with loss of hair, when all else fails.

The agonizing itching and burning of the skin, as in eczema; the frightful scaling, as in psoriasis; the loss of hair and crusting of the scalp, as in scalled head; the facial disfigurement, as in pimples and ringworm; the awful suffering of infants and the anxiety of worn-out parents, as in milk crust, tetter, and salt rheum,—all demand a remedy of almost superhuman virtues to successfully cope with them. Such are the CUTICURA remedies, the purest, sweetest, most speedy and economical curatives for the skin, scalp, and blood ever compounded. Mothers are their warmest friends.

Millions of Women Use Cuticura Soap

Assisted by CUTICURA OINTMENT for preserving, purifying, and beautifying the skin, for cleansing the scalp of crusts, scales, and dandruff, and the stopping of falling hair, for softening, whitening, and soothing red, rough, and sore hands, for baby rashes and chafings, in the form of baths for annoying irritations and inflammations of women, or too free or offensive perspiration, in the form of washes for ulcerative weaknesses, and many sanative, antiseptic purposes which readily suggest themselves, as well as for all the purposes of the toilet, bath, and nursery.

CUTICURA RESOLVENT PILLS (Chocolate Coated) are a new, tasteless, odourless, economical substitute for the celebrated liquid CUTICURA RESOLVENT, as well as for all other blood purifiers and humour cures. Put up in screw-cap pocket vials, containing 60 doses.

CUTICURA REMEDIES are sold throughout the world. Australian Depot: E. Towns & Co., Sydney. British Depot: F. & S. Chatterton & Co., London. French Depot: 2 Rue de la Paix, Paris. German Depot: A. C. G. & Co., Berlin. Italian Depot: A. C. G. & Co., Milan. Spanish Depot: A. C. G. & Co., Madrid. U.S. Depot: A. C. G. & Co., New York.

WASTE SILK.

Rather more doing in Kikai Kibiso at quotations. In other sorts nothing much done so far, although small supplies are coming to hand.

QUOTATIONS.

Noshi—Filatures, Best ...		—
Noshi—Filatures, Good ...		—
Noshi—Oshiu, Best ...		—
Noshi—Oshiu, Good ...		—
Noshi—Oshiu, Medium ...		—
Noshi—Shinshin, Best ...		—
Noshi—Shinshin, Good ...		—
Noshi—Hushin, Best ...		—
Noshi—Bashin, Good ...		—
Noshi—Bashin, Medium ...		—
Noshi—Joshiu, Best ...		—
Noshi—Joshiu, Good ...		—
Noshi—Joshiu, Medium ...		—
Kibiso—Filatures, Extra ...		—
Kibiso—Filatures, Best ...		105 to 110
Kibiso—Filatures, Second ...		95 to 100
Kibiso—Joshiu, Good ...		—
Kibiso—Bashin, Fair ...		—

TEA.

Small stocks and limited business. The season seems to be about finished.

QUOTATIONS.

Choicest ...		—
Choice ...		—
Fine ...		—
Good Medium ...		Y31 to 41
Medium ...		32 to 36
Good Common ...		27 to 31
Common ...		24 to 26
		19 to 23

EXCHANGE.

Yokohama, September 7.

London silver and China sterling quotations being unaltered local rates have undergone no change, closing for the mail per steamer Iyo Maru as under.

London Bank T.T. ...		2 1/2
— Bills on demand ...		2 1/2
— 4 months' sight ...		2 1/2
— Private 4 months' sight ...		2 1/2
— 6 months' sight ...		2 1/2
Paris & Lyons—Bank sight ...		255
— Private 4 months' sight ...		259 1/2
— 6 months' sight ...		260 1/2
Hongkong—Bank sight ...		56 1/2
— Private 30 days' sight ...		54 1/2

Bank sight ...	74 1/2
Private to days' sight ...	76 1/2
India—Bank sight ...	151
— Private 30 days' sight ...	155
America—Bank sight ...	49 1/2
— Private 30 days' sight ...	49 1/2
— Private 4 months' sight ...	50 1/2
Germany—Bank sight ...	807 1/2
— Private 4 months' sight ...	811
Bar Silver (London) ...	28 1/2

* Nominal.

JAPANESE SHARES.

Yokohama, September 8, a.m.
Mean prices for Cash Delivery of Bonds and Shares, which may be held by Foreigners in their own names.

	Div'd.	Paid up.	1 year.	Q'tion.
		Ven.	per cent.	Yen.
Exchequer Bonds ...		100	5	91.00
1st Issue ...		100	5	86.70
Exchequer Bonds 2nd Issue...		100	5	85.50
Exchequer Bonds 3rd Issue ...		100	6	95.50
Exchequer Bonds 4th Issue ...		100	6	95.50
Provincial Exchequer Bonds
5th Issue ...		40	6	44.00
Consolidated Bonds (Seiri) ...		100	5	83.50
War Bonds (Gunji) ...		100	5	83.50
5 % Imperial Bonds (Kobori) ...		100	5	78.00
Navy Bonds (Kaigun) ...		100	5	80.80
Tokyo City Public Loan Bonds		100	6	94.50
Y'hama Water-works Bonds ...		100	6	93.00
Y'hama City Public Loan Bonds		100	6	91.20
Osaka Harbour Bonds ...		100	6	88.50
Sanyo Railway Debentures 2nd		100	6	86.00
Sanyo Railway ...		50	10	60.00
Kyushu Railway ...		50	8	57.80
Hokkaido Colliery Railway ...		50	12.5	81.80
Sobu Railway ...		50	8.50	58.50
Tokyo Electric Car (Densha) ...		50	11	73.50
Tokyo Street Railway (Seigni) ...		50	11.04	73.50
Tokyo Street Railway new ...		12.50	11.04	27.50
Tokyo Electric Railway (Denki) ...		50	3.5	53.50
Tokyo Electric Railway, new ...		30	3.5	31.80
Yokohama Electric Railway ...		40	—	48.50
Odawara Electric Car ...		50	3	23.50
Keihin Electric Railway ...		50	8	64.00
Keihin Electric Railway, new ...		12.50	8	24.90
Tokyo Marine Insurance ...		12.50	15	36.00
Yokohama Fire Insurance ...		12.50	10	17.00

* Ex dividend.

Milkmaid Milkmaid Milkmaid

TRADE MARK.

BRAND
Milk

As a guarantee of
Quality, see the
MILKMAID
on every Tin.

LARGEST SALE
in the
WORLD.

TRADE MARK.

BRAND
Milk

TRADE MARK.

BRAND
Milk

As a guarantee of
Quality, see the
MILKMAID
on every Tin.

LARGEST SALE
in the
WORLD.

Lea and Perrins' Sauce.

By Royal Warrant
to
His Majesty the King.

THE ORIGINAL AND GENUINE WORCESTERSHIRE.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS

Cure Indigestion,
Bile, Sick Headache, Giddiness,
Palpitation,
and all Internal Disorders

THESE PILLS
ARE PURELY VEGETABLE;
they contain no deleterious
matter, and may be taken by the most delicate.

Manufactured only at 78, New Oxford St. (Lanc. 533, Oxford St.)
London. Sold by all Chemists and Medicine Vendors.

BOVRIL

gives you Strength.

VESSELS ON THE BERTH.

- For KEELUNG, via Moji (from Kobe), 3rd, and 18th every month, at Noon, the "NAGATO MARU."—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.
- For KEELUNG, via Moji (from Kobe), 10th and 25th every month, at Noon, the "KOSHUN MAUR."—Osaka Shosen Kaisha.
- For SHANGHAI, via Kobe, Moji, and Nagasaki, Sept. 5th, at 2 p.m., the "BENVORLICH."—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.
- For SEATTLE, Wash., via Victoria, B.C., Sept. 8th, at 2 p.m., the "IYO MARU."—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.
- For MARSEILLES, London, and Antwerp, via Kobe, Moji, Hongkong, Singapore, Penang, Colombo, and Port Said, Sept. 9th, at Noon, the "BAROTSA."—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.
- For LONDON, Amsterdam and Antwerp, Sept. 12th, at Daylight, the "ANTENOR."—Butterfield & Swire.
- For HONGKONG, via Kobe, Moji, and Manila, about Sept. 10th, the "PLEIADES."—Dodwell & Co., Ltd.
- For MARSEILLES, via ports, and Shanghai, Sept. 9th, at 7 a.m., the "ERNEST SIMONS."—M. M. S.S. Co.
- For MARSEILLES, London, and Antwerp, via Kobe, Shanghai, Hongkong, Straits, Colombo, and Port Said, Sept. 12th, at Daylight, the "CEYLON."—P. & O. S.N. Co.
- For HONGKONG, via Kobe, (Inland Sea), Nagasaki, and Shanghai, about Sept. 13th, the "MONGOLIA."—P. M. S.S. Co.
- For HAVRE, Hamburg and Bremen via ports, Sept. 14th, at Daylight, the "SILESIA."—C. Illies & Co.
- For PORTLAND, Ore., Sept. 15th, the "ARAGONIA."—P. & A. S.S. Co.
- For NEW YORK, via ports, and Suez Canal, Sept. 16th, the "VANDALIA."—Cornes & Co.
- For BREMEN and Hamburg, via ports, Sept. 16th, at 9 a.m., the "ROON."—H. Ahrens & Co., Nachf.
- For SAN FRANCISCO, via Honolulu, Sept. 17th, at 3 p.m., the "KORBA."—P. M. S.S. Co.
- For HONGKONG, via Kobe, Inland Sea, Nagasaki, and Shanghai, about Sept. 18th, the "EMPERESS OF CHINA."—Canadian Pacific Railway Co.
- For AUSTRALIA and New Zealand Sept. 22nd, the "CHINGTU."—Butterfield & Swire.
- For VICTORIA, Seattle, Tacoma, Wash., Sept. 22nd, the "JASON."—Butterfield & Swire.
- For CANADA, United States, and Europe, via Vancouver, B.C., Sept. 23rd, the "TARTAR."—Canadian Pacific Railway Co.
- For SAN FRANCISCO, via Honolulu, Sept. 23rd, the "COPTIC."—O. & O. S.S. Co.
- For HONGKONG via Kobe, Moji, Nagasaki and Shanghai, Sept. 24th, the "NUMANTIA."—P. & A. S.S. & Co.
- For AUSTRALIA, via ports (from Kobe), Sept. 26th, the "AUSTRALIAN."—Cornes & Co.
- For CANADA, United States, and Europe, via Vancouver, B.C., Sept. 29th, at Noon, the "EMPERESS OF JAPAN."—C. P. R. S.S. Co.
- For VICTORIA, B.C., and Tacoma, Wash., Sept. 30th, the "LYRA."—Dodwell & Co., Ltd.

(毎土曜日一發行)

編輯人 エフ プリンター

發行兼印刷人 ニーゼー プラオン

發行所 横濱市山下町五十五番

ワケツインメー新開社

Original from

The Japan Weekly Mail.

寄主日 A REVIEW OF JAPANESE COMMERCE, POLITICS, LITERATURE, AND ART. 一週刊行

No. 11.]

REGISTERED AT THE G.P.O.
AS A NEWSPAPER.

YOKOHAMA, SEPT. 16TH, 1905.

明治三十五年三月廿日
第三千四百四十四號

[VOL. XLIV.]

CONTENTS.

Summary of News	397
The Riots in Tokyo and Elsewhere	398
The Establishment of Martial Law	399
The "Jiji Shimpō" and Manjū Yamagata	399
The Peace Treaty	399
Field-Marshal Maegaki Yamagata	399
Miss Roosevelt	399
Sighalia	399
The Armistice	399
Manchuria	399
Still Discouraged History	399
Foreign Journal Opinion	399
Burning of the "Mikasa"	399
The Chinese Minister in Washington	399
Korea	399
The Russian Prisoners	399
America and Japan	399
Street Traffic in London	399
Letters of Thanks	399
Baron Komura and Mr. Takahara	399
China	399
Notes on Current Events	399
Price Court Decision	399
The Bookshelf	399
Leading Articles:—
The Progression	399
The "Jiji Shimpō"	399
The Yokohama Specie Bank	399
Opening of a new term at Tohoku Gakuin, Sendai	399
Death of Dr. G. D. Smith	399
Shipping Accidents	399
Baseball	399
News of the Week	399
American Topics	399
The "Kijō Maru" Disaster	399
Correspondence:—
The Tokyo Riots—A Collection	399
"Exemption from Rape"	399
Young Men's Christian Association Army Work	399
Telegrams	399
Latest Shipping	399
Latest Commercial	399

"FAIS CE QUE DOIS: ADVIENNE QUE POURRA"

NOTICE TO CORRESPONDENTS.

No notice will be taken of anonymous correspondence. What is intended for insertion in the "JAPAN WEEKLY MAIL" must be authenticated by the name and address of the writer, not for publication, but as a guarantee of good faith.

It is particularly requested that all letters on business be addressed to the MANAGER, and Cheques be made payable to same; and that literary contributions be addressed to the EDITOR.

YOKOHAMA: SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 16TH, 1905.

DEATH.

At Kobe on the 14th instant, GEORGE D. SMITH, M.D. (Edin.), M.R.C.P., E., formerly of Bonnington, Edinburgh, aged 53 years.

SUMMARY OF NEWS.

A FRESH case of plague was reported in Kobe on Sept. 8th.

MAJOR-GENERAL M. NAKAOKA was removed on Sept. 7th to the reserve list.

At 6.25 p.m. on Sept. 6th, hail fell in the district of Chichibu near Urawa.

THE Hon. W. Taft, American Secretary of State for War, arrives in Yokohama on Saturday.

In the afternoon of Sept. 12th, fire broke out at Hanazono-cho, Otaru, destroying twenty-eight houses.

ADMIRAL ROJESTVENSKY arrived on Sept. 11th at Isato by the Gensan Maru from Saseho on his way to Osaka.

ADMIRAL Inouye, Commander-in-Chief of the Yokosuka Naval Station, arrived in Tokyo on September 7th.

PRINCE TERU, third son of the Crown Prince, returned on Sept. 11th from Nikko, arriving at 3.0 p.m. at Ueno.

WASHINGTON telegram to the Hochi says that olera is prevalent in Tiehling, which is now occupied by the Japanese.

Learn that the Deutsch-Asiatische Bank has taken over the building of the Russo-Chinese Bank, 180 Yamashita-cho, and will commence business on the 15th October next. The manager is Mr. Homann.

ABOUT noon on Sept. 12th, a severe shock of earthquake was felt in Hiroshima, Kure, Matsuyama and other western cities.

THE Seoul Fusan Railway Company will hold an ordinary semi-annual meeting on Sept. 25th in the Young Men's Club, Tokyo.

THE transport tax raised during August by the Tokyo, Shigai and Sotobori Electric Tramways, amounted to yen 48,252.32 in all.

THE Chiba District Court was destroyed by fire early on the morning of Sept. 7th. The cause is reported to be incendiarism.

THE Miyako believes that the Emperor will shortly send a warm message to the armies in appreciation of their meritorious services in the war.

ABOUT 2 a.m. on Monday, fire broke out in Nakamura, Ishikawa, Yokohama, destroying seven small houses. The cause is reported to be negligence.

THE damage reported to have been caused to the various coal mines in Buzen and Chikuzen provinces by the recent storm, is estimated at yen 2,330,000.

MR. MINAKAMI, Director of the Yokohama Customs, will shortly remove to Kobe, where he has been nominated by the City Assembly as Mayor of the City.

THE Russian hospital ship Aryol, which was captured at the battle of the Japan Sea, is renamed Kusuhō Maru and assigned to the Kure Naval Station.

A NAGASAKI telegram says that a German steamer of 5,261 gross tons arrived there on Sept. 11th from Odessa. She is chartered to carry Russian prisoners home.

THE construction of the branch line of the Sanyo Railway between Atsuta and the Omine coal mine belonging to the Navy, having been completed, traffic was opened on Sept. 13th.

THE Emperor and Empress Dowager of China sent thirty thousand taels on Sept. 9th to be distributed among the poor people in Shanghai, who are suffering from the recent destructive storm.

THE new steamer Taichi Maru (1,250 tons) of the Osaka Shosen Kaisha, went on a successful trial trip on Sept. 11th. The ship will be employed on the line between North China and Kobe.

TOKYO has resumed its normal state of quietness. There was a riot in Yokohama on Tuesday evening, but it had no political significance. For the present Yokohama is guarded by troops.

ADMIRAL ROJESTVENSKY arrived on Sept. 13th in Kyoto from Saseho. He was at once removed to the Fushimi detention house. His wounds sustained in the battle of Japan Sea are entirely healed.

ACCORDING to a Shanghai telegram, the German cruiser Squadier, which recently went ashore 20 miles off Singapore has been floated without damage. She left on Sept. 11th for the German Colony in East Africa.

ABOUT 2 p.m. on Aug. 29th, a number of barbarians attacked the village of Shishitan, Hsingkong, Formosa, and carried away the heads of five men and ten women and destroyed two houses of the villagers. On the following night, another band of savages made an attack on the village of Sankyūin, Chaoyuen, and carried away the heads of three men, and inflicted injuries on two men and two women. The villagers eventually repulsed the head-hunters.

MR. E. H. HARRIMAN and two other American gentlemen proceeded at 10.30 a.m. on Sept. 12th to the Palace being accompanied by Mr. Grisoom, American Minister, and were received by the Emperor in audience.

MR. J. MATSUDA, proprietor of a newspaper agency, the Nakaigai Tsushin-sha, was punished on Sept. 11th in the Tokyo District Court with a fine of yen 40 on a charge of having infringed the Press Regulations.

SINCE the outbreak of the Tokyo trouble up to the present, the following newspapers have been suspended: Tokyo—Jimmin, Nippon, Miyako, Yorodan Choho, Niroku, Asahi; other places—Kyoto Choho, Chiba Shimpō.

AT 10 a.m. on Tuesday, the presidents and chief public procurators of Appeal Courts throughout the Empire held a conference in the Department of Justice. Mr. Hadano, Minister for Justice, gave them instructions as to judicial affairs.

THE Toyo Kisen Kaisha intends to add yen 6,500,000 to its present capital, making a total of thirteen million yen. The scheme will be introduced to the shareholders at a general meeting on Sept. 20th. The additional funds will be spent on new steamers.

MISS ROOSEVELT will arrive on Sept. 12th in Peking, and will be received on the following day by the Empress Dowager in the Yuwo garden. It is reported by a Peking telegram to the Hochi that she intends to pay a visit on the 14th to the most noble places in the capital and to leave there on the 15th for Nagasaki. She will not land in Japan.

THE directors of the Maru Transportation Company of Awamori have been prosecuted on a charge of having obtained, in July, yen 45,000 from the branch of the Yasuda Bank, yen 35,000 from the Awamori Commercial Bank, and yen 43,000 from the 59th Bank, by fraud. The case is under examination in the Tokyo District Court by Public Procurator-Matsumoto.

I. TAKAMOTO (41), a fish dealer, carrying on business in Yokosuka, murdered his father-in-law, Shokichi (73) on the night of Sept. 5th, inflicting severe injuries on the head with an axe. The culprit subsequently gave himself up to the Yokosuka Police Station. On the following day, Mr. Danno, a preliminary examination judge of the Yokohama District Court, proceeded to the place and examined into the crime. On the 7th the murderer was removed to the Court. The cause is reported to be a dispute between the victim and his son-in-law which had lasted for a long time.

A. MATSUMOTO, chief jailor of the Odawara branch of the Negishi Prison, Yokohama, on Aug. 29th beat S. Otake (50), a convict, to death with a large stick. That same morning the jailor inspected the detention ward, calling over the names of the convicts one by one. When Otake did not reply, in consequence of a severe illness from which he had been suffering for three days past, the official refused to accept the excuse and began to beat him. The merciless treatment of the man caused the other convicts, about a hundred in all, to become greatly excited and they threatened to assault the chief jailor. Their demonstration, however, was suppressed by other guards.

THE RIOTS IN TOKYO AND ELSEWHERE.

Saturday, Sept. 9th.

There was no renewal of the rioting in Tokyo on the night of the 7th. It becomes more and more evident that the demonstration, so far as acts of violence were concerned, was directed wholly against the police, and that as soon as the military appeared upon the scene the people were appeased.

These occasions are always utilized by disaffected persons to wreak their own private spite. This was plainly the case with the burning of cars belonging to the Street Railway Company. Electric traction in Tokyo has thrown a great number of jirikisha coolies out of employ and these men, under the pinch of want, have long been recognised as not unlikely to resort to outrage against the property of the electric railway companies if occasion offered. They burned some 30 cars of the Shigai Denki Tetsudo during the night of the 5th, and inflicted on the company a loss of about a hundred thousand yen, which of course will not be recovered inasmuch as the municipality will lay the blame on the police and the police, on the municipality.

Three Christian places of worship were burned, one was partially wrecked and from one the furniture was removed and destroyed. To show the deliberation with which these anti-religionists worked, it is related that at the Shitaya Kyokai they were effectually deterred by the remonstrances of an old woman in charge, who explained that her son was at the war, and that it would be a bad thing for her if her house were burned in his absence. The rioters proceeded to Bishop Nicolai's cathedral, but a lieutenant who commanded some soldiers on duty there had only to state that he was in charge, whereupon the crowd dispersed at once. At the Awaji-cho Kaido also the presence of soldiers saved the place. Two missionaries' houses were involved in the burning, one an American citizen, one a Frenchman. Japanese newspapers express great regret for these occurrences, which they denounce as entirely irrelevant and injurious, but we desire to ask Japanese newspapers whether they believe that the responsibility for creating this momentary reign of disorder rests on any heads but their own. Most assuredly it does not. The part acted by the Japanese press—with three honorable exceptions—at this crisis has been utterly unworthy of the nation's intelligence and will remain a permanent disgrace to Japanese journalism.

At Kyoto on the night of the 6th there was some disturbance, and there also the attempts of the police to interfere with public meetings were violently resented, but the trouble did not assume anything like the dimensions of that in Tokyo.

We explained in our last issue that a deputation of five members of the House of Representatives had been chosen to wait upon the Premier as delegates of the various political parties, for the purpose of asking that a special session of the Diet should be summoned as soon as possible, and that greater liberty of speech, public meeting and publication should be accorded. This deputation was received by the Premier at 2 p.m. on the 7th. In reply to the question of a special session Count Katsura said that it could not be summoned before the exchange of ratifications of the treaty of peace and before Baron Komura's return, which was expected on the 5th of October. The Government would therefore endeavour to have the session about the 10th of next month. As to freedom of speech, public meeting and publication, the Premier took the ground that restraints were never contemplated in the case of purely political discussions, but where writings and speeches tended manifestly to incite to deeds of violence and assassination it became the plain duty of the executive to interfere. So far as the taking of his own life went, it might be endured, but as an act against the public peace it could not be permitted. Meetings under the promotion and control of responsible men like those forming the deputation might count on complete immunity from police interference, but such liberty could not be universally extended without danger of abuse.

We think that we shall be expressing unequivocally the view taken by intelligent foreigners when we say that a worse occasion could not possibly have been chosen to advocate greater freedom of speech and publication. The country stands face to face with one of the most flagrant abuses of those privileges ever perpetrated during the Muji era. Nothing could constitute a less valid title to greater liberty than the licence and unreasoning prejudice shown by the newspaper press of Japan at this juncture, and to ask for fuller freedom in the immediate sequel of such a display is a strikingly bad choice of times and seasons.

The Tokyo City Council as well as the members forming the consultative body of the Prefectural Assembly, have strongly condemned the action of the police. Indeed it would seem that the police in some cases lost their heads and attacked mere bystanders. One little girl was among the wounded, and some of those thus attacked, having no means of escape, threw themselves into the moat. There are other tales probably much exaggerated. We do not hear the version of the police themselves, and without it a definite judgment can not be formed, but it is hard to understand what valid reason can have existed for slashing two boys of only 13 and 14 years of age.

Monday, Sept. 11th.

The citizens of Tokyo are now beginning to appreciate that their ebullition against the police has some inconvenient consequences. There were 288 police-boxes throughout the city, and of these no less than 118 were burned and 27 wrecked, so that only 143 remain intact. It immediately results that in 145 districts the populace is without its usual guardians and finds itself exposed to robbers and incendiaries. The only remedial measure possible under the circumstances has been taken, namely, to hire temporary constables in the form of labouring men, and to quarter them upon the citizens. This has been done on 148 beats. Meanwhile the city seems to have entirely recovered its normal state, except that, being under martial law, it has soldiers posted at many points where they had previously been invisible. The feeling that unwise police interference was responsible for the outbreak of the trouble seems to grow instead of diminishing. It is not denied that the roughs exceeded all pardonable limits, but the dimensions which the riot ultimately assumed are unimportant compared with the cause that produced it. The blocking of the entrances to Hibiya Park was the grand fons et origo mali. That several peaceful and unoffending citizens suffered at the hands of the police is apparently not to be denied, but too much stress can not be laid on that phase of the affair for such accidents are scarcely avoidable when rioting on an extensive scale takes place at night. The really grave feature is that the police have been disredited. Nothing could have been more successful than their method of preserving order before this commotion occurred. The citizens trusted them implicitly and were always ready to obey them docilely, so that quite remarkably effective results were attained by comparatively small expenditure of force. Now, however, not only has a feeling of distrust replaced the old confidence, but the unruly element of the population has made the dangerous discovery that police restraint is a fragile thing after all. The Japanese are naturally such orderly and sensible people that few evil results need be anticipated but nevertheless the incident is extremely regrettable.

It is stated that the Minister of State for Home Affairs and the Chief of Police have tendered their resignations. It would be indeed a pity if Viscount Yoshikawa, who is one of the ablest of the present portfolio holders, were obliged to go out of office, but he is just the kind of man to persist in stepping down if he thinks that his Department has incurred any just blame.

Five journals are now under sentence of suspension. Their names could be guessed with tolerable accuracy. They are the Yawa Choho, the Niroku Shimbum, the Miyako Shimbum, the Jimmin and the Nippon. We are sincerely sorry for the Nippon. Its editorial writings throughout this crisis have been most manly and quite beyond reproach. But those who are in charge of its "miscellaneous" column have allowed matter to appear which can only be described as directly inciting to popular violence. That is unequivocally true of every one of the suspended journals, and it might be said of others also which have hitherto escaped the same fate. We shall doubtless hear, when we are already hearing, comments that Japan has retrogressed to the days of arbitrary administration and the law of force. But men deliberately descend a hill which they have mounted with difficulty, it is foolish to cry out that others drove them down. Besides, this talk of retrogression is hysterical. Under the pressure of considerable excitement a large section of the press was afflicted by a temporary vertigo, which impelled a small section of the people to make demonstrations which police indignantly converted into riots. The whole thing is altogether exceptional and might easily have occurred in the best regulated city in the world. As for the newspapers, they have been assured by the Prime Minister in the most unequivocal terms that the Government in placing Tokyo under martial law and empowering the Authorities to suspend the journal without recourse to any legal tribunal has not the slightest desire or intention of restricting liberty of speech. Free discussion of all administrative measures and political incidents is invited and will be as fully tolerated as ever. But the Administration is resolved that in the present excited condition of the public mind newspapers shall not be permitted to publish matter provocative of deeds of violence. Every intelligent editor can do whatever he wants to say within these limits.

On the 8th instant the Prime Minister invited to his official residence all the editors and news-agents of Tokyo and addressed them a speech in the following terms:

"GENTLEMEN—I have invited you to the trouble of coming here to-day because, with reference to the quiet conditions which have existed in the past few days, there is need that I should call the attention of you who call yourselves the ears of Society. The state of affairs now prevailing is most regrettable and it is with the utmost regret that I view the establishment of martial law in this city where His Imperial Majesty resides."

riotous conduct subversive of public peace and good order has become prevalent, it is inevitable that steps should be taken to suppress it. What I venture to hope is that you gentlemen, who are the leaders of public opinion, will on this occasion exercise all care so as to avoid the use of any language calculated to incite men to disorderly conduct. Inasmuch as each person has his own way of looking at things we do not offer the slightest objection to attacks upon the Government's methods in matters of politics. Nay rather we believe that such attacks are to be welcomed. But since recent events are truly calculated to disturb social order, and since the state of affairs suggests apprehension that injury may be done to the people at large, we are confronted by a very serious question. If, at this juncture, journalistic utterances depart from their normal routes and tend to incite to riotous conduct, the effect may be very widely felt, and we therefore deem it essential to exercise some control. The existing press regulations, however, are in some points defective for such a purpose and therefore they have been supplemented by an Imperial Ordinance.

The meetings of the two countries Plenipotentiaries in America has resulted in a peace treaty which has already been signed, but owing to diplomatic and other considerations the time has not yet come for announcing its details. The Government, however, in order to achieve the objects of the war, sought to obtain assent to its views and instructed its Plenipotentiaries to spare no effort in that sense. But having regard to the future development of the Empire and in consideration of the trend of public opinion, we finally decided to abate something of our demands and thus a peace treaty came at last into existence. I have already become acquainted with your opinions concerning the terms. The Government has not the least thought of imposing any restraint on those opinions. Therefore the amendment of the present press regulations is not made with the object of impairing freedom of speech but is inspired by the fact that appearances suggest a disturbance of social tranquillity and good order. I trust that the Government's policy will not be misconstrued."

Immediately after this speech there were some symptoms of discontent among the audience, one or two of whom complained that the unimpeachable policy of the Premier in this matter did not appear to be appreciated by those directly charged with the duty of carrying it out, but Count Katsura's good-humoured and tactful manner of dealing with these complaints and the assurances he gave had the effect of quickly restoring good humour. A great deal was said about the conduct of the police, who were evidently condemned by the great majority of those present. Count Katsura, however, carefully refrained from committing himself upon this point, though he listened patiently to everything his visitors had to say.

Mr. Adachi, Chief of the Tokyo police, has been allowed to retire at his own request, and Mr. Sei, Governor of Nagano, has been appointed to his place.

We learn with much regret that the ban of suspension has been extended to the Asahi Shimbun, which ranks among the four great journals of Tokyo. This sentence can not have been caused by any editorial utterances of our contemporary. Its issue of the 9th instant, which has brought it into trouble, contains editorially nothing calculated to incite to violations of public peace and good order. But in its correspondence columns, which abound with complaining letters, and have so abounded for many days, there are cries which can scarcely be called innocuous. Considering the appeal made direct by the Premier to the newspapers to assist in allaying the commotion, we are surprised that the Asahi should have thought these letters worthy of insertion. But, on the other hand, the suspension of a journal like the Asahi is a very serious matter, involving the proprietors in immense loss and we sincerely trust that the ban will be very quickly removed.

Tuesday, Sept. 12th.

There is a movement in favour of abolishing the office of chief of police in Tokyo, and placing the police under the control of the municipality. It appears to us that if such a step be not premature—a point for the Government to decide—it would be at once rational and practical. At present there is a state of divided authority which can not conduce to efficiency. Incidentally attention may be directed to the fact that the sufferers by the recent riot are virtually without redress. They can not successfully hope to claim damages from either the Municipality or the Government, since each of these would shift the responsibility to the other's shoulders. The prominent advocates of the proposed change are a number of Tokyo barristers. They perhaps lack something in the matter of influence, but their cause is a good one.

It looks as though this question of the peace-terms would cause another split in the ranks of the Seiyu-kai. Marquis Saionji's very moderate address and the non-committal resolution adopted in consequence by the standing committee of the Party are already known to our readers. But this attitude does not satisfy the non-parliamentary members. Those of them that represent the Tokyo branch of the Party held a meeting on the 10th instant and passed three resolutions. The first of them was couched in the terms now so familiar; namely, that the peace negotiated ignores the purpose of the war as well as the results already achieved by the country's arms, and is not calculated to be permanent. The second declared that by attempting to restrain legitimate expressions of public opinion the Government provoked an outbreak which ended in scenes of violence and brought upon Tokyo the disgrace of being placed under martial law. The third called upon the Ministry to resign at once. It is plain that a very wide breach has thus been created between the head-quarters of the Party and the Tokyo detachment. We do not at present see how the two can be reconciled.

It is confidently affirmed in several quarters that Viscount Yoshikawa, Minister of State for Home Affairs, has resigned; that his resignation will be accepted and that his successor will be either Mr. Yamagata Isaburo, now Vice-Minister of the same Department, or Mr. Hirata Tasuke, formerly Minister of Agriculture and Commerce. Viscount Yoshikawa's retirement from office under the circumstances would be most regrettable, but public opinion will probably endorse the step, inasmuch as the Minister of Home Affairs is ultimately responsible for the conduct of the police, and the police certainly committed a great blunder on the night of the 5th. The strong probability is, however, that Viscount Yoshikawa was entirely ignorant of the measures contemplated by the police on the 5th inst.

The proprietors of the Catholic Church and School in the Honjo district of Tokyo, which were wrecked on the night of the 5th, have applied it is said, through the French Representative for compensation to the extent of 50,000 yen, and the Domei Christo-Kyokai of the same region has asked for 25,000 yen through the United States Minister. We fail to see how such claims can be preferred diplomatically until legal remedies have been exhausted.

It appears, as we surmised, that no claims have actually been presented by either the American or the French Legation on account of damage done during the riot on the 5th instant. The claims may have been placed in the hands of the two Representatives but have not yet been presented, it is said. Meanwhile the members of the Fukui

Domei-kai (Gospel Union) have held a meeting and have decided that, irrespective of any right they may possess to ask for indemnification, it will be wiser to refrain from doing so.

The ban of suspension has been removed in the case of the Yorozu, the Niroku, the Miyako and the Jimmu, but the Asahi remains under sentence, and its Osaka issue is involved as well as its Tokyo one. The Osaka Nippo also has been suspended and the Fukuoka Mainichi Shimbun is in the same predicament.

Wednesday, Sept. 13th.

The resignation of Viscount Yoshikawa, Minister of Home Affairs, has been returned by the Emperor, as has also been that of Baron Senge, Governor of Tokyo. It is further stated that the Cabinet offered to tender their resignation, not in connexion with the peace terms but in connexion with the disturbance in Tokyo. The Emperor signified, however, that no occasion existed for such a step. Thus Mr. Adachi, Chief of Police, alone retires from office. The Nippon is not satisfied with this result, which it regards as punishing juniors for faults of which the seniors also should share the responsibility. We imagine, however, that justice has been done. Probably the order to close Hibiya Park emanated solely from Mr. Adachi and was issued entirely without the cognizance of the Home Minister.

In Kobe the mob pulled down the bronze statue of Marquis Ito and tried ineffectually to throw it into the sea.

Osaka had its anti-peace-treaty meeting on Tuesday. Messrs. Kono Hironaka and Yamada Kinosuke repaired thither for the purpose. The people assembled in the public building on Nakanoshima. Several thousands are said to have attended, and there were representatives from 22 places, including Kyoto and Tokyo. Mr. Kono Hironaka presided. Probably when the history of the Meiji era comes to be dispassionately written it will have to be recorded that no one man did his country more injury during that remarkable period than Mr. Kono Hironaka. He has been an agitator of the worst type ever since the crime which consigned him to prison 25 years ago, though he believes himself to be inspired by only patriotic motives. Mr. Hino, of Osaka, was put up to propose the resolution which denounced the peace treaty as a disgrace, declared that it sacrificed the results and the objects of the war, accused the authorities of such violent and unconstitutional measures for restraining public opinion as must bring the Empire into discredit, and proclaimed that the treaty must be rejected and the Cabinet compelled to resign. The meeting did not pass without disturbance, but as to its origin there are no clear indications. The accounts state that about a hundred men broke into the assembly hall and that a scene of great confusion ensued, in the course of which several persons were injured more or less severely. The police tried to check these disturbers of the meeting but were unable to do so. Otherwise there does not seem to have been any exercise of police authority.

Thursday, Sept. 14th.

Considerable trouble occurred in Yokohama on the night of Sept. 12th and the morning of the following day. The disturbances originated at the Hagoromo Theatre, where a lecture meeting was held, which was to have been attended by two Tokyo orators who, however, failed to turn up. When our reporter left the meeting about 9 p.m. everything was quiet and there seemed every prospect of matters coming to an orderly conclusion. But some of the rowdier spirits, as the meeting closed, called out for the return of their money on the ground that the full programme had not been given, and later demonstrated noisily in front of the theatre. Mr. Hanada, who had promoted the meeting, escaped as the situation was growing serious, and then the crowd caused a tumult in the hall throwing things on the stage. They accused the promoter of having stolen from the public and required him to pay back their money. T. Ishikawa, proprietor of the theatre, appeared on the stage and told the people that he would give back what the promoter had received. About this time, trouble was created outside by others who broke the windows, etc. Those in the theatre and outside were dispersed by Mr. Mune-kata, Superintendent of the Isezaki-cho police. But the trouble had only commenced.

ISEZAKI CHO STATION.—After having been dispersed at the Hagoromo theatre, the mob attacked this police office by throwing stones and bricks. The office, however, was successfully defended. At this critical time, Mr. Kobayashi, Chief Public Prosecutor, and Mr. Miki, Public Prosecutor, of the Yokohama District Court, appeared at the station in order to investigate the trouble. It was now half past eleven o'clock. The crowd having been repulsed at the Isezaki-cho station proceeded to other streets dividing themselves into three bodies—each body apparently consisting of between two and three hundred. They burned the police boxes near Hinode, Kuruma and Kame bridges and in Chitose-cho and broke another near Minato bridge. Another one in Yeuraku-cho was slightly damaged. As this is one of the brothel streets a panic arose among the inmates but no attack was made on buildings or individuals.

KOTOBUKI-CHO OFFICE.—The scene in this jurisdiction was quite similar to that at the Isezaki-cho station. The crowd burned the police-boxes in Matsukage-cho, Sueyoshi-cho and Nigiwai-cho, and near Senshu bridge, and broke another near Toyokuni bridge. At this time, about 1 a.m., some gendarmes appeared on the scene and assisted the police, so that the rioters were gradually dispersed.

KAGA-CHO POLICE.—The crowd, having finished their efforts in the foregoing two divisions, attempted to cross Hanazono bridge and to proceed to the foreign settlement. Mr. Ikariyama, superintendent of the station, who had made preparations on this bridge and the Yoshihama bridge to check the advance of the crowd, repulsed them. Consequently the Settlement was quiet. In the morning, an earthenware jar four inches by about seven inches containing suspicious black material was found in the compound of the American Consulate. At first it was conceived to be a bomb, but later it was regarded as a kind of dry electric battery used for telegraph purposes. The suspicious article was removed to the Kagacho Police Station.

A detective is still investigating the matter.

HARBOUR POLICE.—Previous to the advance of the mob to the Hanazono bridge, Mr. Yuasa, superintendent of the station, took precautions to maintain tranquillity in the foreign settlement. Fortunately nothing occurred worthy of notice.

Before dawn, the crowd dispersed. During the disorder, sensational rumours obtained currency. Subsequently, the secretary of the Kencho and the Chief of Police had a consultation by telephone with Governor Sufu, who was in Tokyo in connection with the meeting of Governors in the Department of Home Affairs. The Governor at once applied to the Government for the assistance of a military force. By the 4.50 a.m. train, two companies of infantry from the First Division arrived at Yokohama. One company was assigned to the two divisions of the Kotobuki-cho and Isezaki-cho police, and the other to the Settlement and to those streets where about six hundred Russians were put up waiting for the departure of the next French mail steamer, at the foreign Consulates and other public buildings as well as to protect the Russians.

In the trouble, ninety-two men were arrested by the police. According to the police, the men are all coolies, gamblers or others, who had been already punished once or twice and who are consequently under the surveillance of the police.

Thirty-seven policemen were more or less injured by stones thrown during the trouble.

Though the fire bells broke out into clamour several times early yesterday morning few foreigners were aware of the sensational doings in the Japanese quarter. Fires were seen in the Isezakicho district but though there were rumours of godowns having been burned enquiry shows that only police-boxes to the number of eight were destroyed by fire or partially damaged.

The statement that the unrest did not reach the settlement requires perhaps some modification. For a considerable mob of persons assembled in English Hatoba Street, about opposite Wright's Hotel, but apparently without any set purpose. They went away after some time without molesting any property.

The spectacle of soldiers, with fixed sword-bayonets, standing at the gates of the French Consulate, the Grand Hotel, the German, British and American Consulates and at different places on the Bluff was perhaps the first thing on Wednesday which aroused residents to a sense of something having occurred. Matters remained orderly throughout the day, and no further trouble need be anticipated.

According to police investigations, the number of casualties in Tokyo in the rioting on the 5th and subsequently were as follows:—

	Killed.	Died of Wounds.	Wounded.
Citizens	3	6	387
Police Inspectors ...	—	—	6
Police Sergeants	—	—	24
Firemen	—	—	4
Constables	—	—	356
Others	—	—	16
Totals	3	6	793

It appears from this that those engaged attempting to quell the riot suffered nearly as much as those engaged fomenting it. As to the persons arrested, 128 are already undergoing trial and 253 are in custody awaiting investigation.

Friday, Sept. 15th.

The agitation continues in the country districts. In Niigata a very large meeting has been held. Twenty thousand people are said to have attended. They passed sweeping resolutions denouncing the peace terms as opposed to the will of the nation, as defeating the purpose of the war, as inadequate to guarantee peace and as a disgrace to the Empire. They called for the immediate rejection of the treaty, and then they went on to accuse the Ministry of having abused its powers and created a reign of anarchy in the capital, thus necessitating recourse to martial law. The immediate resignation of the Cabinet was therefore called for.

It is worthy of notice that Niigata is one of the chief political strongholds of the Progressists, who appear to be the backbone of the present agitation. The Progressist leaders acknowledge that it is out of the question to withhold ratification of the treaty, yet it is for non-ratification that these various provincial meetings clamour.

In Sapporo on the 10th instant some six thousand attended. They passed a resolution and adopted a petition to the Throne. The resolution declared that whereas the country's forces, owing to their bravery and devotion and owing to the unanimous support of the nation, had won a series of victories which brought glory to the Empire and astonished the world, the Ministers of the Crown, by their diplomatic mismanagement, had rendered all these successes abortive, and had concluded a peace not only subversive of the objects prescribed by the Sovereign in the Declaration of War but also disgraceful to the country, thus converting the Empire's glory into shame and the applause of the world into contempt. War was a cruel thing, but it would be better to continue the cruellest war than to conclude an inglorious peace which did not secure tranquillity to the Far East. The Petition to the Throne set out by detailing the gist of the above but then proceeded to use language such as we have never previously found in a document addressed by Japanese subjects to their Emperor. Hitherto the invariable rule has been first to recount the grievances of which the petitioners complain and then to solicit His Majesty's wise intervention. The petitioners never venture to indicate precisely what steps the Sovereign should take. But this Sapporo Petition declares in the plainest terms that the present Ministry are criminal both in respect of neglecting the Emperor's will and of mistaking the interests of the country, and calls upon His Majesty to withhold ratification of the Treaty and to dismiss the Cabinet. Such a document will give a shock to all loyal Japanese. It is a new thing for subjects to dictate to their Sovereign in this land.

Various minor gatherings are also reported from provincial districts.

The Yokohama riot on Wednesday evening was obviously a premeditated affair. We shall not be surprised to learn that some of the Tokyo roughs whose resentment against the police had not been appeased by the doings in the capital or who sought to open fresh fields for plunder, repaired purposely to Yokohama with the definite object of making trouble. It is quite possible that the genuine audience may have been disappointed by the failure of four of the promised lecturers to appear, but the evidence goes to show that the disturbance was commenced by the agitators assembled outside the hall to whom the addresses and lectures can not have been of any moment at all. These, or at any rate their leaders, must have been looking for an opportunity to repeat in Yokohama the anti-police demonstrations which had already disgraced Tokyo.

Several provincial newspapers have been suspended.

It is noticeable that the journals of Tokyo made no comment on the Yokohama riot in their issues of the following morning. They contain full accounts of the occurrence but no editorial condemnation. Possibly this may be explained on the ground of insufficient interval. Otherwise it will be an additional blot on the good report of the Tokyo press.

On the 13th instant a meeting of provincial governors took place at the official residence of the Premier. Count Katsura addressed the Governors as follows:—

"You have been called together to-day in consequence of a necessity arising out of the situation. As you are aware, this country, in response to an invitation from the President of the United States, appointed peace plenipotentiaries who held many meetings with the Russian Plenipotentiaries. The Government, having due regard to the future development of the country and to the comparative advantages or disadvantages of continuing the war, signed a treaty of peace on the 5th inst., and the restoration of tranquillity may now be shortly expected. The war has lasted some 20 months during which an unbroken succession of victories have crowned our arms, the people meanwhile diligently pursuing their avocations so as to strengthen the country's material resources and the whole nation acting with admirable unanimity

ity. These happy results were due primarily to the virtues of the Emperor and the valour of the army and navy, but you, also, who have to discharge the duty of instructing and leading the people under your jurisdiction, have undoubtedly contributed to the good result. Now that we are on the verge of peace it is of urgent importance to make arrangements for the future. If the unity of all classes has hitherto produced such fine results, that unity must be all the more encouraged hereafter as a basis of national progress. Such a plan is essential to the development of the empire's resources, and the people, strong in their docility and love of progress, must not be allowed to forget this. Upon you devolves the no small responsibility of guiding and assisting the people in this important respect, so that the glory obtained for the Empire by this victorious war may be adequately accompanied by development of the arts of peace. I trust that you will bear these things in mind in the discharge of your functions. It is a matter of profound regret that disturbances should have taken place in Tokyo within the past few days, and I sincerely hope that you will spare no effort to inculcate a spirit of calmness and tranquillity in the districts of your service. Recently an Imperial Ordinance was issued providing a special system of control in the case of newspapers. This was done solely on account of the necessity of preserving public order in the present situation. There was not the least idea of interfering with the expression of legitimate opinion. You doubtless recognise these facts. We are now approaching the time when the work of next year will have to be taken in hand, and it will be for you to carry to the discharge of your duties a full sense of the responsibilities devolving upon you in this era when patience, tranquillity and industry are so essential."

This speech affords a peg on which the Yomiuri Shimbun hangs a sermon demanding the Cabinet's resignation. The Progressist organ declares that the nation is absolutely united now as it has always been with the one exception of the discordant elements, namely, the present Cabinet Ministers, the Elder Statesmen and a section of the Privy Council. Nothing can make the unity complete except the Ministry's resignation.

The Kokumin Shimbun puts its finger on the manifestly weak spot in this agitation, namely, the demand for refusing ratification of the Treaty. Even the Cabinet's bitterest opponents among responsible men are well aware and frankly admit that nothing of the kind is possible, yet the roadside agitator will have that and nothing else, and in response to this agitation, manifestly extravagant and unreflecting, several newspapers call on the Cabinet to resign. That would indeed be a new kind of constitutional Government which held a Ministry responsible not to the Emperor, nor yet to the Diet, but to gutter politicians who advocate a course that would disgrace the Empire and destroy its reputation for good faith among the nations of the world.

The latest lists of casualties in the riot on the 5th instant show that 11 citizens were either killed on the spot or died of hurts received, and that 547 were wounded. The police had 471 wounded.

On the afternoon of Wednesday, Sept. 13th, Governor Sufu issued a notification in connection with the recent troubles:—

It can not but be a matter of regret that on the night of Sept. 12th, disturbances occurred in Yokohama in which some disorderly actions were committed. The local government issued a notification on Sept. 9th requesting the public to take precautions in their actions and to respect the social order. As the present disorder could not be regarded as a common tumult, application was sent to the Commander-in-Chief of the Military Division concerned. Subsequently a force of soldiers was despatched. They were assigned to important places in the city for the sake of tranquillity. The citizens who are now under the protection of the military guards, need not suffer further apprehension and are requested to attend to their usual business. Further, citizens are requested not to take part in any public trouble should any occur in future. By this means they will avoid unexpected misfortune.

The night of Wednesday passed very quietly in Yokohama. There were a few small meetings. On the Tsukimi bridge, near Kanagawa, about a hundred men assembled. They were immediately dispersed by police, from Tobe and Kanagawa stations. About 8.30 p.m., about a hundred and fifty men met on Ise-yama. Some policemen dispersed them and arrested ten, who were considered leaders of the crowd. At the same time, some fifty men held a meeting on the unoccupied ground in front of the Hiranuma railway station. They, however, dispersed before the Tobe police appeared. The Yokohama Electric Tramway stopped running their cars in the evening as stones were thrown. The stone-throwers were jinrikisha coolies.

On Wednesday, the Kiraku, Nigiwa and other theatres closed. On the following day, business was resumed as usual.

Twenty-seven arrested by the Isezaki-cho, Kotobuki-cho, and Kaga-cho police will be prosecuted on a charge of having disturbed "the internal safety of the State." They are undergoing examination in the Yokohama District Court by Public Procurators Miki, Kobayashi, Midzutani and Ohira.

The military now in Yokohama consist of thirty-two officers and three hundred non-commissioned officers and men.

THE ESTABLISHMENT OF MARTIAL LAW.

Tokyo newspapers, with the exception of the Kokumin, strongly condemn the action of the authorities in placing the city under martial law. Even the Fiji Shimpō repeats with more insistence than ever its old contention that the only way to quiet the people is for the Ministry to resign. Our contemporary rightly thinks that Tokyo is disgraced by being subjected to such control, but strange to say this usually astute and moderate journal does not appear to recognise that Tokyo itself has been largely responsible for incurring the disgrace. At the very head of the list of wrong-doers we should place the newspapers themselves; second on the list, the police; and third, the riotous spirits among the population who fell into the error of imagining that violence is the only method of protesting against undue restraint. What are we to say of the Fiji Shimpō itself, a journal to which all Japanese look for light and leading? Here we have it clamouring for the resignation of the Ministry, actually before any sufficient materials are available for passing judgment upon the Ministry's acts. The terms of the peace treaty have not yet been published, and pending their publication in full no intelligent verdict is possible. Yet on evidence thus plainly imperfect the leading journal of the capital invites its nationals to condemn the Cabinet and to drive it from office. Tokyo is disgraced. We are reluctantly obliged to make the admission. But foremost among the factors that disgrace it stand, not the undue severity of the police, nor yet the establishment of martial law, nor yet the violence perpetrated by a few misguided citizens, but the extraordinarily unintelligent prejudice shown by the metropolitan press and its dangerous appeals to unreasoning passion. Temporary ebullitions of mob lawlessness, transient errors of administration, these are things that leave no perma-ment scar upon a country's fair fame. But it is otherwise with aberrations of intelligence such as now stand to the discredit of too many of our Tokyo contemporaries. The only fault that can be justly laid to the Government's charge is that urged by the Nichi Nichi Shimbun, namely, failure to take the people into its confidence. It is true that the natural routine was to refrain from publishing the terms of the treaty pending its signature, but that kind of official punctiliousness might have been foreseen to be unsuited to an occasion so urgent. There we think the Government's judgment lagged behind the crisis, but as for the conduct of the press, it has greatly shaken our faith in the good influence of the Japanese Fourth Estate.

THE "JIJI SHIMPO" AND MARQUIS YAMAGATA.

The Nichi Nichi Shimbun has rendered most excellent service at this juncture by obtaining and publishing a statement of Field-Marshal Marquis Yamagata's views. This statement will do much to appease popular discontent. Already the Fiji Shimpō shows signs of adopting a more appreciative tone towards the question. The Field-Marshal's explanation is very explicit. Peace was made, he says, because in the unanimous opinion of the Elder Statesmen and the Cabinet Ministers, such a step was wisest having regard to the Empire's financial resources, having regard to the sequence of its expansion, having regard to the difficulty of striking any decisive blow at Russia in East Asia and having regard to the opinion of the world. Thus considering, these statesmen came to the conclusion that the results attainable by continuing the war could not be proportionate to the sacrifices involved in doing so. He is quite emphatic in his declaration that the Japanese army could have taken Harbin, but, as a great strategist whose word on such a subject has final force, he believes that the result would not have justified the effort. The Fiji Shimpō frankly accepts these explanations and no longer, as we interpret its language, raises any objection to the peace or its terms. But our contemporary is still dissatisfied as to one matter. It wants to know whether the country's statesmen were from the first prepared to make the concessions ultimately agreed to. In that phase of the story our contemporary detects evidence of a diplomatic failure. Perhaps so. Perhaps the Japanese Government found Russia more obdurate than they had anticipated. Russia, after all, is an open-eyed Power and much if not all of what Japan saw must have been visible in St. Petersburg also. Was it then an error to demand an indemnity? We believe not. Our own ideas on that subject have been already set forth, and we need only here repeat that had not the indemnity demand confronted Russia it is extremely improbable that she would have yielded in the matter of Saghalien so far as she did yield. However, one great cause of satisfaction is that the Fiji Shimpō has now been converted to a more tolerant mood, and that it no longer speaks of a radical failure but only of a diplomatic defeat. This is the dawn of the era of reason, and we welcome it with profound satisfaction.

At 1 p.m. on Saturday, Sept. 16th, Professors S. Takata and M. Kidzumi will deliver speeches in the Yokohama Primary School, with regard to education. It is said that their addresses will dwell on the relation between war and education.

THE PEACE TREATY.

The Fiji Shimpō has received from its London correspondent a telegraphic copy of the treaty of peace as published in the columns of Le Matin. It runs as follows:—

1. Peace and amity shall be restored between the two empires of Japan and Russia and between their people.

2. Russia recognises that Japan possesses preponderating rights in Korea alike from a political, a military and an economic point of view; and Russia will not offer any opposition whatsoever to any measures of instruction, protection or official procedure that Japan may consider it necessary to take in Korea by virtue of treaty or convention with that country.

Russian subjects and Russian interests shall receive in Korea treatment uniform with that extended to the subjects and interests of other Powers.

3. The military forces of Russia and Japan shall be simultaneously withdrawn from Manchuria.

The rights possessed by private individuals or by companies shall remain valid.

4. Russia's rights acquired under lease over Port Arthur, Talien and the neighbouring lands and seas shall be wholly surrendered to Japan.

The property and rights of Russian subjects shall be protected and respected. (This is obviously elliptical.—ED. J.M.)

5. Japan and Russia mutually undertake to extend equal treatment to their respective peoples and to offer no obstacle to any suitable schemes undertaken for the development of Chinese-Manchurian trade. (Here again there is evidently some omission.—ED. J.M.)

6. The East Chinese Railway shall be divided between Japan and Russia, the Changchun station being the point of division. Both sections shall be used for commercial purposes. Russia, on her section, shall continue in possession of all the rights obtained by her from China in connexion with the railway convention, and Japan, on her section, shall own the coal-mines of supply. The two Powers shall be free to take what measures they please with regard to the places connected by their sections of the railway.

7. Russia and Japan shall take measures to connect their sections at Changchun.

8. Steps shall be taken to provide for the unobstructed passage of cars along the two sections of the line. (This again is, plainly only a partial statement. The Japanese have altered the gauge of the railway. Are they to alter it again so as to enable Russian rolling stock to traverse their section, or is Russia to take that step? We may be quite sure that these things are fully provided for, but this version of Le Matin leaves them very ambiguous.—ED. J.M.)

9. Russia cedes to Japan all Saghalien southward of the fiftieth parallel of latitude. The two countries shall allow free passage to vessels navigating the Straits of Tartary and of Soya.

10. (Relates to the administration of Saghalien but is indistinct.—ED. J.M.)

11. Russia will endeavour to make treaties such as shall grant to Japanese subjects fishing rights in Russian waters, in the Seas of Japan, of Okhotsk and of Behring. (Evidently a mutilated version.—ED. J.M.)

12. The two Powers agree to call again into operation their former treaty of amity and commerce and to extend to each other most-favoured-nation treatment.

13. Prisoners shall be exchanged. Each side shall re-imburse the other for expenses incurred in connexion with these, and shall draw up a statement for that purpose.

14. The treaty shall be in English and French. The English version shall be the original for Japan; the French version for Russia.

15. Ratifications of the treaty shall be exchanged within 50 days from the date of its signature, the French Representative in Tokyo and the American Representative in St. Petersburg transmitting the ratifications.

The Fiji Shimpō is to be congratulated on its enterprise in obtaining this news, but such a version of the treaty adds little to our previous knowledge and tends rather to confuse our ideas. Within the last forty-eight hours certain facts have been authoritatively added to those already in public possession, so that we now know more than the Matin can tell us. We know, for example, that the rights of Japan in Korea receive the fullest possible recognition from Russia, and that Japan virtually acquires a free hand there, provided that she proceeds by the route of treaty and convention, thus preserving the semblance of Korean independence. We know also that the limitation as to fortifying the boundaries of Korea applies only to the small extent (some 50 miles) where the country marches in contact with Russian territory along the banks of the Tumen. We know further that not only does Japan's section of the East Chinese Railway extend to Changchun, but also that she has acquired the right to build the Changchun-Kirin line, so that her political sphere in Manchuria comprises all the important towns and practically all the fertile territory of Manchuria. This was the outcome of a compromise. Japan desired to make the Sungari the northern limit of her section of the railway. Russia insisted that each side should adopt the status quo, which would have made Changtu the most northerly point for Japan, leaving in Russian possession the stretch of 97 miles thence to Changchun and leaving also in Russia's hands the future Changchun-Kirin line. After much discussion a compromise was effected, Japan agreeing to be content with Changchun for northern terminus, provided that she also obtained the right to build the Changchun-Kirin line. There is evidently some provision with reference to the different gauges of the two sections of the line, but what it is we cannot clearly decipher. Further, we know that all the privileges and rights enjoyed by Russia as part of the East Chinese Railway concession now pass into Japanese hands, these rights including the ownership of the Yentai and Fushun mines. Finally we know that there is no provision interdicting the fortification of Soya Strait, though forts may not be built on the Saghalien side.

So far as Manchuria and Korea are concerned Japan has acquired an unassailable position. What remains to Russia in the former region is quite insignificant.

At a meeting given by the Premier to a number of members of both Houses of the Diet on the 8th instant, the Minister of the Navy explained that though Vladivostok might undoubtedly have been taken by the Japanese, the effort would have involved a greater sacrifice of life and treasure than had been required in the case of Port Arthur. He further said that in view of the loss of life and the great expenditure which would be entailed by continuing the war as compared with the objects to be compassed by doing so, it had seemed much the wisest course to make peace at the present juncture.

This statement, coming from the Minister of the Navy, which has done such splendid work from first to last throughout the war, ought to have much effect in calming the excited spirits who have been so vehemently denouncing the peace. It is not difficult to predict that before many days have passed the bulk of the nation will see things in their true light.

Yokohama has been particularly sweeping in its declarations. It has denounced the peace treaty as opposed to the Emperor's declaration of war and as inadequate to secure permanent peace; it calls upon the Cabinet to resign and upon the Elder Statesmen to retire from the scene, and it states that one prominent cause of the evil state of affairs is the blind subordination of the majorities in both Houses of the Diet to the will of the Government, for which defect the only remedy is that the people should elect worthier representatives. One section of the people of Ibaraki Prefecture—those residing at Kasama in Hitachi—have passed a resolution of five counts. They propose to present a petition to the Throne against this "disgraceful and contumelious treaty." They declare that as this unprecedented diplomatic blunder is the fault of the present Cabinet, so long as the latter remains in office no money should be contributed by the Treasury except the public taxes and aids for the Red Cross Society. They urge that should the Diet be dissolved next session, the same representatives must be returned again and again until the reality of constitutional institutions is achieved. They intend to approach the Presidents of the two Houses claiming that the Government keep its promise of removing the extraordinary taxes within one year after the war. And they propose to subscribe money for the persons injured during the recent riots in Tokyo. Hachioji also has declared that the peace ignores the purposes of the war and is inadequate to secure permanent tranquillity. Takata in Echigo takes the same line, calling upon the Cabinet to resign and the Elder Statesmen to retire, and several other localities are equally vehement.

The members of the Lower House now in Tokyo have decided to form a committee of fifteen for the purpose of investigating the circumstances of the riot in Tokyo on the 5th instant.

The Fiji Shimpō continues its argument that the only way to relieve the tension is for the Cabinet to resign. Outward indications of the bad feeling that exists are no longer visible in Tokyo, but the people's resentment has not been appeased and will not be appeased so long as the present Cabinet remains in office. This is a time when union is more than ever necessary among all classes of the nation, since without union the burdens bequeathed by the war can not be economically borne. But the Ministry will find no disposition to subscribe to any loans it may attempt to float and no disposition even to pay taxes. In the country's interest another Cabinet should assume office with the least possible delay.

It is worth while to say a word to the Yomiuri Shimbun, which advances a confident contradiction of the argument that had the Russians been driven from Harbin, they would merely have retreated further west and thereafter continued the process whenever attacked, so that the war must have become constantly more arduous to Japan without growing more fatal to Russia. The Yomiuri attempts to controvert this view by pointing to the tenacity that Kurapatkin showed, first in remaining in the neighbourhood of Liaoyang and secondly in holding Mukden. The force of the Yomiuri's view escapes us altogether. Liaoyang is the great strategical and commercial position in Manchuria. Of course Kurapatkin harboured to the last a hope of saving it. Mukden is the capital of Manchuria. Of course Kurapatkin spared no effort to defend it. Harbin is the Russian base of supplies. Of course Linevitch does not abandon it until he is driven thence. But after Harbin what? Like all the newspapers that have essayed to condemn this peace the Yomiuri drops the question precisely at the point where further analysis would involve inconvenient conclusions. We suggest the advisability of quietly sitting down and drafting a plan of campaign subsequent to the fall of Harbin. If the Yomiuri can devise any practicable programme which would have brought Japan nearer to an indemnity than she was when she entered the conference chamber at Portsmouth, it will have achieved a feat which all statesmen and generals considered impossible.

Mr. Yamada, who is now associated with Mr. Kono Hironaka in the wild enterprise of endeavouring to bring about the rejection of the treaty, quotes copiously from Hall's "International Law" to prove that it is within the Sovereign's strict right to refuse ratification. Of course it is, but no Sovereign who, after having authorized his Ministry to accept certain terms then refused to ratify them because a party of discontented agitators condemned the agreement, would retain the confidence of the world for five minutes. Even Mr. Oishi Masami, who approaches very closely to the uttermost type of extremist, admits explicitly that to withhold ratification is out of the question. Messrs. Kono and Yamada think differently. It is fortunate for the country that such publicists have nothing to do with the control of its affairs.

FIELD-MARSHAL MARQUIS YAMAGATA.

Field-Marshal Marquis Yamagata has consented to be interviewed by a representative of the Nichi Nichi Shimbun. He says:—"In recent years Russian enterprise in the East had showed great expansion. The year 1898 saw her the lessee of Port Arthur and Talien. A very grave situation was thus created. We saw that she must clash with Japan's interests and we applied ourselves early to consider what course to adopt. The sum of our reflections was that, from a historical and a geographical point of view, a forward policy must be pursued in Korea, and that Japan must not submit to be controlled in that sphere by any of the great Powers. Russia, however, steadily increased her forces, and there could be no concealing her evil designs. In July of 1903 we opened negotiations with her and the result was this fight. Our determination at the time was that as a matter of self-defence and as a matter of national development Korea must not be abandoned to Russia. In pursuance of that resolve war became inevitable. To speak unreservedly, it must be confessed that on the eve of crossing swords with a Power of such renowned strength our estimate of the issue was not very confident. On the sea the forces were about equally matched arithmetically, but whereas our enemy had had no actual experience of war for many years, we had. Therefore we believed firmly that at least our fleet would not be totally defeated before it had annihilated his. On land, however, there was a vast difference: four millions against half a million. Yet he had to move his men by a single line of railway, which limited the number he could put in the field. In point of military equipment he was if anything our superior, and in the matter of officers' education both sides were about equal. Only in mountain fighting in Korea and Liautung the Japanese troops were not likely to be beaten. Thus considered, the prospects of the land campaign did not seem to us altogether hopeless. But it was a serious business. There was no such certainty of success as a non-expert might suppose. Not until our plans had been fully laid, our preparations completed at every point and the supreme test of combat applied could the prospect of victory unfold itself. It was a time of the keenest anxiety. But success or failure lies in the lap of fortune. We had to be prepared for partial discomfiture. Complete defeat, however, would concern Japan's fate and was not to be suffered under any circumstances. Not we alone were determined that even though Japan were transformed into a barren island we would fight to the end and cease only with death: all were of like resolution. So the war opened. Happily unlooked for victory was won. Then, after the Battle of Mukden, Europe and America began to say that humanity called for the end of the war, and after the battle in the Sea of Japan the President of the United States suggested a conference which ended in the present peace. It appears that the terms of the peace are very severely criticised. Men's opinions differ and it is inevitable that there should be controversy. But the Cabinet, in deciding to make peace, was influenced by several considerations: by the actual state of the Empire's finances; by the sequence of future national development; by Russia's comparative invulnerability to blows struck in the Far East; by the attitude of the world. Viewing the matter from all these standpoints we saw that to continue the war would have involved heavy sacrifices, and would not have attained results greater than those attainable by making peace now. We shrank therefore from wasting the resources which the country would need for its future enterprises in Korea and in the leased regions of Manchuria. From this decision there was not one dissentient person, nor was there any division into "weak" and "strong." If to make peace was wrong, then we are content to be called "weak;" all of us together, the Elder Statesmen, the Cabinet Ministers, and I who speak.

There is a word of explanation necessary here. Certain people say that our military force was insufficient to meet the Russians without much danger and that I, Yamagata, advocated peace for that reason. This is an egregious mistake. It concerns the reputation of a million men. I do not regard what may be said of myself, but I can not overlook anything that relates to the honour of the army. The firm determination with which, as I have already said, we entered the war remains to-day as it ever was. I have been a soldier for forty years and it has been my lot to see many fights. They have differed of course as to magnitude of operations, but many of my past battles have been very much severer than that of to-day. Nevertheless I came through all those difficulties and hardships, and I now assert my firm conviction that although to take Harbin would have entailed many sacrifices, our troops had certainly the strength to do it and would have done it. Possibly if in the course of many months a great discrepancy should arise in the numerical strengths of the two armies so that the enemy's force outnumbered ours many times over, the outcome might be difficult to foretell; but judging from the results of the numerous conflicts that have already taken place and from the actual fighting forces of the two armies, I entertain no doubt whatever as to what the issue would have been."

MISS ROOSEVELT.

A Peking telegram says that Miss Alice Roosevelt arrived there on Sept. 14th. She was cordially received both by foreigners and natives. She spent the night at the American Legation. On the following day, she was received by the Empress Dowager and the Emperor in audience, and was entertained as a national guest.

The Jiji reports that Miss Roosevelt will not pay a visit to Japan on her way home from China as had been arranged. Mrs. Griscom wrote a letter to Miss Tsuda, one of the directors of the Ladies' Patriotic Society, which had been making preparations to welcome Miss Roosevelt, intimating the change in the latter's plans and tendering thanks on her behalf.

SAGHALIEN.

The Official Gazette publishes a War-Office statement showing that the Russian troops in Saghalien were guilty of gross violations of the rules of war. Many of the men in the enemy's ranks were criminals of the worst type, some time-expired felons, some still undergoing sentence. Such soldiers are likely to commit excesses, but that does not constitute any manner of excuse for the officers employing them or for the system which enlists them. The first charge is that they used dum-dum bullets. On the 7th of July when Vladimirofska was taken, the Japanese found dum-dum bullets and rifles that fitted them. On the 11th and 12th of the same month when Daline was attacked, the Russians used dum-dum bullets freely. On the 22nd they used them in a skirmish at Adradonei. On the 16th of July a Japanese prisoner recovered at the surrender of the Russians under Alexiefsky gave evidence that he actually saw three or four Russians using dum-dums, and at Daline a quantity were taken among the captured ammunition. To this record are added the field-hospital reports and photographs of wounds, placing the matter beyond all reach of doubt. The second charge is that the Russians persistently abused the Red-Cross flag and the Red-Cross badge. At Ruikoff, at Novomihailovskiy and at Onoro they ran up the flag over buildings when they opened fire on the Japanese at short range, and in several instances combatants carried the arm-badge of the Society. They seemed to regard the badge as a regular instrument of war. One of the prisoners confessed that the regular plan at the time of retreat was to provide the rear-guard with badges. The third charge is that the Russians did not take any measures to distinguish combatants and non-combatants. At the assault of Vladimirofska on July 10th about a hundred Russians made an attack on the Japanese van. Most of them were captured and they proved to be volunteers not wearing any uniform. At Romanofskoi on the 19th of the same month a reconnoitering party under Lieut. Watanabe was surrounded and fired on by a body of men in civilian costume who had been allowed to approach as there was nothing to indicate their military character. On the other hand, there were many cases of men who, in the time of retreat, discarded their uniforms and donned civilians' costume. The fourth accusation is that the Russian Authorities deliberately released the criminals from the jails and encouraged them to sack the towns which were about to fall into Japanese possession, the idea being to create the impression that the invaders had perpetrated these outrages. At Ruikoff the foul device was exposed clearly, for the officials and citizens thanked the Japanese for saving them from the brutality of the released convicts. In the fifth place the Russians are accused of either mutilating the dead or torturing the wounded to death. In the case of Lieut. Watanabe and five troopers who were surrounded and killed on the south of Ruikoff on the 27th of July, their bodies were found covered with wounds in which powder had been placed and exploded. Whether this was mutilation or torture the act was equally savage. The sixth charge is that the body of a soldier, Shingaya Kakusaburo, who fell when on scouting duty at lake Tonnaicha, was disinterred by the Russians and robbed. His seal and purse were found among the baggage of the captain who commanded the Russian detachment in that part of the field.

THE ARMISTICE.

Wednesday, Sept. 13th.

There is apparently some strange remissness on Russia's part in communicating to the troops at the front the news of the armistice. In north-eastern Korea the Japanese commander sent out, on the 9th instant, a delegate with due accompaniment and in proper conformity with rule for the purpose of conferring with the Russians as to the armistice arrangements. But it was found that no intelligence had yet reached the enemy. The same is true in Manchuria. Skirmishes still continue. One very sharp engagement took place on the 9th instant when two companies of Russians with 2 guns attacked a company of Japanese. The latter carried home a flank attack and repulsed the enemy, who left 40 dead upon the field and carried off about 150 killed and wounded. Considering that the armistice was signed on the 1st instant and that it was to become operative from the date of the treaty's signature, namely, the 5th, the fact that the Russian General should remain in ignorance of it up to the 9th is very unaccountable. Every life lost after the 5th is absolutely thrown away.

On the Japanese side there does not seem to be much confidence in Russia's manner of carrying out the armistice. The conduct of her troops in the field since the war broke out has inspired profound distrust and no information will be given such as can be withheld without risk of trouble.

The withdrawal of the great forces assembled at the scene of conflict must of course be a matter of many weeks. Russia seems to shrink from recalling all her troops immediately. Probably she fears the presence of such large numbers of armed men within her borders. It is supposed that she will leave about 200,000 at Harbin, Khabarovsk, Vladivostok and other convenient places eastward of Lake Baikal, but this, of course, must be a temporary measure and need not inspire any uneasiness. Japan's intention, it is said, is to recall her men with all possible expedition, proceeding in the order of their taking the field. According to that method General Kuroki's Army, the First, would be shipped at once; then would follow General Oku's troops which landed in Manchuria in May; then the Takushan force under General Nozu, which ultimately became the Fourth Army; then the Third Army under General Nogi; then the Fifth under General Kawamura; then the Sixth under General Hasegawa, and finally the Seventh under General Haraguchi. But we doubt whether this order will be strictly followed. Evidently the question of climate must be taken into consideration. If the removal of the Saghalien force be not quickly undertaken, it will have to remain on the island throughout the winter, which would be a great hardship. We are inclined to anticipate that, other things being equal, the forces in the most advanced lines will be withdrawn first since the cost of keeping them supplied with provisions must be very heavy and there will be a natural desire to dispense with this expensive land-transport service as speedily as possible.

Thursday, Sept. 14th.

The Commissioners appointed by Japan to arrange the terms of the armistice are said to be Major-General Fukushima in Manchuria and Colonel Oba in Korea. But apparently no formal meeting has yet taken place, each side being unwilling to go to the place selected by the other. This state of disagreement can not last long, however. It is thought probable that the Russians will come to the locality chosen by the Japanese.

On the side of the Navy Rear-Admiral Shimamura is the parlementaire. Presumably he will go to Vladivostok.

Meanwhile the Russians are behaving in a manner impossible to reconcile with any notion that orders as to an armistice have yet reached them from their own side. On the 11th instant a body of Madoriloff's troopers made their appearance at Chosan on the Yalu. Their force is variously stated, but the Japanese military authorities are of the opinion that they did not constitute any considerable body, and that they consisted for the most part of Hunglutsz. They are said to have been driven back. It is conceivable that these men may have been operating for some days at a distance from any means of communication, but inasmuch as the fact of the armistice having gone into force on the 5th should have been known in Manchuria on the 7th at latest, it is strange to find warlike movements proceeding as late as the 11th. In north-eastern Korea, too, when Colonel Oba proceeded to the Russian lines as parlementaire on the 9th instant, he found that the enemy knew nothing, and their reply seems to have been to send several thousands of fresh troops over the Tumen.

Latest news (Nichi Nichi) says that an answer as to the armistice came from the Russian commander on the 11th and that the 13th was fixed as the day for the first meeting of the commissioners.

MANCHURIA.

Telegrams to the Jiji Shimpō say that the Russians in Manchuria, having become assured of the re-establishment of peace, held a grand convivial gathering at Shang-chintz on the 3rd instant. Strange to say, however, on the 6th instant their artillery at Yungling advanced to effective range and came into action, the Japanese replying. When the telegram was despatched this gun-duel was still in progress.

It will be difficult for the Russians to justify this procedure. The armistice was signed on the 1st, and was to go into operation from the moment of the treaty's signature. The latter event did not take place until the 5th and was of course unknown in Manchuria on the 6th. But assuredly the Russians did know that the commencement of the armistice could only be a few hours distant, and that every principle of humanity urged abstinence from fighting in that brief interval. It is very conceivable that a General, even under such circumstances might find himself unable to suspend a military operation actually in progress, but moving out artillery and opening fire as an independent act of hostility belongs to an altogether different category.

The Russians seem to have made a splendid failure of their last essay in the field. They marched out 7 battalions of infantry, 11 sotnias of cavalry and 7 batteries of artillery to attack the Japanese in the southern Shanchintz district on the 6th instant, as already briefly stated in our columns. The Japanese accepted the challenge, and accepted it in such a thorough manner that with only 2 casualties on their own side, they drove back the enemy, inflicting on him a loss of at least 200. A company of Japanese under Captain Hara managed to get within easy range of the Russian line of retreat, and to this incident the enemy owed most of his losses. He left 60 dead upon the field. Does not this story constitute an interesting rider to the Tsar's description of Linevitch's readiness to inflict a crushing defeat on the Japanese?

STILL MISCONSTRUED HISTORY.

Our local German daily contemporary still struggles with fine tenacity to establish its extraordinarily inaccurate statement that England took 14 years to quell the rising of Osman Digna, or, to speak more accurately, of the Mahdi. What can be gained by this obstinate adherence to a heresy which any school-boy acquainted with modern history could expose? The German journal takes Haydn's Dictionary of Dates, and having quoted from it two paragraphs, one relating to the Battle of Tanager, which took place on March 13th, 1884, and the other to the Battle of Atbara, which took place on 18th of April, 1898, says:—

It will be seen from the facts quoted that the important engagement between Osman Digna and the British forces took place on March 13th, 1884, and the last battle which crushed the leader of the Mahdi's forces was fought on April 18th, 1898. If the Editor of the Mail is good at arithmetic, he will now perhaps be able to tell us how long it took Great Britain to completely quell the rising.

All this is very well, but it would be equally correct had our contemporary set down the Battle of Sluys as occurring in 1340 and the battle of Waterloo in 1815, and then proceeded to infer that England fought with France for 475 years. The facts are simple and unequivocal. From 1881, when the Mahdi headed his insurrection against the Khedive, until 1884 when Osman Digna threatened the littoral of the Red Sea, Great Britain took no steps to check the insurrection. She did not then recognise that the responsibilities imposed on her by her intervention in Egypt involved the administration of the Sudan. But she recognised that this religious war must not be allowed to spread to the continent of Asia, and therefore in 1884 she sent an expedition to Suakin to prevent Osman Digna from reaching the shores of the Red Sea. It was no part of her programme to carry the war into the Sudan and there to crush the Mahdi or "quell his rising." At about the same time Gordon was despatched to Khartum to make a report, and at the close of the year (1884) the Wolseley expedition went to his relief, failed to save him and returned without attempting anything against the Mahdi. From that time until 1898 the British Government left the Mahdi and the Sudan severely alone. They did not consider that England's position in Egypt required her to recover the Sudan for the Khedive, and accordingly the fanatical sheiks were not molested. But in 1897 after a great imperialistic impulse had been given to the mind of Great Britain by the Queen's Jubilee, Lord Salisbury's Government decided that the Anglo-Egyptian rule must be extended over the Sudan, and then followed the expedition to Khartum under the command of Sir Herbert Kitchener. In the face of these plain historical facts it can be seen how grotesquely erroneous is the assertion of our German contemporary that it took England 14 years to subdue the rising in the Sudan. England never recognised any obligation to subdue the rising until 1897, and never sent out any troops for the purpose until that time, whereafter a few months sufficed her to settle the whole business. Our German contemporary has been betrayed into an egregious blunder by imperfect knowledge.

FOREIGN JOURNALISTIC OPINION.

(RECEIVED AT THE FOREIGN OFFICE.)

The Kolnische Zeitung writes:—"There is no reason why Russia should be satisfied with the treaty just concluded at Portsmouth, but at the same time it can not be thought that Japan will welcome its conditions heartily. For the concessions made by Japan have in some degree disappointed her high hopes. Nevertheless, when the covenant is viewed as a whole, it undeniably provides due guarantees in return for the great concessions made by Japan. By obtaining Liaotung and securing a protectorate in Korea Japan has ceased to be a mere island empire and has won a firm position as a great Asiatic Power; especially as from this position her immaterial political influence will be extended throughout Manchuria and China. As to the question of continuing or ceasing this sanguinary war-drama, it resolves itself into a question of fighting for money, and had the two countries gone on with their fighting not for the sake of protecting any national interests but merely on account of money, it is evident that they could not have escaped the reproach of being foes to humanity. The aggressive designs of Russia in East Asia are now frustrated. For a long time hereafter we shall not see her attempt anything of the kind. It will be the wisest plan for the Emperor of Russia to abandon any futile hopes of revenge and to devote his strength to regulating his domestic affairs. There is no possibility of disputing that this war raises Japan to the position of a great Power. It will now be her duty to apply herself to the tasks, first, of healing the wounds she has herself suffered by the war; secondly, of establishing order within the districts that have fallen under her sway; and thirdly, of so conducting her policy that proof shall be afforded that her successes in this war have not converted her into a military State but that her object is the peaceful development of her resources. It will depend upon her conduct hereafter whether Europe is to regard her as a Yellow Peril."

The journals of Holland all rejoice at the restoration of peace. At first there was some feeling of doubt about Japan's motive, but now this is dispelled, and her self-restraint, wisdom and magnanimity are universally recognised. The gist of their argument is this:—"Even supposing that the continuation of the war should bring uninterrupted victory to Japan, there would be no reasonable comparison between the resulting loss of life and treasure on the one side and the loss incurred in connexion with the concessions now made; above all when Japan has already achieved what was the main purpose of the war, namely, the expulsion of Russia from Manchuria and Korea. Even though she has not obtained an indemnity, the men-of-war and merchant steamers that she has captured, the immense experience that her army and navy have acquired and the great access of national prestige that accrues to her, these things constitute gains as substantial as Russia's losses are heavy. There is no longer any question about Japan's admission to the rank of great Powers. The pain to Russia from her impaired credit must be incomparably more poignant than the pain of her concessions is to Japan. When the Russian troops returning from the war add their strength to that of the people the movements of the revolutionary party will furnish a very disquieting spectacle."

The Dutch journals all applaud the efforts made by the President of the United States and the Emperor of Germany in the cause of peace.

Danish newspapers show equal satisfaction at the restoration of peace, and at the same time bestow high praise on Japan's sagacity and magnanimity. In general these journals take the same view as their Dutch contemporaries. As to the treaty of peace itself they say that it is an able arrangement which does not hurt the honour of either side, for while it inflicts no humiliation on Russia it secures to Japan the fruits of her victories. "So far as concerns the terms now known to us the establishment of peace on such conditions must be called a great success for Japan."

The New York Sun says:—"Japan has shown herself greater in peace than in war. The magnanimity and the strength of mind which moved her to this resolution are unprecedented in history, and while we may congratulate Russia, our greatest admiration and respect must be shown to Japan."

The New York World considers that though the peace treaty, when cursorily considered looks like a Russian success, calm reflection shows that when the treaty is signed, and when Russia's duties and Japan's rights are embodied in a clear international agreement, Japan's acquisition of Port Arthur, of a part of the East Chinese Railway and of the more valuable half of Saghalien, as well as Russia's abandonment of Manchuria and Korea will be found to be accomplished facts of history. At the same time it must be clearly recognized that Russia's policy of expansion in the Far East has been entirely checked; for not only has Japan deprived her of her one ice-free port in East Asia, but also, by the transfer of south Saghalien to the Japanese empire, all the avenues to Vladivostok are closed within certain limits and the value of the place as a naval station becomes almost nil. There could be no more effective limitation of Russia's naval force in the Far East. Moreover, the scope of the Anglo-Japanese alliance is to be extended so that Russia will be constrained to observe the treaty. Now in truth the restoration of Manchuria will be honestly accomplished, and China will be placed under a lasting obligation to Japan. In sum the peace treaty is a humiliating failure for Russia, while for Japan it can not be regarded as anything but a victory. On the one hand Russia's prestige in the Far East has fallen to the ground and Japan's has risen conspicuously, her safety has been guaranteed and her position among the great Powers of the world has been fully recognised.

The Boston Transcript writes:—"The peace treaty has been a great victory for Japan. It is a triumphant peace, an honorable peace. Japan does not yield an iota of the purpose for which she fought. Some time may be needed, however, before the world at large fully comprehends the greatness of Japan's victory, for of late all attention has been concentrated on the one item of an indemnity, and therefore many people have a feeling that diplomacy has lost some of the gains accruing to Japan from the war. That, however, is a great mistake. For an indemnity is not required by Japan in order to reap the results of her victories in the war. The objects with which she took up arms were to drive Russia from Manchuria and to perfect her own political influence in Korea, thus ensuring herself against the danger of fresh Russian menaces to the existence of the Island Empire. She has attained these objects and she now possesses full guarantees of future tranquillity. In whatever diplomatic euphemisms the situation be dressed, there is no disguising the facts that Korea has passed into Japan's possession; that Russia has been driven from Manchuria; that Port Arthur and Talien will no longer menace Japan, and the railway necessary for defending them has become Japanese. It is quite clear that by continuing the fight Japan would have lost more than she could have gained, and it was far her wiser course to abandon the indemnity and to make peace.

The Washington Star says:—"It can not be concealed that the recent riot in Tokyo indicates a special feeling of disquiet and discontent towards American citizens, for the extremists, thinking that America exerted her efforts to bring about the establishment of peace which they consider dishonourable are attacking American citizens and using violent and abusive language towards them. It behoves Japan's true friends to spare no pains for the purpose of correcting the misapprehensions of these violent patriots."

Japanese newspapers do not—with the exception of the Kokumin—allude editorially to the utterances of the Washington Star and the New York Times with reference to the recent riot in Tokyo, but nearly all of them in reproducing the telegraphic summaries of these journals' comments, interpolate remarks showing how extravagant they deem the idea of their American contemporaries. It is not likely that any telegrams sent from Japan can have created this very false impression: probably the Star and the New York Times were misled solely by the facts that stones were thrown at a member of Mr. Harriman's party and that an American church was burned. But in truth there has not been the smallest expression of dissatisfaction towards America in any quarter. Not a word in that sense has been said by Japanese newspapers and not a word even by the most extreme among the anti-peace agitators. We are absolutely persuaded that the people who threw stones at one of Mr. Harriman's party en route for Baron Sone's residence, and the people who hustled the jirikisha of another of the party when returning, had not the faintest conception as to the nationality of their victims. How indeed could they possibly know? They would have stoned or hustled any one that passed in "high-collar" style, just as the urchins who shout neko papa by the roadside never think of discriminating whether they address themselves to Englishmen or to Russians. As to the burning of a church, it was not an American edifice alone that suffered, and so far as can be ascertained the rowdy element of the mob had its enmity roused against Christian places of worship by a harangue which a brave Christian pastor delivered for the purpose of checking excesses. We do not suppose that the anti-foreign spirit has disappeared entirely in Japan. That would indeed be an extravagant supposition, seeing that such an abundance of anti-foreign spirit exists in every other country of the world. Therefore it is just possible that in a riot which extended to the smashing of electric-railway cars, some of the old-time folks may have seized the occasion to indulge their anti-Christian or anti-foreign feeling. But of course that is an incident entirely without serious significance. Our own belief is that so far from singling out American citizens on the 5th instant, the stone-throwing and jirikisha-hustling hooligans would probably have refrained had they known the nationality of Mr. Harriman's party. At any rate to base on such a paltry incident any theory as to national temper is decidedly hysterical.

BURNING OF THE "MIKASA."

Admiral Togo's flagship, the Mikasa Kan, has been burned in the harbour of Saseho. The report of the Naval Department issued on the 12th inst. says:—

Collating all the intelligence hitherto received it is ascertained that about 20 minutes past midnight on the 11th inst. fire broke out near the Mikasa's main mast. Without loss of time assistance to extinguish the flames was sent from the various warships and vessels in port as well as from the shore. Every effort was made but the origin of the conflagration could not be discovered. At 1.37 a.m. one of the ship's magazines exploded, blowing a hole in the ship on the port side under the water-line. She sank quickly and at 2.30 a.m. her keel rested on the bottom. The cause of the fire can not be known till the vessel is raised, and the nature of her injuries ascertained, but a commission of inquiry was immediately appointed. Following is a list of the casualties.

Killed.	Missing.	Wounded Severely.	Wounded Slightly.	Nature of Wounded uncertain.
1 Officer. 1 Warrant Officer.	5 Officers. 225 Warrant Officers and men.	2 Officers. 2 Warrant Officers.	3 Officers	6 Officers and 193 men.
Mikasa	1 Officer. 1 Warrant Officer.	1 Officer. 9 Warrant Officers and men.	23 Warrant Officers and men.
Suzukihina	1 Warrant Officer.	3 Officers. 3 Warrant Officers and men.	11 do 12 do do do
Asahi	3 Warrant Officers and men.	1 Officer. 4 Warrant Officers and men.	4 do 6 do
Fuji	1 Officer.	4 Warrant Officers and men.	5 Men. 2 Men.
Kasagi	3 Warrant Officers and men.	1 Officer and 5 men.	1 Officer and 1 man.
Tatsuta	1 Warrant Officer.	1 Man.	8 Men.
Nihon Maru	2 Men.
Taihoku Maru
Marusame
Kasumi
Ryofun Maru
Saseho Dock-hands, 3 Men.	1 Man.	5 Men.		1 Officer, 1 Warrant Officer and 23 men.

The totals are:—5 killed, 251 missing, and 243 wounded.

It is expected that the Mikasa will easily be saved. When it was recognised that the flames could not be subdued an attempt was made to beach the vessel, but before this could be accomplished the explosion took place and she took the bottom. The place, however, is shallow, and her conning tower bridge and funnels are above water. Admiral Togo seems to have been on board at the time, but he escaped without injury. The present theory about the origin of the fire is that it was connected with the electrical apparatus. It is pointed out that the ship having only two masts, the main-mast would be that astern, and this mast is in the immediate vicinity of the after-magazine. The Chuo Shinbun has a telegram saying that the hole blown by the explosion is under the heavy armour-plating and that the ship lies on an even keel in 13 fathoms of water. The greatest commiseration is felt with the victims of the disaster and with the Navy in general. Such an accident, immediately after the conclusion of the war, is most unhappy. The Mikasa was only 5 years old. She was built by Messrs. Vickers Maxim and Co. and was one of Japan's four remaining battle-ships. It is to be sincerely hoped that she will soon be resurrected.

Whether as a device in campaigning tactics or as an outcome of the present excitement, rumours were busily circulated in Tokyo to the effect that the fire on board the Mikasa was due to a mutinous spirit among the blue-jackets who objected to the terms of peace. These stories emanated from journalistic circles and were supplemented later on by a statement that three destroyers had been sunk in Yokosuka harbour by similar agitators. To ascertain whether any ground existed for such stories Mr. Minaura Katsudo, Vice-President of the House of Representatives, and Mr. Sugita Teiichi waited upon the Minister of the Navy and asked him for a statement. Admiral Yamamoto assured them in the most positive terms that the rumours were absolutely baseless. As for the Mikasa it was impossible to ascertain precisely how the fire had been caused until the ship was raised and the nature of her injuries ascertained. In the meanwhile a committee of inquiry had been appointed as is the regular routine of the service in all cases of accident. The story that destroyers had been sunk in Yokosuka harbour was a pure invention, and not the smallest evidence of any discontent among the men of the Navy had manifested itself. That very day there had been a large meeting of naval officers in the Department, and no whisper of discontent had been heard.

This assurance from Admiral Yamamoto is welcome, for in the present state of the public's nerves nothing is too incredible to be rejected.

The Nichi Nichi publishes a telegram saying that the decks of the Mikasa are found to be uninjured and that her re-floating is considered certain. The naval authorities are working at her day and night. As yet no accurate return of the killed and wounded has been compiled.

THE CHINESE MINISTER IN WASHINGTON.

Simultaneously with the first announcement of peace-terms having been settled, Sir Liang-cheng, Chinese Representative in Washington, was reported to have telegraphed to his Government in the sense that Japan had yielded on account of the strength of the Russian military forces. Very few persons can have believed that His Excellency made any such statement. If they did, they will be undeceived by the report now attributed to him in a telegram to the Hochi Shinbun. In this report Sir Liang-cheng says that the Emperor of Japan, being determined to conclude peace, made concessions to Russia; that his Majesty's magnanimity has elicited the applause of all countries and has greatly pleased the Tsar, who fully appreciates the motive; that the President of the United States is to be sincerely thanked for his successful efforts in the cause of peace; that Manchuria is now delivered from the horrors of war, and that the Sovereign of China may feel re-assured. This intelligence is said to have given profound satisfaction to the Empress Dowager who immediately ordered a message of thanks to be telegraphed to the President. The Chinese Minister also now for the first time appreciates the magnanimity of the Mikado and understands the true motive of Japan's concessions.

On the 7th instant a meeting of the Chinese Cabinet Ministers is said to have taken place in the presence of the Throne, and on this occasion it was represented to the Empress Dowager that the magnanimity of the Emperor of Japan, as displayed in connexion with the peace-treaty, constituted a guarantee of the temper in which Japan would approach the discussion of the Manchurian question with China. The Mikado had set an example to civilized nations and China might feel perfectly confident as to the treatment she would receive at the hands of his Majesty's Government. Therefore no time should be lost in making arrangements to conclude a treaty. The Empress Dowager gave her cordial assent.

KOREA.

Li Yong-ik appears to have fled from Seoul. He is reported to have been among a party of four or five Koreans who reached Weihaiwei by junk at the beginning of the month. The idea is that he has gone to take counsel with M. Pavlov, but neither M. Pavlov nor Li Yong-ik, well assured as they are in respect of the possession of qualities which we need not here enquire, is likely to be able to effect much in the Korea which will hereafter exist. Apparently Li Yong-ik did not intend to visit Wei-hai-wei: his junk is said to have drifted thither.

In the Hochi Shinbun a telegram is published giving the names of the new Korean Cabinet:—

Prime Minister Mr. Han Kyuh.
Foreign Minister Mr. Li Pong-yong.
Home Minister Mr. Yun Yaku.
Education Minister Mr. Li Chiyong.
Justice Minister Mr. Li Ha-yong.
Agriculture and Commerce Mr. Cho Pong-sik.
Finance and Commerce Mr. Min Yang-hui.
War and Commerce Mr. Kwan Chung-ho.

This Cabinet is said to have received the approval of the Japanese Representative.

THE RUSSIAN PRISONERS.

The number of Russian Prisoners in Japan at the close of August was 71,281 of all ranks. It will be quite a business to transport these officers and men to Russia. The German shipping company which began to make arrangements some time ago to undertake the task showed much foresight.

Admiral Rojestvensky has completely recovered from his wounds. He has been sent to Fushimi (near Kyoto) with ten other officers and men who, like himself, had been undergoing medical treatment in the naval hospital at Saseho.

The Hon. W. Taft arrived on Sept. 15th at Kobe by the Korea. On the 15th, he will leave there by the same ship for Yokohama. Leading tea traders (Japanese) of Yokohama who had arranged to entertain Mr. Taft on the 16th at the Chitose-ro tea-house, are reported to have abandoned the idea owing to the trouble in the city.

AMERICA AND JAPAN.

The Fiji Shimpō has an editorial strongly repudiating the idea expressed by American journals, namely, that Japan entertains some sentiment of umbrage against the United States in connexion with the peace, and that this sentiment found expression in the burning of an American church and the maltreatment of American visitors. No greater error could be committed than to entertain such suspicions. The Japanese nation recognises clearly that President Roosevelt's association with the peace was dictated solely by a spirit of benevolence and chivalry (jin-ai gikyo no seishin), and was limited to bringing the two Powers together in the conference chamber. He explicitly laid down from the outset the principle that all discussions and arrangements should be limited to the parties themselves and should be free from interference by any third party whatsoever. There was no such interference, as a matter of fact, nor has there been any complaint whatever in Japan. The Japanese entertain towards the people of the United States the same feeling of close friendship as they have always entertained. If rudeness was offered to members of Mr. Harriman's party who happened to ride through the streets during the night of the riot and who passed a place where the rioters were assembled, it was not because they were Americans—a fact probably quite unknown to the crowd—but simply because they were conspicuous objects calculated to attract special attention. That is the way with mobs the world over. And in a modified sense the same may be said of the attacks upon churches; not an American church in particular, but several churches among which there happened to be one American edifice. It is not by acts of momentary roughness on the part of a mob of rioters that Japan's mood should be judged. It is by her habitual demeanour.

Mr. Ozaki Yukio, Mayor of Tokyo, also addresses himself to the same topic, speaking through the columns of the Fiji. He admits that the naked facts were calculated to betray American newspapers into errors. These, however, will very soon be dispelled. Every one in Japan knows well that the demonstration which ultimately degenerated into a disturbance was directed solely against the peace treaty in the first place, and against the police in the second, who had committed a blunder. Had there been the least commingling of anti-foreign spirit in the rioters' disposition, they would not have confined their doings to the residence of the Home Minister, which stands next door to the Imperial Hotel where numbers of foreigners are lodging. The attacks upon churches were doubtless instigated by a small section of religious zealots among the crowd, who saw an opportunity to make a violent protest against a faith they do not love.

STREET TRAFFIC IN LONDON.

One of the most important reports made public in a long time is that of the Royal Commission on London Traffic. This commission was appointed somewhat over two years ago for the purpose of investigating the methods of transportation in Greater London and the advisability of establishing a central tribunal which should pass upon all projects for railways of any sort in the metropolitan area. The situation in Greater London is not particularly unique, for it can be matched on a smaller scale in Boston and Chicago, says the Engineering Record. Greater London has an area of 692 square miles, and a population of 6,500,000. The number of rides per capita per annum of this population is about 200, as compared with 300 in New York and 270 in Berlin. As the working classes move from the crowded central districts into the suburbs it is probable that the rate of rides per capita will increase, provided the transportation facilities are increased to correspond. The increase in these facilities will be very expensive, because of the manner in which the existing street plan developed. The ideal plan, according to the commission, is the construction of railways for long-distance urban traffic, others for suburban traffic into and from the city, the connection of all tramways and railways for the rapid interchange of passengers, the widening of existing streets, the construction of new thoroughfares, and the regulation of street traffic. All form parts of a single problem. It is necessary to understand the very costly nature of important street improvements at the present time. New York has had some chance to learn this in the widening of Elm street, but the expense of that work is nothing to the probable cost of two new thoroughfares which are suggested for Greater London. One of these runs four and three-quarter miles east and west to connect Bayswater road with Whitechapel, and the other runs four and one-half miles north and south to connect Holloway with the "Elephant and Castle." Each of these great avenues is to be 140 feet wide; provision is made for subways in which to place all conduits, as well as four lines of underground railways, while on the street above there are four railway tracks. The east and west avenue is estimated to cost about £15,550,000 and the other about £8,550,000. These projects are not put forth as necessary at present, but rather as indications of what must be done for a really perfect solution of some of the traffic problems.

LETTERS OF THANKS.

In response to an appeal for pictures and reading matter for the sick and wounded soldiers in Japanese hospitals donations have been received from various sources and the material thus obtained has been distributed as seemed best to meet the requirements of the case. The pictures have been made into albums by those who have volunteered to do this work and also by persons employed for this purpose. Already about four thousand albums have been prepared and distributed among those in the army and navy hospitals and on the different transports for the sick and wounded. The following are copies of letters received from Japanese officials and others, and also some extracts from some of the letters of missionaries who have been visiting the hospitals for the relief and comfort of the sufferers.

Yokosuka Naval Hospital, June 20th, 1905.

We received this day your contribution for the comfort of the sick and wounded sailors here, consisting of the Gospels, Tracts and thirty seven copies of picture albums and magazines. We beg to inform you that we will keep ten copies of each kind in our patients' library for their permanent use and distribute the rest among the sick and wounded, after having informed them of your sympathy towards them.

I herewith thank you for your kindness in behalf of all the patients of the hospital.

Yours Respectfully;

Y. YAMAMOTO, Superintendent.

Maizuru Naval Hospital, June 16th 1905.

I beg to express my sincere thanks for your sympathy in sending us many Bibles and pictures for the comfort of the sick and wounded seamen. I immediately had them distributed among the patients and every one of them sends thanks for your kindness.

S. TSURUDA, Superintendent.

Hospital Ship, "Yamashiro Maru."

Ujina, May 24th 1905.

Many thanks for your kind letter and valuable gifts. I have the honor to report that they gave much comfort to the men in their hours of weariness and suffering during this voyage at sea and since. I believe I shall give the same to sick and wounded officers and men in the future. They will bless your bequest and be used for this purpose permanently. God bless you for your kind contributions.

Your obedient servant;

N. NOMURA, PURSER.

S. S. "Kobe Maru."

I have received with deep thanks your gifts sent me for the comfort of officers and men being carried to and from the front during present matters, and I am glad to inform you these will be duly treated on board according to the purpose of the contributors.

I am, Sir, Yours faithfully,

J. K., PURSER.

S. S. "Yokohama Maru."

I am much thankful to tell you that I have received to-day your kind contributions referring to our suffering invalids.

I think you may easily understand while I have opened your kind present how many thanks were repeated in my heart. And also for proper distribution and preservation I will certainly inform to all the nurses, and I think no doubt that may be earnestly arranged to obey your kind advice.

Yours respectfully,

J. NAGANO.

Military Hospital, Hiroshima,

June 12th, 1905.

I hereby beg to acknowledge the receipt of tracts, picture albums and magazines which you have contributed for the use of the patients; also to inform you of our intention to use them in accordance with your instructions as much as possible; and at the same time cause your sympathy to extend to every patient.

K. ONISHI,

Surgeon in Charge.

Military Hospital, Asahigawa,

May 20th, 1905.

I hereby beg to express my profound thanks for the Gospels, tracts and picture albums which you have contributed for the use of the sick and wounded soldiers here. I have already had this act of your kindness made known to the authorities; and for the present I offer my personal thanks.

KOSAKU TERANISHI,

Superintendent.

Hospital, Transport Kosai Maru,

June 10th 1905.

We greatly desire to offer our profound thanks for the books and magazines you have kindly sent to us; and also to inform you of the great comfort they have given to the patients we have been transporting. Your kindness is deeply engraved in the mind of every patient and will be remembered by us forever.

Thanking you again for your kindness,

G. HOSOKAWA. (Purser)

K. HOMMA. (Captain)

Red Cross Hospital, Tokyo,

September 2nd 1905.

I hereby acknowledge the receipt of a case of books contributed by you. I will send them to the front at the earliest opportunity. There will be many months before all the troops return home. Indeed they have now entered upon an epoch of reading, and it is my desire to take this opportunity to infuse a religious spirit among the soldiers. If they are not inspired by a religious spirit it is most likely they may be given to vain ambition and the discontent prevalent among them may cause a formidable trouble to the country.

DR. HAYAKAWA.

Mukojima, Tokyo,

July 27th, 1905.

While in the Toyama Hospital I was much comforted by the albums contributed by you; especially by those which contained a great many American children. Such beautiful pictures can never be found in this country.

Later I got better and am now under going medical treatment at my own home. When leaving the hospital I asked for an album as a memorial and was given one, and it is a constant source of comfort to me. I hereby beg to thank you for it.

H. KUMANO.

One of the missionaries writes: The albums are received by the soldiers with expressions of delight that I am sure would gratify the donors. The men send thanks, and I shall be much obliged if you will pass them on.

"A set of picture albums is a good introduction to a ward full of men just from the front or from some distant hospital. They at once begin asking questions about the pictures and we quickly glide into friendly relations.

Another writes: I took the albums to the hospital and I wish you could have seen the men gather around; wardens and all looking at them. When I told them I could give them but one in a room they looked disappointed; and as many as could get up would go to the one who had the book and eagerly wait his turn to get it!

Another missionary writes, "Yesterday I took the albums and gave three to the head nurse of the recreation room ward for the sick men there. He was delighted with them and said he would be glad to take them around. Then I took the others to the next ward. The nurses for that ward were greatly pleased and one of the nurses from the adjoining ward came over to see what we were talking about. He begged for one for his men. I said I would bring others later; but he just carried off one with him and did not want to wait so long. They are greatly appreciated indeed."

From another comes the following, "The last supply of picture cards and albums (that you sent to me) came in a most opportune time. They came the very day for visiting and just an hour or so before going to the hospital to visit the wounded from the famous battle of Tsushima. I was starting out with an insufficient supply for the occasion, and I felt sure, as I thought of the providential arrival of the things, that loving prayer had been offered by the contributors and that they would be glad to know of the answer."

Magazines and illustrated papers have been distributed among the sick and wounded Japanese and also among the Russian prisoners. The following are copies of some of the letters received from the latter.

From the recent Commander of the Russian Squadron at Port Arthur.

Nagoya, March 5th, 1905.

Dear Mr. Loomis,—I thank you very much for my part and all my comrades at Nagoya for your kind letter, for your interest in our welfare and your proposal to send us some New Testaments and some illustrated papers.

April 1st, 1905.

Thank you very much for the papers and illustrated news received to-day. They give us all much pleasure.

Yours very friendly,

R. WIEN.

Dear Sir,—I am much obliged to you for papers sent and I cannot express my whole thanks for your kindness and labours. That books which you have sent me are precious material for my future work. The book which you have recommended I will acquire with pleasure, and if it will not trouble you please be so kind send that to me.

Mr. Belosor sends you greetings; and we all are hoping to see you soon in Shizuoka. Once more I thank you and wish you all good.

I remain yours respectfully,

S. PANKEWITCH,
Lieut. of Cossacks.

Shizuoka, August, 1905.

I'm very thankful to you my dear Captain for your remember and kindness to me. With great pleasure I read the books which you send to me. Here in prison it is only one consolation and moreover it is very agreeable to hear—probably the peace between Russia and Japan will not be. At present it is no time to conclude a peace.

From the papers which you send me I read America has the America Peace Society. The starting of such a Society is more than well. When the war will come to an end I will help the society in its trouble for peace of all world.

Yours very truly,

L. W. RAPOUSTIN,
Lieut. of Cossacks.

Nagoya, June, 1905.

DEAR SIR,—We received to-day the papers which you were so kind as to send us. Really we cannot find enough words to express our thanks for so rich a present. Books and every sort of reading matter are the very things we want and which it is very difficult or impossible to obtain.

Will you please believe us, yours most grateful,

Lieut. N. JOHANSON.

Lieut. EDWARD WILLIAM R. PINK.

Nagoya, August 9th, 1905.

SIR,—My comrades and myself thank you for the books which you have been so kind as to send. If you can do so I pray you to send some Gospels for the Tartar soldiers and also some in the Russian and Slav language.

Accept my compliments;

Sub-Lieut. NIKOLSKY,
East Siberian Rifles.

Narashino, August 15th, 1905.

DEAR SIR,—Permit me to express our sincere gratitude to you for the reading books. Unhappily we have but a few men who can read English, but we have all looked at the designs and illustrations with great pleasure.

If you will be good enough to send us something more we beg you to send paper with the greatest possible number of illustrations.

Gratefully yours,

MICHEL KRYLOFF

Secretary of the Prisoners Library.

There is still a demand for both pictures and illustrated papers and magazines. Among the Japanese there are a considerable number who can read English. Even though the war has ended there will always be many in the hospitals who need sympathy and comfort. All contributions will be gladly received.

H. LOOMIS.

BARON KOMURA AND MR. TAKAHIRA.

Baron Komura and Mr. Takahira left Portsmouth on the 5th, apparently, though the date is not quite clear. There was a congratulatory entertainment of some kind after the signature of the treaty, and we learn from a telegram to the Kokumin that Baron Rosen made a speech in English expressing the pleasure felt by himself and his colleagues at the happy termination of the conference, and thanking the Japanese contemporaries for their courtesy throughout. Baron Komura replied in English, but the gist of his remarks is not given. The Japanese Plenipotentiaries visited Harvard University, of which Baron Komura is a graduate, and they then proceeded to New York where they seem to have been most cordially welcomed. After a visit to the President on the 9th Baron Komura and his suite are to spend some time in the United States, presumably resting, and they will leave Seattle about the 20th, arriving in Japan on the 5th of October.

Since the above was written news has reached Japan of the sudden illness of Baron Komura.

CHINA.

It is stated that an Imperial Decree has been published in Peking radically altering the system of examinations for official appointments. We do not gather that entry to office through the door of competitive examination is abolished, but only that the old list of subjects is completely revised, so as to give the first place to Western Science. This is the most important measure of progress hitherto taken by China.

A telegram to the Hochi Shimbun states that China is negotiating for a loan of 40 million taels, which money is to be applied to administrative purposes in Manchuria and to carrying out measures necessitated by the war. British financiers are likely to find the coin.

We read in the Yoroku a repetition of the statement originally made by the Jiji Shimbun that the Fushun coal mine is of enormous value, the seams being 50 feet thick and extending for a great distance. Our contemporary alleges that the Government will work the mine, and that the next Budget will contain an appropriation on account of preliminary outlay. It will be remembered that Mr. Hiraoka Kotaro, a member of the Lower House, who lately visited Manchuria, reported the coal of this mine to be superior to that of Kyushu and stated that the acquisition of such a concession meant more to Japan than the receipt of an indemnity of a thousand million yen. Either Mr. Hiraoka had coal on the brain or the Fushun deposits must be something unparalleled.

In a case in which a Chinese flour merchant in Hongkong charged another Chinese with forging his name and the chop of his firm on a security paper for another man who wanted the position of postman, the complainant, in cross-examination, "admitted that his brother had told him that there was a false chop of the firm for guaranteeing people."

Mr. J. C. Hanson has called attention in the columns of the North China Daily News to the scandalous abuse of the Spanish flag by the present Consul for Spain at Shanghai, who is granting Spanish protection to Chinese annual subscribers. Our contemporary tells a rather amusing incident which occurred lately in this connection. A Chinaman who had become an annual Spaniard had a Chinese enemy with whom he was anxious to get even, so he professed great friendship, invited him to dinner, and pointed out to him the advantage of becoming a Spanish subject. He was so persuasive that his victim fell into the trap and took out an annual protection ticket in the Spanish Consulate. As soon as he had done this, the first Chinese-Spaniard promptly sued him in the Spanish Court, after which the victim was a sadder and a wiser man.

The writer of Native Notes in the North China Daily News says that the Customs-riot at Amoy was a purely local affair and was directed against the Customs' employees for alleged wrongs suffered at their hands by merchants and small traders involving natives of the six prefectures and sub-prefectures of Fukien province, namely, Chian-chou, Tingchou, Changchou, Lunyen, Shaoen, and Yungch'un.

The following translation of an Imperial Edict regarding the anti-American boycott appears in our senior Shanghai contemporary:—

We have received a memorial from the Censor Wang Pu-ying stating that the movement against the proposed Treaty with the United States of handicraftsmen and merchants of the various provinces of our Empire has now culminated in such a point that there is fear that troubles may arise, and therefore praying that an Imperial Edict be issued commanding the high officials of the Empire to use extra precautions to preserve the status quo.

The other day, the Prince and Ministers of the Waiwupu informed us in person with reference to the proposed Exclusion of Labourers Treaty with United States that they, in conjunction with Liang Ch'eng our Minister at Washington, had had repeated consultations with the members of the U.S. Government on the question and that the United States Government had consented to give the most favourable treatment to Chinese merchants, teachers, students, and travellers, and had further promised that as soon as Congress had reassembled all serious endeavours would be made to settle matters in a perfectly just and equitable manner. All these are on record. In the said Censor's memorial it was also stated that since the indignation of our people against the unjust treatment (of the Americans) was so unanimous and unfavourable, and opinion against the proposed Treaty so united, that not only guarantee that wicked and evil-disposed persons will not take advantage of the crisis to create disturbance against the public whereby the good order of the country might be endangered, etc.

We consider it therefore to be of the greatest importance that an Imperial Decree should be issued clearly explaining matters, so that all misunderstandings shall be cleared away.

Now be it known that China and the United States have always been most friendly towards each other and never have we had occasion to oppose one another. Since, therefore, the U. S. Government has consented to confer with us in a friendly and amicable manner regarding the revision of the unjust clauses of the former Exclusion Treaty, it behoves all to quietly await the result of the Waiwupu's endeavours to settle matters equitably, and not to use a boycott on American goods with the intention of opposing the proposed Treaty. For since such steps endanger the good relations and understanding between our respective countries they are also greatly harmful to the Chinese people and their trade. The Waiwupu has already repeatedly instructed his Viceroy and Governors of provinces to issue proclamations exhorting the people to continue their daily avocations and business as usual, so that peace may be assured to all. We now command the said Board to once more send instructions to the various Viceroy and Governors to use the most earnest endeavours to exhort the people to proclamation and to keep watch over matters so that our people may enjoy the blessing of peace and continue happy in their daily avocations. Let no one fail in their obedience to our sincere and earnest commands and if any ignorant persons seek to stir up strife by taking advantage of the present state of things such must be immediately arrested and severely punished so that trouble may be nipped in the bud. Let this our command be made known to all our people. Respect this.

A Ch'engt'u (capital of Szechuan province), letter states that H. E. Viceroy Hsi Liang has received a dispatch from General Ma, commanding the punitive expeditions operating against the Tibetans of Patang for the murder of the Imperial Assistant Resident, Feng Chuan, last March, in which the General reports that, having captured the hill fortress of Tashukuan after a sharp fight, his troops advanced upon the town of Ch'amu (Ch'amu) which is about one hundred li distant from Patang. This one hundred li had, however, to be battled for step by step, and after desperate fighting lasting two whole days and nights, during which the troops were getting nearer and nearer their goal, the Tibetans were so hardly pressed that they determined to set fire to the Tingling Lama Monastery and massacre all the Chinese families settled in that neighbourhood. The first part of that plan the rebels did carry out, managing to destroy the greater part of the Monastery. While they were preparing to attack the few Chinese families near the Monastery the troops, guided by the smoke and the flames of the conflagration burst upon the scene and attacking the Tibetans, drove them with great loss of life further into the mountains, thereby saving the endangered Chinese settlers from destruction. After this, resistance by the rebels was not so determined and General Ma's vanguard accordingly captured Patang on the 26th of July last at 2 o'clock in the afternoon, the General himself and the main army entering the place two days after.

The typhoon which did so much damage in Hongkong and subsequently at Shanghai was responsible for breaking the cables between Shanghai and Formosa, Shanghai and Korea, Shanghai and Chefoo, and Shanghai and Nagasaki. If the revenue of Hongkong continues to flow into the Treasury at the rate set by the first quarter of the year, the Colony should show a surplus at the end of the present twelvemonth of over $350,000.

One of the disastrous results of the Boycott in Shanghai was seen after the typhoon. Owing to this measure a large number of the native godowns and stores in Shanghai had nearly all their available space solidly packed with goods of American manufacture whose sale was being held over until the new treaty should be revised in accordance with the wishes of the leader of the boycott. When therefore the water rose to abnormal height from the typhoon the owners of the stored goods were unable to remove them in time and all goods that were packed at the bottom began to soak to the depth of a couple of feet in some places, and four feet in many others, especially those in the native portions of the port. It is stated that the amount of cigarettes, piece goods and flour of American manufacture, destroyed and irretrievably damaged was very great and totalled losses in money to a very handsome amount.

A special thanksgiving service for Peace was held in Shanghai Cathedral on Sept. 3rd. The preacher, the Rev. A. J. Walker, took his text from Isaiah II, 4-5. "And He shall judge among the nations and shall rebuke many people; and they shall beat their swords into ploughshares, and their spears into pruning hooks: nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more. O house of Jacob, come ye, and let us walk in the light of the Lord." The preacher outlined the causes and conduct of war from Old Testament days to modern times. The Israelites, he said, regarded war as a scourge of God. The heathen tribes thought that the honour of their gods was involved and, if they were unsuccessful, threw them over and worshipped new deities. The defeat of a nominally Christian nation by a nation that did not profess Christianity came as a rude shock to many, but it had its lessons, two of which he specially wished to draw attention to. The first was that Asiatics were children of God, a fact often overlooked. Secondly, it should teach all men to examine themselves and see if their Christianity were genuine. At the conclusion of the service Stanford's Te Deum in B flat was sung by the choir.

The following interesting article appears among the Notes on Native Affairs compiled for the North China Daily News:-

Since the entrance of the Manchus into China all important posts outside the Eighteen provinces of China Proper, such as those in Outer and Inner Mongolia, the three Manchurian provinces, Chinese Turkestan, and Tibet, were given to men of Manchu descent and Chinese were strictly debarred. Prior to the fifties, or before the time of the Great Taiping Rebellion, the Emperor generally selected Manchus or Mongols of ability to act as the Tartar Generals, or Assistant Military Governors, or Imperial Residents, or Political Agents of any of the divisions into which the outer dependencies of the Crown was divided; but, beginning with the sixties, men of mediocre abilities, and such as were unfit to cope with Chinese in talents or ability to govern, were often chosen for such posts, inasmuch that some sort of fiasco was sure to happen. It was through such men that, near the end of the Taiping rebellion, or beginning with the sixties, that the Mahomedans of Chinese Turkestan started to rebel against their Manchu rulers, resulting in the total destruction of all the Tartars in that portion of the empire and the setting up of an Andijani Mahomedan, Yakub Beg by name, as the independent prince or ruler of the Western half of Chinese Turkestan, and a number of Chinese Mahomedan (commonly called Tungari) self-made prince-lings ruling over the Eastern half, the region under the sway of the latter penetrating even into China Proper and stretching over the Great Wall as far East as within a hundred miles or so of Lanchow, the capital of Kansu province. China suffering from the effects first of the Taiping rebellion, which all but drove the Manchus from the Dragon Throne, followed immediately by the Nienfei rebellion, was too weak to wrest back her dependencies in Outer Mongolia. It was not until the middle of the seventies that Marquis Tso Tsung-tang with his Hunan "braves" came to the rescue, with the result that all her dependencies west of the Great Wall were reconquered and the Mahomedan princelings killed or driven over the border into Russian Central Asia. The victorious and haughty Marquis, holding the Manchus in some contempt, insisted in his scheme of reorganisation of Chinese Turkestan that the Manchu régime there should be abolished and a Chinese Governor put over the country with all the political machinery characteristic of pure Chinese rule. The Throne was forced to accede and Chinese Turkestan flourishes to this day under the new régime. The next great and disastrous lesson learned by the Throne, was the result of the Manchu régime as exemplified from what has passed in the Manchurian province since 1900. Through the mediocre character of the men of Tartar descent put over the three Manchurian provinces of Fengtien, Kirin, and Heilungchiang, China has now all but lost them. As a consequence Assistant Military Lieutenant-Governors of Chinese descent have been sent to the latter two provinces, and a Chinese Tartar General H. E. Chao Erh-sen, has been sent to Mukden to rule over Fengtien. There will be soon a thorough reorganisation of Fengtien which will be governed in due time in the same manner as the provinces of China Proper. The next step that is now being decided, according to a Peking letter, is that of recalling the Tartar Generals, Assistant Military Governors, Imperial Residents, and Political Agents from Ili, Outer and Inner Mongolia, and Tibet, and placing in their stead men of Chinese descent who are to reorganise those regions and tie them to the Imperial dynasty with stronger bonds than of yore. This radically important step once taken, men of Tartar descent will have indeed to take what is vulgarly called "a back seat," until they can show how to produce more enlightened men and of more determined and patriotic character than the country has seen during the past fifty years.

According to reports received by the Chinese authorities with reference to the casualties at Woosung and towns along the coast in that vicinity, arising from the typhoon of September 1st, it is stated that the water rose to the height of four (Chinese) feet in the native town of Woosung, resulting in the drowning of several men and women that night; the embankments near the forts of Szstselin and neighbourhood were demolished to a considerable distance so that the forts were flooded to a depth of from five to six (Chinese) feet. Outside Woosung, the population of the villages and hamlets of Ch'eng-hsing, Yawosha, Tashihousha, Hsiaoshihousha, and Ts'ungpaosha, are estimated at somewhere between 4,500 and 5,000 souls. Of this population it is officially reported that nearly four-fifths were drowned during the typhoon. Of houses, it is said, not one has been left standing.

Referring to the death of Baron Krieglstein by a gun accident, the N.-C. Daily News says:- Baron Krieglstein, after serving as a correspondent in both camps in the present war, came to Shanghai and bought the C. N. S. Wuchang, with the hope of seeing the great naval battle, but owing to misinformation, he was at Macao while the Battle of Tsushima was being fought. He returned to Shanghai, and then went north in the Wuchang on an unknown mission, visiting the north-eastern Siberian ports, and on his way down the Wuchang was wrecked near Cape Patience, Saghalien. Baron Krieglstein landed and made his way across to the trans-Siberian railway and to Harbin, where his adventurous life has had a tragical ending. He was a tall, handsome, soldierly man, and a capital companion, the type of a present-day adventurer.

The following vessels are known to have been wrecked or sunk by the typhoon that recently visited Shanghai and neighbourhood:-Lady Mitchell (3,000 tons) wrecked off Shanghai. Pechili (360 tons) sunk at Woosung. Basan Maru sunk at Chinnampo. Asahi Maru sunk at Chinnampo.

The following translation of the Imperial Decree abolishing the old style literary examinations we take from the columns of our senior Shanghai contemporary:-

We have received a memorial from Yuan Shih-k'ai, Viceroy of Chihli province, advocating the summary abolition of the old style of literary examinations for the Ch'üjen (Master of Arts) degree, in order to allow the expansion of the modern modes of education. In this connection the said Viceroy has also handed up his scheme for the successful accomplishment of the new régime. Before the era of what is termed the Three Dynasties men for office were selected from the schools, and it must be confessed that the plan produced many talented men. It was indeed a most successful plan for the creation of a nursery for the disciplining of talents and the moulding of character for our empire of China. Indeed the examples before us of the wealth and power of Japan and the countries of the West have their foundation in no other than their own schools. Just now we are passing through a crisis fraught with difficulties and the country is most urgently in want of men of talents and abilities (of the modern sort). Owing to the fact that, of late, modern methods of education have been daily on the increase amongst us, we repeatedly issued our commands to all our Viceroys and Governors of provinces to lose no time in establishing modern schools of learning in such number that every member of this Empire may have the means of going there to study and learn something substantial in order to prepare himself to be of use to his country. We have indeed thought deeply on this subject.

On a former occasion the Ministers of Education memorialised us suggesting that the old style of literary examinations may be gradually abolished by extending by three times the period for them. Viceroy Yuan, Shih-k'ai in his present memorial, however, asserts that unless these old-style examinations be abolished once for all the people of this Empire will continue to show apathy and hesitate to join the modern schools of learning. Hence if we desire to see the spread of modern education by the establishment of a number of schools we must first abolish the old style of studying for the examinations. The said memorialist's arguments on the subject show the result of experience and knowledge, and we, therefore, hereby command that, beginning from the Ping-wu Cycle (1906), all competitive examinations for the literary degrees of Ch'üjen and Ch'insih (Master of Arts and Doctor) after the old style shall be henceforth abolished, while the annual competitions in the cities of the various provinces for the Hsiuts'ai (Bachelor of Arts) or licentiate degree are also to be abolished at once. Those possessors of literary grades of the old style Ch'uijen and Hsiuts'ai who obtained their degrees prior to the issuance of this decree shall be given opportunities to take up official rank according to their respective grades and abilities. We also approve of the other suggestions made by the said Viceroy in his memorial on the above subject and command that they shall be put into force as proposed. In a word the methods and aims of our modern schools of learning have the same force as the ancient form of selection of men for office from the schools, as mentioned above, and the methods of rewards in rank and degrees are the same as those hitherto obtained by the old style of literary competitions. The regulations and rules for the various modern schools of learning and their various branches of studies have for their aim the attainment of substantial and practical knowledge. We are certain that the official classes and gentry throughout the Empire on learning of this will enthusiastically set about to start as many schools as possible and thus give the blessings of modern education to every individual subject of the Throne. The Government being thus enabled to obtain men of talents and abilities, it follows that the cities and towns producing such lights of learning will also enjoy a reflected honour therefrom. We hereby further command our Ministers of Education on receiving this our Imperial decree to lose no time in at once distributing to the various provinces the text books for schools that have been prepared, so that we may have a uniform system in teaching in all our schools. We also command our Viceroy and Governors to insist upon their subordinates, the prefects, sub-prefects, and district magistrates, making haste to establish primary schools in all the towns, hamlets, and villages within their respective jurisdictions, and that the utmost care be taken to select intelligent teachers for them, so that the minds of all our subjects be opened for the reception of modern knowledge. Let all our officials be earnest and diligent in obeying these our commands and let there be no lagging and carelessness, so as to avoid faults and mistakes in the administration of these schools. Let no one fail in deserving the confidence we have placed in each.

NOTES ON CURRENT EVENTS.

We observe that our local German daily contemporary alleges that we have accused the Japanese press of "inciting an attack upon foreigners." We have done nothing of the kind, and indeed it is extremely difficult to believe that the allegation is made sincerely so remote is it from the truth. What we have said and now repeat is that the writings which have appeared in several of the vernacular journals in connexion with the peace treaty have been so unreasoning and so passionate as to be largely responsible for the desperate mood now permeating a considerable section of the nation. We do not say that these writings can be held directly responsible for the violence to which the mob resorted in the streets of the capital, inasmuch as our belief is that the unwise attempt made by the police to close the Nishiya Park was the prime cause of that violence. But other attempts of a more shocking nature may yet be made by fanatic patriots, and should that unhappy result occur it will be very hard to exonerate the newspapers.

The destroyer Silmi has been raised at Port Arthur and added to the strength of the Japanese Navy under the name of Fumizuki.

There are some doctrines which may be called the stock-in-trade of a certain class of philosophers. Prominent among these doctrines is the sacro-sanctity of the press. Newspapers, for no better reason apparently than that they are printed and sold as a regular money-earning business, are held to be beyond the legitimate reach of all official restraint so long as they do not publish anything injurious to morality, and if the administration of a country meddles at all with the press a gamut of indignation is struck upon notes which long ago lost all melody and became as the sounds of cracked tin trumpets. It must be fully granted that there are newspapers which deserve the utmost respect, but it must also be granted that there are others which so abuse the privileges they enjoy as to be worse than social nuisances. The Japanese Government at this juncture has considered it necessary in the interests of public safety to bring newspapers once again within reach of summary punishment should their writings be deemed subversive of peace and good order. We may assume that the step is taken with great reluctance and full cognisance of the material it furnishes for criticism. Need we point out, then, how superfluous and unreflecting are the adverse comments made by one of the Yokohama newspapers when it complains that "to consider the publication of conscientious views as an incitement to disorder merely because the views are opposed to those held by the authorities is to suppress all newspaper criticism altogether," and when it asks whether "the Government is to be given the right to suppress all comments which are opposed to its own views." If the formulator of these platitudes will read the speech delivered last Friday to a meeting of Tokyo journalists, and translated elsewhere in our columns, he will recognise the futility of such criticism. Court Katsura told his hearers that so far from objecting to expressions of dissenting views the Government welcomed them and that nothing was asked of the press except to refrain from writing calculated to invite to sedition and violence. The journal quoted above says "evidently there is much to be done before the press of Japan can be considered free." Does it forget that it is itself a member of the press of Japan and therefore subject to precisely the same restrictions as the Tokyo journals, and has it found since it became a member of the Japanese press that its freedom is inconveniently circumscribed or that its utterances are less untrammelled, war news excepted, than they would be in England or America?

The Tsar, unless the telegraphic news published in London be untrue, has addressed to General Linevitch a message which we hesitate to criticise in the terms it merits. His Majesty is represented as saying:—"Japan has yielded to all our terms. The troops under your command, not hesitating to sacrifice their lives, had made preparations to inflict a crushing defeat on the enemy. But my conscience and my duty towards my subjects prevented me from opposing the conclusion of peace." A Japanese newspaper, publishing this telegram, places above it the caustic caption "A flying dog barks." The telegram is published in full by the Fiji, and in the Nichi Nichi there is a telegraphic epitome of the comments taken from The Times. The great journal declares itself perplexed to find language applicable to the Sovereign of a friendly State who has addressed such a message to his General. It is a message at once vainly boastful and palpably false; a message wholly unbecoming the ruler of a great country. So says The Times, and so all must think. Russia is an unfortunate country just now. The humiliations she has suffered in the field and in the council chamber are as nothing compared with the humiliations inflicted on her by the undignified conduct of her statesmen and her ruler. M. Witte had only to keep silence as to his own exploits at Portsmouth; the Tsar had only to keep silence in his hour of bitter discomfiture. But neither could abstain from empty and contemptible bombast.

A later telegram to the Fiji Shimpō from Newcastle gives another version of the treaty, but it does not differ materially from the one transmitted to our enterprising contemporary from London. No mention is made of a diplomatic note accompanying the treaty but it is generally understood that there is such a note. This second version of the treaty shows that the evacuation of Manchuria is to commence from the most advanced lines of the two armies, and is to be concluded within 18 months from the date of the signature of the treaty. There is to be a delimitation commission appointed to fix the boundaries of the two Powers' dominions in Saghalien, and the number of railway guards is to be 18 per kilometre.

Dr. Borden P. Bowne, who holds the Chair of Philosophy in Boston, is now visiting Japan on a tour round the world. On Friday evening a reception in his house was held at the residence of Dr. and Mrs. L. Dearing, No. 75, Bluff, Yokohama, which proved a very enjoyable affair. Dr. Bowne will stay about a couple of months in Japan and will speak before assemblages of students in Tokyo, Sendai, Kyoto and elsewhere. He hopes to reach England in June and leave Oxford in time for Commemoration.

We observe that the Hochi Shimbun and the Nichi Nichi are both dissatisfied about the arrangement that the Strait of Soya should be free for the passage of ships. But it is very difficult to follow the argument unless we regard the objection as based on a pure formality. No one can think of pretending, we presume, that Japan, because she owns Hokkaido and the "southern" part of Saghalien, has the right to close the strait of Soya to Russian ships in time of peace treaty or no treaty. Vessels flying the Russian flag would have been free to navigate the strait whether the Peace Treaty contained or did not contain this particular clause. On the other hand, should war break out between Japan and Russia, it would still be according to the former's right to block the strait to the ships of the latter. That goes without saying. War abrogates ipso facto treaties previously existing between the two Powers. Therefore the insertion of this clause in the Peace Treaty is a pure formality. We now pursue the question a step further. Russia on her side agrees that the Strait of Tartary shall be open to the free passage of Japanese ships. The Strait of Tartary is only 5 miles across. Therefore it is within the territorial waters of the two Powers holding its eastern and western shores; and therefore it would be perfectly lawful for Russia to declare the Strait a closed water, any vessels except those flying the Russian flag even in time of peace. But Russia binds herself to grant free passage to Japanese ships. Thus her concession is actually a superfluous formality. Even if there is no such clause existed in the Peace Treaty, Russian vessels would have enjoyed freedom of navigation in the Soya Strait under the provisions of international law so long as Japan and Russia were not at war. We wish that the talented and famous editor of the Nichi Nichi Shimbun would give us a frank opinion on this question.

It is now semi-officially stated that injury to the two cables connecting Shanghai and Nagasaki occurred on the 1st instant at an interval of a few hours. The place of injury was about 100 nautical miles off the Gutsloff Island and the cause was a typhoon which at that time swept up the Formosan Channel and invaded the Chinese coast, smashing more than one of the telegraph lines also. The only cable remaining is that from Shanghai via Amoy to Hongkong. It was expected that the Shanghai-Nagasaki connexion would be restored on the 9th instant, but apparently the Tokyo

Company has not yet completed the task. Japan is not entirely cut off from cable communication with the outer world. Formosa is in touch with Foochow and messages are arriving by that route. But the line, insufficient even in ordinary times, has now to be devoted solely to the transmission of official messages, Japanese and foreign.

The Kobe Chronicle and the Japan Herald hint in veiled language that the interruption of cable communication between Shanghai and Nagasaki had been purposely caused by the Japanese Government in order to prevent the incoming or outgoing of inconvenient news. Neither journal formulates the injurious suspicion plainly and squarely; apparently sufficient courage could not be commanded for a direct accusation. All that need be said is that such charges illustrate the kind of trickery which would be employed by the editors of the two journals were they in the position of the Japanese Government.

At the meeting of the Progressists' Standing Committee on the 9th instant, a vehement effort was made by some of the members to obtain the passing of a resolution in the sense that the peace-treaty should not be ratified. Dr. Hatoyama emphatically insisted on the virtual impossibility of withholding ratification, and pointed out that the act would destroy foreign confidence in Japan's good faith, but the advocates of the idea insisted that Japan would suffer more in foreign opinion if she accepted this shameful treaty. However, the better sense of the majority prevailed at length.

The following changes of local governors are announced:—

Mr. Oyama Tsunamasa from Yamanashi to Nagasaki.

Mr. Takeda Chiyosaburo from the retired list to Yamanashi.

Mr. Ogura Hisashi from the retired list to Oita.

Mr. Kinoshita Shuichi of Oita retires at his own request.

A report from the acting-governor of Formosa shows that the head-hunters made six raids between the 25th of July and the 29th of August, and carried off 45 heads. Their method of procedure has become stealthy and cunning in proportion as the resistance to be overcome has increased. Instead of their hitherto habitual recourse to open violence, they now creep through the line of guards and approach the houses of their victims at the dead of night. Special precautions have now been adopted to check these shocking outrages.

Some time ago the public learned that it was in contemplation to establish a special line of passenger-steamers for the purpose of connecting the terminus of the Sanyo Railway at Bakan with that of the Seoul-Fusan line at Fusan. Three steamers were to be placed on the route. We now read that the first of them, the Ihi Maru, started on her maiden voyage on the 11th instant. There was quite a ceremony at Bakan in connexion with the event.

It is stated that the total quantity of war notes circulated by the Japanese in Manchuria was 120 million yen, of which some 70 millions have already been redeemed and thus not more than 50, or at most 60, millions remain to be handled. The idea is that these will be declared exchangeable by the Specie Bank at Shanghai, Tientsin and Newchwang, having been in the first instance replaced by sight-notes of the Bank. Evidently Japanese paper must continue to circulate for many years in Manchuria inasmuch as there will be a Japanese garrison in Liaotung and Japanese soldiers guarding the railway.

The M.M. steamer Tonkin, on her last voyage to Marseilles, carried a motley crowd of Russians from Saghalien as far as Port Said. The Governor of the island and his staff were among the first class passengers. In the second class there were, in addition to a number of subordinate officers, several released convicts and one woman who is said to have murdered her husband. One of the children on board, a young girl, was a practised thief, and stealthily removed articles from certain cabins. Nothing could exceed the unruliness of the children from Saghalien, who shouted and screamed at all hours of the day and night at will, fought continually and were mostly quite mannerless. The Russian officers seemed to have their pockets full of money. They caroused at hotels at every port and even went to the length of throwing dollars into the sea for the Singapore divers. The past seems to cause them no chagrin and the future has for them not a shade of anxiety. At Singapore just a few minutes before the vessel sailed, 13 murderers from Saghalien were marched down to the wharf under the guard of a strong contingent of Sikh police. They had arrived in Singapore in some vessel that had put in there and had been arrested at the request of the Russian Consul. They were taken on board the Tonkin to be reshipped at Port Said. The French mail enjoys great popularity, the berths in the first, second, third and fourth classes being all full in the Tonkin on her last voyage, and we are informed that this is no rare occurrence. The passenger who sends the above note says that the accommodation and the table are both excellent and the comfort of passengers is studied to an extent unknown in some other lines.

There has been an explosion of a powder-magazine at Iwahana in Takasaki. This is the third which has occurred at the same place during the current year. Carelessness on the part of the workmen is assigned as the cause. Two men were injured.

The Russian organ of Shanghai, which to its shame wears an English garb, alleges that the wrath of the Japanese people is now directed against foreigners, and especially against the English and the Americans who are supposed to have betrayed them into making a shameful peace. Thus the feeling of friendship which previously existed towards England has been converted into one of bitter resentment and the fate of the Anglo-Japanese alliance is sealed. The journal goes on to say that the thinness of Japan's veneer of civilization has been exposed; that her people have now shown themselves in their true colours as semi-savage Orientals; that the American and British Legations are beleaguered and that Russia's influence throughout the Far East will be speedily restored.

It is wonderful that any one calling himself an Englishman can be found to write such monstrous lies in Russian interests and scarcely less wonderful that the Russians should be so blind as to imagine that such villainous and easily exposable libels can fail to recoil upon their authors. Yes indeed, there has been a flagrant display of degraded uncivilization but it has not been made by the Japanese. It has been made by this Anglo-Russian Shanghai journal.

PRIZE COURT DECISIONS.

The Prize Court at Yokosuka has declared the following vessels, together with their cargoes, to be lawful prizes of war:—

British steamer Dollar (4,216 tons); cargo, 26,000 bundles of hay; 14,600 bags of barley and 32,200 bags of oats.

British steamer Wyfield (3,235 tons); cargo, 64,000 bags of barley; 10,300 bundles of hay; 900 bags of oats.

British steamer Apollo (3,829 tons); cargo, 5,600 tons Cardiff coal.

Austrian steamer Burmah (3,071 tons); cargo, 4,106 tons Cardiff coal.

Austrian steamer Siam (3,160 tons); cargo, 4,100 tons Cardiff coal.

The appeals from the sentence of Saseho Prize Court in the case of the following two steamers have been dismissed and the ships with their cargoes are declared lawful prizes of war:—

British steamer Silviana (4,187 tons); cargo, 6,534 tons Cardiff coal.

Dutch steamer Wilhelmina (2,791 tons) cargo, 6,897 tons Cardiff coal.

THE BOOKSHELF.

We have to acknowledge receipt of the "Report on the Salvation Army Colonies in the United States and at Hadleigh, in England, with Scheme of National Land Settlement" by Commissioner H. Rider Haggard, published in the form of a parliamentary paper. This publication, for which we are indebted to Colonel Bullard, commanding the Salvation Army in Japan, shows in a very favourable light the working of the Salvation Army Colonies and contains Mr. Rider Haggard's suggestions—which seem to have obtained the approval of the highest American and Canadian authorities—as to land settlement. This report, the gist of which has already been published, is an important contribution to the discussion of a great sociological problem.

"Admiral Togo," by Mr. ARTHUR LLOYD, M.A., the Kinkodo Publishing Co.

THIS work sets forth, incidental to the career of Admiral Togo, many facts with reference to the naval events of the past war. These must be deeply interesting to foreigners, though we should imagine that Japanese will find ground for criticism in the volume. Thus we are told that Togo sent a wireless message "to Admiral Makaroff advising him to surrender" a few hours before the first attack upon Port Arthur. We should like to know Mr. Lloyd's authority for that statement. The author writes of the Freeman's Journal as a journal published in New York; surely even a graduate of Peterhouse, Cambridge, should know that the newspaper mentioned is a leading Irish journal. But these are small matters and we can bear testimony to the large mass of most useful and readable information provided. Every fact with reference to Admiral Togo is of the deepest interest at present and Mr. Lloyd has undoubtedly collected much that is of value. As a frontispiece there is a reproduction of the fine photograph of the Admiral which has already been published and which is absolutely the best likeness of the gallant officer yet issued to the public. Additional attention will no doubt be attracted to this volume at this moment when his flagship by some unhappy mischance has sustained dire damage.

"Japan Year Book," published by the Japan Year Book Office Tsukiji, Tokyo.

THE first issue of a new statistical annual is to hand, the Japan Year Book, which promises to be an exceedingly useful work to foreigners interested in this country. It contains over 400 pages of miscellaneous information. Here are a few of the headings: "Geography, earthquakes, population, Imperial Court, Finances, Agriculture, patents, etc., trade, railways, religions, contemporary worthies," etc., etc.

THE PROGRESSISTS.

THE Standing Committee of the Progressists have held a meeting and again passed their resolution condemning the peace treaty as failing to secure the objects for which the war was fought and as a "thousand-year disgrace" to Japan. They have also decided that the Government is primarily responsible for the disorder in the capital and for the necessity of placing the city under martial law. Count OKUMA was to have attended the meeting but most unfortunately he was prevented by illness, and the task of expounding the views of the Progressists—an exposition for which the nation waited with keen interest—devolved upon Mr. OISHI MASAMI. Again and again we have of late heard the phrase that the terms of the treaty signed at Washington "ignore the objects of the war," but not once, until this speech of Mr. OISHI's was delivered, have we heard any detailed statement of the arguments in support of that contention. It will be worth while, therefore, to follow the Progressist representative with some attention.

He deals first with Korea, and at the head of his complaints in that section he places the fact that both Powers have pledged themselves not to fortify their contiguous boundaries. Russia, says Mr. OISHI, already has fortifications at Possiet Bay and thus in the event of war she would have an immediate advantage over Japan. Now as to that there are three things to be said. The first is that Possiet Bay is not on the Russo-Korean frontier, and that fortifications along that frontier would be quite independent of those on the Bay. The second is that the banks of the Tumen are not by any means necessarily the strongest strategical position for defending north-eastern Korea against invasion; much stronger positions are said to exist a little further south, and at these positions forts may be erected at Japan's discretion. The third is that the length of frontier to which this restriction applies is only some 50 miles.

The second objection raised by Mr. OISHI is exceedingly difficult to follow. We gather that he would have made some very much more emphatic arrangement about Japan's status in Korea. He says that the preponderating influence of this Empire has been clearly recognised in theory, but that it will be ineffective in practice and he bases that prediction on the fact that even during the war the Korean Government set itself in opposition to the Japanese authorities, and that certain foreigners are already contending for the ipso-facto termination of the last Korean-Japanese convention simultaneously with the restoration of peace. It seems scarcely necessary to treat such criticisms seriously. No treaty between Japan and Russia could mend Korea's mood, and if the Koreans are still unable to appreciate the significance of Russia's admissions vis-à-vis Japan, it will be for the latter to enlighten them by means decipherable between the lines of the treaty, while as for the talk among foreigners we were not aware that Japanese statesmen accept such interpretations of great inter-State problems as are furnished by alien journals of the least reputable type. If they be men of that stamp, then neither treaty nor convention could be of the smallest value in their hands. Mr. OISHI further foretells that there will be serious troubles about the concessions held by Russia in the Yalu Valley and in Korea, and he declares that Japan's course in Korea will be more trammelled henceforth than it was before the war. But these concessions no longer exist; they were long ago revoked by the Korean Government. And concerning Japan's position in the Peninsula, the difference between her post-bellum status and her ante-bellum is simply this, that whereas before the war she stood conventionally on the same footing as Russia for purposes of intervention in Korean affairs, Russia has now been explicitly eliminated and Japan has the field to herself. How, in the face of these patent facts, Mr. OISHI MASAMI can publicly argue that Japan's procedure in the Peninsula will henceforth be more fettered than ever, we are at a loss to understand.

Passing to Manchuria, he contends that the evacuation of the Three Provinces by Russia was one of the main objects of the war, and he asserts that it has not been attained. For since Russia's dominions are contiguous with Manchuria, the withdrawal of her forces need not be further than across the border, whereas Japan, who is pledged to withdraw at the same time, must carry her army back hundreds of miles. Thus the truth is that Manchuria is not returned to China but is returned to Russia, for there being no guarantee of Russia's conduct she will be in a position to pour her troops into the region if she pleases to do so at any moment, and since China is powerless to resist, that duty would fall on Japan, who is thus condemned to a species of fly-driving-away process, interminable and unendurable. Each Power has pledged itself not to use the Manchurian parts of the railway for military purposes, but how is Russia to be compelled to observe such a promise. Japan at Changchun can not supervise the Northern Power's doings at Harbin. Had the line been placed in Japan's hands as far as Harbin the case would have been different, but now it is upon Japan alone that the restriction will be operative.

The whole of Mr. OISHI's contention about Manchuria, as thus far stated, seems to rest on the plainly extravagant assumption that any treaty can bind a State which intends to violate it. Were one to descend to particulars it might be pointed out that Japan can mass an army in Liaotung and another in Korea, if she pleases, being thus quite as close to the vital parts of Manchuria as Russia would be at Harbin, and it might also be pointed out that the Chinese need not always remain as insignificant a factor as they are now. But the broad fallacy of Mr. OISHI's contention is the underlying hypothesis that if Russia wants to renew the war, a treaty will prevent her from doing so. There is nothing to be gained by discussing impossibilities. Japan at Changchun will be, in effect, just as well situated for observing Russia as Japan at Harbin, and whereas her joint ownership of the latter place must have engendered constant causes of friction, her sole ownership of the former, with a convenient distance separating her from Russia, will obviate that danger. The Japanese Plenipotentiaries do not appear to have entertained any serious idea of getting possession of the railway as far as Harbin, or to have formulated any such demand. Their proposal, as we understand it, was that the Sungari River should be made the line of demarkation. The Russian counter-proposal was Changtu, and finally a compromise was effected by choosing Changchun. Mr. OISHI would have asked for Harbin. It is then a case of Mr. OISHI MASAMI's strategical and political insight against the strategical and political insight of Japan's Elder Statesmen, Generals and Cabinet Ministers.

The next objection raised by Mr. OISHI is scarcely credible. He considers that to have taken back from Russia the latter's lease of Liaotung is not sufficient, and that Japan should have seized the opportunity to recover the position she occupied at the close of her war with China. Mr. OISHI's speech may have suffered mutilation at the hands of the reporters but it can scarcely have been distorted sufficiently to wholly misrepresent his attitude in this matter. Yet how on earth could Japan force Russia to confer on her a permanent title to Chinese territory? Russia could only give back what she possessed herself, namely, the lease of Liaotung. Mr. OISHI can not be taken seriously in this phase of his argument.

His next contention is that the engagement not to obstruct the free passage of ships through the Strait of Soya is, in effect, tantamount to an engagement not to fortify the Strait. Surely not. Surely Mr. OISHI must see that such an engagement holds good only in time of peace whereas fortifications are useful only in time of war. He must also see that a pledge not to fortify the Strait would apply to the Hokkaido side as well as to the Saghalien side and would thus fetter Japan's action within her own original territory. Under any circumstances it is more than doubtful whether Japan would have thought of fortifying Soya. The Strait is 25 miles wide, and no guns now manufactured could command such passage.

Mr. OISHI further contends that some step should have been taken with regard to Vladivostock, but since he is careful to refrain from any attempt to define the step, we can not interpret his views. The opinion of experts, we think, will be that Vladivostock as her sole naval base in the Far East is of comparatively little use to Russia, and that to have made its dismantling and tion of peace would have been vexatious rather than beneficial on Japan's part.

These appear to be Mr. OISHI MASAMI's arguments. As to their value, opinions may differ, but as to whether they amount to a valid justification of the great outcry caused by this treaty among many Japanese, there can be only one opinion.

THE "JIJI SHIMPO."

IN a leading article published on the 10th instant the Jiji Shimpō takes exception to some remarks made in our columns on the morning of the 9th. Chiefly our contemporary objects that we criticized it for demanding the resignation of the Cabinet without awaiting the full official publication of the peace terms and without hearing the vindication of its policy which the Ministry will then doubtless offer. The Jiji observes that the Japan Mail itself has not hesitated to pronounce the treaty a great success on evidence not more complete than that which forms the basis of the Jiji's condemnation, and asks what principle of justice warrants one publicist in constructing a eulogy out of materials which are declared inadequate to serve another publicist for purposes of criticism. This protest is ingenious, but not, we think, conclusive. For while it may be quite reasonable to applaud results without awaiting any exposition of their necessity, it is not reasonable to punish their author without first listening to his vindication. We should not have had a word to say against the Jiji Shimpō had it confined its condemnation to ascertained facts and withheld its demand for the Ministry's dismissal until the whole story was before the public. But as well-informed people have long known and as even the man in the street now knows, every one of the Elder Statesmen and every one of the Cabinet Ministers approved the advisability of making peace immediately on the terms obtainable, and the consideration that such a weight of wisdom had been thrown into the scale ought to deter Japanese newspapers from denouncing the authors of the arrangement as though they were traitors to their country. What has also struck us as particularly singular is the critics' failure to explain what ought to have been done. As we understand their position they dissent from the idea of continuing the war, yet it can scarcely be contended that better terms could have been obtained without continuing it. The Jiji Shimpō affirms that nothing less than the capture of Vladivostok and the permanent occupation of the whole of Saghalien constitute, in its opinion, a thoroughly satisfactory conclusion of the war. But most assuredly these things could not have been secured without prosecuting the combat for a much longer period, and we thus arrive at the position, not that the terms obtained were inappropriate to the stage which Japan's victories had reached, but that the discussion of peace at that stage was premature. Such a question is eminently one for the country's statesmen and publicists to determine, nor would its discussion have been likely to excite any passionate resentment such as has been fomented, or at any rate largely accentuated, by the uncompromising condemnation of the press. So far as the Jiji Shimpō is concerned we have never intended to suggest that any direct responsibility rests on it for the unhappy events which have injured Tokyo's fair fame. Our charge is that whereas the public expect light and leading from the Jiji in every crisis, they have on this occasion found an unusual absence of such qualities. The Jiji hints very unequivocally that we foreigners are not competent judges since we can admire Japanese patience and magnanimity from a detached point of view and since it does not greatly touch us whether the necessary results have been achieved or have not been achieved. We beg to differ with our contemporary. There are many foreigners—and we count ourselves among the number—whose solicitude for Japan's welfare is not less than the solicitude of the Japanese themselves, and who therefore bring to the consideration of this question not less sentiment than our Tokyo contemporary itself does. But we are fully persuaded that the Jiji will join us in heartily condemning a great part of the utterances into which this incident has betrayed the press of the country, and in apprehending that the passion thus provoked may yet be responsible for some terrible outrage. Our contemporary explains that in advocating the resignation of the Ministry it suggests the only certain means of appeasing the people's anger, but we do not observe that it utters any censure of the instrument by which that anger has been fanned to a dangerous and unreasoning degree of incandescence.

THE YOKOHAMA SPECIE BANK.

The 51st semi-annual general meeting of the Yokohama Specie Bank was held at 3 p.m. on Sept. 9th. Mr. Yoshida, an official of the Imperial Treasury, Mr. Nagahama, an official of the Department of Finance, and eighty-five shareholders were present. Mr. Soma, president of the bank, made a speech as to the business during the first half year, after which the accounts were submitted to the shareholders, as follows:—

Gross income, including yen 529,922.308, balance brought from the previous account	8,340,221.409
Expenditures, etc.	6,230,500.701
	2,109,720.708

Out of the net profit, the following allotments were made:—

Ordinary reserve	220,000.00
Reserve for Silver fund	200,000.00
Dividend: yen 6 each for old, new and second new shares; yen 3 for third new shares	1,080,000.00
Balance, carried forward to next account	609,720.708

Mr. Soma, President of the Yokohama Specie Bank, in the course of his speech said:—

The year opened auspiciously by the capitulation of Port Arthur. Subsequently our forces won a glorious victory at Mukden and annihilated the Russian Navy in the battle of the Sea of Japan. In finance, the issue of the fourth and fifth domestic loans and the recent foreign loan amounting to 30 million pounds was a remarkable success. The prevailing tone of the economic world was in consequence enhanced and the commercial and industrial activity made manifest. The brisk trade in war materials caused a demand for money, with the result that the bank rate gradually advanced. But a greater portion of the money paid into the national coffer as taxes or loans, was spent at home as war expenses, and the money returned to the financial market, thus preventing the stringency of the latter. At the same time there was a marked activity in new business enterprises. Reviewing our foreign trade, the speaker said the exports during the terms under review amounted in value to 142,760,000 yen in round numbers and the imports to 286,460,000 yen. Compared with the corresponding period of last year, the exports showed an increase in cotton yarn, rossi silk, raw hemp, copper, and porcelain, but a decrease in habutaye, rice, tea, coal, and camphor, the total increase being only about 5,300,000 yen. The imports showed an increase in cotton, cotton and woollen goods, iron, machinery, hides, rice, barley, flour, and beans, and a slight decrease in sugar and coal. On the whole, the imports showed an increase of 103,820,000 yen. This was caused by the increased demand for war materials, by the importation made in order to anticipate the increase of duties, and by the commercial activity at home. The excess of the imports over exports amounting to 143,690,000 yen was unprecedented. In the export and import of precious metal, the exports amounted to 6,800,000 yen while the imports were 22,990,000 yen. This was due to the financial management in issuing the foreign loans, and paying the money thus obtained for the purchase of war materials, in addition to the importation of silver in bullion. Looking abroad, commerce and industry in Europe and America made fair progress, and China not only became accustomed to the circumstance in time of war, but owing to the spending of a large sum of money by both countries, the demand for merchandise increased. The sale of Japanese yarn was brisk. The trade in India also maintained its prosperity.

Since the outbreak of hostilities, the bank has found it necessary to keep a portion of its funds abroad. In order to accomplish this, the bank has purchased export bills and thus given facilities to the money market in connection with the export trade. On the other hand, we have been obliged to refuse facilities to our customers in relation to the import trade. During the term under review, the excess of the imports over exports, as already stated, caused much difficulty to the bank's business. But fortunately the issue of the foreign loans, the satisfactory condition of the export of silk and cotton yarn, and large subscriptions by the foreign capitalists to our public loans, benefited the exchange business. It is gratifying to note that the measures taken by the bank during this difficult period greatly facilitated the import trade especially in connection with the importation of cotton. And as both the imports and exports increased during the same term, the business of the bank also increased.

The net profit of the bank during the term was 2,109,720 yen, including 529,922 yen brought forward from the previous account. This sum shows an increase compared with that of the previous term. The details are mentioned in the business report before you.

In addition to the branch offices at Tairen and Liaoyang, which were opened during the previous term, we opened offices at Port Arthur and Chefoo during the term under review. The branch at Liaoyang, however, was subsequently closed, as the result of the further advance of our Manchurian Army, and a new one was opened at Mukden. During the latter half of the term, two more branches were opened, one at Tieling and the other at Osaka. The opening of these branches was due to the necessity caused by the development of the situation and the condition of trade. As the business of the bank in Manchuria increased, we felt it was necessary to have a man well acquainted with things Chinese. We therefore engaged Mr. Masunosuke Odagiri as Adviser and placed him in charge of the bank's business in that direction.

Now, the peace negotiations between Japan and Russia have been successfully concluded, and the great war, unprecedented in the history of the world, has been brought to an end. But the enterprises after the war are just as important as those during the war. Under the circumstances it is needless to say that this bank should carry out its business with circumspection and endeavour to contribute toward the well-management of the national finances. With your assistance, gentlemen, we must give this matter much consideration.—Japan Times.

Mr. Yoshida, Japanese Consul at Hankow, and several Japanese traders in that place have established a board of trade for the purpose of investigating Chinese commerce.

Original from

UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT
URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

OPENING OF A NEW TERM AT TOHOKU GAKUIN, SENDAI.

North Japan College (better known as the Tohoku Gakuin) in Sendai commenced the work of the second term on Monday, September 14th, by holding appropriate exercises in the large chapel of the fine new recitation hall on Higashi Nibancho, which has just been completed at a cost of over fifty thousand yen, and which is one of the best and finest equipped mission schools in the Empire at the present time. Professors and students, nearly 400 in number, formed in line at the old school buildings on Minamimachi-dori and marched by twos to the new hall. Prof. K. Sasao, Ph. D., presided at the opening exercises. The principal address was delivered by the President, Rev. D. B. Schneider, D. D., who recently returned from America. Rev. S. Miura, of Akita, followed with a stirring address.

The President announced the resignation of Dr. Sasao as dean of the General Course, and the election of Prof. S. Tanaka as his successor. Mr. Tanaka for several years has been professor of mathematics and also did excellent service as superintendent of the Industrial Home, which is carried on in connection with the school.

A new Japanese treasurer and four new teachers (one Japanese and three American) have been added to the working force. The foreign teachers are:—Rev. William G. Seiple, Ph. D.; Rev. Jesse J. Steiner and Miss Mary Gerhard. These three new foreign teachers have reached Japan during this present month.

Friends of the school greatly rejoice over the fine new plant—spacious buildings and grounds—and the excellent faculty. Never in the history of the school has the outlook been brighter.

DEATH OF DR. G. D. SMITH.

The Kobe Herald records the death of Dr. George D. Smith, of 56 Kitanocho, 4 chome, Kobe, who died on Monday after a prolonged period of ill health. The deceased gentleman, who was fifty-three years of age, was a member of a North of England family, but had resided for the greater part of his life at Edinburgh, where he took his M. D. in 1882, subsequently practising in that neighbourhood for many years. In the latter part of 1903, when Dr. Miller was about to leave Kobe for a long holiday, it was arranged that Dr. Smith, who was an old friend of Dr. Miller, should come out here to assist with that gentleman's practice, in the hope that the long voyage and change of scene might have a beneficial effect on Dr. Smith's health, which had been for some time in an unsatisfactory condition. This hope was to some extent realised, and Dr. Smith, who arrived here in December, 1903, was able to perform his medical duties with but little interruption up to March of this year, when his health unfortunately broke down. Not long ago he proceeded to Miyano-shita and thence to Karuizawa, where serious symptoms became apparent. He was consequently brought back here by Dr. Miller in a special train somewhat over a week ago. Mrs. Smith, who accompanied her husband to this country, is now at their residence at Kobe.

SHIPPING ACCIDENTS.

Owing to a storm, the steamer Pechili sank on Sept. 4th in the neighbourhood of Saddle Island on a voyage from Wakamatsu to Shanghai. All the crew except a Chinaman were saved.

The Hochi has a telegram dated Sept. 9th from London that the steamer Chatham has collided with another ship in the Suez Canal on her voyage to Yokohama and has sunk. Seventy tons of dynamite on board the Chatham exploded after the collision.

The steamer Alien which left Shanghai on Aug. 31st met with a typhoon on the following night. Having sustained severe damage she returned on Sept. 4th to her point of departure.

A London telegram of Sept. 2nd says that the turbine steamship Victorian, of the Allan Line, has stranded close to Quebec.

Chemulpo, Sept. 12th.—The Osaka Shosen Kaisha's steamer Anton Maru went ashore on Sept. 10th 10 miles off Chiku island on her way to Chemulpo. The crew and passengers were saved by the steamer Tokai Maru and brought on Sept. 12th to Chemulpo.

Shimonoseki, Sept. 12th.—An accident occurred yesterday to one of the boilers of the steamer Kanko Maru off Quelpart on her way from Dairen where she left on the 9th. Two firemen sustained injuries from which they died later. The steamer arrived here under her own steam.

BASEBALL.

The match between the Y.C. and A.C. and a combined team from the Waseda University and the Commercial School, arranged for Saturday afternoon, did not come off, the rumours of a probable political meeting later in the day at the same place evidently keeping the Japanese away. Instead a pick-up game between teams captained respectively by Messrs. Blake and Merriman took place and a very good exhibition of baseball resulted, in which errors in the field were remarkably few. Teams:

BLAKE.	MERRIMAN.
Weed.....	C.....Thorn.
Gonzales.....	P.....Correa.
Blake.....	1-B.....Miller.
Brown.....	2-B.....Merriman.
Jenks.....	3-B.....Mollison.
Atkinson.....	S.S.....Thompson.
Edwards.....	L.F.....Hearne.
Messer.....	C.F.....Tobin.
Worden.....	R.F.....Stornebrink.

Score by innings:—

	1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9	Total.
Blake.....	0	0	0	1	0	2	0	0	4	7
Merriman.....	1	4	1	0	1	2	1	1	11

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

On Sept. 14th, 433 invalids arrived in Tokyo from the front via Hiroshima.

A train was derailed on the morning of Sept. 13th at the Maidzuru railway station. No person was injured.

Mr. E. H. Harriman left Tokyo on Sept. 13th by the 7 p.m. train for Kyoto. He is expected to embark at Kobe for Korea.

The work of clearing Talien bay has been completed. The arrival and departure of steamers at night was permitted on Sept. 5th.

Mr. John Makins, after an absence of more than two years, has returned to Nagasaki and resumed charge of the C. E. Seaman's Home. It is hoped that his return means a new era of prosperity for the Home.

The Nippon Marine Insurance Co. of Osaka will hold a general meeting on Sept. 27th. The dividend for the first half year is reported to be at the rate of 10 per cent.

Mr. K. Otani sent a telegram on Sept. 13th, representing the Central Tea Guild, to Admiral Togo expressing profound regret with regard to the disaster to the flagship Mikasa.

Sept. 17th being the eleventh anniversary of the battle of the Yellow Sea, Naval officers will hold a dinner party in the evening, in the Suikoshia, Naval Club, Tsukiji, Tokyo.

According to the investigations made at the end of August by the Department of Finance, banks throughout the Empire number 2,258 and their capital amounts to yen 528,621,119.

At 10 a.m. on Sept. 13th, Count Katsura, the Premier, summoned the Governors throughout the Empire to his official residence and explained to them the Government's aims with regard to post bellum administration and the details of peace negotiations. The Ministers of State, Marquis Yamagata and Ito, Count Inouye, etc., were present.

The Empress of Japan on her last voyage was almost thirty hours late in arriving at Shanghai. According to reports brought by the Chenai, the Empress had a very trying experience in the typhoon, considerable damage having been done on deck.

The Privy Council held an extraordinary meeting on Sept. 11th before the Emperor. The Cabinet Ministers and some high officers were present. The conference is reported by Tokyo papers to be connected with affairs regarding the ratification of the peace treaty.

The Hokkaido Colliery and Railway Co. intends to raise abroad a loan of ten million yen. The negotiations are being conducted with a German syndicate. The interest is reported to be at the rate of 6 per cent. and the loan is to be redeemed within fifteen years.

It is reported by the Miyako that on the night of Sept. 11th, a conference was held by the Ministers of State in the Premier's official residence. As a result, Admiral Yamamoto, Minister for the Navy, and General Terauchi, Minister for the Army, are rumoured to have tendered their resignations.

The Department of Communication will shortly issue the 4th series of illustrated war commemoration post-cards. The cards are in four sets, each set consisting of three cards as follows: Port Arthur Set—The interview between Generals Nogi and Stoessel at Swishiyung; attack by the Japanese on East Keekwan-shan; and the explosion of the Sunshushan port. Shaho Set—Winter encampment on the Shaho; the headquarters of the 3rd Division at the back of Shaho; and the artillery operations in the battle. Mukden set—Marshal Oyama and Mukden castle after the battle of Mukden; the artillery operations in the district of Hsikan, and a snow-storm; the operations of infantry at various places along the Hun River, and a Japanese look-out station built on a tree. Fourth set—Field post and telegraph offices and railways at the front.

AMERICAN TOPICS.

Statistics of the railroads of the United States gathered by the Interstate Commerce Commission are interesting in many ways, but especially so the impression of magnitude that they convey of this gigantic industry. More than a million and a quarter persons are on the pay-rolls of the railroad companies of the United States. As a general occupation it is in the lead, and its opportunities as a vocation to men possessed of enterprise and ability are well understood. Nearly six thousand miles of additional lines were added to the system in 1904. This means a constantly increasing number of employes and many millions of dollars expended in equipment. As the report of the commission deals only with the last calendar year, what has been done in the way of development and extension in the first seven months of this very prosperous year still awaits the official compiling of statistics. Two hundred and twenty-two millions of dollars were paid by the railroads in dividends last year.

Commenting on the death of Archbishop Chapelle from yellow fever at New Orleans, the Outlook says—An infected mosquito must have transmitted the disease to him almost immediately upon his arrival. He literally received death on his way to help ward off death from the people of the city. His death, like that of General George E. Waring, is to be counted in the heavy cost which has been paid for the maintenance of unsanitary conditions. Like Colonel Waring, Archbishop Chapelle is to be numbered among those who have died for this country. The Most Rev. Placide Louis Chapelle was born in France sixty-three years ago this month. His first years as a priest were spent in Maryland. He was active in establishing the Catholic versity at Washington. Through his services as head of the Catholic Indian Missions he became Coadjutor and then Archbishop of Santa Fe. From that office he was transferred by Pope Leo XIII. to the archbishopric of New Orleans. His public services were very eminent. After the Spanish-American War Monsignor Chapelle was selected by the Roman See to attend the negotiations, and he was instrumental in settling the ecclesiastical questions involved. As Apostolic Delegate to the Philippines he represented the Roman Catholic Church in the settlement of the friars' land question. He also directed the affairs of his Church in Cuba and Porto Rico. He was more than an ecclesiastic; he was one of the foremost and probably the most widely known of the men of New Orleans.

The Bulletin of the American Iron and Steel Association reports that since December 31, 1904, there have been added to the active blast furnaces of the country one new charcoal and seven new coke stacks, with a total annual capacity of 926,500 tons of pig iron, of which 29,000 tons were charcoal and 897,500 tons were coke. During the first six months of 1905 the country lost seven furnaces, with a total annual capacity of 178,000 tons. This is a gain in furnaces of but one stack, but a gain in capacity of 748,500 tons. In the figures of gain no allowance has been made for furnaces which since the opening of 1905 have been built or reconstructed and their capacity increased. When completed the eleven building or revived furnaces, will have a combined annual capacity of about 1,033,000 tons. Possibly five of these furnaces, with an annual capacity of about 103,000 tons, will be ready for blast before the close of the last half of this year. The six remaining furnaces will not be completed and ready to blow in until after the opening of 1906, if then.

The New York Sun, in an editorial, declares that New York is the greatest purchasing municipality in the world—greater than London, which exceeds it in population, because London, within its own limits, is a producer as well as a consumer. It is greater than any other city, too, because the standard of living which prevails demands he supplies of all sections of the country under conditions unknown in other lands. Some of the items of these domestic products sent to New York are prodigious in amount, others seem less than the popular estimate might suppose. Last year, it is computed, New York City received 60,000 crates of American grapes, 2,000,000 lbs of butter, 2,000,000 barrels of apples, 125,000 ales of hops, 180,000 sacks of peanuts, 1,800,000 oxes of oranges, 100,000 barrels of molasses, 75,000 boxes of cherries, 250,000 boxes of raisins, 100,000 crates of pineapples, 8,000 cases of honey, 1,200,000 cases of cheese, 3,500,000 uses of eggs, 700,000 boxes of lemons, 175,000 barrels of oatmeal, 400,000 barrels of onions, 30,000 crates of plums, 3,000,000 barrels of potatoes, 300,000 barrels of rice and 300,000 packages of breakfast food.

"I am going abroad," said Charles M. Schwab last before his departure for Europe on August 5th, "to learn how to build the best ships in the world, and my trip at this time concerns itself with nothing else." He will visit the shipyards of France and of Germany, study their style and methods of construction and be back in America within three weeks. That will give him more than eleven "working days" in the French and German shipyards. He can learn much at that time, however—and he most certainly has lot to learn, especially, says the New York Commercial, if it is his plan, as reported, to reorganize shipyard properties acquired from the collapsed United States Shipbuilding Company and enter "to begin the most extensive campaign of shipbuilding ever inaugurated in this country." The seven plants of the unfortunate "trust" are bid in at receiver's sale by Mr. Schwab and the "upset" prices named by the court—doubted bargains in some instances. They comprised the Union Iron Works at San Francisco and the following at various points on the eastern seaboard: Hyde Windlass Company, Bath Iron Works, Nixon's Crescent Shipyard, Eastern Shipbuilding Company, the Harlan and Hollingsworth Company and the Canda Manufacturing Company—the last one the plant that was exploited in Wall Street as the concern that "makes all the portholes for the warships"! Two of these properties, those at Bath, have recently been brought back by the Hydies, the original owners, and other interests, and are now operated independently of Mr. Schwab; the Crescent Shipyard was too antiquated and moribund to be operated by the "trust," even, and it will no doubt be dismantled and sold for the price of the "old junk" in it; the Harlan and Hollingsworth plant is capable of operation; the Eastern at New London has been closed for a year—it was put up only to build the two big steamships for James J. Hill's Pacific service and was unloaded on to the "trust" by that far-scented bargain-hunter, "Ice-King" Morse; the Union plant is in fine condition and actively employed; the "porthole factory" over in Carteret is chiefly a piece of unimproved water-front.

"The sale by the state of Texas of 6,000,000 acres of land is by all odds the largest real-estate transaction made in this country since the sale by Georgia 100 years ago of the Yazoo tracts, and the last word concerning which was not heard for many a year," says the St. Louis Republic. "But those Georgia lands were sold to speculators, while the lands which Texas is offering will go in comparatively small lots to actual settlers. Texas is still the foremost state in the production of beef cattle, and her lead in cotton is away beyond the reach of successful rivalry. Taking one year with another, Texas grows from one-quarter to one-third of the entire cotton crop of the United States. Texas has about caught up with Illinois in railroad mileage, and is building more new track than any other state. Texas has taken the lead from South Carolina in the production of rice; it leads in lumber, and has enough good cotton lands to make 15,000,000 or 20,000,000 bales a year of that staple whenever the land is brought under the plow and the world wants cotton. Texas is not only big in area; she is fast growing to great bigness in population, wealth and industry. With not a single city of great size, Texas had by the last census nearly as many inhabitants as Missouri, and it has received many newcomers since."

The fact that Congress immediately after assembling will have to make an additional appropriation to continue the work of construction on the Isthmian Canal was made evident on Aug. 17th when the following statement was given out: "It was officially stated at Isthmian Canal Commission to-day that of the appropriation by Congress of $10,000,000 for the construction of the canal, there was, on April 1, 1905, the date on which the present commission took hold, an available balance to the credit of this appropriation of $7,426,568. During the month of April the expenditures from this appropriation aggregated $475,000; during May, $503,000; during June, $659,000; during July, $770,000, for wages, salaries, materials, supplies and equipment. During July there was an unusual expenditure for the purchase of two ships at $650,000 each, not included in the above. During the month of August, up to and including the 15th, $250,000 has been expended. This left to the balance of the appropriation on Aug. 15, $2,816,713, in addition to which each of the two disbursing officers had in hand $500,000 on that date. It will be seen from the foregoing that the average expenditure per month, leaving out of consideration the purchase of these two ships, is in the neighbourhood of $650,000, and at that rate of expenditure the $2,816,713 will last until early in January, which is, according to the schedule fixed by Mr. Shonts on April 1, when he became chairman of the commission."

A writer in Leslie's Weekly states that the eyes of the Pacific coast are on Nevada. It has been in the past the fortune of this Cinderella of the Union to give to her sister her rich and abundant products, leaving her only poorer and more dejected than before. Most of the $600,000,000 which the great Comstock mines at Virginia City, Nev., yielded went to enrich the splendour of California. Now the state is in the flush of a second awakening. There is excitement and industry from one end of the desert common-wealth to the other. The United States government has recently completed in that state the first of its great projects for the reclamation of arid lands. Various railroad enterprises are under way, but most important of all is the opening of new gold mines. The mining fever has increased the population of the state by many thousands within half a dozen years. One by one the new districts have been developed, and in a regular sequence that has furnished the evidence of a most remarkable and significant geological condition which has never before been fully appreciated. This is the existence of a well defined lode of gold ore extending from the northern to the southern part of the state and, perhaps, through Arizona into Sonora, Mexico, and now marked by a chain of rich mining camps. The lode lies parallel to the eastern slope of the Sierra Nevada mountains, just as the famous "Mother Lode" of California follows the Sierras on the western side.

A system of reciprocal concessions to be effected through the agency of a dual tariff is the plan proposed by the Chicago Reciprocity Convention for avoiding strain in American trade relations with foreign countries. In the resolutions adopted the convention declares that the agriculture, manufactures and other industries of America have expanded to such an extent that they can no longer depend upon the home market for the consumption of their entire product, and that the export trade has become a vital support to many industries. At the same time, it is urged, the present commercial attitude of the United States, owing largely to the failure to carry into effect the reciprocal trade provisions of section 4 of the Dingley law, is antagonizing foreign nations, whose goodwill we desire and on whom we have hitherto depended as purchasers of our surplus products. The convention recognizes the principle of protection as the established policy of the nation, but advocates immediate reciprocal concessions by means of a dual or maximum and minimum tariff as the only practicable method of relieving the situation confronting the country. It is suggested that the question of the schedules and items to be considered in making such concessions be dealt with by a permanent tariff commission, to be composed of economic, industrial and commercial experts. The suggestions of the convention seem likely to be heard from at the coming session of Congress; indeed, action by that body at the earliest time possible was urged, and organized effort to carry out the purposes of the convention was determined upon at Chicago."

THE "KINJO-MARU" DISASTER.

We take from the Kobe Herald the full finding of the British Naval Court of Inquiry into the Kinjo Maru-Baralong disaster:—

Finding and Order of a Naval Court held on board H.M.S. Anthomed, lying in the port of Kobe, on the eighth, ninth and eleventh days of September, 1905, to investigate the circumstances attending a collision between the British steamship Baralong of London, official number 14788, and the Japanese steamship Kinjo Maru, on the 22nd day of August, 1905, whereby serious damage was caused to the steamship Baralong and the steamship Kinjo Maru was sunk and loss of life was caused on board the said ship Kinjo Maru, and to investigate the cause of such damage and loss, and to enquire into the conduct of the Master, First Mate, Third Mate and crew of the said British steamship Baralong.

The Baralong was a steam vessel of 3660 tons registered tonnage, official number 14788, built at Newcastle-on-Tyne in 1901, and belonging to the port of London.

It appears from the evidence given before this Court that she sailed from Kobe at 5.30 p.m. on the 22nd August, 1905, bound for Moji with a general cargo and a crew of forty-seven hands all told, having on board a Japanese licensed pilot named Katsura Gensaburo, and proceeded through Akesima Seta and along the usual track through the Inland Sea. At about 5 p.m. they overtook and passed very slowly the British S.S. Goldmouth. All went well until about 10.18 p.m., when, the ship, then being off Hime Shima Light, bearing (magnetic) about S.S.E., 3 miles, a red light was sighted about two points on the starboard bow; this being considered to be a sailing vessel's light, it was considered (the weather being at the time perfectly calm) that the Baralong could pass ahead of that vessel, but shortly after the light was sighted a short blast on a whistle was heard in the direction of that light. The helm was at once put hard a-port and the engine reversed full speed astern and three short blasts signal given. At 10.33 the Baralong struck the vessel (which proved to be the S.S. Kinjo Maru), on the port side and apparently about 15 feet from the stern. The Master of the Baralong put the engines slow ahead with a view of checking the ingress of water into the Kinjo Maru, but finding the latter was sinking very rapidly he ordered full speed astern. Four of the Baralong's boats were lowered and succeeded in rescuing 43 men, these four being the only boats that could be manned on a sudden emergency.

The Baralong was anchored and the boats searched the vicinity till 3 a.m. of 23rd Aug. At daylight the Baralong weighed and proceeded to cruise about searching for survivors. At 8 a.m., seeing nothing, the ship shaped course for Kobe where the accident was reported to the proper authorities.

The steamer Goldmouth, that was about a mile astern of the Baralong, stopped and anchored near the scene of the accident, lowered boats and assisted in search for survivors, but did not find any, and at daylight weighed and looked round, at 11 a.m. proceeded on her voyage to Moji.

The Court, having regard to the circumstances above stated and to the fact that, owing to the non-attendance of the Master of the Kinjo Maru in spite of sufficient notice having been given requesting that he would voluntarily oblige by doing so, they have only heard the evidence on one side, but on that evidence they find the accident was caused by the S.S. Kinjo Maru having no masthead light showing, and that under these circumstances the Master, Edward Deason Jenkins, the Third Officer Alan Vawdrey Coutts, and pilot, Katsura Gensaburo, of the Baralong, are not responsible for the accident.

The court find (a) that a proper lookout was kept on board the S.S. Baralong; (b) that side lights, masthead and stern lights of the Baralong were burning brightly; (c) that the weather was clear and that any vessel's light, if in good condition and well trimmed, would have been seen the full distance, as required by Article 2 (a, b, c), of the Regulations for preventing collision; (d) that the Court upholds the decision of the Master and pilot of the Baralong to leave the red light on their starboard hand, supposing the vessel to be a sailing vessel becalmed; (e) That on hearing the steamer's whistle, viz. one short blast (as indicating the vessel was altering her course to starboard), the action taken by the Baralong, viz. putting the helm hard a-port and reversing the engines full speed astern, was the best that could be taken under the circumstances; (f) That as soon as the collision had occurred, everything was done by the Master, officers, and crew of the Baralong to save life, and that the ship only left the scene of the accident after further search for survivors was hopeless. The Court desires to express their high appreciation of the prompt manner in which the boats of the Baralong were lowered and to record the fact that the First Officer, Hubert Douglas Tarver, deserves great credit for having so well carried out his duties.

The Court wish to mention the creditable conduct of the Master, officers and crew of the steamer Goldmouth in rendering all assistance.

The Court, in pursuance of the powers vested in it by section 483 of 57 and 58 Vict. C. 60, orders that the sum of £18,200, being the costs of the proceedings before the said Court, be paid by Edward Deason Jenkins, Master of the steamship Baralong, being one of the parties thereto, and he is hereby ordered to pay the said amount accordingly.

The expenses of this court, fixed at £18,200, are approved.

Dated at Kobe this eleventh day of September, 1905.
(Sd.) R. Nelson Oimanne, Captain in H. M. Navy, President.
(Sd.) John B. Rentiers, H. M. S. Vice-Consul, Kobe.
(Sd.) J. Frank Robbins, Lieutenant in H. M. Navy, H. M. S. Andromeda.
(Sd.) H. C. Barcham, Master of the British S.S. Corn Exchange.
(Sd.) C. E. Cox, Master of the British S.S. Ascot.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE TOKYO RIOTS—A CORRECTION.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

DEAR SIR,—I notice that the newspaper reports of the recent disturbances in Tokyo state that the attack on the Christian Churches seems to have originated in a speech delivered at Asakusa Park by a Salvation Army Captain and that in consequence our quarters at Kurofune-cho, and afterwards various Churches were attacked.

Apparently someone has mistaken the members of some other body for Salvationists. The open air meeting in Asakusa Park had no connection whatever with the Salvation Army, there were no Salvationists at this meeting, neither have we any Salvation Army meeting place or quarters in Kurofune-cho. As a matter of fact all our officers in Tokyo had, even before the receipt of instructions to that effect, suspended their open-air and other meetings so as to avoid any chance of misunderstanding.

Yours faithfully,

CHARLES DUCE,
Chief Secretary.

"EXEMPTION FROM RATES."

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—I have the pleasure to enclose you a short newspaper extract bearing the above heading which reached me from London yesterday. It will not, I fancy, be without interest to some of your readers—especially those who will recognise in the decision given by the Lord Chancellor a principle analogous in many respects to that in the recent House Tax Arbitration. The italicised portions of the summing are my own.

Trusting you will be able to spare space for the insertion of this paragraph in your columns.

I remain, Sir, Yours faithfully,

A.G.M.W.

Yokohama, 13th September, 1905.

The Mayor, Commonalty, and Citizens of the City of London v. the Netherlands Steamboat Company. —The Netherlands Steamboat Company occupy premises on the banks of the Thames in Aldinholms, Barking, in the city of London, and the question in this appeal was whether they were bound to pay a certain consolidated rate made by the authorities of the city in respect of their premises. The point in dispute turned upon the construction to be placed on an Act of Geo. III., and another in 1819. The Court of Appeal, partly reversing a decision of the Divisional Court, gave judgment in favour of the respondents in regard to certain exemptions from rates which they claimed, hence the present appeal.

The Lord Chancellor said that in 1812 the Government was minded to build a new custom house, the old one, which was situated in Old Thames-street, being decayed and unfit for its purpose. In order to do this they pulled down the old custom house, and, under the powers of an Act of Parliament, purchased more land for the same purpose. The custom house, as it then existed, was not liable to rates at all, as it was Crown property, but the other land purchased by the Government was rateable. The Government, however, in view of the hardship upon the ratepayers in the district, voluntarily paid the sum of £220 12s. 10½d. every year in respect of the then existing custom house, and other premises contiguous to or connected therewith. His Lordship said that the Government were to pay other fixed sums, which were to be a perpetual payment every year in lieu of rates, and a section of the Act declared that after the custom house was completed it should be deemed and considered free and exempt from all manner of rates and assessments, although the same might become private property by the assignment of it to individuals. Surely, if the payment was to be perpetual, so was the immunity from rates. One did not understand what could be the object of the whole arrangement, including a commuted sum to be payable for all time, if the land was still to be liable to have fresh taxes assessed upon it. For these and other reasons, which his Lordship gave, he said that he thought the judgment of the Court of Appeal was right, and that the appeal should be dismissed.

Lords Davey, James of Hereford, and Robertson took the same view.

The appeal was accordingly dismissed.
Mr. Danckwerts, K.C., Mr. Cave, K.C., and Mr. Glen (instructed by Sir Homewood Crawford) appeared for the appellants; and Mr. Macmonnan, K.C., Mr. Ivory, K.C., and Mr. Roskill, K.C. (instructed by Messrs. Pritchard and Sons) for the respondents.

YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION ARMY WORK.

LIAOYANG.—The following paragraphs are taken largely from a recent report from Mr. S. Otsuka, who holds the double position of Secretary at Liaoyang and Field Secretary for the work in Manchuria. "Relations between our organization and the military officials are increasingly close and cordial. These officers not only do not hinder our work, but have afforded us much satisfaction by giving prompt and favourable consideration to all our requests and petitions. For example it happened the other day when we were planning to erect bulletin boards at certain places with a view to advertising our location etc., that a certain aid-de-camp himself selected sites suitable for this purpose and ordered his men to attend to the erecting of the bulletin boards. A certain special sergeant-major of gendarmes said: "Yam work is a very powerful instrument for reforming disorderly soldiers and whenever I have occasion to rebuke men for misbehaviour I always tell them of my acquaintance with the Association work and seek the pleasures of a pure and ennobling kind. The result is that since adopting this practice I rarely have occasion to twice register the same name in my books." Another sergeant of gendarmes told us that he was accustomed to advise them to attend his lectures and addresses at the Association, thinking he said that "The Association is much better qualified to give advice and instruction than such men as I who have not much to give in the way of things intellectual or moral." Again a certain company commander said that as far as the men of the neighbourhood were concerned he found no need of giving the customary moral instruction and that he relieved him of a great deal of trouble. These are only a few instances out of many and there are even cases where men come to inquire how best to discipline their men.

"As has been reported, the authorities at Liaoyang provided the Association a part of a large building, which is well located for the work. It was also found, however, that the quarters were far too small, and the work was greatly handicapped thereby. The remaining part of the building, which was occupied by soldiers, has since been vacated and the entire building put at the disposal of the Association. Mr. Otsuka writes: "We have thus been able to make a satisfactory re-arrangement in accordance with the needs of the work. The barber's shop which has been all too small has been moved to adequate sanitary quarters. We now have a correspondence room so cool and comfortable that visitors fly with overflowing gratitude. 'Oh, in such a place as this we can write as many letters as we may wish! We are now able to provide a parlour also and the walls of the reading room have been attractively decorated with pictures cut from magazines sent from the Association headquarters. This last is a very agreeable feature and hence the men wander around and gaze upon the strange and interesting pictures."

The secretaries at Liaoyang felt increased, as have the secretaries at other places, the need of a loan library, and bought from Dalny some more than sixty volumes of wholesome novels and stories. So eager are the soldiers for reading that rarely is even a single volume left in the room. In view of the scarcity of books, the secretaries have been obliged to make most stringent regulations. Many hundreds of books could be used to great advantage.

The increasing heat of July and August presents a great thirst among the soldiers and the need of a kettle in which was always found a good supply of "barley tea," was in constant demand. One afternoon a soldier was heard to say to some one: "Hello, let us have a drink. The Christian men you know, very famous." They all trooped in and drank deep with boisterous bluster and loud expressions of, "Oh my, nothing like it anywhere else!" Occasionally on hot evenings the Association served icecream to the officers. As this is the ice cream freezer in Liaoyang, it is not seldom that the commissary department has borrowed the useful apparatus, and in the minds of certain of the Association is closely identified with them. The demand at Liaoyang as elsewhere has not been large inroads on the supplies which are constantly being sent in. The head of the Commissary department in Manchuria, seeing how various supplies are going out to the soldiers, said: "In the world do you manage to keep a continuous supply in the face of such a tremendous and continuous demand?" From the department of military administration at Liaoyang certain supplies have been contributed for use of the Association. Among these are thirty lbs. of Russian butter, boxes of shoe blacking, 430 boxes of button polish.

Rev. T. Honi and Mr. A. Miyake, the two travelling secretaries attached to Liaoyang, are gladly supplied by the Liaoyang staff headquarters with permission to visit at pleasure any garrison of the river Hun, which marks the boundary of jurisdiction of this section. The extent of the work at Liaoyang may be recognized if it is understood that from this as a centre not only the hospitals at Liaoyang but twenty-seven hospital and nursing points in that section are visited by these two secretaries. Considering the monotony and hardships experienced by the men in the hospitals and the garrison points, it was not surprising to learn that the enthusiasm of the soldiers knows no bounds on occasion of the visits of these secretaries. The religious and evangelistic work at Liaoyang is one of the marked features. It was expected that open-air meetings in a square near the building, the rain of July interfered with this plan. The average attendance for the week day religious evening has been 240. The attendance at the class has averaged eighty-five. Each Bible class session is followed by a prayer meeting, the usual number to remain for which is about twelve. At the Sunday service the attendance has been well sustained at about 260. This attendance has continued despite the hot weather. One Sunday morning in July there was a very solemn communion and baptismal service at the Association led by Pastor Hon. A military telegraph operator was baptized and there were eight Christian soldiers present at what was probably the first communion ever held exclusively in behalf of Japanese at Liaoyang.

NEWCHATUNG.—Early in August, the secretaries desiring to give a farewell entertainment to a large body of troops who were leaving for the front organized a special farewell concert. A committee of soldiers being enlisted, a really meritorious programme was arranged entirely from amateur talent, 2500 soldiers being gathered in the open space in front of the building to enjoy the event. The officials seeing how largely the Association is meeting the needs of the soldiers as a social, recreational and moral centre, have been showing their desire to co-operate in making the fullest possible use of this agency. The commandant sent to the Association the necessary materials and laborers for having a wrestling ring put in, which has been largely used by the men as a part of their evening athletic exercises. A party of wrestlers who were traveling through Manchuria giving exhibitions for the soldiers were sent to the Association by the authorities to give a three days' exhibition. One of the best military bands in Manchuria having been brought from a considerable distance to be present at the anniversary of the Japanese occupation of Yingkow, were sent directly to the Association where they gave several entertainments.

Rev J. G. Dunlop after four months of effective service at Newchatung sailed on August 8th for Japan. Before sailing it was the privilege of Mr. Dunlop to baptize two of the many soldiers he had come into contact with in Gospel meetings, Bible classes and personal work. One of these was an engineer who came to the building in his oily overalls, having just an hour before his transport sailed. Before leaving for home, Mr. Dunlop was granted permission to visit the Associations at Liaoyang, Tairen and Port Arthur, returning to Newchatung for only a few hours before sailing. One soldier desiring to receive baptism before leaving for the front and learning that Mr. Dunlop was expected, waited at the building four hours for his arrival. Mr. Dunlop at last reaching the building and baptizing the man just one hour before his departure for the north.

TAIREN.—(Dafny) Owing to the limited quarters available at Tairen and the pressure in the city, which makes larger quarters unavailable, the Army Committee has invested ¥800 in repairs and enlargement of the present building. The enlargement consists chiefly of a temporary auditorium connected with the building and capable of seating 300 men. This has been greatly needed from the fact that the Gospel and evangelistic meetings have been one of the most prominent features of the Dafny work, meetings being held every night in the week. The new auditorium is frequently filled and often overflowing. The larger facilities for meetings seem also to have increased the number of men who come to the building to take advantage of the regular privileges provided. Certain bodies of troops having passed through Tairen on route to certain positions, the secretaries were overwhelmed with almost 3,000 of the newly arrived troops coming to the building in a body. This will indicate something of the opportunities in the work in Tairen when soldiers will be passing through by tens of thousands on their return to Japan.

APPRECIATION BY GENERAL G. KODAMA.—General Kodama after visiting and inspecting the Association Eiryo has sent the following expression of appreciation to the Association headquarters:

Eiryo, July 19th, 1905.

"I have personally seen the arrangement and equipment of your army department and express hearty thanks for your most gracious kindness.

(Signed) KODAMA GENTARO,
Chief of General Staff of Manchurian Armies."

THE EFFECTS OF PEACE.—The coming of peace is open to the Association a far larger opportunity than it has yet experienced. This opportunity will be in connection with supplying wholesome and useful social, intellectual and moral recreation and occupation to the men during the weeks of almost unbearable monotony before the troops can be returned to Japan, and in giving them special courtesies and assistance at the points of departure in Manchuria on arrival in Japan. The Army Committee of the Association has been for months considering what would be wise to do in the eventuality of peace, and some are already well formulated for meeting the present condition.

TELEGRAMS.

(REUTERS' SPECIAL SERVICE.)

THE PEACE TREATY.

London, September 7.

THE PEACE TREATY WAS SIGNED ON SEPT. 5. TARTARS AND ARMENIANS BATTLE AT BAKU.

There has been a battle at Baku since Saturday between Tartars and Armenians. Up to the present about a hundred have been killed and wounded. Troops are engaged.

THE SIGNING OF THE TREATY.

Later.

A salute was fired at the Navy Yard in Portsmouth to announce the signing of the Peace Treaty. The church bells at Newcastle and Portsmouth were rung and flags were hoisted everywhere. After signing the treaty Barons Rosen and Komura made cordial speeches, hoping the two countries would remain friends. The Envoys shook hands.

THE BRITISH SQUADRON IN THE BALTIC.

The Channel Squadron has sailed from Danzig. Admiral Wilson wired his thanks to the Kaiser. The local press is full of praise for the conduct of the bluejackets. German soldiers and sailors participated in the funeral of a boatswain, who had been killed by accident.

MOROCCO APOLOGISES.

London, September 8.

Morocco has acceded to all the French demands, publicly apologizing for her conduct.

SERIOUS DEVELOPMENTS IN THE CAUCASUS.

The situation in the Caucasus becomes more alarming as it continues, hundreds of persons being shot by the infantry and artillery. At Balakhana, near Baku, a thousand persons were killed during a desperate attack on the military camp and provision depot there.

Sir Charles Hardinge, British Ambassador at St. Petersburg, has sent an urgent note to Count Lamsdorff and has also telegraphed to the Viceroy of the Caucasus, requesting that protection be given to British lives and property.

PROFESSOR MARTENS' ON RUSSIA'S FUTURE.

Later.

Interviewed after the signing of the treaty of peace, Professor Martens, a member of the Russian mission, said that Russia would not brood over the past, but should gather all her forces for a new struggle, not on the battlefield, but on the fields of social and political progress.

NO SECRET ARRANGEMENT.

At St. Petersburg it is authoritatively stated that Russia has made no secret arrangement whatever with Japan.

DISMISSAL OF NEBOGATOFF AND OFFICERS.

An Imperial Ukase dismisses and degrades Admiral Nebogatoff and the captains of the battleships Nicolai I., Semivarin and Apriaxine, who are liable to the Russian naval penal code.

Other officers, including those of the Orel, are to be tried by court-martial when they return to Russia.

THE FAMINE IN RUSSIA.

London, Sept. 9.

The first sitting of the Russian ministerial conference has been held in St. Petersburg to consider measures for the relief of the famine-stricken provinces. The Ministers recommended that the Treasury assign four millions sterling to purchase cereals.

VIOLENT EARTHQUAKE IN ITALY.

Later.

A violent earthquake has been experienced in Italy, particularly in the province of Calabria. Three hundred and forty-seven people have been killed and more than a dozen towns and villages have been partially wrecked. Pizzo, Morteleone, and Martirano, in the south of the province, have been almost completely destroyed.

THE RISING AT BALAKHANA.

Four British subjects are besieged by the mob in a house at Balakhana, near Baku, and the Governor of Baku declares that he is powerless to help.

London, Sept. 10.

The latest telegrams from the Caucasus are vague and confused. It is impossible to say whether the rising is spreading or subsiding. Against reassuring official telegrams there are private telegrams recounting wholesale massacres of Armenians.

It appears that the four British subjects at Balakhana have been either shot or perished in the flames.

London, September 10.

The Armenian Bishop of Shusha telegraphs an appalling account of the devastation there. The town is a mass of ruins. The fighting between the Tartars and the Armenians lasted five days. Hundreds were killed and wounded and were left lying where they fell. The streets appear like streets of the dead. Thousands are starving.

It is estimated that the actual destruction of the oil industry at Baku involves the direct loss of twenty millions sterling, while it will require several millions to restore the place to working order. Besides this immense losses will be sustained by the Russian industries using naphtha fuel.

THE ITALIAN EARTHQUAKE.

The Italian Government is taking special measures to relieve the terrible distress caused by the earthquake. Soldiers laboured unceasingly in the work of rescue. Thousands have been rendered homeless and the mortality is still undetermined.

London, September 11.

The latest reports concerning the earthquake in Italy show that there are three hundred dead at Pargheli; two hundred at Jappo; two hundred killed and injured at Marterano.

Fresh shocks were experienced at Liggio, (Reggio?) Calabria yesterday.

SUDDEN ILLNESS OF BARON KOMURA.

Baron Komura has been taken suddenly ill with intestinal trouble. All his engagements in New York have been postponed. The physicians say that an operation will probably be unnecessary.

TERRIBLE SCENES IN ITALY.

Later.

The Italian Minister of Public Works proceeded to Calabria with the relief train. The country is described as one vast cemetery. Whole villages have been wiped out. Putrefying corpses litter the ground. A demoralized populace mobbed the train, clamouring for help. Fissures miles in length are visible.

HOW THE RUSSIAN ARMY RECEIVED THE NEWS.

There is jubilation among the Russians in Manchuria at the announcement of peace. President Roosevelt is everywhere toasted. The soldiers, apprehensive of the situation at home, prefer to remain in Manchuria.

ASSISTING IRELAND.

Mr. Long, Chief Secretary for Ireland, announces that the Treasury have agreed to provide an additional amount of £12,000,000 sterling by the end of 1906 for the purposes of the Irish Land Purchase Act.

BARON KOMURA.

London, Sept. 12.

Baron Kaneko has been entertained by President Roosevelt at a farewell luncheon. He predicted an economic and commercial alliance between Japan and America.

RAILWAY ACCIDENT IN NEW YORK.

A crowded train has been derailed on the New York elevated railway. One of the cars fell into the street. Ten persons were killed and thirty injured.

THE BAKU MASSACRES.

London, September 13.

Despatches from Baku yesterday afternoon show that the situation is growing worse every minute. The town is full of troops who have practically destroyed eight quarters with artillery. Tartars and Kurds are still plundering landed proprietors.

Prince Kitsvanoff has been assassinated at Gori, in the Tiflis district.

A Conference of leading naphtha firms are memorializing the Tsar, declaring that they can not attempt to resume the industry unless solid guarantees are given them of adequate protection.

Later.

Mounted Persian Kurds continue to join the Tartars in massacring and pillaging Armenian villages. Horrible atrocities are being perpetrated.

THE PEACE COMMISSIONERS.

London, September 14.

The Russian Peace Commissioners have sailed from New York.

Baron Komura starts on Thursday in spite of his illness.

AUSTRO-HUNGARIAN TROUBLES.

The Hungarian Cabinet has resigned owing to the Emperor's refusal to allow universal suffrage.

(RECEIVED AT THE FOREIGN OFFICE)

RUSSIAN APPOINTMENTS.

Grand Duke Nicolaivitch has been appointed honorary president of the Imperial Council, and Count Sorsky (?) has been appointed Vice-President of the same.

BARON KOMURA'S ILLNESS.

Baron Komura having been ailing for some days was examined by a doctor, who diagnosed a cold causing inflammation of the gall bladder with defective circulation of the gastric juices, and consequent loss of appetite. He prescribed a few days' quiet and administered treatment which would restore health within a few days. But as the fever did not diminish, the Baron called in a specialist on the 11th inst. The latter said the origin of the illness was obscure but that analysis of the blood showed serious inflammation which rendered it quite impossible for the patient to set out on a long journey within the next two or three days. If he did so the step would be suicidal. Baron Komura therefore, on the 12th inst, summoned another renowned specialist to his hotel and had himself examined. He was determined to set out for home whatever the doctors might say, but he may be unable to do so, in which case Mr. Takahira may proceed to Japan in his stead to report the result of the peace conference to the Emperor.

MAIL STEAMERS.

NEXT MAIL IS DUE.

From	Line	Steamer	Date
Hongkong	P. M. Co.	Korea	Fa Sept 16
Vancouver	C. P. R. Co.	Yan. of China	M Sept 18
Hongkong	O. & D. Co.	Coptic	F Sept 18
Hongkong	C. P. R. Co.	Taylor	F Sept 18
America	P. M. Co.	China	Sa Aug 23
Europe	N. D. Lloyd	Bayern	Sa Sept 23
Europe	D. T. Co.	Shawmut	Sa Sept 24
Europe	B. M. Co.		W Sept 27
Hongkong	C. P. R. Co.	Km. of Japan	Tu Sept 29
Hongkong	B. T. Co.	Izumi	Tu Sept 29
Vancouver	C. P. R. Co.	Athenian	Sa Oct 7
America	P. M. Co.	Manchuria	F Oct 13

- 1 Left Nagasaki on the 14th inst.
- 2 Left Vancouver on the 4th inst.
- 3 Left Hongkong on the 14th inst.
- 4 Left San Francisco on the 4th inst.
- 5 Left Hongkong on the 14th inst.
- 6 Left Seattle on the 6th inst.

NEXT MAIL LEAVES

For	Line	Steamer	Date
Europe	N. D. Lloyd	Recon	Fa Sept 16
America	P. M. Co.	Korea	Sa Sept 17
Hongkong	C. P. R. Co.	Yan. of China	M Sept 18
Portland	P. & A. Co.	Argonia	Tu Sept 19
Shanghai	N. Y. K.	Asahi	W Sept 20
Europe	B. M. Co.	Polynesia	Sa Sept 23
America	O. & D. Co.	Coptic	F Sept 18
Vancouver	C. P. R. Co.	Taylor	Sa Sept 23
Seattle	N. Y. K.	Kanagawa Maru	Tu Sept 24
Hongkong	P. & A. Co.	Numantia	Sa Sept 24
Hongkong	P. M. Co.	China	M Sept 25
Hongkong	B. T. Co.	Shawmut	M Sept 25
Vancouver	C. P. R. Co.	Yan. of Japan	F Sept 29
Europe	B. T. Co.	Izumi	F Sept 29
Hongkong	C. P. R. Co.	Athenian	Sa Oct 7
Hongkong	P. M. Co.	Manchuria	Sa Oct 7

LATEST SHIPPING.

ARRIVALS.

Windsor, British steamer, 1,853, John B. Booth, 7th Sept.—Sakata, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Bernorlich, British steamer, 2,164, W. Thomson, 8th Sept.—Shanghai via ports, Mails and General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Oro, British steamer, 2,147, W. Ransome Coleman, 8th Sept.—Otaru via ports, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Suzuki, British steamer, 3,174, A. W. Dobbs, 8th Sept.—London via ports and Nagasaki, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Victoria, Swedish steamer, 989, J. Hellberg, 8th Sept.—Formosa, General.—Osaka Shosen Kaisha.

Swanley, British steamer, 2,908, D. P. Dawson, 8th Sept.—Antwerp via ports, General.—Dodwell & Co., Ltd.

Silesia, German steamer, 3,138, Bahle, 9th Sept.—Hamburg via ports, and Shanghai, 5th Sept., General.—C. Illies & Co.

Barotze, British steamer, 2,619, A. Lee, 9th Sept.—London via ports, and Kobe, 7th Sept., General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Satsuma, British steamer, 2,690, W. Chubb, 9th Sept.—New York via Suez and ports, and Kobe, 8th Sept., General.—Dodwell & Co., Ltd.

Chenan, British steamer, 1,350, H. E. Laver, 10th Sept.—Shanghai via ports, Mails and General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Resolut, Norwegian steamer, 865, Jorgesen, 10th Sept.—Mojji, Coal.—Japanese.

Nubia, British steamer, 3,824, F. F. Fox, 11th Sept.—London via ports, and Kobe, 10th Sept., General.—P. & O. S.N. Co.

Eidsvold, Norwegian steamer, 2,292, H. Trovik, 11th Sept.—Melbourne via Yap Island, Hay and Oats.—Samuel Samuel & Co.

Greenwich, British steamer, 1,836, B. Cobb, 12th Sept.—Muran, Coal.—Hokkaido Tanko Kaisha.

Belgian King, British steamer, 2,123, J. Hayton, 12th Sept.—Otaru via ports, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Mongolia, American steamer, 8,700, W. P. S. Porter, 12th Sept.—San Francisco via Honolulu, 26th Aug., Mails and General.—P. M. S.S. Co.

Breconshire, British steamer, 2,323, G. E. Elliott, 12th Sept.—Kobe, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Polynesia, French steamer, 2,916, Broc, 12th Sept.—Marseilles via ports, and Kobe 11th Sept., Mails and General.—M. M. S. S. Co.

Roon, German steamer, 5,013, G. Meiners, 12th Sept.—Hamburg and Bremen via ports, and Kobe, 11th Sept., Mails and General.—H. Ahrens & Co., Nachf.

Pallux, Norwegian steamer, 780, C. Svendsen, 13th Sept.—Yokkaichi, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Timahi, Dutch steamer, 2,476, N. de Brouwer, 14th Sept.—Macassar via ports, and Kobe, 12th Sept., General.—Ed. L. van Nierop & Co.

Peleus, British steamer, 4,800, J. Barwise, 14th Sept.—Glasgow and Liverpool via ports, and Kobe, 13th Sept., General.—Butterfield & Swire.

Gaule, Norwegian steamer, 942, Weidemann, 14th Sept.—Antwerp via ports, General.—Ed. L. van Nierop & Co.

Kilburn, British steamer, 2,111, E. Le Temple, 14th Sept.—Kobe, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Braemar, British steamer, 2,316, S. L. Saxby, 14th Sept.—Otaru via ports, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

DEPARTURES.

Iyo Maru, Japanese steamer, 3,918, Wm. Thompson, 8th Sept.—Seattle, Wash., via Victoria, B.C. Mails and General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Wilehad, German steamer, 3,012, E. H. Obermer, 8th Sept.—Sydney via ports, Mails and General.—H. Ahrens & Co., Nachf.

Teucer, British steamer, 1,803, A. Stebens, 8th Sept.—Kobe, General.—Osaka Shosen Kaisha.

Cape Corrientes, British steamer, 1,660, Jas. Labadie, 8th Sept.—Shanghai via ports, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Yangtze, British steamer, 4,149, W. C. Lyon, 10th Sept.—Genoa, Marseilles via ports, General.—Butterfield & Swire.

Orestes, British steamer, 2,992, T. Chrimes, 9th Sept.—Java, Ballast.—Butterfield & Swire.

Watanoura Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,556, J. Akawa, 9th Sept.—Otaru via ports, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Ernest Simons, French steamer, 2,162, Aillard, 9th Sept.—Marseilles via ports, Mails and General.—M. M. S.S. Co.

Bernorlich, British steamer, 2,164, W. Thomson, 9th Sept.—Shanghai via ports, Mails and General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Auchenblae, British steamer, 2,597, Geo. Macgregor, 9th Sept.—Mojji, Ballast.—Dodwell & Co., Ltd.

Anna, Norwegian steamer, 779, Olaf Osen, 9th Sept.—Kobe, General.—Osaka Shosen Kaisha.

Breid, Norwegian steamer, 645, J. Folkmar, 9th Sept.—Wakamatsu, Ballast.—Drabble & Co.

Rosford, British steamer, 1,930, M. H. Scott, 10th Sept.—Port Townsend via Muroran, Ballast.—Dodwell & Co., Ltd.

Dagued, Norwegian steamer, 788, S. Steensen, 10th Sept.—Kuchinosu, Ballast.—Drabble & Co.

Oro, British steamer, 2,147, W. Ransome Coleman, 10th Sept.—Kobe via Yokkaichi, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Carl Mensell, German steamer, 984, G. Carner, 10th Sept.—Mojji, Ballast.—Simon Evers & Co.

Woodford, British steamer, 1,860, Jas. Seddon, 10th Sept.—Muran, General.—Hokkaido Tanko Kaisha.

Hounslovo, British steamer, 1,860, H. Adshard, 10th Sept.—Kobe, General.—Taninichi & Co.

Radnorshire, British steamer, 1,889, J. M. P. H. 11th Sept.—Hongkong via Mojji, Ballast.—Samuel & Co.

Bengloe, British steamer, 1,933, H. W. Ben, 11th Sept.—London and Antwerp via ports, General.—Cornes & Co.

Rickmer Rickmers, German barque, 1,239, F. Schwegmann, 11th Sept.—Bankok, Siam, Ballast.—Standard Oil Co.

Mabel Rickmers, German ship, 1,895, H. Schermann, 11th Sept.—Bankok, Siam, Ballast.—Standard Oil Co.

Ceylon, British steamer, 2,637, C. F. Lockstone, 11th Sept.—London and Antwerp via ports, General.—P. & O. S.N. Co.

Antenor, British steamer, 3,503, R. Williams, 11th Sept.—London, Amsterdam and Antwerp via ports, General.—Butterfield & Swire.

Victoria, Swedish steamer, 989, J. Hellberg, 12th Sept.—Kobe, General.—Osaka Shosen Kaisha.

Satsuma, British steamer, 2,690, W. Chubb, 12th Sept.—New York via ports, and Suez, General.—Dodwell & Co., Ltd.

Windsor, British steamer, 1,853, John B. Booth, 12th Sept.—Hakodate via Oginohama, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Silesia, German steamer, 3,138, Bahle, 13th Sept.—Havre and Hamburg via ports, General.—C. Illies & Co.

Resolut, Norwegian steamer, 865, Jorgesen, 12th Sept.—Hakodate, Ballast.—Japanese.

Chenan, British steamer, 1,350, H. E. Laver, 12th Sept.—Shanghai via ports, Mails and General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Mongolia, American steamer, 8,700, W. P. S. Porter, 14th Sept.—Hongkong via ports, Mails and General.—P. M. S.S. Co.

Belgian King, British steamer, 2,123, J. Hayton, 12th Sept.—Kobe, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

LATEST COMMERCIAL.

IMPORTS.

Yokohama, September 15.

No change in this market.

COTTON PIECE GOODS.

White Shirting—{ 40 yds. 36 in. } ...	PER YARD.	0.10 to 0.16
Grey Shirting—8½ lb, 38½ yds. 36 inches	PER PIECE.	4.00 to 4.50
Grey Shirting—9 lb, 38½ yds. 45 inches	PER PIECE.	4.50 to 5.25
Prints—Assorted, 24 yards, 30 inches...	PER YARD.	2.85 to 4.25

Cotton Italians and Satteens... 0.20 to 0.40

WOOLLENS.

Flannels... 0.50 to 0.65

Italian Cloth, 32 in... 0.35 to 0.50

Mousseline de Laine, Cape, 24 yards,

30 inches... 0.16 to 0.22

Cloths—Pilots, 54 to 56 inches... 0.50 to 1.00

Cloths—Presidents, 51 to 65 inches... 0.90 to 1.00

Cloths—Union, 54 to 56 inches... 0.50 to 1.00

Blankets—Scarlet and Green, 3 to 5 lb per lb... 0.60 to 0.66

Velvets—Black, 35 yards, 22 inches... 9.20 to 12.50

Victoria Lawns, 12 yards, 42-3 inches... 0.90 to 1.80

Turkey Reds—2.8 to 3.0 lb 24-25 yards,

30 inches... 1.90 to 2.25

Turkey Reds—3.8 to 5 lb, 24-25 yards,

32 inches... 2.50 to 3.65

COTTON YARN.

Nos. 16/24, Singles... V. Nominal

Nos. 28/32, Singles... —

Nos. 38/42, Singles... —

Nos. 32, Doubles... Nominal

Nos. 42, Doubles... Nominal

Nos. 2/60, Plain... Nominal

Nos. 2/80, Plain... Nominal

Nos. 2/100, Plain... Nominal

Nos. 2/60, Gassed... 300.00 to 310.00

Nos. 2/80, Gassed... 350.00 to 370.00

Nos. 2/100, Gassed... 430.00 to 460.00

RAW COTTONS.

American Middling... 27.00 to 27.25

Indian Broach... 25.50 to 26.00

Chinese... 24.00 to 26.50

METALS.

No special feature to report.

Round and square ½ inch and upward... 4.20 to 4.20

Iron Plates, assorted... 4.35 to 4.65

Sheet Iron... 4.70 to 6.95

Galvanized Iron sheets... 10.05 to 10.95

Wire Nails, assorted... 6.85 to 7.15

Tin Plates, per box... 7.40 to 7.65

Pig Iron, No. 3... 2.40

Hoop Iron (¾ to 1½ inch)... 5.00 to 5.50

KEROSENE.

Market still dull.

American... 23.00 to 3.26

Russian... 2.90 to 3.02

Bangkok... 2.90

SUGAR.

No business to report.

Brown Takao... V. 9.70 to 10.10

Brown Manila... 10.10 to 11.10

Brown Daitong... 8.00 to 8.50

Brown Canton... 10.00 to 12.10

White Java and Penang... 12.80 to 13.80

White Refined... 14.40 to 17.20

INDIGO.

No change to note.

Java, Medium to best... 190.00 to 240.00

Calcutta, Medium to best... 140.00 to 200.00

Madras (Korpa), Medium to best... 90.00 to 120.00

Madras (Dry Leaf), Medium to best... —

EXPORTS.

RAW SILK.

There has been a steady market during the week.

Prices remain unchanged and consuming markets do not seem quite so eager to buy at top rates. The political outlook has probably affected them to some extent, as people in Europe and America have an idea that the troubles here may lead to a lower silk market. Holders are very strong and while we do not anticipate any further rise we see, no immediate reason for a fall.

QUOTATIONS.

Filatures—Extra Best, Coarse... 1,130 to 1,140

Filatures—Extra, Fine... —

Filatures—Extra, Coarse... 1,100 to 1,120

Filatures—No. 1, Fine... —

Filatures—No. 1, Coarse... 1,080 to 1,095

Filatures—No. 1½, Fine... 1,090 to 1,120

Filatures—No. 1½, Coarse... 1,050 to 1,070

Filatures—No. 2, Fine... 1,050 to 1,060

Filatures—No. 2, Coarse... —

Common—Coarse... —

Re-reels—Extra... —

Re-reels—No. 1... 1,090 to 1,100

Re-reels—No. 1½... 1,070 to 1,075

Re-reels—No. 2... 1,040 to 1,050

Kakadas—Extra... 1,055 to 1,060

Kakadas—No. 1... 1,020 to 1,030

Kakadas—No. 1½... 990 to 1,000

Kakadas—No. 2... 970 to 980

Kakadas—No. 2½... 940 to 950

FOR BABY'S SKIN SCALP AND HAIR

Something for Mothers to Think About

EVERY CHILD born into the world with an inherited or early developed tendency to distressing, disfiguring humours of the skin, scalp, and blood, becomes an object of the most tender solicitude, not only because of its suffering but because of the dreadful fear that the disfiguration is to be lifelong and mar its future happiness and prosperity. Hence it becomes the duty of mothers of such afflicted children to acquaint themselves with the best, the purest, and most effective treatment available, viz., THE CUTICURA TREATMENT.

Warm baths with CUTICURA SOAP, to cleanse the skin of crusts and scales and soften the thickened cuticle, gentle anointings with CUTICURA OINTMENT, to instantly allay itching, irritation, and inflammation, and soothe and heal, to be followed in the severer cases by mild doses of CUTICURA RESOLVENT PILLS (see below), to cool and cleanse the blood, are all that can be desired for the alleviation of the suffering of skin-tortured infants and children and the comfort of worn-out, worried mothers. A single set is often sufficient to cure when the best physicians fail.

Millions of Women Use Cuticura Soap

Assisted by CUTICURA OINTMENT, for preserving, purifying, and beautifying the skin, for cleansing the scalp of crusts, scales, and dandruff, and the stopping of falling hair, for softening, whitening, and soothing red, rough, and sore hands, for baby rashes, itching, and chafing, in the form of baths for annoying irritations and inflammations, or too free or offensive perspiration, in the form of washes for ulcerative weaknesses, and for many sensitive, antiseptic purposes which readily suggest themselves to women, especially mothers, and for all the purposes of the toilet, bath, and nursery.

CUTICURA RESOLVENT PILLS (Chocolate Coated) are prepared to meet the wants of delicate women, and sensitive children, and are pure, sweet, and tasteless. They are beyond question the most successful blood purifiers and humour cures yet compounded.

CUTICURA REMEDIES are sold throughout the world. Australian Depot: B. TOWNS & CO., Sydney. British Depot: 21, Charterhouse Sq., London. French Depot: 5, Rue de la Paix, Paris. Forth: DAVE AND CO., Cardiff. Sole Proprietors, U.S.A.: "All about the Skin," Inc.

WASTE SILK.

The market is unchanged. Some few purchases continue in Filature Kibiso, but other sorts are neglected although supplies are coming to hand in quantity.

QUOTATIONS.

Noshi—Filatures, Best	—	—
Noshi—Filatures, Good	—	—
Noshi—Oshiu, Best	—	—
Noshi—Oshiu, Good	—	—
Noshi—Oshiu, Medium	—	—
Noshi—Shinshiu, Best	—	—
Noshi—Shinshiu, Good	—	—
Noshi—Bushi, Best	—	—
Noshi—Bushi, Good	—	—
Noshi—Bushi, Medium	—	—
Noshi—Joshiu, Best	—	—
Noshi—Joshiu, Good	—	—
Kibiso—Filatures, Extra	—	—
Kibiso—Filatures, Best	105	110
Kibiso—Filatures, Second	95	100
Kibiso—Joshiu, Good	—	—
Kibiso—Bushi, Fair	—	—

TEA.

Stocks are small and business is restricted. The season appears to be finished.

QUOTATIONS.

Choicest	—	—
Choice	—	—
Fine	—	—
Good Medium	Y31	41
Medium	32	36
Good Common	27	31
Common	24	26
	19	23

EXCHANGE.

Yokohama, September 14.

London silver ½ higher and Hongkong sterling quotations ½ higher, but Shanghai closed to-day; local rates on China are consequently rather easier but in other rates no change.

London—Bank T.T.	2/0 ½
— Bills on demand	2/1 ½
— 4 months' sight	2/0 ½
— Private 4 months' sight	2/0 ¾
— 6 months' sight	2/0 ¾
Paris & Lyons—Bank sight	55 ¾
— Private 4 months' sight	56
— 6 months' sight	56 1
Hongkong—Bank sight	per 100 96 ¾
— Private 10 days' sight	do. 54 ¾

Shanghai—Bank sight	74 ¾
— Private 10 days' sight	76 ¾
India—Bank sight	151
— Private 30 days' sight	153
America—Bank sight	40 ¾
— Private 30 days' sight	40 ¾
— Private 4 months' sight	50 ¾
Germany—Bank sight	207 ¾
— Private 4 months' sight	211 ¾
Bar Silver (London)	28 ½

JAPANESE SHARES.

Yokohama, September 15, a.m.

Menu prices for Cash Delivery of Bonds and Shares, which may be held by Foreigners in their own names.

Div'd.	Yen.	per cent.	Yen.
Exchequer Bonds	100	5	91.40
1st Issue	100	5	85.50
Exchequer Bonds 2nd Issue	100	5	87.40
Exchequer Bonds 3rd Issue	100	5	86.50
Exchequer Bonds 4th Issue	100	6	96.50
Provincial Exchequer Bonds
5th Issue	40	6	45.40
Consolidated Bonds (Seiri)	100	5	85.50
War Bonds (Gauji)	100	5	85.50
5% Imperial Bonds (Goburi)	100	5	80.00
Navy Bonds (Kaigan)	100	5	81.60
Tokyo City Public Loan Bonds	100	6	94.50
Yama Water-works Bonds	100	6	92.50
Yama City Public Loan Bonds	100	6	91.00
Osaka Harbour Bonds	100	11	88.30
Sanyo Railway Debentures 2nd	100	6	86.00
Sanyo Railway	50	10	69.50
Kyushu Railway	50	8	59.80
Hokkaido Colliery Railway	50	12.5	86.00
Sobu Railway	50	8.50	60.00
Tokyo Electric Car (Densha)	50	11	73.30
Tokyo Street Railway (Shiga)	50	11.04	76.00
Tokyo Street Railway new	12.50	11.04	28.30
Tokyo Electric Railway (Denki)	50	3.5	55.00
Tokyo Electric Railway, new	30	3.5	33.80
Yokohama Electric Railway	40	—	55.00
Odawara Electric Car	50	3	22.50
Keihin Electric Railway	50	8	67.00
Keihin Electric Railway, new	12.50	8	28.00
Tokyo Marine Insurance	12.50	15	36.00
Yokohama Fire Insurance	12.50	10	16.80
Tokyo Fire Insurance	12.50	12	23.00
Kanagafuchi Spinning	50	16	82.50

* Ex dividend.

Milkmaid Milkmaid Milkmaid

TRADE MARK.

BRAND
Milk

As a guarantee of
Quality, see the
MILKMAID
on every Tin.

LARGEST SALE
in the
WORLD.

TRADE MARK.

BRAND
Milk

TRADE MARK.

BRAND
Milk

As a guarantee of
Quality, see the
MILKMAID
on every Tin.

LARGEST SALE
in the
WORLD.

Lea and Perrins' Sauce.

By Royal Warrant
to
His Majesty the King.

THE ORIGINAL AND GENUINE WORCESTERSHIRE.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT

IS A HOUSEHOLD NECESSITY

It cures Rheumatism, Scleritis,
Stiff Joints,
Glandular Swellings,
Sore Throat, Quinsy, Mumps,
Burns, Piles, Fistulas, &c.

AND EVERY
FORM OF SKIN DISEASE.

Manufactured only at 78, New Oxford St. (late 535, Oxford St.),
London. Sold by all Chemists and Medicine Vendors.

VESSELS ON THE BERTH.

- For KEELUNG, via Moji (from Kobe), 3rd, and 18th every month, at Noon, the "NAGATO MARU."—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.
- For KEELUNG, via Moji (from Kobe), 10th and 25th every month, at Noon, the "KOSHUN MAUR."—Osaka Shosen Kaisha.
- For NEW YORK, via ports, and Suez Canal, Sept. 16th, the "VANDALIA."—Cornes & Co.
- For HONGKONG, via Kobe, Inland Sea, Nagasaki, and Shanghai, about Sept. 18th, the "EMPERESS OF CHINA."—Canadian Pacific Railway Co.
- For PORTLAND, Ore., Sept. 19th, the "ARAGONIA."—P. & A. S.S. Co.
- For SHANGHAI, via Kobe, Moji, and Nagasaki, Sept. 20th, at 2 p.m., the "ANHUI."—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.
- For TAKAO, via Moji, Nagasaki, Keelung, Pescadore Anping (from Kobe), Sept. 20th, the "FUSAN MARU."—Osaka Shosen Kaisha.
- For AUSTRALIA and New Zealand Sept. 22nd, the "CHINGTU."—Butterfield & Swire.
- For VICTORIA, Seattle, Tacoma, Wash., Sept. 22nd, the "JASON."—Butterfield & Swire.
- For CANADA, United States, and Europe, via Vancouver, B.C., Sept. 23rd, the "TANTAR."—Canadian Pacific Railway Co.
- For MARSEILLES, via ports, and Shanghai, Sept. 23rd, at 7 a.m., the "POLYNESIA."—M. M. S.S. Co.
- For SAN FRANCISCO, via Honolulu, Sept. 23rd, the "COPTIC."—O. & O. S.S. Co.
- For MARSEILLES, London, and Antwerp, via Kobe, Moji, Hongkong, Singapore, Penang, Colombo, and Port Said, Sept. 23rd, at Noon, the "BAROTSE."—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.
- For HONGKONG via Kobe, Moji, Nagasaki and Shanghai, Sept. 24th, the "NUMANTIA."—P. & A. S.S. & Co.
- For HONGKONG, via Kobe, (Inland Sea), Nagasaki, and Shanghai about Sept. 25th, the "CHINA."—P. M. S.S. Co.
- For HONGKONG, via Kobe, Moji, and Manila, about Sept. 25th, the "SHAWMUT."—Dudwell & Co., Ltd.
- For MARSEILLES, London, and Antwerp, via Kobe, Shanghai, Hongkong, Straits, Colombo, and Port Said, Sept. 26th, at Daylight, the "NUBIA."—P. & O. S.N. Co.
- For LONDON, Amsterdam and Antwerp, Sept. 26th, at Daylight, the "ALCINOUS."—Butterfield & Swire.
- For AUSTRALIA, via ports (from Kobe), Sept. 26th, the "AUSTRALIAN."—Cornes & Co.
- For SEATTLE, Wash., via Victoria, B.C., Sept. 26th, at 2 p.m., the "KANAGAWA MARU."—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.
- For HAVRE, Hamburg and Bremen via ports, Sept. 28th, at Daylight, the "SLAVONIA."—C. Illies & Co.
- For CANADA, United States, and Europe, via Vancouver, B.C., Sept. 29th, at Noon, the "EMPERESS OF JAPAN."—C. P. R. S.S. Co.
- For BREMEN and Hamburg, via ports, Sept. 30th, at 9 a.m., the "BAVERN."—H. Ahrens & Co., Nachf.
- For VICTORIA, B.C., and Tacoma, Wash., Sept. 30th, the "LYRA."—Dudwell & Co., Ltd.

(毎土曜日一發行)

編輯人 エフ プリンクソン
發行兼印刷人 エー・エー・ブライオン
發行所 横濱市山下町五十五番
シヤツマンメーブル新聞社

The Japan Weekly Mail.

寄土曜日 A REVIEW OF JAPANESE COMMERCE, POLITICS, LITERATURE, AND ART. 一週刊行

No. 12.]

REGISTERED AT THE G.P.O.
AS A NEWSPAPER.

YOKOHAMA, SEPT. 23RD, 1905.

明治三十五年三月廿三日
第三千三百九十四號

[VOL. XLIV.]

CONTENTS.

Summary of News...	231
The Peace Terms Agitation...	232
Abolition of Literary Examination System in China...	233
The Japanese Casualties...	234
The Mikasa...	235
The Armistice...	235
Post-Bellum Finance...	235
Naval Defections...	235
The Return of the Troops...	235
The Investigation Committee of the Lower House...	236
Japanese Prisoners in Russia...	236
Educational Statistics...	236
China...	236
Korea...	236
Annihilation of a Japanese Company...	236
Baron Komatsu...	236
The Hon. Minister...	236
The Yushin Hiko...	236
The Han-Chinese Railway...	236
The Hanko Railway Company...	236
New Music...	236
Foreigners and the Peace...	236
Notes on Current Events...	236
Mr. 1st in Yokohama...	236
Leading Articles...	236
Boys and Infantry Rules...	233
The Japanese Press...	233
German Comments on Japan...	233
Japan's Foreign Trade during the first half of 1905...	233
Russia and Germany...	233
Miss Roosevelt...	233
The Yokohama Disasters...	233
The Hookah...	233
Yokohama Yacht Club...	233
Cricket...	233
Yokohama Harbour...	233
The Law Courts...	233
The "Kiojo Maru" Disaster Fund...	233
Literary Gossip...	233
Amusical Topics...	233
Correspondence...	233
The Present Situation...	233
The "Freeman's Journal"...	233
The Military Guards...	233
The Treaty of Peace a Triumph for Shinto...	233
Telegrams...	233
Latest Shipping...	233
Latest Commercial...	233

"PAIS CE QUE DOIS: ADVIENNE QUE POURRA!"

NOTICE TO CORRESPONDENTS.

No notice will be taken of anonymous correspondence. What is intended for insertion in the "JAPAN WEEKLY MAIL," must be authenticated by the name and address of the writer, not for publication, but as a guarantee of good faith.

It is particularly requested that all letters on business be addressed to the MANAGER, and Cheques be made payable to same; and that literary contributions be addressed to the EDITOR.

YOKOHAMA: SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 23RD, 1905.

BIRTH.

On the 20th inst., at No. 45-D Bluff, Yokohama, the wife of ALBERT LEWIS, of a Son.

SUMMARY OF NEWS.

A CASE of cholera is reported in Osaka.

Mr. Meiji, coal has advanced in price by yen 3 since the beginning of this month.

THE Saghalien Administrative Office has been removed from Alexandrofska to Korsakoff.

THE net profits of the Tobacco Monopoly Bureau during August amounted to yen 1,300,000.

THE Kokumin has a telegram from Shanghai that the anti-American boycott has been entirely settled.

TOKYO papers believe that the British warships now at Chefoo will arrive at Yokohama about Oct. 6th.

AT the urgent request of the Chinese Government, the Dalai Lama left Kulon on Sept. 16th for Tibet.

It is reported by a Seoul telegram that the Vladivostock squadron appeared on Sept. 17th off Wonsan.

M. HARMAND, French Minister, paid a visit to the Premier at 10 a.m., on Sept. 26th. He spent an hour with him.

A BATTALION under Major Ishibashi belonging to the garrison of the Pescadore, Formosa, returned home on Sept. 16th, arriving at Yokohama by the transport Aki Maru.

THE Jiji reports that the Army Department intends to establish military warehouses on the forts at Shinagawa.

PROMINENT members of both Houses will hold a meeting at 5 p.m., on Sept. 26th in the Peers' Club, Ueno, Tokyo.

A PORTION of the expeditionary army to Saghalien has returned to Awamori. The soldiers belong to the Nagoya Division.

EARLY on the morning of Sept. 18th, fire broke out in Iwashiro-cho, Nihonbashi, Tokyo, destroying two houses. The cause is negligence.

PRINCESSES FUMI and YASU, the younger sisters of the Crown Prince, returned on Sept. 15th from Hakone arriving at Shinbashi at 5 40 p.m.

A HAMADA telegram says that some persons were arrested on Sept. 17th. They had counterfeited convertible notes and circulated them.

A CORRESPONDENT at Port Arthur says that the battleships Retvisan and Pobieda, and the torpedo store-ship Amur will be floated before the end of this month.

PRINCE NASHIMOTO will shortly return from the front. He is reported to have recovered from the illness from which he has been suffering for some weeks past.

Two trains on the Kyushu Railway collided on Sept. 14th at the village of Sokoino, near Fukuoka, with the result that some carriages were damaged and five persons injured.

K. KURAKAKE, a clerk of the Susuma Post Office, Suwo province, was arrested on Sept. 18th on a charge of having embezzled over a thousand yen belonging to the office.

MR. MORGAN, American Minister to Seoul, who had been on a visit to North China, arrived on Sept. 19th at Chemulpo by the warship Albatross. He at once left for the capital.

REAR-ADMIRAL ARAI, who attended to the floating of the Varyag at Chemulpo, left Seoul on Sept. 20th for Japan. Previous to his departure, he was received by the Emperor of Korea.

FROM the outbreak of the war up to the present time, contributions to the Nippon Red Cross Society amounted to about yen 850,000. Of this sum, yen 250,000 was presented by foreigners.

K. YOSHIOKA, an official of the Futakawa village office, Chiba prefecture, attempted on Sept. 12th to commit suicide by taking morphine. Defalcation of office funds is alleged to be the cause.

PRINCE NASHIMOTO will leave Dairen, (formerly Dalny), on Sept. 24th by the transport Kawachi Maru on his way from the front to Tokyo. He was attached to the army under General Kuroki.

THE Emperor and Empress have distributed a thousand yen among the families of fishermen in Kagoshima prefecture who were drowned by storms in July, or who have been missing since then.

THE German steamer Hohensollern arrived at Nagasaki on Sept. 14th. She is chartered to carry home Russian prisoners. It is said that two other steamers will shortly arrive in Japan for the same purpose.

MAJOR-GENERAL MACPHERSON, of the American Army, and twenty-three other foreign officers have arrived in Tokyo from the front. Lieut.

General Burnett, of the British Army, and thirty-one other foreign officers are still at the front. They will return to Tokyo within a week.

SIR MICHAEL HICKS BEACH, with his wife and daughters is paying a visit to Japan. They are to be entertained to-night at the British Legation.

AT 6 p.m. on Sept. 16th, the Sagami (formerly the Peresviet) and the converted cruiser Nippon Maru arrived at Yokosuka. Throughout the streets of the port, bunting and lanterns were displayed profusely.

DAMAGE sustained by the Kyushu Railway during the storm in August is estimated at yen 160,000. One of the directors of the railway company says that the damage will not affect the usual rate of dividend.

It is reported by a Shanghai telegram that the Chinese Government intends to purchase the East-China Railway from Japan. For this purpose, it is conducting negotiations with some French capitalists to raise funds.

THE first shipment of Canadian cattle for Japan left Vancouver by the steamer Athenian on Sept. 18th. The animals number forty, and were purchased by the Japanese Government to be used for breeding purposes.

AN appeal lodged by the owner of the captured ship Scottman against a decision of the Yokosuka Prize Court confiscating the hull, was dismissed on Sept. 19th by the Supreme Prize Court, Tokyo. Thus the confiscation is confirmed.

ON the night of Sept. 14th two carriages on the Osaka Electric Tramway collided. One was destroyed; two passengers were killed, four severely injured and three slightly. The cause is reported to be the negligence of a conductor.

ON Sunday, Sept. 24th, an extraordinary festival in honour of the officers and men who died in the late war will take place in the compound of the Shinto temple Daijin-gu on Isejima, Yokohama. The rites will commence at 9 a.m.

TOKYO papers state that the Toyo Kisen Kaisha has decided to open in November a regular service between Japan and Chile. The firm is negotiating with a foreign shipping company for the chartering of steamers to be employed on the new line.

THE repairs of the Nippon Yusen Kaisha's chartered ship Baralong, which recently collided with the transport Kinjo Maru off Himejima, Bungo province, having been completed at the Kawasaki Ship-building Yard, Kobe, she left on Sept. 18th for Europe.

OVER eight thousand non-commissioned officers and men will be rewarded within the next week for meritorious services in the battles from the first attack on Port Arthur to the occupation of Panlungshan and the battle of the Shaho. The Emperor has already sanctioned the list.

SINCE the outbreak of war up to the restoration of peace, the public has donated to the Army yen 1,210,685 52 in money, while the value of the articles given is estimated at yen 431,811.19. The foregoing figures do not include the Navy or money given towards war expenses.

THE steamer Ryoyo Maru, which was sunk on July 14th in Moji Strait, was purchased on Sept. 15th by Mr. R. Yamashina, of Tokyo, for yen 14,160. The original owner, Mr. T. Makino, of Kobe, purchased her from a foreign shipping firm for yen 140,000 and insured her with the Nippon Marine Insurance Company for a hundred thousand yen.

THE PEACE TERMS AGITATION.

Friday, September 15.

We observe with satisfaction that the Tokyo journals have abandoned their bitter invectives against the terms of peace and are now disposed to devote their columns to the much more sensible and practical discussion of ways and means. Thus the Miyako Shimbun, not usually conspicuous for sobriety, reminds its readers—the Miyako has a great circulation among the lower middle classes—that under no circumstances could Japan have hoped to purchase the position she has won in the world without heavy pecuniary sacrifices, and her present business is to make provision for meeting her liabilities. Assuming that her national debt is increased by 1300 million yen, that means a payment of some 60 millions annually on account of interest, which sum, of course, must be provided out of the country's regular income. But that is not difficult at all. At the present moment the nation is paying war-taxes that aggregate 150 million yen annually, and the effort does not seem to inconvenience the people at all. These taxes may be reduced by more than one half, and yet there will remain ample to defray the interest on the increased debt. As for the payment of the foreign part of the debt, the plan suggested by the Miyako is that every yen obtained from properties which have come into the country's possession on account of the war should be devoted to that purpose. The coal mines of Manchuria and the railway might be handed over to a great international company which would undertake to pay a certain sum yearly, and holders of Japanese stock might have a preferential right to become shareholders. That is the Miyako's suggestion. We mention it merely for the purpose of showing the direction in which Japanese thought is beginning to trend. For our own part, we see no pressing occasion for any internationalizing of properties acquired in the war. The Government can work them itself with the assistance of its own subjects, and, if necessary, can hypothecate them for loans at low interest and long periods to cover the onerous obligations incurred during the war. Evidently the conversion of the latter will soon be a pressing necessity.

But if this economical mood has replaced the invectives of the past few days, there remains always the insistent contention that a change of Cabinet is essential. The Nichi Nichi and the Fiji lend their powerful voices to this assertion, and so does the Nippon. All maintain that the great need of the time is to restore the happy and omnipotent union which existed between rulers and ruled before recent events created a wide chasm dividing the Ministry and the people. Many enterprises have now to be undertaken and many tasks demand the country's best efforts but there can be no success commensurate with the opportunities so long as the nation harbours resentment against its officials and distrusts their competence. The Yomiuri says that several persons have withdrawn their names from the Red Cross Society, that others have cancelled their subscriptions to the Volunteer Fleet, and that some have registered a vow not to submit to conscription. The Progressist organ—in spite of its political colour—denounces such doings as suicidal and likens them to the act of a householder who displays his wrath by smashing his own furniture.

We are very much mistaken in our reading of Japanese character if the present Cabinet remains in office one day longer than its pending duties demand. It must close up the peace conference by presenting a full report to the Emperor, and arranging for the exchange of ratifications. But after that it will go. And, perhaps, after it has gone men will begin to ask why, and will begin to wonder whether any principle of constitutionalism demands that a Ministry should resign because a mob, instigated largely by party politicians, has smashed police-boxes and behaved with unruly violence. If the hooligans of Tokyo are to be elevated to the position of arbitrating the fate of ministries, Japan will have a novel system of government.

A section of the House of Peers, headed by Princes Niji and Shimazu, have addressed a strong memorial to the Cabinet, which amounts to an invitation to resign. The subject of the memorialists' direct complaint is that the Government, by mismanagement, has subjected Tokyo to the disgrace of being placed under martial law, and that the Chief of Police, instead of being punished, has been allowed to retire at his own request, while the person primarily responsible, namely, the Minister of Home Affairs, remains still in office. The signatories of the memorial hint very plainly that no Cabinet should continue in power under such circumstances.

Saturday, September 16.

Small demonstrations of dissatisfaction continue to take place in provincial districts, but they possess little importance except as suggesting a platform cry which may prove very prolific of recruits to the ranks of the Progressists. Arrangements are in progress, however, for another general meeting of representatives of the whole country, to be held in Ueno Park on the 20th inst., under the auspices of the Rengo Doshi-kai, of which Mr. Kono Hirokaka is the leader. The association feels that if once the treaty be ratified all ground for further agitation will be removed, and it therefore projects one grand demonstration. On this occasion, however, the utmost decorum is to be observed. The provinces are invited to send delegates who shall accept responsibility as such, and the Doshi-kai leaders announce that anything in the nature of rioting will be entirely foreign to their programme. They still cling to the idea that ratification may be prevented and that this cruel war may be continued. In fact their aim is to ensure the useless pouring out of further quantities of their country's blood and treasure.

On the 12th instant the opponents of the peace-treaty held a mass meeting in the Asahi-za of Kumamoto. Some 2000 persons are said to have attended. They passed a resolution in the sense that as the terms of the treaty were opposed to the purposes of the war and nullified the results of the country's victories, steps should be taken to bring about the resignation of the Cabinet and to move the Privy Council. It may be presumed that the latter step has for object to prevent ratification. Very violent speeches were delivered, but the police made no attempt to interfere, and the meeting passed off quietly.

The non-parliamentary members of the Seiyun-kai continue their agitation, thus differentiating themselves from the parliamentary members and from the leaders of the Party. On the 16th instant they held a meeting and passed resolutions that the continued operation of martial law in Tokyo was wholly inappropriate; that the Police Bureau should be abolished as an independent office; and that steps should be taken to ascertain the attitude which the Party's leaders intended to take towards this whole question. They also resolved that steps must be taken to ascertain the truth of a statement made by the Yorozu Choko which alleged that Mr. Matsuda Masahisa, President of the House of Representatives, had declared the peace-terms to be quite appropriate.

The Akita branch of the Seiyun-kai also has ranged itself in direct opposition to the head-quarters of the Party. It has adopted a resolution denouncing the peace as disgraceful and as subversive of the objects of the war. Further it has declared that the Government's action in placing Tokyo under martial law is unconstitutional.

The leaders of the Seiyun-kai will probably have much difficulty in re-uniting their followers after this crisis. Perhaps we should be wrong in basing any estimate of Japanese party discipline on these a severest test, yet it is impossible to view such divided councils without recalling the difficulty which has hitherto effectually blocked the path to party government in Japan.

On the 16th instant the committee appointed by the Lower House without distinction of parties, waited on the Prime Minister, but as the latter was just about to proceed to the Palace, he referred them to the Minister of Agriculture and Commerce. The Committee submitted three points. The first was that, tranquillity having now been completely restored in Tokyo, the enforcement of martial law might properly cease. The second, that whereas the Barristers Association had collected proof as to the unlawful cutting and wounding of over 50 citizens by the police, no effective steps had yet been taken to bring the latter to justice, although in several cases the identity of the offenders had been ascertained. The third was that if, in consideration of the police being themselves at once accused and judges, any difficulty was experienced in collecting evidence, it might be advisable to constitute some special tribunal for the occasion. Baron Kioura made a note of these representations and promised to submit them to the Premier.

The Nichi Nichi Shimbun and the Nippon urge the abolition of martial law in Tokyo. Both journals insist that no occasion whatever exists for continuing this exceptional procedure. Indeed the Nichi Nichi contends that it was never necessary.

Monday, September 18.

The dimensions of the projected meeting on the 20th instant in Ueno Park appear to be growing, but we are unable to distinguish in this instance between actual and interested representations. For the statement that the scope of the meeting is to be extended in order not to disappoint the numerous applicants for a leading place on the platforms, comes from newspapers which are interested in spreading such a belief. It is noticeable, and must have been noticed even by foreign observers, that hitherto no men of genuine influence have associated themselves with any of these demonstrations, and there can not be much prospect of their doing so now.

The Kagoshima branch of the Seiyun-kai has passed a resolution denouncing the treaty as opposed to the objects of the war, as subversive of the country's victories and as injurious to the interests of the Empire. This resolution has been forwarded to the head-quarters of the Party. It thus becomes more and more evident that the organization of the Seiyun-kai will suffer a severe shock from this incident.

What is the genuine attitude of the Seiyun-kai kai? Were we to judge from Marquis Saionji's thoroughly statesmanlike and sensible speech, the great Party is determined not to associate itself with the anti-peace agitation. But on the other hand, we find in the columns of the Chuo Shinbun—which is supposed to be one of the best accredited organs of the Party—an article whose writer is poised on the fence if ever a politician performed that feat. In one breath he applies a string of condemnatory adjectives to the treaty and calls the peace merely a truce, while in the next he speaks of the advantages Japan has secured and of the advisability of directing her strength to their utilization. Such editorial writing leaves one in a crass mist as to the author's real sentiments. The Yorozu Choho and some minor journals allege that the Seiyu-kai leaders are watching the popular wind-vane and that they will not set their sails yet a while. We can appreciate, at all events, that the Seiyu-kai has a most difficult problem before it.

The Akita branch of the Progressists has passed a resolution utterly denouncing the peace and condemning the Ministry. We observe, however, that neither at Akita nor at Kagoshima was there any talk of non-ratification. That wholly impractical suggestion has evidently disappeared. Has it been dropped by Messrs. Kono Hironaka and Yamada Kinosuke also? They are the leaders of the agitation, and they have maintained from the first that ratification should be withheld. But apparently their followers have declined to keep pace with them.

Various lecture-meetings in the provinces are reported. The speeches were all hostile to the treaty terms.

Such Tokyo journals—the Yomiuri and the Miyako for example—as continue to write on the subject, repeat their contention that the Cabinet should resign at once. These journals go one better than any constitutional system. They would have a Ministry hold itself responsible to the verdict of a mob, not to the vote of a national assembly.

Wednesday, September 20.

General Sakuma has caused to be handed to the promoters of the anti-peace meeting which is to be held in Ueno Park to-day a memorandum containing instructions as to the course to be observed. The Committee of organization, who had wisely placed themselves in communication with the Eiju Satoku, as General Sakuma is called, are informed that they will be held directly responsible for the preservation of order. All persons attending the meeting, whether from the provinces or the metropolis, must wear some distinguishing badge, and no one is to carry a lethal weapon or even a stick. It will not be permitted to fire any signal gun, discharge any rocket or employ fire-works by way of signal or demonstration. Care must be exercised by persons delivering addresses or framing resolutions not to employ any violent, or abusive language, and no use of strange or startling costumes will be permitted. If it be proposed to introduce any resolutions for adoption by the meeting, they must be submitted in draft to the Eiju Satoku on the preceding day. There will be wickets where people desiring to attend the meeting must pass, and in passing must submit to any process of examination laid down by the Authorities. Soldiers will be posted at points of vantage outside the place of meeting.

Having received the above memorandum the members of committee proceeded to visit the Chief of Police and were warned by him that, Tokyo being now under martial law, neither in speeches nor in resolutions would it be permissible to employ such violent language as had disfigured some of the proceedings in provincial districts. He pointed out that the occasion was in a sense special, since the very name of the society promoting the meeting would redirect the attention of the citizens to the meeting on the 5th instant and its lamentable consequences, and might thus create a dangerous temper. All liberty of speech would be granted within legitimate limits, but in view of the imperative duty of preserving public peace and good order, no violent or incentive language would be permitted, and any attempt to use such would at once call down an order for the suspension or dispersal of the meeting.

The Tokyo City Assembly met on the 18th, but contrary to expectation the proceedings were somewhat tame, except that they were mainly of a political character. Mr. Koizuka (Progressist) made a strong speech, describing how he himself had barely escaped being cut down by the police on the night of the 5th. He moved that a committee of 15 be appointed to consider the question of attaching the police to the control of the Municipality. This motion was passed. Mr. Mizuochi moved that the veto upon passage through the Maru-no-uchi be at once removed. This motion was handed over to a committee. Mr. Jo Kazuma suggested that the public announcements of the Municipality should not be inserted in official organs, but the fate of this motion is not mentioned. The meeting terminated with an expression of admiration for the conduct of the City Council in adopting measures to protect the citizens after the destruction of the police boxes.

The Sendai branch of the Seiyu-kai has now revolted, as has also the Fukuoka. A resolution passed by the former is couched in the stereotyped phraseology, namely, that the terms of the Portsmouth treaty are not consistent with the victories in the field and do not suffice to secure permanent peace.

None of the framers of these resolutions seems to trouble himself about the obvious fact that no treaty which the wit of man is capable of devising could possibly ensure permanent tranquillity unless it provided for continuous military occupation of the territories of one of the signatories by the troops of the other.

Apart from that academical difficulty there is the directly interesting point that the Seiyu-kai's position is becoming more and more difficult. It will soon be a case of the dog having to consent to be wagged by the tail, unless the animal is to part with its caudal appendage altogether.

The non-parliamentary members of the Party are pressing the head-quarters to assume an attitude definitely hostile to the Government or definitely favourable to it. They sent a deputation on the 19th instant to wait on Mr. Hara Kei for the purpose of urging that the present Cabinet and the nation having fallen hopelessly out of touch with each other, the former must be summoned to resign inasmuch as its tenure of power would interfere seriously with the progress of post-bellum arrangements. Mr. Hara, however, declined to be drawn out of the neutral shell into which the leaders of the Party have retired. He explained that no definite expression of the Party's opinion could be properly given pending the general meeting which is to be held shortly, and he adroitly evaded any clear exposition of his own personal views. The deputation was to wait on Marquis Saionji at Oiso yesterday (20th) but we have not learned the results of the meeting.

Other assemblies of objectors to the treaty are announced from various provincial districts. They do not indicate any recrudescence of the agitation, but merely its gradual spread to districts removed more or less remotely from the political nerve-centres.

The Tokyo City Council held a confused and somewhat stormy meeting on the 19th. To receive a report presented by a committee was the immediate object of the meeting. The Council had appointed this committee for the purpose of considering measures to restore public peace and good order, which purpose, being strongly approved by the Chief of Police, he placed himself in communication with the committee and suggested that the first essential was to restore the police-boxes which had been destroyed by the rioters. To accomplish that a sum of 23,000 yen was needed, and the Chief of Police, endorsed by the Governor, suggested that the City Council should provide the money in the first place, the Chief of Police and the Governor pledging themselves to seek a compensatory grant from the Treasury, and agreeing that in case of failure a vote of want of confidence might be passed against them by the City Assembly. The Committee approved this idea and recommended it at the Council's meeting, but some of the recalcitrant members objected that no such function had been entrusted to the committee, and after a time the meeting fell into disorder, some of those present talking at cross purposes and others seeking merely to embarrass the moderates who were evidently in a majority. Finally the meeting broke up re infecta.

The Imperialists, to the number of over 50, held a meeting on the 19th in Tokyo, and after listening to Mr. Sasa Tomofusa's account of his recent travels in Manchuria, passed a resolution of a somewhat non-committal character. It said that the peace treaty had been in part a success and in part a failure, and that while applauding its successful articles men should be entirely free to criticise its unsuccessful. The victories achieved by the army and navy had exceeded expectation; the victories in the conference chamber had fallen short of it. Nevertheless nothing could be more unwise than to forfeit by futile wrangling and dissension the advantages actually won. What the country plainly had to do was to unite cordially for the purpose of consolidating its post-bellum position.

It is stated that the number of petitions presented to the Throne since the commencement of the present crisis has been 55, and that the Emperor has already examined more than 40 and transmitted them to the Cabinet.

Thursday, September 21.

The meeting at Ueno on the 20th instant passed off quietly. Heavy rain doubtless assisted to damp the ardour of the agitators, but under any circumstances the precautions adopted by the authorities must have secured tranquillity. Proceedings opened with the appending of signatures to a petition to the Throne asking that ratification be withheld, and thereafter Mr. Kono Hironaka, the moving spirit in all this commotion, ascended the rostrum and delivered an eloquent address in which he contended that the present time is the parting of the ways for Japan, and that she has now to choose between taking the route to imperial greatness or following that to national insignificance. Therefore every patriot should labour night and day in the cause of his country. Mr. Kono was followed by such men as Messrs. Suzuki Shigeto, Otake Kanichi, Takahashi Hideomi, Nakajima Shakuin and Abe Hankon. These gentlemen proposed such varied resolutions and introduced such heterogeneous representations that it was finally decided to appoint a committee of seven who should evolve order out of the chaos. While this committee was at work Mr. Takahashi read a number of congratulatory messages from the provincial districts and Mr. Yamada Kinoshige described a tour recently made by him in the Kwansei provinces. He referred to the sinking of the Mikasa, and said that by opening the Kingston valves the explosion of a man-of-war might be averted, but the only way to prevent the pending explosion in Japan was for the Cabinet to resign. The Committee's amended resolutions were then presented. The gist of them was that every effort should be made to fix the responsibility for this failure on the Cabinet's shoulders and to contrive the non-ratification of the peace-treaty; that the members of the Diet should be urged to assist in this work; that all members not assisting should be rejected by their constituents at the next general election; and that all should unite in promoting unity, furthering administrative reform and advancing national undertakings. The meeting then sang the national anthem and gave three cheers for the Emperor, after which a cold collation was partaken of in the rooms of the Seiyoken. With regard to the petition it is not to be published until after the procedure for its presentation has been completed.

Meetings have been held in the prefectures of Saitama, Miye, Nagano and Chiba. It is difficult to say how much influence attaches to their promoters or their constituents. Our readers will have observed that even the big assembly in Ueno Park did not obtain the attendance and support of a single publicist who can be described as a leader of intelligent thought. Messrs. Kono Hironaka, Suzuki Shigeto, Otake Kanichi, Takahashi Hideomi, Nakajima Shakuin and Abe Hankon, may justly be described as the stock personalities of disgruntled politics in Japan. Every popular movement of lawful discontent may count on the association of these gentlemen. They are not without a following and they are not without influence, but no movement which leans entirely upon their leadership can be regarded as very vertebrate. Nevertheless this constant commotion is a feature with which the Ministry has to reckon, and with which it doubtless reckoned fully when it advised the Emperor to finally instruct the Peace Plenipotentiaries at Portsmouth.

ABOLITION OF THE LITERARY EXAMINATION SYSTEM IN CHINA.

In an interesting article on the subject of this cardinal event in the history of China, the N-China Daily News notes that the abolition of the old-time literary examination in China was among the reforms introduced by the Emperor in accordance with the advice of the ill-fated Kang Yu-wei before the coup d'état of 1898. Now, however, it is by the advice of the great Viceroy Yuan that the momentous change is made, although this same Yuan Shikai was the official whose warning to the Empress Dowager defeated the purposes of the Emperor and ended all His Majesty's contemplated reforms. The Viceroy has had the cleverness to show that in advocating the abolition of this kind of examination, he proposed, not a radical novelty, but a conservative return to the systems of ancient times. Prior to the era of the Three Dynasties—that is to say 221 to 265 A. D.—men for office were chosen from the schools, and it is that state of affairs which is now to be re-inaugurated. The Imperial Decree evoked by Viceroy Yuan's memorial says:

"Before the era of what is termed the Three Dynasties, men for office were selected from the schools, and it must be confessed that the plan produced many talented men. It was indeed a most successful plan for the creation of a nursery for the disciplining of talents and the moulding of character for our empire of China. Indeed the examples before us of the wealth and power of Japan and the countries of the West have their foundation in no other than their own schools. Just now we are passing through a crisis fraught with difficulties and the country is most urgently in want of men of talents and abilities (of the modern sort). Owing to the fact that, of late, modern methods of education have been daily on the increase amongst us, we repeatedly issued our commands to all our Viceroy and Governors of provinces to lose no time in establishing modern schools of learning in such number that every member of this Empire may have the means of going there to study and learn something substantial in order to prepare himself to be of use to his country. We have indeed thought deeply on this subject."

The decree goes on to mention that the Ministers of Education have suggested the gradual abolition of the examinations, but H. E. Yuan Shikai, whose experience and knowledge are admitted, "asserts that unless these old-style examinations be abolished once for all, the people of this Empire will continue to show apathy and hesitate to join the modern schools of learning," the fact being that the demand for the change has really come from the people. "Hence if we desire to see the spread of modern education by the establishment of a number of schools, we must first abolish the old style of studying for the examinations. We therefore hereby command that, beginning from the Ping-wu Cycle (1906), all competitive examinations for the literary degrees of Chujen and Chinshih (Master of Arts and Doctor) after the old style shall be henceforth abolished, while the annual competitions in the cities of the various provinces for the Hsiu-tsai (Bachelor of Arts) or licentiate degree are also to be abolished at once. Those possessors of literary grades of the old style Chujen and Hsiu-tsai who obtained their degrees prior to the issuance of this decree shall be given opportunities to take up official rank according to their respective grades and abilities."

There can be no doubt that one effect of the literary examination was to fossilize the intellect of China; to hold men's minds in the ancient grooves. A parallel case was the system of classical education in the Occident where youths were led throughout their school and college days mainly on Xenophon, Homer, Sophocles, Euripides, Virgil and Horace. Happily, however, this dose of the old was diluted in the West by a measure of modern learning.

THE JAPANESE CASUALTIES.

In the Fiji Shimpō we find the first authoritative statement of the fatal casualties on the Japanese side. These are the numbers:—

Killed in battle.....	46,180
Died of wounds.....	10,970
Died of disease.....	15,300

Total deaths..... 72,450

It will be remembered that the spirits of the dead worshipped at the Shokonsha festival in the spring numbered 30,000 approximately and that the principal additions to be subsequently made were the casualties at Heikautai and Mukden. These seem to have totalled nearly 17,000 in killed alone, if all the skirmishes and minor engagements be included, and it would follow that the killed and wounded since the commencement of this year must have totalled about 80,000. If those that died of disease be added the total casualties reach a very large figure. The Russian casualties were certainly much greater, and thus it will probably be found when all the returns come to be actually collected, that the killed and those that died from wounds on both sides aggregate about 130,000 or 140,000, and that the total casualties—killed and wounded—were between 600,000 and 700,000. There has been no such record in war since Alexander marched his hosts over the deserts of Beloochistan.

The extraordinary fact in the Japanese returns is that only 15,000 men died of disease. That is something absolutely unprecedented. Generally the deaths from disease exceed those from wounds and in all probability it will be found that the normal rule was verified in the Russian Army. But by a sanitary system of extraordinary efficiency the Japanese medical staff have managed to save thousands of their countrymen's lives. It is a great achievement.

THE "MIKASA."

Telegrams to the Fiji Shimpō say that the Mikasa lies in six fathoms of water, and that as she draws 27 feet, her upper works are all above the water. Her injuries are not extensive and there is every hope of raising her. Several bodies of the 200 men missing have been found. Most of them were killed by the explosion and are consequently terribly mutilated. Identification in many cases would not be possible without the aid of the note-books or other memoranda found on the corpses. Happily one half of the vessel's crew were ashore on leave, so that a much greater disaster was averted.

Telegrams of condolence have poured in to the Naval Department from all parts of the world in connexion with the Mikasa disaster, and Messrs. Sale and Frarize sent a gift of 1000 yen for the families of the men killed. Dr. M. C. Harris has sent 50 yen.

Messrs. Andrews and George have contributed a sum of 200 yen to the families of the sailors killed and wounded in the Mikasa disaster.

The Fiji Shimpō says that the Mikasa will be raised in 3 months. The rise and fall of the tide at Sascho is only one foot and no necessary apparatus is at hand. In the case of the Varyag the rise and fall of the tide was 40 feet.

Mr. Kuzomidzu, Chamberlain to the Crown Prince, left Tokyo on Sept. 13th for Sascho, under instructions of His Highness to make inquiries of the sufferers by the accident to the Mikasa.

Vice-Admiral Mitsu, formerly the Commander-in-Chief of the third squadron, has been appointed chief of the committee for investigating the Mikasa accident. This admiral, it may be remembered, sustained a severe wound to his left eye in the battle of the Japan Sea and since then has been treated in the hospital of the College of Medicine.

Watanabe Hana (24) a woman employed by a foreigner of Kobe, was arrested on Friday by the Isezaki-cho police, Yokohama, and removed on the following day to the Yokohama District Court on a charge of having attempted to obtain three thousand yen from the Specie Bank. It appears that she had a draft for thirty yen from the Osaka branch of the bank payable in Yokohama. She changed this amount to three thousand yen and entrusted the cashing of the draft to a German gentleman residing at Negishi, whose Japanese employee is her friend. When the German applied at the bank for payment, the alteration in the draft was immediately perceived and information was sent to the police.

THE ARMISTICE.

On the 13th instant at 10 a.m. commissioners from the two armies in Manchuria met at Shahotsz which is 5 miles north of Changtu. It appears therefore that, after all, the Russian commissioners came virtually to the Japanese lines. The conference lasted until 7.20 p.m. by which time the following terms had been agreed to:—

- 1.—That fighting shall be suspended throughout Manchuria.
- 2.—That a district, indicated on the accompanying maps, midway between the advanced lines of the two armies shall be regarded as the dividing ground of the two.
- 3.—That no person having any relation with either army shall on any pretence whatever enter this dividing ground.
- 4.—That the road from Swangmiaotz to Shahotsz shall be common to both armies.
- 5.—That this armistice convention shall become operative from the 16th of September.

It was farther agreed that each side should make preparations to carry out this armistice agreement by the 16th at latest.

Arrangements have now been completed for an armistice throughout the whole field except in the small section where General Madorloff is operating, that is to say, on the upper waters of the Yalu. It appears that General Linevitch did not transmit any details to the officer commanding on the Tumen, but merely intimated to him that an armistice was to be observed. Consequently Colonel Oba, who had been despatched by the Japanese as parlementaire, could not come to any formal agreement with the Russians as to North-Eastern Korea. This omission was subsequently rectified, however, and at 10 a.m. on the 16th Colonel Oba and the Russian parlementaire affixed their signatures to an armistice convention. As to the naval part of the business, the Nichi Nichi says that a meeting was to take place on the 17th in Najin Bay, which lies on the north-eastern coast of Korea a little south of the mouth of the Tumen.

Telegrams to the Fiji Shimpō from Yung-kow give interesting details as to the armistice. The Russian parlementaire was Major-General Wonovensky. He came with a cavalry escort, a white flag flying and trumpets blowing, to Shahotsz, at the cross-roads 5 miles north of Changtu. The two officers—Major-General Fukushima represented the Japanese—met at 10.10 a.m. and proceeded at once to discuss the arrangements for the armistice, which was concluded in the afternoon (the hour is not stated). The Russian General then expressed frankly to General Fukushima the extreme pleasure he felt at the termination of the war and the two officers entered into an animated interchange of experiences. Meanwhile the troopers of the Russian escort grasped the hands of the Japanese and with very symptom of delight assured them that the feeling throughout the army was one of profound satisfaction. Many of the men felt as though they were already on their way home and as though they had obtained a fresh lease of life. The officers were already drinking champagne and congratulating one another on the end of their labours.

Not much has been hitherto said about the joy that peace brings to something like 1 million of men, who might have been condemned to another long period of the greatest hardship and suffering had not the statesmen of Japan known how to be wise as well as magnanimous.

It is stated that numerous parties of Russians approach the Japanese lines since the conclusion of the armistice for the purpose of fraternizing and thus relieving the ennui of the situation. But the Japanese, acting under orders from their Commander-in-Chief, who does not yet consider that caution should be relaxed, refuse all these overtures and adhere strictly to the terms of the armistice.

The meeting to arrange a naval armistice is believed to have taken place at Lajin Bay on the 17th instant, but no definite news has yet been published.

"POST-BELLUM" FINANCE.

Naturally the Tokyo press is beginning to direct earnest attention to the question of post-bellum finance. The Chuo takes a hopeful view, based mainly on the rapid growth of the country's foreign trade since the beginning of the Meiji era. It has indeed been a remarkable growth. Taking decennial periods, the figures for exports stand thus:—

Exports in 1874.....	19,317,306 Yen
" 1884.....	33,871,466 "
" 1894.....	113,246,086 "
" 1904.....	319,260,896 "

It will be seen that exports nearly trebled in value during the ten years ended in 1904. On the other hand, the excess of imports over exports during the nine years subsequent to the conclusion of the war with China—namely, from 1896 to 1904 inclusive—was 406,677,910 yen. It many reasonably be supposed, however, that as no indemnity has been obtained on the present occasion, the tendency to rapid expansion in the import trade will be more or less checked. On the other hand, the nation will appreciate more than ever the vital importance of industry in the field of production, and thus exports may be expected to grow rapidly.

The Fiji Shimpō places reliance on the introduction of foreign capital. It justly remarks that whatever the terms of peace, Japan's successes in the war and the financial strength she displayed have not been forgotten by Europe or America. The Japanese stock market has been seriously affected by the nature of the peace, but Japanese securities stand high abroad, and there are evidences that foreign capitalists are turning their eyes toward Japan. Gilt-edged securities in London carry only some 3 per cent. interest, and it may be reasonably expected that Japan can obtain foreign money at less than 5 per cent.

We do not agree with this last estimate. The Fiji appears to forget that if British capitalists can obtain approximately the same rate of interest in England as that obtainable abroad, they will prefer to invest their money at home under the protection of laws which they fully understand and without exposure to any unknown and unknowable conditions of competition. If European or American capitalists are to carry their money to Japan, they will want to be paid for doing so.

The Miyako Shimbun is not in the least alarmed at the financial outlook. It recalls the fact that in the days when the country's foreign trade was only from 20 to 30 million yen, the State's debts aggregated 35 million yen, of which 15 millions were owed abroad. Considering the development of national wealth since that time, a total debt of 1,800 or 2,000 million yen is by no means too formidable. It is regrettable that better peace terms were not obtained, but nothing can now be gained by "reckoning the age of the slaughtered child." What has to be done at once is to convert the high-interest short-period debts into obligations carrying lower interest and repayable after a longer interval. In this context the Miyako publishes the debts of various countries:—

France.....	120	hundreds of millions of yen .
England.....	76	do
Russia.....	71	(probably) do
Austria-Hungary...	58	do
Italy.....	51	do
America.....	47	do
Spain.....	38	do
Japan.....	20	do
Portugal.....	17	do
Germany.....	15	do

(This figure for Germany does not include the debts of the separate States).

China.....	12	do
Belgium.....	11	do
Turkey.....	10	do

Japan thus stands a little above Portugal. The Miyako opines that all great countries have big debts, a sign that they are trusted by money-lenders.

NAVAL DEFALCATIONS.

In the middle of last year there was circulated a rumour that some defalcations had been discovered on the part of naval accountants in London. The rumour was not much discussed at the time, but the result of investigations undertaken by the authorities is now published and we learn that these accountants have been found guilty. There is nothing novel in the story, except that the principal offender, Takenouchi Jujiro, managed to make away with a very large sum, namely, 335,512 yen. He had the duty of paying out official monies in London to the Japanese naval superintendents in England, and he seems to have lived beyond his means. How far this involved him it is not accurately stated, but after forging receipts which satisfied the Specie Bank, from which the money was drawn, he conceived the idea of making good his losses by speculating on the Tokyo stock exchange. In this project he was joined by Kagi Jinzaburo, who had come to England in connexion with paymaster's business on account of the Takasago, and who had himself squandered a sum of 3,406 yen. Kagi returned to Tokyo, and in the course of his speculation met another naval accountant, Sakuma Kiichi, who was engaged in precisely the same attempt on account of defalcations made by him at Maizuru, where he had considerable control of public funds. Sakuma and Kagi worked together, drawing money for their operations from Maizuru and London, until the shortage at the former place reached a total of 10,046 yen, and that at the latter, 335,512 yen. The game being now up exposure resulted. Takenouchi fled from justice and has not yet been apprehended, but sentence of 11 years' major imprisonment has been pronounced against him by default, while Kagi gets 7 years' minor imprisonment and Sakuma 3 years' major imprisonment. A fourth accountant, Kikumura Toshio, has been convicted of spending 456 yen of public funds committed to his charge and sentenced to 6 years' minor imprisonment.

The above four are non-combatant officials. One combatant naval officer, Lieut. Mukai Motohiro, has been convicted of stealing from the pockets of his comrades three sums aggregating 49 yen, and has been condemned to 4 months' major imprisonment.

Count Arco Valley, German Minister, will give a dinner party on the evening of Sept. 25th in the Legation in honour of the foreign officers who recently returned from the front. Marquis Yamagata, Chief of the Staff, General Terauchi, Minister for War, and high officers of the Staff Office will be present.

THE RETURN OF THE TROOPS.

We read in the Kokumin Shimbun that the shipment of the troops for home will commence at the end of October. In addition to Ninoshima and Dai-ri, there will be a third medical inspection station at Wada-no-misaki. It is expected that the whole operation of bringing home the troops will occupy about six months. One Division will have to be left in Manchuria as railway guards, the number of men required under the peace treaty being just about the peace strength of a Division, namely 11,260. This calculation is based on the data that the total length of line is 782 kilometers, which may be reduced by 32 kilometers on account of the portion lying within the leased area in Liaotung Peninsula. Allowing 15 men per kilometer, there results a total of 11,250 men.

We do not yet hear any talk of a triumphal reception for the troops as they return, but some arrangement will undoubtedly be made.

The statement is repeated that the transport of the Japanese armies from Manchuria will commence at the end of October. We read in the Kokumin that the process of thoroughly disinfecting the hospital ships is to be undertaken at once. Our contemporary says that there are 20 of these steamers, all ranging from 3,000 to 5,000 tons, and that there has not been an opportunity to disinfect them thoroughly since the war began. The medical authorities are determined that the remarkable success which has attended their sanitary arrangements throughout the campaign shall not be now impaired by any want of thorough precautions in bringing home the troops. It would indeed be a lamentable thing if the lives of any of these brave men were sacrificed through want of care in such matters, and when we remember that more than half a million of troops will have to be transported with all possible expedition, it is easy to see that any neglect might entail serious consequences. All the Japanese skill and forethought in organization will be needed for this stupendous task; incomparably the greatest of its kind ever undertaken by any nation since the days of Xerxes, and much greater in truth than the feat of the Persian invader, for it is one thing to march troops over the Hellespont on a bridge of boats, and another thing to carry them by ship over six hundred miles of sea. The nearest approach to the task now awaiting Japan was that performed by England in South Africa, but England had to remove her troops very gradually owing to the exigencies of the military situation. There is indeed no instance on record of the signing of a peace treaty which finds one of the signatories with an army of some 600,000 men beyond the seas. Russia, it can not be doubted, will be much slower than Japan, for she has to transport her army to a much greater distance and by far less commodious means. No wonder that she talks of leaving a large force in Siberia. That is rather a matter of expediency than of choice. It is to be profoundly hoped that Russia too will be able to make such arrangements as shall secure her gallant soldiers against being struck down by disease en route for home. She will have to do her over-land transport chiefly in the depth of winter, unless she postpones it until next year, and it is stated, on apparently good authority, that her troops are by no means well supplied with winter clothing.

THE INVESTIGATION COMMITTEE OF THE LOWER HOUSE.

This Committee, which, as our readers may remember, was appointed by some 70 members of the House of Representatives, irrespective of political parties, presented its report on the 15th instant. The document is pervaded by a tone of discontent. It appears that though the Committee obtained official assurances that just and fair measures were in hand to apportion the blame for the occurrences on the 5th, not a single constable was under arrest, nor were any evidences of such measures visible. Further, whereas the military reported that they did not find any additional instances of citizens carrying concealed weapons, the police declared that such instances still existed. The Government also declined to give any assurance as to the time when martial law would cease to be operative, reserving to itself the sole right to decide that question.

After the reading of this document Mr. Oishi Masami offered a resolution, which was adopted, in the sense that no further need for martial law could be discerned in Tokyo, and that a committee should be appointed to urge upon the Cabinet the advisability of reverting to normal conditions.

Seventy-five members of the House of Representative met at the House on the 20th. They were drawn from all parties. Mr. Matsuda Masahisa, President of the House, delivered an address, explaining that he had waited on Mr. Taft in Yokohama and assured him that the proceedings of the Tokyo mob on the 5th instant, which had disgraced Tokyo, were not in any sense an anti-foreign demonstration, and that the nation fully recognised and was grateful for the powerful assistance lent by the President to the cause of peace. Mr. Taft replied that he understood well the distinction made by Mr. Matsuda, and that the American nation would not be betrayed into false conclusions. It was a case of the old proverb, shallow waters flow noisily, still waters run deep.

Mr. Isobe Shiro then described the committee's visits to General Sakuma, to the Prime Minister and to the Chief of Police. Assurances had been obtained that justice would be meted out, but there were not yet any practical evidences of such a course being taken, and the committee felt that in order to restore the citizens' confidence in the police, the resignation of the Chief of Police and of the Home Minister did not suffice: the area of punishment must be extended to the police inspectors and others directly responsible.

Mr. Oishi Masami spoke about the Premier's promise to convene a special session of the Diet about the 10th of October. He declared that there were symptoms of this promise being broken, the ostensible reason being Baron Komura's illness. But that was no sufficient reason, and steps should be taken to hold the Ministry to its promise. He also insisted that while the maintenance of martial law in the capital might be justifiable so long as the citizens' confidence in the police was not restored, the only way to restore such confidence was to punish the police for their wrong-doing. Mr. Oishi then alluded to the new Anglo-Japanese alliance which, he alleged, was an open secret and ought to be communicated to the nation at once; and he maintained that the Government's policy in Korea was invertebrate and inadequate to the occasion.

It was pointed out that these last two points were foreign to the purposes for which the committee had been appointed, and Mr.

Oishi withdrew his remarks. But ultimately the meeting adopted a resolution in the sense that the Government should be asked to publish the Anglo-Japanese alliance and to summon a special session of the Diet.

JAPANESE PRISONERS IN RUSSIA.

It is characteristic of the strangely inhuman methods of the Russians that to this day they have left the Japanese in doubt as to the number of Japanese prisoners in Russian hands. Every statement hitherto published has been more or less conjectural, for although bound to communicate facts so essential to the peace of mind of families and relatives, the Russians appear to have been singularly lax in sending information. Moreover, there are many Japanese non-combatants in their hands. Indeed it may be that they have withheld returns because they are reluctant to make known the nature of some of their captures. At all events they have forwarded no records in the case of 500 persons, and the families of these would be entirely ignorant of their fate had not letters been received after a long interval. So far as can now be ascertained the Russians have in their hands:—

Japanese military officers.....	17
Non-commissioned officers of the Army.....	34
Soldiers of the Army.....	448
Naval Officers.....	1
Warrant officers.....	1
Blue-jackets.....	15
Other combatants of both services from whom letters have been received but concerning whom there are no official reports.....	124

Non-combatants..... 371

Total..... 1,007

When the question of calculating the cost of prisoners' keep comes up for discussion, the Russians will have to explain why they held non-combatants in custody. There can be no doubt, we should think, that the Japanese will emphatically refuse to refund the expenses incurred on account of prisoners who ought not to have been detained in custody for a day after their non-combatant character had been ascertained.

EDUCATIONAL STATISTICS.

A return has been published showing the number of students now attending private universities and principal schools. The figures are these:—

	Main Section	Room Section
Waseda University.....	2,647	2,149
Central University.....	1,093	214
Law University.....	1,240	285
Japan University.....	564	1,026
Kyoto Law School.....	514	276
Keio Gijuku University.....	481	595
Kwansei University.....	666	111
Japan Female University.....	669	197
Aoyama Girls College.....	142	4
Kokugaku-in.....	161	6
Shinshu University.....	97	16
Nichiren-shu University.....	36	153
Buddhist University.....	46	107
Jōdō-shu University.....	123	46

It will be observed that Waseda University—founded by Count Okuma—stands easily at the head of the list, and that only other private institutions whose student reach four figures are the Japan University (1,580), the Law University (1,526), Central University, (1,307) and the Keio Gijuku (1,076). In the days of the great Fukuzawa the Keio Gijuku ran the Waseda institution very close, but the latter is now shot conspicuously ahead, having more than four times as many students as Keio Gijuku.

CHINA.

The Emperor of China, according to a telegram in the Hochi Shimbun, has issued a decree ordering that as the province of Shantung is still in a backward condition comparatively speaking, steps shall be at once taken to open several ports and bring the province into closer touch with the outer world. Viceroy Yuan and the Ministers of Foreign Affairs and Agriculture and Commerce are charged with the duty of giving effect to this decree. But the Fiji Shimpō's information, also from Peking, represents Manchuria as the scene of this new measure, and says that the step has been taken by the Chinese Sovereign in consideration of a memorial addressed to the Throne by the Minister of Agriculture and Commerce. We imagine that the Fiji's version is correct. There are not many ports in Shantung such as would commend themselves for the purpose indicated in the decree.

It is stated that the Chinese Government has decided to open in Manchuria to foreign trade Mukden, Antung, Dalny, Kirin, Ningta, Hunchun, Fulanqing, Tsitsihar and Aikun. There is also a rumour that the Peking authorities have instructed their Representative in St. Petersburg to approach the Russian Government with a proposal that Vladivostok should be declared an open commercial port. Times have indeed changed when China is found among the prophets of open ports.

A telegram to the Fiji Shimpō from Peking says that Viceroy Chang Chih-tung has purchased the concession for the Yeh-Han Railway from the American syndicate for seven million yen.

The telegraph says that in Peking the question of re-imbursement in connexion with Manchuria has been again raised with some show of resolution. What is maintained by certain statesmen is that Japan and Russia should be required to recoup China for all the losses that Manchuria suffered as the theatre of war. The unfortunate inhabitants of the Three Eastern Provinces have certainly a right to indemnification and it is of course to the Chinese Government that they must look in the first place. But there are several cogent considerations which disqualify China for laying suit against either Japan and Russia. In the case of Japan what the Chinese statesmen have to remember is that had not their gallant neighbour stepped into the breach, they would now have to lament not some superficial injuries to Manchuria but its loss in toto. Japan has recovered and restored to them a valuable property which without her aid would have been irretrievably swallowed up by the great Northern Power, and instead of attempting to mulct her for damages suffered by the property in the act of recovering it, the Chinese should be devising some method of adequately displaying their gratitude. Their present conduct may be compared to that of a father who, when his son has been saved by an intrepid swimmer from drowning, requires the saviour to pay for tearing the child's clothes. If anybody is to blame for Manchuria's sufferings it is Russia, who by flagrantly violating her pledges and by attempting to absorb Manchuria into her empire, brought on the war. But if Russia would not listen to Japanese claims for re-imbursement of expenses incurred in a war for which she, Russia, had in effect acknowledged herself solely to blame, what chance is there that she will listen to China's plaint. Peking, if it be incapable of displaying common gratitude—which we do not believe—should at least endeavour to show practical common-sense by refraining from preferring a demand which it can not enforce. If this unreasoning attitude be persisted in, the only possible inference will be that China desires to create one of those pigeon-hole grievances which she has so abundantly accumulated since the commencement of her foreign intercourse.

Field-Marshal Marquis Oyama has announced that a land tax will be levied hereafter in the Kwantung region; that is to say, in the Liaotung Peninsula, the lease of which has passed by treaty into Japanese hands. We have never heard what sums the Russians collected in this district by way of taxes. Their expenditures on Port Arthur and Dalny were so enormous that the revenue derived from local taxes probably seemed too insignificant to be seriously noticed.

It is stated that some 80 members of the Censorate's Board of Archives are to be sent immediately to Japan to study in the Waseda University. These are to be placed in what is called the Sokusei class; that is to say, a special class whose members receive instruction in a particular subject without going through the regular routine of college studies. The explanation given is that this is a step preparatory to the establishment of a constitutional form of government in China, and that the idea of the reformers is to have, in the first place, a deliberative assembly consisting of members of the censorate.

On the score of economy the Empress Dowager in response to the earnest advice of their Excellencies Viceroy Yuan Shih-k'ai and Grand Councillor Tieh Liang, has commanded the curtailment of the Court theatrical troupe attached to the Imperial Household Department. This branch of the department, says the astute writer of Notes on Native Affairs, in the North China Daily News, costs the Government Tls. 300,000 a year, and the actors belonging to the troupe have to be prepared to play before the Imperial Court at any hour of the day or night they are wanted. As money is urgently needed for reform work, her Majesty's two advisers have recommended that the major portion of the Tls. 300,000 be given over to the prosecution of such reforms as the establishment of more modern schools of learning, etc., a recommendation to which the Empress Dowager, with her usual shrewdness and foresight, has gladly given her consent. Her Majesty has therefore commanded that instead of the actors being required to be always on duty, the Court shall in future have theatricals only twice a month, namely, the 1st and 15th of each month, whereas it has hitherto been the custom to play almost every other day to her Majesty. It is further stated that a large number of the members of the Court troupe are to be dismissed and only a certain number, consisting of the best, reserved. These curtailments will enable the Board of Revenue to have at least Tls. 200,000 extra funds for educational expenses.

The Imperial decree summarily abolishing the old style of competition examinations for the M.A., and Doctor degrees, as well as the annual competitions for the hsüts'ai or licentiate degree, of which the North-China Daily News printed a detailed translation, gave one the impression that it had been issued in response to the memorial of Viceroy Yuan Shih-k'ai alone. Our contemporary now finds from a perusal of a copy of the document, that it was conjointly presented by no less than six high officials of the Empire. The following are the names of the historical six:—Viceroy Yuan Shih-k'ai, as holding the seals of the Senior Viceroyalty of the Empire (Chihli) naturally headed the list of memorialists; H.E. Chao Erh-sen, this official though the latest appointed of the six, came next on the list of memorialists by right of being the incumbent of the second provincial post of the Empire, in order of seniority, that is to say, the Tartar Generalship of Mukden and Viceroyalty of Fengtien province (Lower Manchuria.) The third memorialist in seniority should have been the Viceroy of the Liangkang provinces, H.E. Chou Fu, but he had to give place in the present instance to H.E. Chang Chih-tung, Viceroy of the Hu-kuang provinces, owing to his (Chou Fu's) being only an "Acting" incumbency; hence Chou Fu's name came fourth on the list, the fifth being H. E. Ts'en Ch'un-hsuen, "Acting" Viceroy of the Two Kuang provinces, and the sixth, H. E. Tuan Fang, the lowest in rank of the whole, Governor of Hunan province. This list, as can be seen at a glance, is the strongest available throughout the whole Empire, and it was but natural that the Empress Dowager should have been much impressed, and to such a point that even if she were at heart opposed to the epoch-making step, she had no course but to tell the Emperor to sanction the memorial, in spite of the opposition of Wang Wên-shao, Lu Ch'uan-lin and others, who, it is stated, fought (figuratively) tooth and nail against the "revolutionary" memorial. The Chinese of the immediate future, and thereafter, will therefore have much to be grateful for to the six high officials who affixed their seals to the draft memorial which gives to succeeding generations the illimitable blessings of modern education, although, as a matter of fact, we know that it was H. E. Viceroy Yuan Shih-k'ai, assisted by Viceroy Chang Chih-tung, who was the real author of the memorial in question.

The Foochow Echo of the 2nd inst. says:—A disastrous fire occurred in Kienning-fu last week, in which about two thousand houses were destroyed, including the Kienning prefect's yamen and a large part of the magistrate's yamen. Local superstition is reported to attribute the destruction of these yamens to divine retribution for an atrocious punishment inflicted by the magistrate, under the prefect's instructions, on some man (name and offence not stated) whom they had flogged on the legs till the bones were laid bare. No doubt the burning of their yamens was a fitting penalty for their official barbarity, but it seems hard on the owners of the other two thousand houses, who surely cannot all have been concerned in this savage act!

According to the Sin Wan-pao, a census recently taken at Peking shows that there are some 37,000 opium-shops there, which, it has been suggested, should be licensed at the rate of Tls. 2 each, per month. The total amount of money obtainable from this source, would thus be Tls. 74,000 per mensem, which would be usually devoted to the support of the Metropolitan gendarmerie.

The Amoy correspondent of the South China Morning Post wrote to that journal under date the 6th inst.:—H. M. S. Iphigenia has orders to remain here until relieved although late yesterday afternoon all was in readiness for sailing at daylight this morning. Her relief may arrive to-day. The Panang S. S. Wathora has been unable to discharge her cargo and carries it back with her to-day and also this letter, as we have no other merchant vessel in port. The old Chinese cable boat and the Foochow gunboat now in port, would be able to land about 20 (useless) men in case of emergency and according to reliable reports the Amoy men intend to have their revenge on mid-autumn festival day (our 13th September). They say they will have 3,000 armed men and will destroy the Customs building. They will attempt to kill one foreign outdoor staff, and one native clerk. For obvious reasons I do not at present send you the names for publication but may do so later. The situation is considered serious and, as a proof of their earnestness in the matter, they are preventing native lighters from carrying cargo.

The expected trouble did not arise, the authorities having the town well in hand now.

KOREA.

Li Yon-ik has arrived in Shanghai and placed himself in communication with the fugitives Hyon Sang-kon and Li Hak-kyun. It is now confidently stated that Li Yon-ik is charged with some secret mission by the Korean Court, and that since his arrival in Shanghai he has addressed a telegram to his Emperor. Hyon Sang-kon, spoken of above, is the Korean who was sent by the Korean Government to confer with Viceroy Alexieff shortly before the war broke out. He represents the Russo-phil party in Seoul, and the inference is that the Emperor of Korea has not yet recognised the realities of the situation but is still coquetting with Russia. If by such action His Majesty could be credited with patriotic motives; if he could be supposed to have in view a fuller measure of independence for his country, one could comprehend and sympathise with his efforts. But it is at best a case of King Log and King Stork. Independence for Korea can not possibly lie in the direction of Russian association, and as for Japan, it is not to be conceived that she will perpetually tolerate intrigues which point to a renewal of her struggle with Russia and to the nullifying of all her stupendous efforts. In her own interests and in the interests of peace she will have to open Korea's eyes rudely.

Meanwhile the report that a new Cabinet had been successfully organized is now denied. Some of the proposed Ministers refuse to accept office, and even the immediate supporters of the new Premier are showing hesitation.

It is stated that harvest prospects are very gloomy in the peninsula. The weather during summer was most favourable and a splendid yield seemed to be in sight. But the approach of autumn brought storm after storm, and the consequent floods not only wrought great injury to embankments, buildings and roads, but also devastated large tracts of arable land, so that something like a famine is expected to take the place of the original promise of plenty. The price of rice is rising steadily.

It is generally alleged that Mr. Hyon Yon-un has been arrested and that General Hasegawa has made some strong representation to the Throne about him. This Hyon Yon-un was supposed to be a pro-Japanese leader. He made himself conspicuous in that character at the time of Marquis Ito's visit to Seoul last year. But it is now stated that he was all the time a partizan of Russia and that his true nature has now been discovered. Apparently the idea which first presents itself to the minds of some Koreans in connexion with the re-establishment of peace is that Seoul will once more become the site of a Russian Legation, and that the old era of splendid intrigue and fine opportunity will be again inaugurated. They are preparing, therefore, to take advantage of the occasion. Hyon Yon-un is said to be one of these persons, but unfortunately for himself his preparations were too previous. Is there not to be found in Korea any such thing as a party of true patriots? One finds it hard to sympathise with men who labour for the independence of their country all the while they are toiling to make her an affix of the Russian Empire.

Li Yon-ik has departed from Shanghai for France. It is alleged that he has entered into some arrangement with French citizens as to the granting of certain rights and privileges. But we do not imagine that Li Yon-ik carries around with him the great seal of the Korean Government and a plenipotentiary commission from the Korean Court to grant privileges and concessions.

The Koreans, as the Yei Shimp'o shrewdly remarks, seem to forget that their country's treaty with Russia has been abrogated and that a new one has to be negotiated before a Russian Legation can be opened in Seoul.

The Ministerial crisis is not yet settled in Korea.

The railway from Seoul to Wiju is virtually completed but all the arrangements for handling goods traffic are not yet fully made. It is therefore stated that the Seoul-Pyongyang section will begin to carry from November and that the Pyongyang-Wiju section will be opened for that purpose in January or February. These lines are of the same gauge as the Russian road in Manchuria, and thus the question of gauge is further complicated, for it is understood to be Japan's intention to continue the Seoul-Wiju line to Liaoyang, where it will connect with the narrow-gauge road from Changchun to Port Arthur. Thus the gauge of the Korean system would be the same as that of the Russian system north of Changchun, whereas the gauge of the Liaotung system, which connects with both, would be different from either. There were doubtless good reasons for altering the gauge of the Manchurian line as it fell into Japanese hands, but the alteration constitutes an inconvenience now. We can not understand, however, how it should cost 20 million yen to restore the old gauge between Port Arthur and Changchun. Presumably the former sleepers remain and there would not be any widening of bridges or enlargement of tunnels. Yet 20 millions is the figure stated.

Concerning Li Yon-ik's visit to Paris, whither he is said to have proceeded from Shanghai, there are various rumours, all pervaded by a suspicion that he has received some commission from the Emperor of Korea, and that his mission is to re-open the intrigues with Russia which plunged the Far East into a bloody war. It is now telegraphically stated, however, that the Korean Minister of Foreign Affairs ridicules these rumours, and points out that as Li Yon-ik has been stripped of all his official functions, anything he may hereafter undertake must be in his capacity of private individual only. That is an explanation which stares every one in the face, but it does not fully elucidate the situation. For what is to be said about the alleged fact that during his stay in Shanghai, Mr. Li was in telegraphic communication with the Sovereign in Seoul?

The Emperor was to re-enter his former residence on Sept. 15th. The palace buildings, which were destroyed by fire last year, have now been completely rebuilt and the 15th was said to be an auspicious day for a re-entry.

The "Tong Haks" (who arose as a counterparty to the Il-chinhui) were reported a week ago to be creating disturbances in the Yung Wal and Peng-chang districts, plundering the inhabitants of food and money.

From to-morrow, said the Korea Daily News of Sept. 12th, there will be two days official holiday, "Harvest festival." We presume the holiday is a matter of routine as present climatic conditions are no excuse for a "Harvest festival."

In one issue the Daily News says: "The personnel of the new Cabinet has been gazetted, but our information is that all the nominees except

Mr. Min Yong Whan (who is nominated for the Foreign Office) have signified their reluctance to accept office at present." On the following day it was reported that Mr. Min Yong Whan, the Minister for Foreign Affairs, had been dismissed and that his successor was Mr. Min Chong Mok.

In the last number of the Korea Review the following was the opening paragraph of the "Editorial Comment": "This issue of the Review will probably be looked upon as a scolding number. It is not our purpose to find fault for the mere fun of the thing, but, as we have repeatedly stated, we intend to give the facts, whatever they may be. We may as well give up the notion that the whole trouble in Korea is caused by a few rowdy Japanese coolies. This was for a long time the general opinion and was so admitted by the Japanese; but recent events show conclusively that the Japanese military authorities are carrying out a vast scheme of reprisals which have for their object the seizure of Korean private property wholesale and with the merest pretense at compensation."

Following upon the Imperial notification that the Korean Government would dispense with the services of foreign Consuls-General and Consuls, comes a notice in the Gazette that those gentlemen who have honorarily represented Korea's interests abroad will be decorated. Consuls general will receive the 3rd class Pal-Gwai, and Consuls will receive the 4th class of the Tai Kaku.

The Japanese Minister, says the Daily News, has requested that 13,000 metres of land on Han San be loaned to the Japanese Government for the use of the Japanese Department of Communications. The Minister for Foreign Affairs conferred with His Majesty, who granted the request.

ANNIHILATION OF A JAPANESE COMPANY.

On the 27th of August two companies of Japanese infantry set out from their lines to reconnoitre. One commanded by Lieut. Tanaka directed its march towards Lajenchang, the other, whose commander is not mentioned, proceeded toward Liang-shwi-hsien. These troops belonged to General Kuroki's army. Reconnoitering is particularly dangerous at the present season as the millet stands high enough to completely conceal ambushed troops. The Liang-shwi-hsien company, after advancing for a considerable distance with all due precaution, found itself suddenly under a heavy fire from an enemy obviously superior in numbers that an immediate retreat was the only course to take. This company succeeded in regaining the lines with only 5 wounded. But Lieutenant Tanaka's command was virtually annihilated. A regiment of Russian infantry, some 3,000 strong, with 2 guns, completely surrounded the Japanese, who mustered only 190. A desperate fight ensued with the result that only Sergeant-Major Yoshida and 20 men made their way back to camp, four of them wounded. These men had lain concealed all night in the millet, and had effected their escape on the 28th. Of the remaining 169 officers and men, 20 were killed, 120 were made prisoners and 29 are missing. A Russian account shows that among the prisoners 90 were wounded, and that Lieutenant Tanaka, who lay about through the stomach, committed suicide when he saw the Russians approaching to capture him.

Doubtless we shall have a grandiloquent account of the affair from General Linewitch whose method of recounting events differs conspicuously from that of Kuropatkin. The incident was certainly very unfortunate especially as occurring on the very eve of the signature of the peace-treaty.

BARON KOMURA.

(RECEIVED AT THE FOREIGN OFFICE.)

At 6 p.m. on the 13th the doctor again visited Baron Komura and declared that things were going on well and that there was no serious symptom. Baron Komura passed a quiet day, and the doctor considered that his condition was unchanged and that the illness would not show any new development.

Baron Komura passed a good night on the 14th. His condition is unchanged. The statement that he would depart for home on the 14th is baseless. His departure is said to have been postponed.

Baron Komura's condition is very satisfactory. His progress during the last 24 hours was very good. A second specialist has been summoned to consult with Dr. Delafeld, but the result of their consultation is not yet clearly known. On the night of the 16th Baron Komura slept soundly. There are no serious symptoms.

15th, 6 p.m.

Baron Komura passed a very good day and his condition is certainly satisfactory. His temperature to-day fell conspicuously.

Later.

Mr. Sato and Mr. Honda remain in America with Baron Komura.

1.—On the morning of the 17th Dr. Delafeld visited Baron Komura and asserted that judging from his satisfactory condition, the fever might be expected to have run its course by the end of this week.

2.—Baron Komura's illness is proceeding through its stages in all respects satisfactorily. His speedy convalescence is anticipated.

3.—At 6 p.m. on the 17th both Doctors pronounced the patient's condition good in every respect. Dr. Delafeld will pay his last visit to-morrow.

On the 18th instant Baron Komura's position continued satisfactory. He is certainly progressing towards recovery.

Later.

The two physicians attending Baron Komura have expressed the opinion, after consultation with Surgeon-Major Suzuki, that the patient's condition is satisfactory and that he will recover without difficulty. They have diagnosed his illness to be a light case of typhoid.

Later.

Baron Komura's condition on the 19th was favourable in every respect. For some days his temperature has been normal.

Mr. Yamaza and his party are to leave Seattle by the Tacoma for Japan.

On Sept. 16th, the Emperor sent a telegram to Baron Komura through Marquis Tokudaiji, Grand Chamberlain, enquiring as to his health. On the following day the Baron replied with thanks.

The Crown Prince has sent a telegram to Baron Komura through Prince Nakayama, Grand Steward, enquiring as to his health. The Baron replied with thanks on Sept. 19th.

Writing on the day when it became definitely known that peace had been arranged the Portsmouth correspondent of the New York Commercial said:—

The figure of Komura will linger longest in the memories of the newspaper men who have watched the envoys day by day.

All the Japanese genius is in that wonderful mid-ge—that diplomatic "brownie" from the Land of the Chrysanthemum. Do not forget that he is the Mikado's Minister of Foreign Affairs. He gave Baron Rosen his passports when the war broke out. The extended Anglo-Japanese alliance, which secures Japan against European aggression and will place Britain's fleet at her disposal when she may need it more than during the tussle with the Muscovite, is known to be chiefly of Komura's devising. His career is crowded with high points.

Yet, behind his personal achievement, and much more important, is his ethnic representative quality; and as one watches his movements, knowing how clear a conception he has of the ulterior purposes of Japan—those purposes that bewilder the German Emperor and are not indubitably known either in London or Washington—one speculates curiously as to the future of our relations with a state whose shibboleth is "Asia for the Asiatics" and comes to the conclusion that it is a good thing for the Caucasian races to have a friend at the Mikado's court in John Bull.

THE HOME MINISTER.

Viscount Yoshikawa, Minister of State for Home Affairs, has resigned and is succeeded by Baron Kiyoura, who takes the position in conjunction with his present portfolio of Agriculture and Commerce.

The Fiji Shimpō, while approving of the resignation, expresses much sympathy with the retiring Minister. It has been the constant practice of the Police Bureau to manage these matters relating to public meetings without any reference to the Home Minister, and we may take it for granted that whoever had been in office at the Naimusho the occurrences on the fatal 5th could not have been averted. Yet, as the ultimate responsibility rests in theory with the Minister, Viscount Yoshikawa shows his manly appreciation of representative institutions by resigning, and his resignation will have a very wholesome effect in calming public opinion. The Fiji takes this as a text for repeating its now somewhat hackneyed contention that the whole Cabinet should resign.

The Fiji Shimpō and the Nippon continue to urge the resignation of the Cabinet. They both argue along the same lines, namely, that resignation is the only course calculated to restore national unity. Any attempt to tide over the crisis would be a most unhappy blunder. The Fiji's forecast is that if the Ministry meets the Diet the latter will certainly adopt an address to the Throne impeaching the Cabinet, and should dissolution ensue, the general elections will be marked by a spirit of almost uncontrollable excitement. The wise plan, therefore, is to conclude the business directly connected with the peace negotiations, namely, the ratification of the treaty and the exchange of ratifications, and then to resign. But we confess that we find a difficulty in deciphering the exact meaning of the Fiji, which is generally so clear and precise. Its exact words are that, having completed the peace-treaty business, the Ministry should show its purpose of resigning, and should then approach the special session of the Diet. Does this signify resignation before the Diet meets or resignation so soon as the Diet exhibits any hostile mood? We can not tell, but it is hard to believe that our contemporary recommends such an inconsequential and undignified procedure as the latter.

THE FUSHUN MINE.

Again we read very glowing accounts of the Fushun coal mine. Experts sent by the Government after the Battle of Mukden to examine and report, are said to have stated that the vein of mineral is 65.9 feet thick (Japanese measure) and that it is broken by only 26 dividing lines of extraneous matter, none of which measures more than 4 inches. Some of the seams show 9 feet of solid coal and some measures only 1 foot. As for the quality of the mineral it is declared to be superior to the best Kyushu coal for heating purposes. The visible length—visible on account of actual borings—is 6,000 yards and the visible width 2,000. It is further estimated that all the adjacent hills are practically lumps of coal and that there are no sudden dips or interruptions of the strata. The amount actually in sight is supposed to be at least 300 million tons, but we observe that the Yoroku values it at 10 yen a ton, which is obviously absurd, neither can we clearly follow the calculation as to quantity. At all events the mine is evidently a splendid property. The Chinese had never exploited it further than to scratch the surface with pick and shovel, but when the Russians entered into possession they made preparations for work on a very different scale, among these preparations being included the laying of lines of railway to all the visible workings. Before, however, these extensive plans could be put into operation, the Battle of Mukden transferred the whole property to Japanese possession. It is a property too extensive for any private company to work and the Japanese Government will doubtless take it in hand, together with the mines at Yentai and Changtu. Evidently the ownership of these mines greatly enhances the value of the East-Chinese Railway since an ample supply of fuel is immediately at hand. It means too that a brilliant future lies before Taicren, which will probably become one of the chief coaling stations in the Orient. Nagasaki, however, may suffer.

THE EAST-CHINESE RAILWAY.

The Yoroku Chaho gives some interesting figures relating to the railway acquired by Japan in Manchuria. From Chang-chun to Port Arthur the distance is 456 miles, and if the three branch lines be added—namely the Tachikiao-Yingkow branch (9 miles), the Tafangsin-Tairen branch (4 miles) and the Nankwanlung-Tairen branch (11 miles)—the total of the Japanese roads becomes 486 miles, while there remain to the Russians 147 miles between Changchun and Harbin. The portion which has come into Japanese possession cost 76,222,471 roubles to construct, independently of the expense of creating stations. There are valuable fiscal privileges attached to the line according to the treaty in which Japan has taken Russian's place. Some expense will have to be incurred in connexion with the gauge, the Japanese having altered the gauge along the portion now in their military possession, namely, as far as Changtu. Probably the plan adopted by both sides will be lay down a third rail, so that the road may be simultaneously available for Russian and Japanese rolling stock. Doubtless the Japanese will soon build a line to connect Kiullenching (in other words, the Yalu) with the East-Chinese Railway, and will also build a branch from Changchun to Kirin. When these roads are finished, Japan will be possessed of a system of Korean and Manchurian lines obviously of the highest importance alike from a commercial, a political and a strategic point of view.

There are insistent reports that the Chinese Government contemplates the re-purchase of the East-Chinese Railway from Japan and that money for the purpose will be borrowed in France. But nothing seems less likely than that Japan should agree to the sale, unless some very special arrangement could be made.

THE TANKO RAILWAY COMPANY.

It is generally stated that the Tanko Railway Company has succeeded in obtaining a loan of a million sterling, the rate of interest to be 5 per cent. and the nett price received by the company £91. 15s. per £100 bond. The matter was arranged by Mr. Hayakawa with a Yokohama firm whose transliterated name defies our power of deciphering. The loan is to be applied to developing the Company's mines, to improving the harbour of transport, and to doubling the Temiya-Sunagawa line. The loan is to be repaid in 25 years. It had been the Company's intention to obtain this money by an issue of new shares, but the comparatively good terms offered by British capitalists made the loan process more favourable. The Company has already a domestic debt on which it is paying high interest. This will now be liquidated with cheap money.

The Shogyo Shinbun is much pleased at this result, which it calls the first genuine borrowing of foreign money through non-official channels. The Osaka Gas Company and the Tokyo Electric Railway Company have obtained foreign money but not unconditionally, whereas the Tanko Railway Company is not saddled with any conditions. Our contemporary thinks that, in view of the borrowing rates of European countries, the Hokkaido firm might have looked to obtain slightly better terms, as, after all, it will be paying 6.05 per cent. But the Shogyo should remember that Japan is very different from Europe in point of accessibility to foreign understanding. This country, though much is known about it and though its achievements have attracted world-wide attention, remains a terra incognita in the matter of laws and industrial conditions. Foreign capitalists feel like taking a leap in the dark when they invest money here, and they have to be tempted by good terms.

NEW MUSIC.

Messrs. Chappell and Co., of 50, New Bond-street, London, who will shortly be celebrating their hundredth anniversary, send us another bundle of new music. Among the nicest are two songs from the Chinese, words by Elsie Rendall and music by Paul A. Rubens. The first, entitled "The Lament of Lien Mei," is full of tenderness, the music matching the words in pathos; it is admirably suited for a contralto voice. The second number, "A Song of Love," in spite of many risky vocal skips and a somewhat harsh ending, is nevertheless a bright and charming piece of work, making an admirable second to the "Lament." Needless to remark, the two songs should be sung as one number. "Qui Sait?" words by Julian Gade and music by Frank Lambert, is an easy and smoothly written song quite up to the standard we expect of this composer. The music is adapted to French and English words. In a "Song of the Southland" (words by Theodora Mills, music by Florence Aylward), we have a spirited number, suited for tenor or bass voice. The melody is well marked and clothed with strong diatonic harmony. We feel sure that this song will greatly add to the composer's popularity, besides being a welcome addition to the repertoire of all vocalists, professional or amateur. Three encore songs, "A little Cloud," "Goodbye," and "Passeo" (music by Percy Bowie, words by Austin, Dent and Bell) are a trio of which the last, a dainty little song, is the best written. The harmony in bars 7 and 8 of "A little Cloud" is somewhat harsh; the same phrase is better treated when repeated in bars 20 and 21. A welcome addition to dance music that is danceable is "Valse Sourire d'amour." This bright and tuneful waltz is by Fr. Lambert. It should go down well in Yokohama.

FOREIGNERS AND THE PEACE.

The following correspondence may be of some interest:—

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "NICHU NICHU SHIMBUN.")

SIR,—I observe in the columns of a leading Tokyo journal an article the gist of which is that unless the Government offer some intelligible explanation of its large concessions made at the peace conference, foreign observers are likely to be misled into supposing that this Empire is financially impotent to continue the war. Will you permit me to say that so far as my experience goes—and I have discussed the matter with many Englishmen and Americans—no such apprehension need be entertained. The question asked by foreigners is, what could have been gained by continuing the war? It is quite plain that no defeat suffered by Russia in Eastern Asia could compel her to pay an indemnity. A State can not be forced to pay indemnities unless its national existence is threatened. The stability of the Russian Empire is not exposed to serious peril by any disasters that may befall it eastward of Lake Baikal. The Japanese troops might capture Harbin; might capture Vladivostok; might capture the whole of the Amur region, might even strip Russia of her Siberian possessions. Of such quality have Japanese soldiers and sailors shown themselves that no one can doubt the certainty of these results had the war been continued. But what then? Would Russia have been more inclined to pay an indemnity after such disasters than she is now? Surely not. Less than ever would she be so disposed. For by that time Japan would be groaning under an enormous burden of debt, and Russia, not having received any mortal wound, would adopt the obviously wise attitude, an attitude of menace. Massing her forces in the vicinity of Lake Baikal and refraining from any large engagement, she would compel Japan to retain always a huge army in the field, and at the same time to incur the expense of administering vast tracts of comparatively unproductive territory. It is in fact axiomatic that Japan could never collect an indemnity from Russia, and consequently to continue the war with such an object would be to sacrifice the substance by grasping at the shadow. We foreigners assume that all this was obvious to Japan's statesmen and therefore had they continued the war we should have been compelled to regard it as a war of territorial aggression. It may be more honourable to fight for territory than for money, but I do not think that the Japanese people would approve statesmen who exposed them to either of these reproaches.

It has been said, however, that at any rate the whole of Saghalien might have been obtained. Do you, Sir, think so? Do you think that after the Tsar had again and again publicly pledged himself in the face of Russia and of the world not to consent to either the payment of an indemnity or the cession of territory, he could have consented to the absorption of the whole of Saghalien into the Japanese empire? His dynasty would not have survived such a disgrace.

What we foreigners think, then, is not that the exhaustion of her finances compelled Japan to abandon a part of her demands, but that her statesmen showed profound wisdom in averting such exhaustion by stopping the war in good season. The original objects of the great contest had been fully attained; they did not include either money or territory. We think, too, that the intangible gains which accrue to Japan from this war are not to be measured by money. She has proved herself one of the greatest Powers of the world. Her people have given evidence of qualities which Western nations are seeking to take for models. The terrible spectre of Russian aggression in the Far East has been effectually exorcised, and Japan, assured of a long peace, may now quietly sit down to develop her material resources. And, if you will permit me to say so, another thought occurs to us. It is a sentiment of high admiration for the splendid courage of the statesmen who made these concessions. Nothing would have been easier for them than to break off the negotiations and continue the war. That course would have received the plaudits of the multitude, and would have secured to these statesmen the personal rewards to which their skillful and brilliant conduct of the Empire's affairs during the past two years entitle them. But they deliberately chose the certainly unpopular course of making peace on moderate terms rather than fight on for the attainment of either the impossible or the discreditable, and by making that choice they sacrificed their own ambition on the shrine of their country's best interests. It appears to us foreign observers that no act in the whole war was nobler or more valiant.

I am, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
F. BRINKLEY.

Tokyo, September 10th, 1905.

To Captain BRINKLEY.

SIR,—I have read with extreme interest a letter dated 12th inst. addressed by you to the Editor of the Tokyo Nichi Nichi Shinbun and published in its 17th issue. The just, reasonable and enlightened view concerning the now dominant topic of the Peace Treaty that you have expounded so forcibly and lucidly in that letter can not but give a profound impression to the readers; and those who are not wanting in sound common sense will have no other alternative than to entirely concur with your opinion. I firmly believe that the majority of the influential part and the main body of the nation will by no means lose their common sense, notwithstanding the superficial agitation demonstrated in the recent metropolitan disturbance and the press excitement; on the other hand those uncivilized acts and unlawful means resorted to by reckless people give many chances to reflect on the matter with cool heads and to regain power of judgement, even to those who have been too short-sighted not to be tempted by the popular clamour so raised by the Press. "Indemnity or continue war to bitter end." It is to be regretted that not only our home press generally imbued with too much hostile and warlike passion and absorbed with care to use as much vehement and sensational language as possible, instead of discharging its higher mission to lead the public by statesmanlike views and endeavouring to allay the wild popular extravagance with the object of attaining peaceable ends. Also some of the influential foreign papers often made too favourable comments on our successes which flattered our vanity and rather tended to instigate our populace to foster an excessive ambition and to attempt to realise an impossible expectation. That the same just view that I entertain has been enunciated in one of the influential papers by the pen of no less an authority than you struck me with a deep sense of satisfaction and gratitude which impelled me to write to you to convey my heartfelt appreciation. I hope and believe that your argument as well as your kind and lofty motive will bring with it the most beneficial result among intelligent readers and that our fellow countrymen will recognise a faithful friend and a wise adviser in your own person.

Yours faithfully,

S.K.

Tokyo, September 18th, 1905.

NOTES ON CURRENT EVENTS.

Even distant Japan is likely to feel severely the sudden suspension of the Baku source of kerosene supply. In the Shogyo Shinbun a table is published showing how the Russian oil has gradually found a market in this country. The import figures during the past ten years are:—

	American, yen.	Russian, yen.
1896	5,282,909	1,013,127
1897	5,971,866	1,336,353
1898	5,910,774	1,133,807
1899	5,436,622	2,429,450
1900	10,775,116	2,412,017
1901	11,988,784	1,932,326
1902	12,097,455	2,839,655
1903	6,825,457	4,630,239
1904	11,152,271	4,385,478
1905	6,121,212	2,248,790

The figure for 1905 covers the period up to July only. Oil coming from Russia constitutes the great bulk of the tank supply. It is mostly carried by the vessels of the Shell Transport Company which will probably now find itself greatly inconvenienced as its Borneo wells are not developed sufficiently to take the place of the Baku oil.

Mr. de Witte left New York on the 12th and ought to reach St. Petersburg in about 10 days from that date. The idea is that so soon as he submits the peace treaty and so soon as the Tsar has had time to examine it, His Majesty will go through the form of ratification. Nothing seems to be known, however, as to ratification on the Japanese side. Baron Komura is evidently too ill to undertake the journey from America, his departure is spoken of for the 2nd proximo, but if he has typhoid fever, as seems now pretty certain, it is impossible to foretell the time when he will be able to commence the voyage. The remaining members of the Plenipotentiary Commission left New York on the 14th instant, but we do not suppose that ratification will be withheld until their return to Tokyo. It was indeed always understood that in Japan's case ratification would be accomplished by telegram. Delay is to be deprecated, not merely because every day's postponement in withdrawing the armies from Manchuria means so much additional outlay, but also because ratification by the Mikado would exercise a tranquillizing influence on the agitation still existing among a section of the Japanese.

There have just been published by the Official Gazette figures relating to the settled accounts for the 37th fiscal year of Meiji, namely, the year ended March 31st, 1905. From them we learn that the revenue exceeded the expenditure by a sum of over 50 millions of yen; a result due primarily to strict administrative economy, and in the second place to expansion of the State's income. It is understood that this surplus will be devoted to outlays in connexion with the war and to other extraordinary expenditures.

The Yoroku Choho, without stating its authority and therefore without establishing any claim to absolute credence, gives the following figures:—

Sums actually expended hitherto on account of warlike operations on sea and on shore.....	Yen. 1,200,000,000
Sums expended on special accounts (interest etc., on loans).....	60,000,000
Sums due abroad	100,000,000
Total	1,360,000,000

Our contemporary further says that whereas the Treasury's disbursements were from 60 to 65 million yen monthly up to June last, they grew thereafter to 70 or 75 millions.

The Peresviet—now the Sagami—has arrived safely at Yokosuka by her own steam.

The Directors of the Nippon Yusen Kaisha have presented a sum of ten thousand yen to Captain Macmillan in consideration of his long and meritorious service. Captain Macmillan, as our readers have already been informed, is leaving the Company to take up the work of Lloyds' marine inspection in Kobe.

It is stated that the Hokkaido Tanko Kaisha has negotiated a loan of 15 million yen with an English syndicate. The rate of interest is 5 per cent., but as to the issue price there seems to be still some uncertainty, probably it will be 92 or 93. The railway, the mines and all the company's property are given as security.

It is now stated that the peace treaty will not be ratified by the Emperor of Japan until the signed original is brought to Tokyo by Mr. Yamaza, who is expected to arrive in Japan on the 6th or 7th of October. Hence, if a special session of the Diet be summoned, it cannot meet before the end of October. Possibly the Government may conclude that as the ordinary session would commence a month later in the normal routine of events, there is not sufficient reason to convene a special session.

Between February 1904 and the date of the conclusion of peace in August, 1905, the total voluntary contributions to the Army

Relief Fund (Rikugun Juppei) by Japanese and foreigners amounted to 1,642,496 yen, of which aggregate 1,210,685 yen was in cash, and the value of goods sent in represented 431,811 yen.

Sir Michael Hicks-Beach, M.P., who, with Lady Hicks-Beach and their daughters, is spending a few days in Japan en route to Singapore, is in his 69th year. He first entered Parliament in 1864 and having been returned continuously to that assembly ever since is now the Father of the House of Commons. His first office of importance was that of Under-Secretary of the Home Department and Secretary of the Poor Law Board. This was in 1868. Since then he has been Chief Secretary for Ireland (1874-78, 1886-87); Secretary for the Colonies (1878-80); Chancellor of the Exchequer (1885-86); President of the Board of Trade (1888-92), and finally Chancellor of the Exchequer from 1895 to 1902, when he resigned owing to disagreement with his colleagues regarding Mr. Chamberlain's fiscal proposals. Sir Michael is held in high esteem in Great Britain as a financier of the old Free Trade school, and his budgets, though they never contained any brilliant proposals such as Gladstone delighted in, or any revolutionary schemes such as Sir Wm. Harcourt's death-duties, undoubtedly pleased the great trading and commercial classes of the British Isles. His selection as arbitrator of the Tanjong Pagar Dock affair seems very acceptable to the people of Singapore who are so vitally interested in the expropriation plans. Sir Michael Hicks-Beach, in addition to being High Steward of Gloucestershire, is Provincial Grand Master of the Freemasons of that county. To those who saw the eminent British statesman when he landed in Yokohama on Sunday, the nickname which the House of Commons tacked on to him in years gone-by, "Black Michael," seemed hardly to apply. But though time has blanched his erst-while raven locks, it has not bowed the tall, thin, wiry figure, and he still carries himself as though quite unconscious of the burden of years.

The special correspondent of The Times at Portsmouth said this in one of his interesting telegrams about the peace negotiations:—

If I revert for a moment to the question of secrecy it is because I do not wish to be misunderstood. I have never said that the Japanese had no right to demand secrecy. They have a right, but the question is whether it was politic for them to insist on that right. I think it was not. They seem to have supposed that it was possible to prevent reports of the proceedings from being published. It was not possible, and it is not possible. Not a day has passed when reports have not been published. The real question for them was whether they preferred that there should be accurate or inaccurate reports. Moreover, they have for the moment checked or diverted or diminished that full current of American sympathy which till last week flowed steadily on in one free channel all the way to Japan herself. There are here about 120 Press representatives, of whom perhaps 100 are for American journals. With scarce an exception they were, when they came, pro-Japanese. To-day, with scarce an exception, they have come under Russian influences, not wholly, of course, but to a certain extent. Pro-Japanese in opinion they remain, as their journals and the nation remain, but nine-tenths of the news they have been able to send has come from Russian sources. Is it strange that their feeling toward Russia is kinder than before? "Yes," answered a great Japanese authority, "but we are content to wait till everything is known. Then the world will do us justice."

This reminds us of the case of the most distinguished among the American correspondents who accompanied the Japanese armies in the field. He went to the front full of enthusiastic admiration for Japanese methods and achievements. He came back abusing everything. Asked whether he considered it fair to condemn the nation all round because he personally had been denied facilities which he had expected, and which he believed to have been promised, he answered flatly in the affirmative. Newspaper men are generally to be won by civility and expansiveness. Baron Komura and Mr. Takahira, having both presided at the Japanese Legation in Washington, knew their journalistic monde very well. But they deliberately chose to refrain from engaging with M. Witte in a competitive campaign of garrulity. We do not think that their reticence cost them very dear.

Commissioner G. S. Railton, the representative of General Booth, is now in Japan on a visit with the object of inspecting the work of the Salvation Army and reporting on the conditions and prospects of Christian work in general. He has already visited and conducted large and successful meetings in Kobe, Okayama, Osaka, Kyoto and Nagoya. On Saturday, Sunday and Monday next he will visit Isezaki, Maebashi and Ashikaga, afterwards returning to Tokyo for a series of public and private meetings. Commissioner Railton was one of the first to connect himself with General Booth when the work of the Salvation Army in England was inaugurated and has therefore assisted largely in its extension throughout the world. He was the pioneer of the work of the Army in the U.S.A., and also Germany and in his present capacity, as the General's representative, he has visited nearly every country in which the Army is operating. He is a prolific writer. Besides regularly contributing to the periodicals of the Army he is the author of "Heathen England," "Twenty-one years in the Salvation Army," &c. &c. He expects to remain several weeks, afterwards going on to China and then returning to London, via Hawaii and the U.S.A.

Corporal Kobayashi had a remarkable escape in Manchuria. He was taken prisoner during a reconnaissance, and the Russians despatched him by train to Harbin. When nearing the latter place he leaped from the carriage window, and managed to lie concealed for three days, eating anything he could find and drinking ditch-water. This happened at the end of July. The corporal then made his way into Mongolia and obtained a Chinese disguise, thereafter simulating to be deaf and dumb and making his way gradually southward as a beggar. After a journey of 24 days he succeeded in regaining his corps. All through this pilgrimage of hardships he never failed to take notes and drawings of the country and the conditions through which he passed, and when he reached his battalion General Nogi sent for him and personally thanked him for his services.

When the negotiations at Portsmouth were going on certain publicists condemned the diplomacy of the Japanese Plenipotentiaries because they consented to defer the consideration of the indemnity question until the end. It is now evident, however, that in so doing they behaved with much wisdom. Their plan was to obtain Russia's consent to the terms concerning Manchuria and Korea in the first place, and having thus secured her constructive admission of responsibility for the war, they were in an excellent position to demand that she should crown the admission by indemnifying Japan's outlays. There would not have been any war had Russia yielded in 1903 even a compartively small part of what she yielded at Portsmouth last month. But she preferred fighting to yielding, and after the fight she found herself compelled to confess that she had been in the wrong. It is plain that if before eliciting that confession Japan had forced the indemnity into the fore-front of the discussion, her ground for demanding to be indemnified would have been much weaker, and inferentially she would have figured as attaching greater importance to the monetary question than to the vital matters which constituted the cause of the war. This analysis omits, too, the cardinal fact that had Baron Komura insisted on an early decision with regard to the indemnity and Saghalien, peace could never have been concluded at all. He showed sound judgment throughout.

It is expected that the floating of the Retvisan and the Pobieda will be completed by the 10th of October. The resurrections at Port Arthur will then have aggregated 4 battleships and 1 armoured cruiser, to say nothing of minor craft. It has been a rich mine.

The Times, writing when the ultimate fate of the Portsmouth conference was exceedingly problematical, but when certain articles had been discussed and disposed of, said:—

One matter, at all events, of first-rate importance in itself and of deep significance generally, has been definitely put on paper. It is now clear to all whom it may concern that the Japanese meant exactly what they said when they stipulated before the war for the evacuation of Manchuria and the integrity of China. They did not put forward those demands with the expectation of succeeding to the position which Russia had engrossed in defiance of treaty. They put them forward with the fullest intention of observing the rights which they were prepared to compel Russia to observe also. The article signed at Portsmouth shows the entire sincerity of the Japanese standpoint, and is a final answer to all attempts to distort it, whether past or present.

With its usual perspicacity The Times here puts its finger on a point of great importance. The Japanese have kept faith unequivocally. They have adhered steadily to their policy of preserving the integrity of China and the open door in Manchuria. Undoubtedly their record in this war has been good from first to last. Not merely their fine fighting, their skilful generalship and their uniformly humane conduct in the field have merited the world's praise, but their international faith also has been up to the highest standard. It is a pity that any giddy malcontents should have impaired the record by riotous protests against the peace, but, after all, mob clamour seems to be an inevitable incident in every country's career.

Without going abroad to seek an explanation we have accidentally learned the reason why one of the members of Mr. Harriman's party, attempting to drive through a crowd near a police-box on the night of the 5th instant, had his jinrikisha hustled. It appears that several Japanese riding in jinrikisha were similarly treated that night, the jinrikisha being actually upset in some cases. What inspired this roughness was simply the lanterns carried by the runners. Everything that dispelled the darkness interfered with the designs of the rioters by exposing their identity, and consequently they adopted the quickest means of dealing with these interruptions. Occasionally the lantern only was smashed, but as that method involved exposure on the part of the smashers, the readier plan of hustling the coolies or upsetting the jinrikisha was adopted. Very soon it became impossible to obtain the services of a jinrikisha: their drawers would not venture out of shelter. As for the matter of stone-throwing, hundreds of people indulged in that pastime, and many unoffending persons were struck. By the light of such facts it becomes easy to comprehend the stone that struck one of Mr. Harriman's party and the hustling of another's jinrikisha.

The Tokyo correspondent of the North-China Daily News is generally very accurate, but he erred on the side of exaggeration when telegraphing the doings of the mob on the night of the 5th in Tokyo. He said that "ten churches and a few schools were among the victims of the mob"; that "some missionaries had been assaulted" and that "the Nicholai Cathedral had been saved in spite of repeated assaults." "Ten churches and a few schools" is decidedly hyperbolic; as for the missionaries, it is the first we have heard of their being assaulted, and that several attacks were made on the Russian Cathedral is quite new to us. Rumour invariably plays the same trick with all incidents at a time of excitement, and a correspondent responsible for telegraphing should know how to discount what comes to him by the route of mere hearsay.

In 1846 two American war-ships, the Columbus and the Vincennes, sailed in to Yedo Bay and attempted to accomplish what Commodore Perry achieved 8 years later. Edward S. Barton was then serving as a mizzen-top man on the Columbus. He has related his experiences to The Independent. From the story we take this paragraph:—

With reference to the impressions received from personal observation of the Japanese it is but natural that the passing of nearly sixty years since this naval expedition was undertaken should have obliterated them somewhat from my mind. Moreover, when we were surrounded day and night by hundreds of armed vessels, making sure that not a man of us touched foot on shore, it is apparent that my opportunities for observation were limited. But I saw several hundred who came off from the land in boats and came aboard the ship. They were guarding the ship and, of course, were all men. Those who came on deck were fine looking fellows, of fine physique and athletic, intelligent in facial expression and apparently very competent in all matters with which they were intrusted. On an average they were far superior to the Chinese, Japanese, Filipinos, Malays and other Orientals with whom we came in contact. They appeared very friendly and, while we lay at anchor in Yedo Harbor, though they betrayed nervous anxiety to hasten our departure, inclined to be sociable with us as far as this was possible among men who had no understanding of each other's language. It is easy to remember them as the superior people among all that we encountered in our prolonged cruise in that part of the world.

A telegram to the Kokumin Shimbun from Washington says that just as the President was making arrangements to issue a circular note inviting the Powers to hold another peace conference at the Hague, he received a message from the Tsar in a similar sense. The President is said to have been considerably surprised but to have acceded readily. It does not matter much at whose initiative the council is called, but certainly as a matter of grace we should have thought that the Tsar would have avoided taking a prominent part in such a matter. Possibly, however, His Majesty thinks that by his concessions at Portsmouth he has rehabilitated his reputation as a guardian of the world's tranquillity.

Among the multitudinous appeals for charity that appear in the columns of The Times we find the following:—

Sir,—The good news of the release of the Russian political prisoners on the island of Sakhalin by the Japanese has already been announced by the Press, and we are able to confirm this from independent Russian information. Though happily set at liberty, these people are absolutely destitute of resources; and we venture to appeal to all sympathizers with the cause of freedom in Russia for help to enable these victims of the autocratic system to exist until they can find some means of supporting themselves. Our society has quite secure channels through which relief can be sent without delay, and we shall be glad to transmit any sums that may be entrusted to us.

Yours faithfully,

ROBERT SPENCE WATSON, President.
J. FREDK. GREEN, Hon. Sec.
Society of Friends of Russian Freedom,
222, Strand, W.C., August 15.

These gentlemen are no doubt well acquainted with their subject, but statistics do not indicate that there can be many political prisoners in need of charitable aid. The census of January 1st, 1898, showed that out of a total of 7,080 convicts engaged in hard labour in Saghalien, the political prisoners totalled only 76.

MR. TAFT IN YOKOHAMA.

The Hon. W. Taft, American Secretary of State for War, and his party arrived at Yokohama at 8.30 a.m. on Saturday, Sept. 16th, by the Korea on their way home from Manila. On the arrival of the steamer, a number of Japanese nobles proceeded to the ship in several steam-launches to receive the travellers. They included Mr. Chinda, Vice-Minister for Foreign Affairs, Marquis Tokugawa and Mr. Matsuda, Presidents respectively of the Houses of Peers and Representatives, Mr. Nagasaki, Grand Master of Ceremonies, Count Terajima, Confidential Secretary to the Minister for Foreign Affairs, Mr. Grison, American Minister and his Staff, Governor Saito, Mayor Ichihara, Messrs. Asada, Kurusu, Ozumi, Masuda and other leading merchants of Yokohama. The American visitors landed at 9 a.m. and immediately proceeded to the Grand Hotel where they stayed till past eleven when Mr. Taft accompanied by Colonel C. D. Edwards, Major G. L. Edie, Capt. J. K. Thompson, Capt. W. Kelly, Mr. Grison, Mr. Miller, (the Consul-General) and others drove to the villa of Mr. K. Otani, the well-known merchant, on Iseyama, where they had dinner. Later the party drove by way of Campbell and the Bluff to the villa of Mr. T. Hara at Sanmoku, Honmoku, where they spent the afternoon, returning in the evening to the hotel.

A cavalry escort accompanied the Secretary, and police and soldiers were stationed at intervals along the route taken.

On Sunday forenoon Mr. H. B. Miller, the American Consul-General, held a reception at the Consulate in order to enable American business men to meet Mr. Taft and his party. The reception, which lasted from 10.30 to noon, was very largely attended. American flags were hung over the entrance, and the whole lower floor of the building was set apart for the purposes of the affair, which, it may be added, was purely informal. Mr. Grison was among those present and practically the whole Taft party attended.

At noon the distinguished guest was entertained at luncheon by Mr. Consul-General Miller at the latter's private residence on the Bluff, together with the officials of the American Consulate and Legation, and some Japanese including a few leading traders.

At 2.25 p.m., Mr. Taft proceeded to the English Hatoba with Mr. Nagasaki, Grand Master of Ceremonies, from the detached palace in Yokohama. At the hatoba, several public bodies were waiting to see him off. As Mr. Taft approached enthusiastic banzai were raised. The party left by the steam-launch Asahi for the American mail steamer Korea, and at 3.30 p.m., the big steamer left for home. Many beautiful day-lake works were discharged from the compound of the Custom House during the afternoon.

The sale by auction of the wreck of the Starling Dollar, as she lies off Katsu-ura, Chiba, attracted a large crowd to John W. Hall's auction rooms on Wednesday. Bidding was brisk and the steamer was eventually knocked down to Japanese buyers for yen 27,250. The cargo, comprising 63,348 sacks of barley fetched yen 14,025; and the 3,000 bags of tan bark yen 550.

SOYA AND TARTARY STRAITS.

IT was pointed out some days ago in these columns that when Japan promised freedom of navigation in the Soya Strait she conceded a privilege which she had no right to withhold, since the width of the strait excludes it from any recognised definition of territorial waters. On the other hand, when Russia promised that Japanese vessels should enjoy free passage in the Strait of Tartary, she made a substantial concession, inasmuch as that strait, being only 5 miles wide and having Russian territory on either shore, might lawfully have been declared a closed water. This fact has now become clear to our Japanese contemporaries. They have sought explanations in official quarters, and have been informed that the case really stands as we noted. The Fiji Shimpō has a leading article on the subject, in which attention is naturally drawn to the fact that pure superfluities do not find a place in grave international covenants. Therefore our contemporary wants to know what this provision is doing in the peace treaty. What does it mean? It must have been inserted with some object and the Fiji is inclined to think that it really signifies an engagement not to fortify the Strait. As to that we would point out two things. The first is that an engagement binding Japan not to build forts on her own territory—for that is what a non-fortification clause would mean since it must necessarily apply to the Hokkaido coast as well as to that of Saghalien—is in the last degree unlikely to be couched in language so obscure as to be incapable of any such construction without a special thesaurus. The second is that since the provision against military preparations in Saghalien necessarily covers the building of forts and since forts upon Hokkaido alone could not possibly command the whole of Soya Strait, no agreement as to the free passage of the Strait could possibly be read in the sense of a pledge against fortifying the coast of Kitami. We have no doubt that the free-passage Article means exactly what it says, neither more nor less. Vladivostok alone remains to Russia as a naval base in the Far East and were the entrances to the Sea of Japan closed, Vladivostok would find itself in a cul-de-sac. M. WITTE and Baron ROSEN were possibly obsessed by some fine fear as to that feature of the situation; or possibly they felt that some modification of international law concerning territorial waters is not at all an improbable contingency in the near future, and that it would be safe to provide against the application of any inconvenient change to the case of Soya. Experience has now shown—especially experience garnered in the Russo-Japanese War—that the old limit of territorial water, the limit determined with regard to the effective range of a smooth-bore cannon, has become absurdly obsolete, and it will not be at all surprising should that limit be presently extended on the lines of a 12-inch gun's range, namely some 12 miles. In that event Soya Strait would become virtually an inland water since it is only 25 miles across, and Japan would be in a position to close it since she owns both its northern and its southern coasts. If such was the object contemplated by M. WITTE and Baron ROSEN, they certainly dived into the future more profoundly than is usual in the case of treaty-framers. But of course there is the less recondite explanation; namely, that they merely wished to have some nominal set-off for their own concession about the Strait of Tartary. The grant of fishing privileges to Japanese subjects all along the coasts of Russia's East Asian dominions requires that the entrance to the Sea of Tartary shall be unobstructed, and we therefore easily comprehend the rationale of the Japanese Plenipotentiaries' demand in that context. Possibly M. WITTE said, "Very well, but if we make that promise about the Tartary Strait, do you in turn give us a similar engagement about Soya." The simplest explanation is generally the most correct.

THE JAPANESE PRESS.

LOOKING at the Japanese leading newspapers during the past few days the two points that appear most prominent are, first, a now tolerably universal cry for the Ministry's retirement, and, secondly, an evidence of apprehension that the nation may lag behind its opportunities. As to the Cabinet, the fact seems to be clear that a large section of the people entertain a sentiment of vague discontent and will not readily coöperate with a ministry which they hold responsible for a diplomatic failure. There is no denying the Nichi Nichi's contention that the present Cabinet stands in the position of having obtained from Russia much less than it asked for and to that extent the Ministers of the Crown must bear the responsibility of ill-success. It is a pitiable conjuncture. For if the Cabinet had preferred any smaller demands, it would certainly have been even more bitterly denounced, and we can not forget that the very journals which now attack it made themselves then conspicuous by declaring that its demands constituted Japan's irreducible minimum. Appeals to reason, however, have little efficacy at such a time. The nation is disappointed and will not pause to analyse whether the fault lies primarily with the extravagance of its own expectations, or with the Government's mismanagement, or with the untimeliness of the negotiations. One thought ought to thrust itself into the foreground of every just man's reflections; namely, that only by the clever management of the statesmen now arraigned could the country have reached a position warranting the demands of which it has actually obtained recognition and acceptance. The great and splendid success achieved by these Ministers is to be forgotten or ignored because it has not been still greater and still more splendid. By and bye, no doubt, there will be a truer perspective, but for the moment it does seem that between the Cabinet and a considerable part of the nation a gulf has been fixed which can not be bridged and which, if left unbridged, will cause disunion mischievous to the Empire's interests. The Ministry will probably recognise the situation by retiring so soon as a convenient opportunity comes. They can not retire in the face of mob violence or irresponsible clamour, but certainly they will not cling to office for the sake of office.

The second point illustrated by newspaper articles is that the nation feels a little uncertain of its own courage in the field of enterprise. Many things have to be done in Manchuria and Korea, and many of them are things which, if boldly undertaken and vigorously carried through, ought to lead to success. But the Japanese, as the Shogyo Shimpō remarks, are timid about investing capital in foreign countries, and the result of the peace negotiations will not tend to remove their timidity since the impression conveyed is one of weak diplomacy not to be trusted in a moment of crisis. Very likely the Japanese are timid in such matters: not because they suffer from any constitutional lack of commercial courage but because they have no record to support them. On the whole it may perhaps be said with truth that the Anglo-Saxon is of all nationals the most daring trader pioneer. But how much of his over-sea enterprise is born with him and how much is educated by the knowledge, fruit of many centuries' experience, that wherever individual British effort goes there the national flag follows to guarantee and to protect? The Emperor WILLIAM, it must be admitted, is a monarch of many words when welt politik is on the tapis, and not all his sober subjects applaud his magniloquence. But underlying his Majesty's talk is the thoroughly sound conviction that the best way to build an empire is to inspire the builders with confidence in an imperial backing, and it is in part due to this endeavour that the Germans, who used to seek the shadow of the British flag whenever they carried their capital abroad, have developed a strong spirit of independent enterprise. But the Japanese do not as yet find any such encouragement either in the pages of their history or in the policy of their statesmen. Greatness has been suddenly thrust on them without preliminary leisure to grow up to it. They do not know how far they can rely on the future conduct of their diplomatists and they do not know well by bitter experience what scant attention Japanese claims have hitherto received at Western hands. Really from men thus situated some display of timidity must be expected in the field of foreign commerce and industry. Whatever of bona-fide belief there be in the now constantly repeated formula that permanent peace has not been secured, just to that extent the spirit of enterprise has been chilled. Permanent peace could not have been secured; it never could be secured by any treaty. But so far as human foresight can extend peace has been assured for some decades at all events, and if the Japanese have confidence in their destiny now is the time to show themselves confident. There is little in the past to encourage them. They have to make a record. But who can reasonably fear that the capacity which has already achieved so much will show itself defective now?

GERMAN COMMENTS ON JAPAN.

IT is singular how largely some Western publicists are gifted with the faculty of self-detachment when they undertake to criticise an Oriental. Their own history fades entirely from their perception, and they pronounce judgment just as though their own nation had no past. The Vossische Zeitung, the Tageblatt, the Bourse Gazette and other German newspapers declare that Japan's civilization is very doubtful because there has been a riot in Tokyo, and agree that the old saying about the Russians may now be applied, mutatis mutandis, to the Japanese—"Scratch a Japanese and you find a savage." Has Germany then a monopoly of freedom from mob violence? No other European country can claim anything of the kind and Germany is not exceptional. The Tageblatt and its contemporaries seem to have forgotten 1848 and 1849, when mob violence was an eminently powerful factor in German affairs. Perhaps they are shocked because a party of Tokyo roughs showed some anti-Christian sentiment. Are they then oblivious of their own Falk law whose enforcement led to the imprisonment of a number of Roman Catholic bishops; the breaking up of public meetings on the smallest pretext; the prosecution of men whose sole offence was criticism of Government officials; and the searching of private houses in pursuit of fugitive priests? Or, and this is even more apposite, are they oblivious of the anti-Semitism of their own countrymen which in 1881 led to riots and acts of mob violence? Perhaps their estimate of skin-deep civilization is that any element of a nation should be found ready to vehemently oppose the ministry's foreign policy. If so they must have forgotten their own social democrats who clamoured against the war of 1870, spoke of the Prussian soldiers that took part in it as murderers and of the generals as cut-throats, and twice attempted the life of the KAISER. Perhaps they think that the necessity of applying martial law in a country's capital stamps its citizens as semi-savage. Do they then fail to recall the powers given to their own federal government to proclaim a state of siege in every town or district; to expel any individual considered dangerous; and to suppress newspapers; and do they forget that a state of siege was declared in Berlin in 1878 and that 67 social democrats were expelled? If an even more striking parallel be needed, we may find it in the armistice of Malmoe, which, placed side by side with Tokyo's case, stands thus:—

On the 26th of August, 1846, Prussia, empowered by the Frankfort Government, concluded with the Danes at Malmoe an armistice of 7 months. A majority of the Assembly denounced this armistice as a national humiliation and decided that it should not be sanctioned. The Ministry resigned, but a new combination being impossible, the Assembly had to accept the armistice. A large minority, however, remained unsatisfied, appealed to the people, and a rising took place which led to the murder of two unpopular representatives.

On the 1st of September, 1905, Japanese Plenipotentiaries, empowered by their Sovereign, concluded with Russian Plenipotentiaries at Portsmouth a treaty of peace. A considerable section of the nation denounced this treaty as a national humiliation and urged that it should not be ratified, but being unable to influence the Cabinet, they organized a mass meeting which, owing to unwise measures on the part of the police, led to bloodshed and incendiarism.

It certainly does not seem that German history warrants German critics in speaking as the Vossische Zeitung, the Tageblatt and others have now spoken, and we are confident that they would be justly indignant if any foreigner, quoting the above incidents of their annals, were to write under each "scratch a German and you find a Gaul." We grant without the least reservation that England is not better circumstanced for any Pharisaical exultation, and we desire to be understood that in these references we mention Germany solely because German papers are in question. In many respects our admiration for German civilization and enlightenment is of the highest, and we are well aware that throughout the past 30 years Japan, greatly to the advantage of her development, has largely modelled herself upon Germany. But it is certain that this disposition to draw sweepingly condemnatory deductions in the case of an Oriental nation from incidents which have been frequent features in the career of Occidental nations themselves, can only have the effect of rendering the critics contemptible in the eyes of those they condemn. The Japanese are thoroughly familiar with European history, and our much vaunted civilization is not commended to them when the blindest injustice finds a foremost place among its characteristics.

JAPAN'S FOREIGN TRADE DURING THE FIRST HALF OF 1905.

OFFICIAL statistics now enable us to form a clear idea of this country's foreign trade during the first half of the current year. The total value of the trade was 429 million yen in round numbers, a wholly unprecedented figure, being 109 million yen greater than the aggregate for the corresponding period of 1904. Great inequality is seen in exports and imports. The exports represent only 142 millions, being 5 millions—4 per cent approximately—above the figure for the first half of 1904; and the imports, 286 millions, which is 103 millions (55 per cent.) in excess of the sum for the same semi-annual period of the preceding year. The exact figures for the past three half years are:—

	First half of 1905. Yen.	First half of 1904. Yen.	First half of 1903. Yen.
Exports...	142,767,953	137,465,703	125,918,757
Imports...	286,462,862	182,634,872	166,048,828
Totals...	429,230,815	320,100,575	291,967,585

This table shows that whereas the development of the export trade in 1904 amounted to over 11 million yen it was only 5 millions in 1905. Nevertheless that any development at all should have taken place in spite of the withdrawal of about a million pairs of hands from the field of production is distinctly satisfactory. The principal staples which show a marked diminution are habutaye, rice, tea and coal, to which we shall allude again presently. On the side of imports the factors responsible for the great increase are believed to have been, first, shipments made in anticipation of increased tariff rates; secondly, the distribution of large sums among the people in connexion with the conduct of the war; which cause was supplemented by a fine harvest in 1904; and, thirdly, the demand for necessities of war.

Divided by months the totals stand as follows:—

	First half 1905. Yen.	First half 1904. Yen.	First half 1903. Yen.
January.
Exports	23,766,572	24,782,482	20,428,245
Imports	38,261,845	28,454,826	24,570,362
February.
Exports	24,631,473	23,295,686	18,889,954
Imports	40,023,554	30,180,118	24,197,732
March.
Exports	23,632,112	22,354,625	21,139,845
Imports	52,356,035	34,288,516	34,785,083
April.
Exports	24,402,036	20,886,731	21,462,722
Imports	50,453,063	31,248,166	33,092,105
May.
Exports	22,954,666	23,429,368	23,334,598
Imports	57,133,585	35,091,919	26,605,458
June.
Exports	23,381,094	22,716,811	20,663,393
Imports	48,234,780	23,371,327	22,798,088

The distribution of the trade among the various countries having commercial relations with Japan was as follows:—

	First half 1905. Yen.	First half 1904. Yen.	First half 1903. Yen.
China.
Exports to ...	44,039,171	30,028,845	28,764,064
Imports from	21,456,753	20,530,606	21,830,505
Korea.
Exports to ...	11,751,865	7,709,237	4,685,197
Imports from	3,491,357	2,461,259	5,948,098
British India.
Exports to ...	3,628,932	4,555,411	3,149,513
Imports from	68,333,911	42,353,267	39,090,958
France.
Exports to ...	10,843,662	14,201,106	13,253,261
Imports from	2,342,865	1,680,201	2,779,961
England.
Exports to ...	6,695,643	8,720,483	9,320,119
Imports from	65,509,355	34,098,704	23,803,657
Belgium.
Exports to ...	331,269	139,798	125,131
Imports from	5,074,744	3,234,024	3,768,154
Italy.
Exports to ...	2,987,471	3,120,242	3,530,450
Imports from	161,074	396,868	95,249
Germany.
Exports to ...	2,097,951	2,204,048	2,667,294
Imports from	21,676,114	14,026,238	12,729,374
Austria-Hungary.
Exports to ...	327,750	399,878	662,637
Imports from	1,033,230	685,192	2,307,021
Russia (Europe and Asia).
Exports to ...	5,592	66,568	1,899,554
Imports from	1,266,221	3,874,807	2,274,069
United States.
Exports to ...	40,771,676	39,979,585	33,543,246
Imports from	64,098,210	26,763,077	24,843,413

British America.
Exports to ...	1,364,773	1,388,893	995,834
Imports from	361,512	387,959	109,327
Australia.
Exports to ...	2,017,862	2,790,479	1,516,290
Imports from	4,113,981	2,211,948	601,743
Others.
Exports to ...	15,904,336	22,071,130	21,806,767
Imports from	26,543,535	29,930,722	25,267,299
Totals.
Exports	142,767,953	137,465,703	125,918,757
Imports	286,462,862	182,634,872	166,048,828

Grand Total. 429,230,815 320,100,575 291,967,585

One of the most striking features of this table is the evidence it furnishes that Japan's export trade grew sensibly in the case of China and Korea only. The increase in these two countries' purchases from Japan was over 18 million yen, whereas every other country, with insignificant exceptions in the cases of Belgium and the United States, bought less than in the corresponding half-year of 1904, the nett result being an increment of only 5 millions over all the figures. It would seem that China and Korea are destined to be the great market for Japan's produce and manufactures, and this will become even more pronounced when the products of the fisheries newly acquired under the peace treaty begin to find their way to the two neighbouring empires, as they certainly will. The principal staples which Japan sells in ever-growing bulk to China and Korea are cotton yarns, cotton cloth, towels, matches, umbrellas, copper, porcelains, beer and marine products. With regard to other countries the chief staples of export that showed a decline were habutaye, raw silk, tea, rice, camphor, vegetable wax, copper, straw-braid and coal. The United States, although they took less tea, straw-braid and camphor than usual, were increased purchasers of raw silk, habutaye, fancy matting, porcelains and lacquers.

In the import trade the most notable fact is that the United States made increased sales to the extent of over 38 millions, England to the extent of 31 millions and British India to the extent of 26 millions. Thus these three countries stand for 95 millions out of the total increment of 109 millions, their share being no less than 87 per cent. of the whole. All the other countries—with the exception of Italy, Russia and British America—had some part in the increase, but in Germany's case alone is the record at all considerable. The augmented staples of Japan's purchases from Eastern countries were raw cotton, wool, hemp, fur, skins, hides, cereals and fertilizers, in other words, chiefly materials for manufacture; while from Occidental countries her demand was mainly for manufactured articles, as piece-goods, machinery and so forth.

It is notable that out of this total trade of 429 millions England and her dependencies stand for 152 millions approximately and the United States for 105 millions, so that the Anglo-Saxon race did 257 millions of the commerce, leaving only 172 millions to the rest of the world.

The figures for the principal staples of export during the half-year periods were as follow:—

	First half 1905.	First half 1904.	First half 1903.
Raw Silk	28,196,439	28,136,589	27,037,378
Waste Silk and Cocoons	3,110,816	2,281,325	2,814,472
Habutaye	14,058,092	18,144,590	12,659,144
Silk Handkerchiefs	2,335,229	2,335,385	1,510,362
Cotton Yarns	16,785,863	13,608,078	13,973,866
Cotton Cloth	3,758,446	3,507,738	2,425,879
Matches	5,199,367	4,755,210	4,022,045
Fancy Matting	2,367,904	2,010,879	1,943,117
Porcelain, etc.	2,245,436	1,619,768	1,390,184
Straw Braid	2,851,958	3,143,139	2,447,710
Lacquers	528,912	511,833	381,631
Umbrellas	1,071,373	963,820	892,468
Fans	559,582	471,474	495,128
Cigarettes	1,560,553	1,845,554	803,400
Tea	4,014,762	5,757,088	5,798,963
Rice	1,610,902	3,550,696	2,210,030
Camphor	1,476,391	1,952,549	2,103,749
Copper	6,566,675	5,887,410	7,926,584
Coal	7,731,981	8,319,361	10,074,865
Vegetable Wax	331,161	748,840	467,899
Others	34,850,395	26,678,480	23,043,910
Totals	141,232,237	156,229,806	124,422,784
Re-exports	1,535,716	1,235,897	1,495,973

Grand Totals. 142,767,953 137,465,703 125,918,757

It is thus seen that out of 20 principal staples of export, 11 show increases and 9 show decreases. The greatest diminution (nearly 4 millions) is under the heading of habutaye, and next in order come rice, tea, coal and camphor, these five being responsible for an aggregate reduction of 8,840,000 yen, approximately. In the column of increases cotton yarns stand first (over 3 millions increment), and are followed in order by waste silk and cocoons, copper and porcelain. The European demand for raw silk was weak, but America bought freely, and she continued to be a strong customer for habutaye, whereas the sales of the latter to France, owing to the imposition of a heavy tax, fell off by 2,600,000 yen. The United States proved a comparatively bad market for silk handkerchiefs but freely took fancy matting and straw braid, and there was a growing demand in China and Korea for cotton yarn, matches and umbrellas. China, however, took less cotton cloth than she had done in the corresponding period of 1904, but Korea amply compensated. It will be observed that whereas the export of cigarettes more than doubled in the first half of 1904 as compared with the same period of 1903, there was a falling off in 1905. That is because the quantity sent over-sea in 1904 was exceptionally large, in anticipation of the operation of the State monopoly, and 1905 felt the re-action. The case of tea is explained by the fact that in connexion with the outbreak of war in 1904 large speculative exports were made in the spring, and the market was thus weakened. Rice, of course, remained in the country to supply the demands of the army and navy, and the same is true of copper, the export of which would have showed a marked diminution—indeed a considerable quantity had to be purchased from America—had not China taken more than 2½ million yen worth for the purposes of her new copper coinage. Coal, of course, was in exceptional demand at home in connexion with the war, and the decreased exports of vegetable wax and of camphor were due to reduced production.

Turning now to imports we have the following table:—

	First half 1905.	First half 1904.	First half 1903.
Raw Cotton	68,715,898	35,762,935	36,082,657
Cotton Cloth	8,041,988	2,257,825	4,902,687
Wool and worsted yarns	7,488,291	5,121,051	2,167,969
Blankets	3,248,445	55,576	17,153
Cloth and other Woollens	13,535,311	2,581,554	4,490,867
Hemp, etc.	1,308,155	1,184,395	1,007,737
Hempen Cloth	1,748,482	163,355	131,471
Iron of sorts	12,294,306	6,657,700	5,972,836
Iron Nails	1,559,841	915,965	688,062
Iron Pipes	1,010,424	563,611	789,829
Sheet Iron and steel plates	3,541,744	849,693	417,943
Machinery	12,213,540	4,755,272	4,122,146
Cars and Locomotives	2,666,888	2,001,495	1,947,468
Aniline dyes, etc.	1,949,073	1,759,474	3,369,698
Furs and Ox-hides	1,562,269	649,369	329,329
Leather, Sole, etc.	7,645,877	1,065,048	713,448
Paper	2,502,264	1,451,801	1,764,330
Rice	39,904,009	35,263,994	37,841,174
Beans, &c.	4,978,121	3,014,326	3,970,002
Wheat	1,504,995	1,205,985	922,961
Flour	5,737,098	5,064,949	3,049,691
Sugar	5,000,303	13,522,034	9,037,093
Coal	5,423,502	7,511,449	777,977
Kerosene	9,237,804	9,275,956	5,588,487
Bean-cake and other fertilizers	10,715,325	4,413,513	6,396,004
Steamers	6,028,280	5,561,901	867,367
Others	46,387,741	29,766,669	28,567,468
Totals	285,949,974	182,396,955	165,873,916
Re-imports	512,888	237,917	174,912

Grand Totals. 286,462,862 182,634,872 166,048,828

Out of 26 staples tabulated above, it will be seen that three only—sugar, coal and kerosene—show diminutions: in the cases of all the other 23 there are increases. Concerning sugar there is the special explanation that abnormally large imports were made during the first half of 1904 in anticipation of the increased tariff, and with regard to coal the great stores found at Port Arthur and in prize steamers fully explain the diminution of import. The very large increase in purchases of raw cotton from abroad in the half-year under review was in consequence of short stocks resulting from high prices at the places of production during the early part of 1904. The imports of rice, beans, wheat, flour and kerosene were doubtless affected by the prospect of increased tariff rates which came into force from July 1st, and the marked increases in beans, bean-cake and other fertilizers were the result of the re-opening of the Manchurian trade after the fall of Port Arthur. For the rest, the great growths in other staples were evidently attributable to the demand caused by the war.

The movements of specie during the period under review were so largely affected by the State's financial transactions that they scarcely find a proper place in a trade summary. We append the figures, however, on account of their general interest:—

	First half 1905.	First half 1904.	First half 1903.
Exports of gold coins & bullion	Yen. 6,367,230	Yen. 80,762,409	Yen. 2,495,157
Exports of silver coins & bullion	441,530	709,353	1,091,816
Exports, Totals	6,808,760	81,471,762	3,586,973
Imports of gold coins & bullion	16,761,040	2,051,627	17,487,937
Imports of silver coins & bullion	6,232,285	9,576,827	1,905,882
Imports, Totals	22,993,325	11,628,454	19,393,819
Total movements of specie	29,802,085	93,100,216	21,990,792

It remains to examine the entries and clearances of ships:—

SHIPPING RETURNS, STEAMERS.

	First half 1905.		First half 1904.
	Ships.	Tonnage.	Ships.	Tonnage.
Japanese	2,073	1,468,754	1,424	1,265,341
British	2,663	7,122,736	2,239	6,073,042
United States...	387	1,715,006	271	1,097,591
German	705	1,748,333	632	1,561,276
French	103	221,469	111	255,891
Norwegian	1,157	1,195,072	612	609,734
Others	404	496,631	370	532,229

Totals..... 7,488 13,968,501 5,719 11,395,002

	First half 1905.		First half 1904.
	Ships.	Tonnage.	Ships.	Tonnage.
Japanese	3,643	4,917,501	3,643	4,917,501
British	1,763	4,718,836	1,763	4,718,836
United States...	273	971,935	273	971,935
German	401	1,171,758	401	1,171,758
French	103	221,758	103	221,758
Norwegian	331	330,383	331	330,383
Others	467	698,792	467	698,792

Totals 6,981 13,030,963

SAILING VESSELS.

	First half 1905.		First half 1904.
	Ships.	Tonnage.	Ships.	Tonnage.
Japanese	2,251	63,580	1,412	47,655
Others	11	45,960	47	68,027

Grand Totals.. 2,262 109,440 1,459 115,682

	First half 1905.		First half 1904.
	Ships.	Tonnage.	Ships.	Tonnage.
Japanese	1,681	72,912	1,681	72,912
Others	78	86,299	78	86,299

Grand Totals 1,759 169,211

This table shows that out of a total of 7,488 steamers with an aggregate tonnage of 13,968,501 tons, the tonnage of Japanese steamers was only 1,468,754, or a little more than ten per cent. of the whole, whereas in the corresponding period of 1903, before the war broke out, Japan's share had been 27 per cent. This of course is explained by the fact that the greater part of Japan's mercantile marine was withdrawn from trade routes for the service of the State. It is interesting to note that Norwegian steamers took the principal part in supplying the deficiency thus caused.

RUSSIA AND GERMANY.

A TELEGRAM from London to the Hochi Shimbun says that, by way of set-off to the new Anglo-Japanese alliance, Germany has entered into a compact with Russia. One would have expected the telegram to add "by way of set-off to the Anglo-French entente." Germany's foreign politics are the subject of so many rumours that the most patient publicist finds himself bewildered. In Emperor WILLIAM's frank endeavours to assist President ROOSEVELT's pacific efforts there should have been ample material to contradict the tale that at his last meeting with the TSAR the KAISER counselled his Imperial brother not to sheathe the sword. Yet the tale still circulates with considerable vitality, now, however, in a somewhat modified form, namely, that the German Sovereign did not advise continuance of the war, but did advise an unbending attitude towards the heavier peace terms. His Majesty's information and conviction being that Japan would withdraw those terms rather than renew the combat. That is a much more insidious version of the legend, for it involves no inconsistency with the subsequent course of events; it attributes to the KAISER a degree of political foresight which the world, observing his career, is quite prepared to credit, and it does not require us to imagine any excessive straining of diplomatic conventions. It falls, too, into a fitting place side by side with the new story of a Russo-German compact; a reversion, in short, to the policy of BISMARCK. Such rumours, even if they be subsequently proved wholly baseless—as they frequently are—have always this interest, namely, that they indicate what the world is thinking of. No one, we presume, is so silly as to suggest that the smallest blame would attach to Emperor WILLIAM either for lending some of his political insight to the TSAR or for compacting an alliance with the great Northern Power. His Majesty's first duty is to his country and if, to his undoubtedly astute eyes, these proceedings seem likely to promote the Fatherland's welfare and the interests of his own welt-politik, he would be blame-worthy did he neglect to adopt them. A Russo-German alliance is just as legitimate as an Anglo-Japanese alliance or an Anglo-French entente. But why does the onlooking world attribute such a line of policy to the KAISER? What is it that His Majesty is supposed to have in view? Certainly not a renewal of the Far-Eastern conflict. Out of that Germany could derive no advantage nor, great and powerful as she is, could she contribute much material aid to its conduct. We must assume then that at some points much near home the KAISER is supposed to see solid gain for Germany and substantial compensation for Russia, smarting under a sense of recent defeat. These points are the Persian Gulf and the Valley of the Euphrates; not India, or China, or Mongolia, or Manchuria, or Korea. In Mongolia Russia's activity will doubtless continue and from thence she may ultimately renew her attempts against China; but many years must pass before she can hope to accomplish even the beginnings of anything serious in either Manchuria or Korea, and as for India, it is probably guaranteed by the new alliance if it ever was really menaced. Russia, however, can not be reasonably expected to abandon her struggle for access to ice-free seas, and the Persian Gulf now offers the only, or at any rate the easiest, field for such enterprise, while collaterally Germany might pursue her programme of expansion in the Valley of the Euphrates. Evidently that is what the world is thinking. From that estimate of Middle-Eastern politics there readily emerges this notion of a Russo-German alliance as well as the newly modified version of the KAISER's advice to the TSAR on board the Hohenzollern. Unhappily an alliance between the two great empires of continental Europe, if contracted with such a motive, would be very far from promoting peace. It would, on the contrary, make for war. Nothing remains therefore but to hope that rumour is again egregiously mistaken.

MISS ROOSEVELT.

Miss Alice Roosevelt arrived at Tientsin from Peking on Sept. 16th. The same evening she was entertained to dinner by Viceroy Yuan. A Seoul telegram to the Hochi reports that she is expected to arrive there on Sept. 19th, via Chemulpo, and to stay for about four days. On the 17th she will leave the capital for Fusan, where she will embark on her way home.

Miss Roosevelt arrived at Chemulpo on Sept. 19th by the American cruiser Ohio from Tientsin. She left immediately for Seoul by train. In the Korean capital she is expected to stay a few days after which she will leave for Fusan by train. At that port she will embark for Japan on her way home. As reported in our columns on Sept. 15th, she will not pay a visit to Tokyo during her present tour, but according to the Shogun, she will revisit Kyoto.

A Seoul telegram to the Jiji says that Miss Roosevelt arrived in Seoul at 7 p.m. on Sept. 19th from Chemulpo, being escorted by a reception committee from the Korean Court by many Americans and Japanese. She left the West Gate station in a palanquin and passed to the Detached Palace, being escorted by soldiers, gendarmes and police. After a short rest there, she left for the American Legation where accommodation had been prepared for her. She is expected to stay in the capital for four days.

At noon on the 20th she will be received by the Emperor in audience and entertained by His Majesty. At 2 p.m. she will meet the Korean Ministers of State, after which she will visit prominent places in the city. At 4 p.m., she will be entertained at the War Department.

At noon on the 21st she will be entertained by the Emperor, and in the evening at the American Legation. At noon on the 22nd and at 7 p.m. she will be entertained at the Palace.

She is expected to leave Seoul on the morning of the 23rd. The Korean Ladies Association, however, intends to entertain her at noon.

The Mitsukoshi Gofukuten, the well-known piece goods dealers of Tokyo, intend to present Miss Roosevelt with a kimono (dress) and an obi (belt) to wear when she arrives in this country on her way home. The dress is made of light blue crepe, with a pattern of autumn flowers with gold embroidery. The belt is of costly atsuta silk, having a wide embroidered on it in various natural colors.

THE YOKOHAMA DISTURBANCE.

Matters in Yokohama have now mainly settled down. The expense of reconstructing the boxes destroyed by the rioters is estimated at sixteen hundred yen. On Sept. 16th, 200 pillars of the City Assembly met to discuss the matter.

Two youths were arrested on Friday. They are reported to have attempted to set fire to a building at Kinode-cho, Ota, belonging to a foreign religious body.

Early on the morning of Saturday, a fire started in Wakaba-cho. It was put out by the fire department. The damage was serious. The incident has been arrested by the gendarmes. He is reported to be a loafer.

As public order has been completely restored in Yokohama the military guards have been drawn. The removal commenced on the morning of Sept. 18th and was completed by noon the following day.

On Monday morning, five men were arrested by the Isezaki-cho police and four by the Nishi-cho police on a charge of having been concerned in the recent trouble. They are now under examination in the District Court.

Fujitani Kamekichi, fifty years old, was arrested at No. 74, former Settlement, Kobe, on the 17th, and subsequently sentenced to imprisonment for a term of six months on the charge of symptoms of hydrophobia on the account of a malady. According to the Kobe Herald, he was bitten by a dog about a month ago.

THE BOOKSHELF.

'Japan Year Book.'

This is the title of a volume just issued from the Japan Year Book Office in Tsukiji. It is in the English language—not always perfect English, but the errors are few and all criticism in this field is disarmed by the frank admission of the compilers that they "have to ask the indulgence of the reader for their defective English, for circumstances have not allowed them to profit themselves from the help of a foreigner"—and the compilers are Mr. Takenobu and Mr. Takeda. We can not hesitate to pronounce the volume the most useful compendium of solid information about Japan that has ever been published. It embodies vital statistics of every kind; statistics rightened by remarks which certainly do not err on the side of reserve. It is evidently as impossible to make an exhaustive examination of such a volume as it is of a lexicon, but we have tested many of its pages and found them, in every case, accurate and thorough so far as we can judge. Indeed we should say that the book will be absolutely indispensable to every one desiring to acquaint himself with Japanese affairs, and we desire these words to be understood not as a perfunctory formula but as a sincere expression of opinion. Mr. Takenobu we have had the pleasure of knowing personally for many years, and it is no surprise to us to find that his untiring industry and earnest scholarship have suggested to him the idea of this excellent work and carried him through the great labour of compiling it. Among its masses of serviceable information we may note that 57 closely printed pages are devoted to the lives and careers of contemporary worthies," and here the foreign reader can learn at a glance everything that is essential to know about the men of modern Japan. To collect details for this section of the volume must have been in itself a heavy task. We should add that this capital book costs only 4 shillings 2 yen.

The "Kokka."

The third number of the new English edition of the Kokka is quite up to the level of its predecessors. Mr. Seichi Taki contributes the third part of his interesting essay on the "Characteristics of Japanese Painting" and Mr. Kosaku Hamada the second chapter of his "Sculpture of the Tempyō era." Then there is an unsigned paper on Iyagawa Choshun's "Amusements of the seasons," and a brief account of the Shōso. The letter press is illustrated with seventeen plates, two of them coloured and all beautifully executed. These pictures alone suffice to give great value to the volume and being supplemented by such excellent essays as those here enumerated they make a most attractive educational treatise on Japanese art.

The Maid of the River, by Mrs. CAMPBELL PRAED: London, Fisher Unwin's Colonial Library.

One can always rely on receiving from Mrs. Campbell Praed's pen an interesting story, especially if she is describing the, to her, familiar land of Australia. Her experiences of the lonies lying beneath the Southern Cross extend from childhood to middle age, and as she had an observant eye and later became possessed of the gift of a ready writer she conjures up before our mental vision pictures of Australian life whose truthfulness none can deny. The "Maid of the River" deals with the tangled story of Nunaina stiac, the eldest daughter of a ruined squatter of French extraction; Willy Chase, an Australian-born superintendent of a station in the back-blocks of the Never-Never country; and one Alexander Stewart, who, boasting of Royal descent, turns out to be a most despicable cad, whose only likeness to the erstwhile Royal House of Scotland is that he cannot remain faithful to man, woman or child. Nunaina—the word comes from the tongue of the Aborigines and means the Loved and Loving—while still a shy, untutored child of the Bush, is betrothed to Willy Chase. Willy, however, has to leave her amid most uncongenial surroundings in the capital of the colony, and rides off to the Never-Never. Then comes Mr. Alexander Stewart, and his appearance on the scene is disastrous. With a conscience divested of all traces of honourable scruples he set himself to win the love of Nunaina, though he knows of her engagement and besides is married to an inmate of a lunatic asylum, and succeeds so well that he entraps the innocent child into going through the form of a Scotch marriage with him. She in her infinite faith believes in all the lies he tells her, and, as is usual in such cases, her confidence is misplaced. Disaster befalls and the woman has to bear the burden, while the scoundrel escapes. But Mrs. Campbell Praed is old fashioned enough to make her story close as the beloved stories of our mothers' days used invariably to end, and so Nemesis pursues Alexander Stewart to his sure undoing; Willy Chase is rewarded for all his noble faithfulness and Nunaina realises the meaning of her name at last.

Throughout the book the authoress succeeds in keeping the atmosphere and scenery of South Australia ever before our eyes, and her types are men and women easily realisable amid their surroundings. Altogether the "Maid of the River," will make an hour or so pass very pleasantly.

YOKOHAMA YACHT CLUB.

With a fine south-easterly breeze all the races set down on the programme for Saturday were brought off successfully.

The cruisers and 39-raters started together at 2 p.m. Of the big boats Mary at once took the lead and was first out of the harbour entrance, though Kingfisher was very close up. Almost immediately upon coming on the wind Maid Marion had her topmast with all its gear and canvas carried away and consequently her chances in the race were gone. Mary kept her lead all round the course and finished first, but Kingfisher, with a handicap of 20 minutes, took the first prize with six minutes to spare. The following are the times:—

	Finish.	Arbitrary
	h.m.s.	h.m.s.
Mary	3 41.40	4 41.40
Kingfisher	3 55.22	4 35.22

Four yachts started in the cruising class, Asagao, Surprise, Wanderer and Kathleen. The course being the same as the 39-raters around the Widow Buoy, Asagao led all round and got her gun six seconds ahead of Surprise, but the latter had a handicap of fourteen minutes and so took the prize. The times were as follows:—

	Finish.	Arbitrary
	h.m.s.	h.m.s.
Surprise	4 12.11	3 58.11
Wanderer	4 14.58	4 00.58
Kathleen	4 25.04	4 04.04
Asagao	4 12.05	4 12.05

Five 21-raters raced over the Tachibana and Mandarin Bluff Course. Aimée led and won by over six minutes. The following are the times:—

	Finish.
	h.m.s.
Pele	3 55.02
Aimée	3 48.16
Edna	3 56.22
Winsome	3 56.48
Sunbeam	3 59.09

Four Larks sailed over the Tachibana and Mandarin Bluff Course. No. 11 won easily. The other starters were Nos. 1, 5, and 4, but the last mentioned gave up.

CRICKET.

That classic contest, Married v. Single, which fills so many pages in the score books of Clubs possessed of any antiquity was played by the members of the Y. C. & A. C. on Saturday afternoon in very hot, close weather. It seemed on Friday and Saturday as though the summer of 1905 had at length grown tired of pretending and made up its mind to show us what hot weather really is, and under the circumstances sorely tried humanity naturally wilted. The Single men went in to bat first on Saturday, and though their energies were not remarkable they kept the poor Married men toiling and broiling in the field for the best part of the afternoon, though their score was only 156 when the last wicket fell. Dixon, 61, H. W. Kilby 37 (this player was called away from the field when he was nicely set), and J. M. Mollison, 20, were the top scorers.

The Married Men made but an indifferent showing with the bat (with the exception of W. D. S. Edwards), the baking experiences of the afternoon evidently telling greatly upon their energies. Even the valiant President of the Club failed to break his duck, a misfortune which befel three others besides himself. When time was called the Benedicts had still one man to go in. Score:—

SINGLE.

A. E. Cooper, c. Maitland, Edwards	3
B. C. Foster, c. Emerson, b. Moon	0
E. N. Lambert, bowled, Moon	3
J. T. Dixon c. Thwaites, b. Emerson	61
J. McClure, W. D. S. Edwards	0
J. M. Mollison, c. Kingdon, b. Moon	20
H. W. Kilby, retired	37
O. Strome, c. Moon, b. E. B. S. Edwards	5
B. C. Lambert, c. Thwaites, b. Emerson	13
T. W. Kilby, c. Kingdon, b. Emerson	5
S. W. Argent, not out	0
Extras	9

Total

156

BOWLING ANALYSIS.

SINGLE.

	R.	B.	M.	W.
Dr. Moon	72	25	5	3
E. B. S. Edwards	24	28	—	1
Dr. Emerson	60	38	1	3
A. Kingdon	30	28	—	—
E. W. Maitland	24	19	—	—
W. D. S. Edwards	66	19	5	2

MARRIED.

J. E. Holmes, b. McClure	0
C. Thwaites, c. H. W. Kilby, b. Dixon	5
J. R. Thomson, b. McClure	0
G. G. Brady, b. McClure	6
A. Kingdon, c. McClure, b. Dixon	13
W. D. S. Edwards, not out	31
Dr. Wheeler, b. Dixon	0
E. B. S. Edwards, c. and b. McClure	4
Dr. Emerson, b. Dixon	0
E. W. Maitland, not out	1
Dr. Moon, did not bat	0
Extras	4

63

BOWLING ANALYSIS.

	R.	B.	M.	W.
J. McClure	66	37	—	4
J. T. Dixon	60	22	2	4

YOKOHAMA HARBOUR.

The Yokohama City Assembly held a meeting on Sept. 17th in connexion with the enterprise of improving Yokohama harbour. Mayor Ichihara made a lengthy speech, after which he delivered an explanation of the scheme which had been investigated by the committee. The proposal of the committee is as follows:—

- 1.—The construction of a second pier, and buildings on land connecting with it. Godowns to be built in connection with the present pier.
- 2.—Expenditure needed for the foregoing is estimated at yen 8,175,000.
- 3.—About yen 2,750,000, one-third of the foregoing estimate shall be borne by the City and the remainder defrayed by the Central Treasury.
- 4.—The construction works are intended to be completed within five years.

The Assembly decided unanimously to promote the original scheme. On Tuesday, Mayor Ichihara proceeded to the Department of Finance and submitted the scheme to the Minister.

THE LAW COURTS.

JAMES THOM v. FUJIWARA.

A case instituted by Mr. James Thom, representative of the Yokohama office of the London Times, against Mr. K. Fujiwara, claiming yen 85, came up on Sept. 19th in the Yokohama Local Court before Judge Kaidzuka.

Mr. Thom was present and his Japanese employee acted as interpreter. Defendant was absent.

Plaintiff stated that on March 27th, 1903, he sold to the defendant a set of the Encyclopedia Britannica for yen 195, as well as a case to hold the books, for yen 30, making a total of yen 225. The conditions were that when the books were delivered to defendant he was to pay yen 5, and then to pay yen 10 every month and to complete the payments by January 27th, 1905. The defendant, however, failed to keep his promise, leaving a balance, as claimed. After the time expired, plaintiff gave a grace of four months—extending the period of payment to May this year. Defendant, however, had not paid the balance.

The Court delivered sentence in favour of plaintiff, together with costs.

RUSSO-CHINESE BANK v. DOURILLE.

The hearing of a case filed by the Russo-Chinese Bank against Mr. P. Dourille, No. 164, Yokohama, claiming yen 2,676.77 and interest was resumed on Sept. 20th in the Yokohama District Court before Judge Yasuda.

Plaintiff's counsel produced several letters as evidence and gave a brief explanation. The defendant's counsel stated that he saw these letters for the first time and consequently was not prepared to give a definite reply. He further said that he must consult his client regarding them. At this stage, the plaintiff's counsel delivered the copies of the evidence to the defendant's counsel.

Defendant's counsel asked the Court to adjourn the case to enable him to make preparations, and he added that the parties are now conducting negotiations to settle the dispute out of Court.

The Court adjourned the hearing till 9 a.m. on Oct. 11th.

THE "KINJO MARU" DISASTER FUND.

We beg to acknowledge receipt of the following sums on behalf of the widows and orphans created by the Kinjo Maru disaster in the Inland Sea:—

	Yen.
H. E. Sir Claude and Lady Macdonald.....	200
Mr. J. T. Hamilton	100
Capt. and Mrs. Brinkley	50
Mr. E. M. Hobart Hampden	25
M. N. Gubhai & Co.	25
Capt. and Mrs. Young	20
Mr. Geo. H. Barclay	50
Mr. V. A. Caesar Hawkins.....	10
Mr. A. F. White	10

Per Mr. Montague Beart:—

Mr. Montague Beart	5
Mrs. Beart	5
Staff of "Home Circle"	5
Mr. T. H. R. Shaw	5
Mr. A. E. Pearson	5
Mr. C. W. Cooper	5
Mr. J. T. Dixon	2
Captain Lycett, S. S. "Yangtze"	5
Captain Chirines, S. S. "Orestes"	5

Subscriptions of members of the Yokohama

King's Daughters' Circle	40
Messrs. Sale and Frazar, Ltd.	100

NEWS OF THE DAY.

Sixteen hundred invalids arrived on Sept. 17th at Hiroshima from the front.

On Sept. 14th, 720 invalids were brought from the front to Hiroshima by three transports.

The rooms of the Men's Reading Room Association are now open each evening until ten o'clock.

The Fuji Cotton Spinning Co. intends to increase the present capital of yen 2,600,000 by yen 2,400,000.

Mr. C. von Saldern, German Minister to Seoul, who had been on a visit to Kiaochow, returned on Sept. 13th to his post.

A Seoul telegram to the Nichi Nichi says that Mr. Han Kyuha, Premier of Korea, presented his resignation on Sept. 17th.

The British cruiser Flora recently arrived at Singapore to take the place of the battleship Albion, which has returned home.

A telegram from Sapporo says that on the morning of Sept. 18th, snow fell on Mt. Ishikari. This is four days earlier than last year.

The reports of the North German Lloyd Steamship Company show a profit for the first half of 1905 of 7,000,000 marks, an increase over that of 1904.

Marquis Ito paid a visit to Marquis Yamagata, Chief of the Staff, on Sept. 19th at the latter's private residence. Their conference lasted for several hours.

On Sept. 21st, 225 invalids from the front arrived at Shimabashi by the 12.35 p.m. train. They belong to the First Division and the Imperial Body Guards.

Major-General Osawa, Chief of the Transportation and Communications Department of the Imperial Headquarters, left Tokyo on Sept. 20th by the 6 p.m. train for Dairen, Liaotung.

On Sunday, the Emperor visited his office and attended to affairs of State. Lieut.-General Iseji, Commander-in-Chief of the Imperial Body-Guards at home was received by His Majesty.

During August, 465,280 kin of tea was exported to San Francisco, 1,142,250 kin to New York, 434,156 kin to Canada, 2,220,104 kin to Chicago and 119,215 kin to other places in America.

It is reported by the Nichi Nichi that the Government intends to establish next year a bank for the encouragement of trade with China; commercial museums at some important places abroad, and to appoint several commercial agents in America and Europe. For this purpose the authorities are drafting an estimate of expenditures to be introduced in the next session of the Diet.

According to the investigations of the Finance Department money in circulation at the end of August was estimated as follows:—

	Yen.
Gold	23,267,802
Silver	86,375,600
Convertible notes	263,286,205
Various at the front	43,208,000
Various in Formosa	5,142,000

Tokyo papers publish a rumour that after the ratification of the peace treaty, Baron Komura, peace envoy, and Viscount T. Hayashi, Minister in London, will be promoted Count; Mr. Chinda, Vice-Minister for Foreign Affairs, and Mr. Takahira, Minister in Washington, to Viscount; and Mr. Uchida, Minister in Peking, Mr. Kurino, formerly Minister in St. Petersburg, and Mr. G. Hayashi, Minister in Seoul, Baron. The report is current in Foreign Office circles.

A San Francisco telegram, dated Sept. 1st, to the Manila American, says:—All Europe is alarmed over a cholera epidemic which has broken out along the Russia-German frontier. The disease is spreading rapidly, and has already reached Hamburg. Strict quarantine measures have been taken, and every precaution to stamp it out. The epidemic is already being felt by the big steamship lines, as several hundred bookings for passages across the Atlantic from New York and other other Atlantic coast ports, have been cancelled.

A Sapporo telegram reports that the crew, nine men in all, of the sailing vessel Joyo Maru arrived on Sept. 10th at Atsukeshi. According to them, when the ship arrived at Ozernoi, Kamchatka, to obtain fresh water, the Russians fired upon her, injuring one of the crew. All the others, however, escaped by a boat. The hull and cargo were seized by the Russians. While drifting about the Japanese were saved by the American steamer Castle and removed to Shumshu in the Kasile, where they embarked on the sailing vessel Chloe Maru.

The Toyo Kisen Kaisha held a general meeting on Sept. 20th in the Nibonbashi Club, Tokyo. On this occasion, the accounts for the first year were submitted to shareholders. The net profit was yen 210,687.96. Of this amount, yen 12,000 was set apart for reserve, yen 195,000 was allotted as an interim dividend, at the rate of 12 per cent., per annum, and the remainder was carried forward to the next account. Subsequently, a proposal to add yen 6,500,000 to the present capital was introduced. The scheme is that the additional amount shall be used between June and September, 1907, and employed in constructing two steamers. The shareholders consented to the proposal.

The Autumn races for the Challenge Cup between the Mosquito Yacht Club and the Kasei Sailing Club will take place in Yokohama on Saturday next. The first race will be held in the forenoon, the second in the afternoon and should a third and deciding race be necessary will be sailed on Sunday. Up to the present the Mosquito Yacht Club has scored three wins, two in Yokohama and one at Kobe, and the Kobe Club two wins, both at Kobe. In the coming races Messrs. W. W. Campbell and W. Carst will represent Kobe and Messrs. G. and F. J. Hall Yokohama. The boats selected for the matches are the Pete and the Mosquito. The ordinary Mosquito Club race arranged for next Saturday is postponed until a later date.

The directors of the Hokkaido Railway Co. met in Tokyo on Sept. 18th and discussed a proposal to raise a loan of 10 million yen in London. The conditions of the London syndicate were:—interest at 5 per cent., the price of loan £95; the railways, coal, plants, factories and other properties belonging to the company to be pledged as security; the loan to be redeemed not later than 1925 years. The directors of the company decided to accept the conditions. In connection with the enterprise, an extraordinary general meeting of the company will be held on Oct. 3rd to give the consent of the shareholders. The Shogyo says that a foreign firm in Yokohama represents the London syndicate and that the price of the loan is yen 91.75.

LITERARY GOSSIP.

A new work by Captain A. T. Mahan, 17 volumes will be published in October by Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston, and Co. (Ld.), entitled "Sea Power in its Relations to the History of 1812." The volumes will contain photographs, illustrations, maps, and plans.

There has just died near Mayence, Germany, Gutenberg was born and died, Baron Adolf von Molsberg, whose surviving brother, Baron Henri von Molsberg, a former General in the Wurtemberg Army, is now the last descendant of the inventor of printing. Gutenberg left no wife and after his death the only surviving member of his family was the daughter of his paternal uncle, Gottlieb Gensfleisch. This young lady married Judge Jehan van Molsberg, whose last descendant is the childless Wurtemberg Baron.

Attention is being directed by one of the papers to a French poetess in humble life who inhabits one of the Alpine cantons of the Grisons region, so much associated with the name of Berlioz. Her name is Victorine Picot, and she inhabits the mountainous village of Haut Neuchâtel. Her husband is a working cabinet maker and her daughters ply the handloom, and the mother is a laborious peasant woman with grey hair, and a composer of verses which she has always been poor to seek to publish, though they attract the gentry from the neighbouring chateaux in the cottage in the holiday season, and some of the poems have in this way been filched for gratuitous use in newspapers. Now there is a prospect of their finding a wider fame, to the profit of the humble author.

A curious incident is reported in connection with the monument of Mirabeau. The tombstone of the great tribune has, according to information received by the old Paris Commission, been quite accidentally found in an elementary school at Argenteuil—just for all the world as if it had been the derelict top or discarded slate pencil of a schoolboy of a past generation. The curious point of the story arises from the fact that Mirabeau was buried in the Church of St. Genevieve, and antiquarians are puzzling their heads as to how his tombstone got to Argenteuil.

The other day at a meeting of the Public Health Congress Dr. Des Voeux did a public service in coining a new word for the London fog, which was referred to as "smog," a compound of "smoke" and fog. There is a peculiar fascination about the portmanteau word, which will be always associated with the name of Lewis Carroll, and it is remarkable how neatly he used to express what he meant by combining two words. Most of the awe-inspiring adjectives in "Jabberwocky" are compound words, as, for instance, "slithy," a blend of "lithe" and "slippery."

There is a good deal in the view of a certain lady editor who recently expressed her opinions on children's reading. "Boys and girls want something more real than the matter served up to them by their existing magazines. Children's tastes have altered, and nowadays they refuse to be interested in the good little girl and the good little boy who never do anything wrong." Children are only human after all, and we can remember the unutterable weariness of those books of our childhood, such as "Sandford and Merton" and "The Fairchild Family," where a standard of moral excellence was set up which it was impossible to imitate.

A quite heroic attempt is being made by Canon Horsley to teach the children of Walworth to speak the King's English in the Church schools. He finds they can write it well enough, but when it comes to pronunciation the misuse of the vowels is deplorable. The rector of St. Peter's who has been referring to the matter in his parish magazine, quotes some examples of the Walworth vernacular against which he is fighting. "I've been to take her home" comes out, "Binter tiker rome"; "Oh, shake hands" is represented by "Ow shy cans"; and "I've been having a game" is thus given by the Canon as the best representation of Walworth speech, "Binnavingagime."

An appeal has been issued on behalf of Miss Ethel Bret Harte, daughter of the famous novelist. It points out that Bret Harte died in poor circumstances, leaving his daughter Ethel totally unprovided for. Miss Bret Harte finds the struggle for a livelihood very hard. Her health has broken down at a time when she has been striving to earn her living on the concert platform and the stage. It is thought that many in Great Britain, the United States and elsewhere who loved his books, would be disposed to contribute a small sum (amounts of even 5s. would be exceedingly acceptable), in order that a fund may be raised which may permanently benefit Miss Ethel Bret Harte. The committee includes Mr. George Meredith.

Is taciturnity to be classed among the notes of true greatness? We have had William the Silent, and the great Molke used to be described as "dumb in seven languages," the allusion being to his attainments as a linguist. But in aversion from expenditure of words, Hoche, the famous French revolutionary general, could vie with the most taciturn personage in history. For writing, even in the freest intercourse of family life, he had an antipathy scarcely less than for talking among casual acquaintances. With all the glitter upon him of his conquest of the heroic Vendéans, he condensed all his sentiments in a letter of just three printed newspaper lines:—"Peace is concluded," he wrote, "and your husband, the victor, is well. Take care, my good Marthe, of our little child. I embrace you.—L. Hoche." Few communications could be more laconic than this letter, which has just been offered to the Invalides.

The recent announcement that a biography of the painter G. F. Watts is to be written by his widow will be very widely welcomed. Mrs. Watts, in the letter by which she has publicly signified this intention, refers to her not unnatural hesitation to undertake such a task, but expresses also her desire to give her husband's "life of thought as far as possible in his own words." Her idea apparently is to compile a book from the notes left by him, from letters in her possession, and from others which have been lent to her, or which she may be able to borrow from the people in whose possession they happen to be. A biography constructed out of such materials ought certainly, as she puts it, "to reveal from within the personality which drew forth the deep love and veneration of so many very intimate friends," and it ought to throw a valuable light upon the career of a man who has a place among the chief figures of the Victorian era.

There is a very interesting article in the current number of the Library, which gives some statistics of the Reading Room of the British Museum. The desks are crowded with students all day long, and in addition to the books of reference, some twenty thousand in number, which fill the open shelves of the room, from three to four thousand volumes are given out every day. Theology in a wide sense, including the Bible, Biblical literature, Church history, and works on the religious rites and ceremonies of all races and creeds, is easily at the head of the list with about three hundred volumes. Topography comes next, with about twenty fewer, and of these books on London amount to a quarter, books on English topography to another quarter, the other half being for the rest of the world. History and biography come next. English history being mostly in demand, and books on France and the French provinces second. Essays, criticism, and miscellaneous literature take the third place, and are followed by fiction—not less than five years old—moral philosophy, poetry and the fine arts, the drama, law and philology, political economy, and so on down to politics, mathematics, and chemistry, which have about forty volumes apiece, and lastly, works on naval and military subjects, which seldom have more than three or four volumes each. It is a curious list, and throws a useful light on the sort of studies taken up by the readers in the Museum.

AMERICAN TOPICS.

In order still further to cement German and American good will, the German Emperor has asked Prince Henry of Prussia to make another trip to the United States immediately after the autumn military manoeuvres, which will take place in the vicinity of Homburg.

American papers announce that the Depew Improvement Company have repaid to the Equitable Life Assurance Company the sum of $293,850, being the principal and interest of the loan made by the Assurance Company on the advice of Senator Depew.

The court of inquiry into the U. S. S. Bennington disaster found that safety valves and steam gauges were out of commission, and that the gross and continued neglect of Ensign Charles L. Wade was responsible for the tragedy. Wade failed to make tests demanded by the regulations and his trial by court-martial is recommended.

A special to the New York Herald from London says:—Now that the season is over it would appear that there were more Americans left stranded in London this year than ever, haunting the big hotels and looking for wealthy American visitors passing through London homeward bound in order to appeal to their charity. There are many Americans of both sexes who find it impossible to make the hoped-for living in London, who cannot raise money for their fare to America, and consequently either have to face starvation or ask help from holiday-making Americans in this country. It is said there are hundreds of these luckless men and women in London.

The Secretary of the United States Navy has ordered the court-martial of Commander Lucien Young in addition to Ensign Wade, the officers who were aboard the ill-fated gunboat Bennington when she was blown up in San Diego harbour last month. They are charged with the responsibility for the unfortunate occurrence. The board of inquiry recently placed the blame on Ensign Wade but the reviewing authority added that of the commander.

Joseph W. Mather, who was the oldest member of the famous quartet that sang at the Republican meetings during the memorable Fremont and Dayton campaign of 1856, died on Aug. 21 at Darien, Conn., in the house where he was born eighty-six years ago. Mather also sang in the first Lincoln campaign. After that the quartet broke up and Mather went to California to take charge of the marketing of the product of a quick-silver mining company. He had taught school before the war and was the principal of one of the public schools. He graduated from the University of California. In 1889 he came to New York as the representative of the Pacific Coast Borax Company. Mather retired from business in 1897. He attributed his health partly to singing.

A motion was made in the Supreme Court, Boston, on August 22nd, for the appointment of a commission to take the testimony of Mr. John D. Rockefeller and other officers of the Standard Oil Company in the $50,000,000 suit brought by Mrs. Elizabeth F. Greenough of Boston who alleges that the amount is due her as royalty on the oil refined by the company since 1874. The suit is based on an alleged contract made with the late Benjamin F. Greenough, the inventor of a refining process, by the terms of which Greenough was to receive one-quarter of a cent on every gallon of oil sold by the Standard Oil Company. Mr. H. H. Rogers, who is made chief defendant, in his reply to the suit, says an agreement was made, but that Greenough himself vacated it on January 1, 1875.

The drawing power of New York is getting to be greater than that of Paris or London. There is no longer a dull season in the metropolis. The big hotels of the city—and it has more and finer caravansaries than any other place in the world—are filled all the year around. In the winter one class of visitors make use of them; in the summer an entirely different lot come on the scene, but they all bring dollars to the tills of the Bonifaces and to the purveyor of amusements. It is not probable that New York will attract Europeans on a great scale, but it will always prove a powerful magnet to draw Americans, and as there are more of the latter who have money enough and the disposition to travel and see the accessible sights than there are on the Continent of Europe, the future of the metropolis as the Paris of America is assured.

The prevailing impression that health conditions on the Panama isthmus are not favourable is contradicted in an interesting article in the current Harper's Weekly, by Colonel W. C. Gorgas, U.S.A., Chief Sanitary Officer in the Canal Zone. Colonel Gorgas tells of the work that has been accomplished by the sanitary department in improving the health conditions on the isthmus; and he shows, by actual figures, that Panama is healthier than many American cities. For whereas New York city, in one year, had a death rate of 20 per thousand, Philadelphia 21 per thousand, and Washington 22 per thousand, Panama had, during a similar period, a death rate of only 14 per thousand. Colonel Gorgas believes that on account of the sanitary work done, yellow fever will soon be exterminated from the Canal Zone.

Census bulletin No. 20 calls attention to the fact that the corporate expenditures of the cities in the United States having more than 25,000 inhabitants in the year 1904 slightly exceeded those of the National Government. There is nothing surprising in the statement, although the magnitude of the amount expended by the municipalities, $541,624,203, may startle those who forget that it costs a tremendous sum to provide for the security and minister to the convenience of the millions of people who elect to live in cities. There is one thing to be said about the money expended by municipal corporations—it is wholly for the direct benefit of the people who contribute it. That much cannot be said for the $540,631,749 expended by the Central Government. It is all presumably disbursed for the common welfare; but the people who live in the country, or in towns remote from the capital, get precious little good out of its handsome buildings and the magnificent streets, or from many of the other objects which call for the disbursement of the vast total.

Mrs Mary Mapes Dodge, poetess, editor of St. Nicholas' Magazine and author of several stories for children, died at her summer cottage in Onteora Park, Tannersville, N. Y., on Aug. 21. Mrs. Dodge will be remembered as the author of "Hans Brinker," one of the best books for children printed in the last twenty-five years, and as the editor of St. Nicholas from its first issue. Left a widow with two young boys, she became a writer in her efforts to entertain and instruct her children. A series of skating stories which she told in the evening to her two boys was made the basis of "Hans Brinker," which has had an enormous success and is still one of the most popular of juveniles. Other popular books by Mrs. Dodge are "Rhymes and Jingles" and "Donald and Dorothy." One of Mrs. Dodge's hits was "Miss Maloney on the Chinese Question," a satirical skit in Irish dialect, which she wrote for Scribner's. When St. Nicholas was started, in 1878, Mrs. Dodge was made the editor, and the great success of the magazine was largely due to her knowledge of what children like to read.

Plans are under consideration in the United States War Department which may be laid before Congress at its next session for increasing the war strength of the Army to 250,000 men. Certain officials of the War Department have been working on the plan for several weeks, and now have it in tangible form. The regular Army now consists of 30,000 men, with a war strength estimated at 100,000. The new plan involves the creating of a "regular reserve," consisting of able-bodied discharged soldiers, whose names would be on file at the War Department and who would be ready for service at any moment. The regular reserve would consist of 40,000 men, each of whom would be paid $3 a month. They would be required to furnish their addresses to the War Department and to notify the department of any change in address. Thus an army of 100,000 men with military training could be quickly mobilized. The plan next includes the creation of a "national reserve" of 100,000 men. Their names and addresses would be on file in the department and they would be paid a small sum yearly, probably about $3.

Official statistics as to the births in New York in the past year supply some startling figures. Out of a total of 59,196 births only 17,903 were of American parentage. The total, by nationalities, is shown in the following table:

PARENTAGE.	No.
Austrian-Hebrew	6,922
Polish and Russian-Hebrew	9,688
Bosnian	522
Canadian	81
English	184
French	121
German	2,396
Irish	3,880
Italian	11,298
Scotch	65
Swiss	46
Swedish	300
American	11,903
Mixed nationality	11,781

Total..... 59,196

Of these 29,843 were boys and 29,353 girls. A melancholy fact obtrudes itself into the vital statistics. Of the 56,196 infants born within the year in Manhattan 12,000 are doomed to return within twelve months to the unknown whence they came, and 14,500 will never live to reach their fifth birthday. No better illustration of the cosmopolitan character of New York's population can be afforded than by the tale of the statistics.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE PRESENT SITUATION.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—The utterances of certain of the vernacular press at this critical time have certainly been such as must fill all well-wishers of Japan with sadness. It is not too much to say that these journals and the misguided patriots that they have influenced have done more serious injury to their country than their worst enemies could possibly have accomplished.

It is a serious statement to make, and yet there can be no doubt in the minds of impartial observers—that the real enemies of Dai Nippon and her highest and truest interests are not in Manchuria or in St. Petersburg; but actually here within her gates and of her own household.

We hear criticisms that the Government has interfered with the liberty of the press. It is not liberty that the Government has interfered with but license—unbridled and criminal license. Does the liberty of the press, for instance, include the right to advocate assassination, to incite the people to acts of violence; and to disgrace Japan in the eyes of the world? If the power of the press be prostituted to such uses as this, is it not high time that rigid supervision should be enforced?

With regard to the present agitation and to the peace question generally, the views of one who regards the situation dispassionately must be simply this:—The Elder Statesmen and the members of the Cabinet have had the best interests of their country at heart. They have inside knowledge of many things which outsiders cannot know. They therefore have data on which to form a judgement which no outsider can at present have. Now, we know that these statesmen unanimously decided in favour of peace. Knowing, as they must have well known—that they would have to face the anger of the unwise and over-sanguine—they nevertheless had the high courage to act according to their convictions and their consciences. This is already recognized and appreciated by enlightened nations and enlightened people throughout the world. The day will come when it will be recognized also by those who are now raising the greatest outcry.

Yours respectfully,

"A MAN IN THE STREET."

September 13th, 1905.

THE "FREEMAN'S JOURNAL."

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—Whilst thanking you reviewer for his kindly notice of my little book on Admiral Togo, I beg to assure him that there is a New York Freeman's Journal as well as a Dublin one, and the next time I have a copy sent me, I will forward it to you.

Yours very faithfully

ARTHUR LLOYD.

13, Iigura Rokuchome, Azabu, Tokyo.

September 4, 1905.

THE MILITARY GUARDS.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—The soldiers sent down from Tokyo in connection with the recent trouble in Yokohama were recalled to-day. They leave the best of impressions behind them. A bluff resident, who sent out every evening to the piquet near his house light refreshments and illustrated papers, was called on by one of the privates just before the company was ordered to fall in. The man thanked his entertainer and his family for their kind attention to himself and comrades and, in their name, he bade his new found foreign friend goodbye and expressed a hope that there would be no further cause for anxiety. The behaviour of the military guards during their stay in Yokohama was exceptionally good, and the courteous bearing of the men deserves recognition.

Yours truly,

OLD RESIDENT.

Yokohama, September 19th.

THE TREATY OF PEACE, A TRIUMPH FOR BUSHIDO.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—Our brilliant series of victories has been at last crowned with still more brilliant peace. Thank God "the age of chivalry" is not entirely gone, and the world in general still knows how to welcome and appreciate our display of Bushido on the field as well as in council. We shall not say whether the new treaty is a success or a failure in our diplomacy. We shall not say whether it is a gain or a loss in our economy. Nor shall we wonder why such a bold promise ends, all of a sudden, in such a tame conclusion. Still less shall we attempt in vain to justify or censure those things that are in themselves so clear, and those so dark and incomprehensible. In short, we shall say nothing which is beyond our own sphere. But we feel it our duty to remind one and all that we Japanese wage war and make peace in accordance with our exalted ideas included under the well-known, but little understood, name of Bushido.

In the beginning of the present war there were some who thought it sheer nonsense that Japan or any other country should at all undertake a war except for selfish purposes, thus unconsciously reflecting the meanness of their own hearts. That same sort of men may now fly to some extraordinary conclusion just the very opposite of the actual facts which prompted the gracious instructions of our Emperor. To begin with they may doubt our national resources. But no doubt is more groundless. It is true that we are poor, very poor compared with either the English or the Americans, but our poverty is our riches. We, remaining at home, could live and work on salted "daikon" and bottled tea or something worse and cheaper still, while our brothers at the front could fight on the same coarse diet. For one example, Major Hasegawa and his cavalry, one hundred and thirty in number, coming the Sungari, pushing deep into the enemy's lines, striking terror into their ranks, performing wonders, and that too in the depth of the Manchurian winter, the thermometer standing forty degrees below zero, lived most of the time on Chinese buckwheat and water! We find other sources of wealth in the treasures preserved in the innumerable temples of the Buddhists and in the palaces of the nobles. Besides these we have the private hoards (I almost said, secret hoards) of many, in the shape of old coins and native bullion. That story of Konishi, the wealthy brewer and banker's "dogitai" (or summer airing) of gold, when his superb mansion of Itami becomes flooded with a glowing deluge of nibukin, koban, oban, bullion, etc., etc., of his deep secret cellars is no exaggeration. My old pupil and friend, Mr. Inouye, the rich owner of Ibaraki, a distant relative of Konishi, was so admitted to view the secret scene. The wretched sight, he told me, struck him dumb—a sight that would have made either Croesus or Midas envious. Marquis Shimazu's bullion, gold rods and chains as well as his inexhaustible gold mines, are doubted by none, though his treasurer never took the public into his confidence. Then nobody knows exactly how rich either Konoike or Homma is. Even an obscure cousin at Sakai, one Otsuka, a small brewer by profession, counts his gold by millions. And we Japanese, with not one single exception, are ready to sacrifice all in case of emergency. Mr. Kono, my old classmate, Yamada Kinoshige, as well as other Jingoos no doubt understand these facts, and so they are holding their noisy meetings. It is well believed in jingoism, why, we could easily "cut war into Africa." Le Temps, we understand, says "Both were confronted by financial necessities and practical impossibilities." Impossibilities! no possibilities for the Japanese, fifty millions of whom rose like one man preferring honour to death, justice to gold, and humanity to everything. But as we drew the sword for the sake of peace, justice, and humanity it is quite natural for us to sheathe it forego our demerit, or other advantages, the usual fruits of victory. Besides, it has been our custom, since the memorial past, to behave leniently towards the weak and magnanimously towards a fallen foe whether it realizes his situation or not. Yet this century takes a lesson from the Russo-Japanese war, and if those cannons should ever disturb its peaceful atmosphere, let the warfare be conducted and concluded with the same spirit and the same successes.

When the victorious arms of Hideyoshi, then the sole ruler of Japan under the Mikado, reached Kagoshima, and Shimazu Yoshihisa, the Daimyo, was utterly beaten down, the Taiko's greatness shone out bright, which contributed not a little lustre to our Bushido. He observed that Yoshihisa's disobedience and outrages deserved a severe punishment, but he could not very well bear the thought of terminating the famous old family. So peace was concluded in the Temple of Peace on the banks of the Sendagawa. Although Hideyoshi deprived Yoshihisa of all the regions that he had encroached upon and usurped, yet he left his original possessions of the three provinces untouched. Now Japan drives away the Russians from Korea, Manchuria, and Saghalien but she intends to leave their original possessions in Asia untouched. She therefore divides the island with them as they had originally enjoyed the possession of its Northern half. Can anything be more magnanimous and bushi-like for us than this! We shall not say whether the new treaty should be praised as diplomatic wisdom or condemned as folly; but we dare say it is not possibly be called an "ignoble peace." On the contrary, it is our triumph and glory. But if this treaty be a political blunder let it be a blunder. Let nobody attempt in vain to justify it. Let nobody, in his attempt at its justification, or its condemnation turn out a traitor against the facts, and against the very message of our gracious Emperor, which filled both hemispheres with admiration. Should utility be adored as Jove, the infallible judge of human actions? Should it be allowed to qualify, or contradict, or annul a pure virtue? In short, let none, not to say "sophisters, economists, and calculators" dare disgrace our triumph and glory in this mean garment of shame and dishonour.

When Iyeyasu took arms against Hideyoshi for the cause of Oda Nobuo, Nobunaga's orphan, the world saw with admiration how justice and humanity triumphed over encroachment and usurpation. The war of Komakiyama, lasting for more than a year, shows some of the brightest pages of Tokugawa's career. The brilliant series of victories won by Iyeyasu made even the haughty Hideyoshi sue for peace, and Oda Nobuo, on whose account the belligerents had taken up arms, now did his utmost to reconcile them. Iyeyasu listened to Nobuo and peace was concluded between the rival chieftains. Iyeyasu received for his victories no recompense whatever. It was a "poor return" so to speak. But he stopped the warfare for the sake of humanity and the peace of his world, the Japanese empire.

This act of Iyeyasu, whatever were his faults and blemishes, merits the highest admiration and respect. Heaven richly rewarded him at last in giving him and his children the supreme power over the whole empire, undisturbed for hundreds of years. In the fullness of time his descendants respectfully returned this power to its rightful owner, the Emperor, and their family now enjoys the title of prince with all its honours and dignity. Japan, so chivalrous and magnanimous, has now signed a new treaty simply for the sake of peace and humanity. Should not the same Heaven which once blessed Iyeyasu and his children so bounteously bless and reward Japan and her children, giving them the supreme command over the East, with all its honours and dignity? And in the fullness of time, i.e. the end of the world, they would respectfully resign this command to its rightful owner, the Emperor on High. Would to God, that they, the poor patriotic heards, now so stirred up, and bewildered, and lost in their noble frenzy, could recollect the magnanimity of Iyeyasu and its incomparable rewards!

Some foreigners at Yokoyama are reported to have declared our new treaty "a poor return." If that is a fact, we thank them for their goodwill towards us, because such an expression shows their love and sincerity of heart. In my last letter to the Japan Mail "Our success and the yellow peril," I plainly stated that Japan may surprise the world by apparent ignorance of her own interest; and her sympathy may sometimes make her appear stupid. And as you see, I was right. Japan did surprise the world by her concessions. But good friends, we have beg your pardon for contradicting you. The treaty is not, after all, a "poor return." He is well paid, and is well satisfied, as Portia says. Man, the image of God, should be above mere utility and worldly wisdom. From the Bushido point of view, peace, no less than the war, is satisfactory. It pleased God to see our Bushido triumph on the field, and he thought it wise to send a Raphael, the bringer of peace and goodwill to man, across the wide Ocean of Peace that our old tenets might gain new laurels in the conference chamber; and now on the glory of our victories we see arise the glory of a peace, like "Another morn, Risen on mid noon," vile our valour and humanity, dispelling the ominous clouds that had ever threatened the eastern skies, illuminate the whole globe and its inhabitants. I am Sir, your obedient servant,

T. T. S.

TELEGRAMS.

(REUTERS' SPECIAL SERVICE.)

THE "MIKASA" DISASTER—
BRITISH SYMPATHY.

London, Sept. 14.
Universal satisfaction is expressed in Great Britain at the escape of Admiral Go. It is understood that King Edward and the British Admiralty telegraphed their sympathy.

The Times says that England, as the east of sea-faring nations of the West, feels greatly the heavy blow which has been dealt the Japanese Navy. Fortunately Japanese are men who bear ill-fortune unwincing. All nations, including Russian sailors, will mourn the tragic fate that has befallen so many of Japan's sailors and will do homage to the memory of the dead.

All the papers write in a similar strain.

BARON KOMURA.

It is believed that Baron Komura has been attacked by typhoid fever. A specialist has been summoned. His return home has been postponed indefinitely.

THE VATICAN AND JAPAN.

The American Bishop O'Connell has started to convey to the Mikado the Pope's congratulations on the magnanimous peace just arranged and his thanks for the treatment accorded to Catholics in Japan.

NORWAY AND SWEDEN.

London, Sept. 15.

The feeling in Norway and Sweden appears to be most strained. An authoritative announcement has been made in Stockholm accusing Norway of deliberately deceiving the foreign press on the subject of the demolition of the frontier fortifications. On the other hand Norway declares that Sweden is now making the conditions harder than those demanded by Parliament.

REOPENING TRADE ROUTES.

Later.

The Russo-East Asia Steamship Company announces the opening of a regular service between Russia and the Far East.

MOROCCO.

All the Powers have joined in a Note to the Morocco Government demanding protection for Europeans in view of the insecurity of Tangier in consequence of some tribal fighting.

SWEDEN AND NORWAY.

London, September 16.

The Norwegian correspondents at Karlstad declare that mobilization orders may be expected at any moment.

THE CAUCASUS.

The revolutionary party at Tiflis has issued a proclamation in favour of a general rising.

THE SCANDINAVIAN POWERS.

Later.

It is stated in London that the Swedish and Norwegian negotiations are proceeding steadily. England is playing an important but unostentatious part, though nothing in the nature of arbitration. Professor Nansen, as the representative of Norway, at present unofficial, and the Swedish ministry chose as the channel of communication the British Foreign Office, whereby to approach each other.

THE BAKU TROUBLES.

London, September 17.

The insurgents at Baku threaten to kill all who resume work and to burn all plants where any attempt is made to repair the damage caused by the fires on Thursday night. In various districts many skirmishes have taken place with considerable loss of life.

THE SEISMIC DISTURBANCES IN ITALY.

Mount Vesuvius is becoming increasingly active and frequent undulatory shocks have taken place in the neighbourhood of the volcano. The activity of Mount Stromboli is also very remarkable.

THE RUSSIAN VOLUNTEER FLEET.

Later.

The Russian Volunteer Fleet is resuming its Asiatic service. A steamer is leaving Odessa on Wednesday for Nagasaki and Vladivostock. Enormous quantities of goods are awaiting shipment for Siberia.

BARON KOMURA BETTER.

Baron Komura's illness has taken a favourable turn.

THE SCANDINAVIAN TROUBLE COMPROMISED.

London, September 18.

The Swedish and Norwegian delegates are understood to have reached a compromise, to the great satisfaction and relief of both capitals.

REMEDIAL MEASURES IN RUSSIA.

The Tsar has ordered the assembly of a representative council, presided over by the Minister of Finance, to consider measures for reviving the naphtha industry and also for concentrating a sufficient number of troops to guarantee order in the district of the oil fields.

NORWAY PREPARING FOR THE WORST.

London, September 19.

Travellers arriving at Stockholm report that Norway last week was energetically preparing for war by constructing temporary fortifications on the frontier, cutting down trees and barricading the roads. Nearly all troops in the central and frontier districts seemed to be mobilised.

Relief is felt in Christiania at the peaceful outlook, but the hope is expressed that peace has not been too dearly bought.

ROYAL REVIEW IN SCOTLAND.

Later.

King Edward has reviewed 40,000 Scottish Volunteers in the King's Park at Edinburgh. The weather was favourable and about 100,000 spectators were present in picturesque surroundings.

SIR THOMAS LIPTON INJURED.

Sir Thomas Lipton, riding past the King at the head of the 2nd Lanark Engineers, was thrown from his horse and kicked in the face, but his injuries are not serious.

TURKEY FORTIFIES THE BOSPORUS.

Fortifications are being rapidly constructed on the Bosphorus as a result of the scare on the occasion of the Potemkin mutiny, thus causing great displeasure in Russia, which is understood to have already protested.

THE SECOND HAGUE CONFERENCE.

London, September 20.

The Tsar proposes to invite the Powers to a second Hague Conference. President Roosevelt, deferring to the Tsar, has agreed that the initiative had better come from the originator of the first Conference.

BARON KOMURA.

Baron Komura is convalescent.

REIGN OF TERROR CONTINUES AT BAKU.

Murders, pillaging and incendiarism continue at Baku. Eleven derricks in the Viceroy Oil Fields, which have hitherto been efficiently protected, were burned yesterday. The insurgents are obstructing and attacking the trains in the Tiflis district.

GERMANY AND MOROCCO.

London, September 21.

The negotiations with reference to Morocco are beginning to excite uneasiness. It is stated that Germany's pretensions have grown, and now include the port of Mogador.

RUSSIAN ELECTORS INDIFFERENT.

The bulk of the population in Russia is indifferent to the approaching elections for a parliament, only a small percentage taking up the franchise in consequence of dissatisfaction with the inequitable representation of cities.

Later,

THE VOLUNTEER FLEET AND THE FAR EAST.

The departure of the Russian Volunteer Fleet steamer from Odessa announced on the 17th inst., and of other vessels bound for Vladivostock, has been deferred, pending the abrogation of Japan's right of capture.

NEXT MAIL IS DUE

NEXT MAIL IS DUE
From	Line.	Steamer.	Date.
Hongkong...O. & O...	Coptic 1		F. Sept. 22
Hongkong...C. P. R...	Tartar 2		F. Sept. 22
America...P. M. ...	China 3		Sa. Sept. 23
Europe...N. L. D. ...	Bayern 4		Sa. Sept. 23
Tacoma...B. T. ...	Shammut 5		Su. Sept. 24
Europe...M. M. ...	Caledonien 6		W. Sept. 27
Hongkong...C. P. R. ...	Em. of Japan 7		Th. Sept. 28
Hongkong...B. T. ...	Lyra		F. Sept. 29
Vancouver...C. P. R. ...	Athenian 8		Sa. Oct. 7
America...O. & O. ...	Doric		Sa. Oct. 6
Hongkong...P. M. ...	Siberia		Th. Oct. 12
America...P. M. ...	Manchuria		F. Oct. 13
Vancouver...C. P. R. ...	Em. of India		M. Oct. 16

- 1 Left Hongkong on the 11th inst.
- 2 Left Hongkong on the 13th inst.
- 3 Left San Francisco on the 6th inst.
- 4 Left Nagasaki on the 20th inst.
- 5 Left Seattle on the 6th inst.
- 6 Left Hongkong on the 22nd inst.
- 7 Left Hongkong on the 20th inst.
- 8 Left Vancouver on the 18th inst.

For	Line	Steamer.	Date.
America.....	O. & O.....	Coptic	Sa. Sept. 23
Europe	M. M.....	Polynesian	Sa. Sept. 23
Vancouver.....	C. P. R.....	Tartar	Sa. Sept. 23
Hongkong.....	P. & A.....	Numantia	Su. Sept. 24
Europe	P. & O.....	Nubia	Su. Sept. 24
Hongkong.....	P. M.....	China	M. Sept. 25
Hongkong.....	B. T.....	Shawmut	M. Sept. 25
Seattle	N. Y. K.....	Kanagawa Maru	Tu. Sept. 26
Vancouver.....	C. P. R.....	Em. of Japan	F. Sept. 29
Shanghai	N. Y. K.....	Ben vorlich	F. Sept. 29
Europe	N. D. L.....	Bayern	Sa. Sept. 30
Tacoma	B. T.....	Lyra	Sa. Sept. 30
America.....	T. K. K.....	America Maru	Sa. Sept. 30
Hongkong.....	C. P. R.....	Athenian	Sa. Oct. 7
Hongkong.....	O. & O.....	Doric	Su. Oct. 8
Portland.....	P. & A.....	Nicomedia	Tu. Oct. 10
America.....	P. M.....	Siberia	F. Oct. 13
Hongkong.....	P. M.....	Manchuria	Su. Oct. 15
Hongkong.....	P. C. R.....	Em. of China	Oct. 16

ARRIVALS

Beneluch, British steamer, 2,679, Reid, 15th Sept.,
—London via ports, and Kobe, 13th Sept., General.
—Cornes & Co.
Themis, Norwegian steamer, 1,208, Kroger, 15th
Sept.,—Hongkong, General.—Chinese.
Slavonia, German steamer, 3,266, Roerden, 15th
Sept.,—Hamburg via ports, and Shanghai, 11th
Sept., General.—C. Illies & Co.
Ganges, British steamer, 2,721, W. Sibbald, 15th
Sept.,—Ujina via ports, General.—Nippon Yusen
Kaisha.
Kanjie Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,041, M. Honda,
15th Sept.,—Yokkaichi, General.—Nippon Yusen
Kaisha.
Jenfeld, German steamer, 684, Petersen, 15th Sept.,
—Hilo, P.I., Sugar,—To Order.
Korea, American steamer, 5,651, A. Zeeder, 16th
Sept.,—Hongkong via ports, and Kobe, 15th Sept.,
Mails and General.—P. M. S.S. Co.
Anhui, British steamer, 1,350, A. H. Harris, 16th
Sept.,—Shanghai via ports, Mails and General.—
Nippon Yusen Kaisha.
Genkat Maru, Japanese steamer, 874, Y. Takeo, 16th Sept.,—Hakodate, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.
Skuld, Norwegian steamer, 746, Olaf Odd, 16th
Sept.,—Miji, Coal.—Asada.
Kunwang, British steamer, 2,079, E. J. Buller, 16th
Sept.,—Hongkong via Kobe, 14th Sept., General.
—Jardine, Matheson & Co.
Hingo Maru, Japanese steamer, 882, N. Nielsen,
17th Sept.,—Bonin Islands, Mails and General.—
Nippon Yusen Kaisha.
Empress of China, British steamer, 3,003, R. Archibald, 17th Sept.—Vancouver, B.C., 4th Sept.

 Mails and General.—C. P. R. Co.
Pelades, American steamer, 2,932, F. G. Purrington, 17th Sept.—Tacoma, Wash., 26th Aug., Mails and General.—Dodwell & Co., Ltd.
Cincinnati, (24), U.S. Cruiser, 3,213, Capt. C. G.
 Calkins, 17th Sept.—Chefoo, 12th Sept.
Elks, Norwegian steamer, 912, Weibust, 18th Sept.,
 —Wakamatsu, Coal.—Drabble & Co.
Alcinous, British steamer, 4,278, J. Pulford, 18th
 Sept.—Glasgow and Liverpool via ports, General.
 —Butterfield & Swire.

Kanjo Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,041, M. Honda,
18th Sept.—Yokkaichi, General.—Nippon Yusen
Kaisha.
Oro, British steamer, 2,147, W. Ransome Coleman, 19th Sept.—Kobe, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Australian, British steamer, 1,784, McArthur, 19th Sept.—Sydney via ports, and Shanghai, 15th Sept., General.—Cornes & Co.

Jason, British steamer, 4,880, T. G. Steeves, 19th Sept.—Glasgow and Liverpool via ports, and Kobe, 18th Sept., General.—Butterfield & Swire.

Aragoia, German steamer, 3,324. Ernst, 19th Sept.,
—Hongkong via ports, and Kobe, 18th Sept.,
Mails and General.—P. & A. S.S. Co.

Macduff, British steamer, 1,882, John B. Muir, 19th Sept.—Otaru via ports, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Woodford, British steamer, 1,860, Jas. Seddon, 20th Sept.—Muroran, Coal.—Hokkaido Tanko Kaisha.
Richmond, British steamer, 2,050, F. T. Nicolle, 21st

Sept.,—Muroran via Shimidzu, Coal.—Hokkaido
Tanko Kaisha.

Ras Dara, British steamer, 2495, McCambridge, 21st
Sept.,—New York via Suez and ports, and Kobe, 19th Sept., General.—Cornes & Co.
Sophie Rickmers, German steamer 2262, Walsen.

Sophie Rickmers, German steamer, 2,262, Walsen, 21st Sept.—Hamburg via ports, 23rd 'July' General.—C. Illies & Co.

DEPARTURES.

Breconskire, British steamer, 2,323, G. E. Elliott,
15th Sept.—Otaru via ports, General.—Nippon
Yusen Kaisha.

Pollux, Norwegian steamer, 780. C. Svendsen, 15th
Sept.—Shanghai via Kobe and Moji, General.—
Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Chiswick, British steamer, 2,072, G. W. B. Woods, 15th Sept.—Royal Roads via Muroan, Ballast,—
Dodwell & Co., Ltd.

Greenwich, British steamer, 1,836. B. Cobb, 15th Sept.—Otaru, General.—Hokkaido Tanko Kaisha, Suzuki, British steamer, 3,174. A. W. Dobbs, 16th

Vandalia, German steamer, 2,641, Hasse, 16th Sept.,
—New York via ports and Suez. General.—C

Tjimahi, Dutch steamer, 2,476, N. de Brouwers, 16th Sept.—Macassar via ports. General.—Ed. J. van Pocassel, British steamer, 1,726, James, 16th Sept.,

—Kobe, General.—Dodwell & Co., Ltd.

—Kobe, General.—Dodwell & Co., Ltd.
Roos, German steamer, 5,013, G. Meiners 16th Sept.
—Bremen and Hamburg via ports, Mails and General.—H. Ahrens & Co. Nachf.

Braemar, British steamer, 2,316, S. L. Saxby, 16th Sept.—Kobe via Yokkaichi, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Yusen Kaisha,
Korea, American steamer, 5,651, A. Zeeder, 17th
Sept.,—San Francisco direct, Mails and General.
P. M. S. Co.

—P. M. S. S. Co.
Peleus, British steamer, 4,800, J. Barwise, 17th Sept.
—Java, Ballast.—Butterfield & Swire.
Edith, British steamer, 2,100, E. La Touche, 18th Sept.

Kilburn, British steamer, 2,111, E. Le Templier, 17th Sept.—Otaru via ports, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Themis, Norwegian steamer, 1,208, Kroger, 17th Sept.,—Kobe, General.—Chinese.
Kumsang, British steamer, 2,079, E. J. Buller, 18th Sept.,—Kobe, General.—Chinese.

Sept.,—Kuchinotsu, Ballast.—Jardine, Matheson
& Co.
Empress of China, British steamer, 3,003, R. Archi-

Skuld, Norwegian steamer, 947, Olaf Odd, 18th

Sept.,—Moji, Ballast.—Asada.
Den of Crombie, British steamer, 2,895, Andrew Low.
 18th Sept.,—Moji, Ballast.—Dodwell & Co., Ltd.

Genkai Maru, Japanese steamer, 874, G. Takeo,
18th Sept.,—Hakodate, General.—Nippon Yusen
Kaisha.

Kanjo Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,041, M. Honda,
18th Sept.,—Yokkaichi, General.—Nippon Yusen
Kaisha.

Fukuki Maru, Japanese steamer, 3,087. K. Murakami, 19th Sept.,—Kobe, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Anhui, British steamer, 1,350, A. H. Harris, 20th Sept.—Shanghai via ports, Mails and General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Dai San Jingi Maru, Japanese steamer, 660 tons, Kawai, 20th Sept.,—Newchwang and Takow ports, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.
Jensfeld, German steamer, 684, Petersen, 21st Sept.,—Kuchinotsu, Ballast.—Carlowitz & Co.
Australiaa, British steamer, 1,784, McArthur, 21st Sept.,—Australia and New Zealand via ports, General.—Corney & Co.

PASSENGERS

ARRIVES

Per American American steamer Korea
Hongkong via ports.—Mrs. M. C. Nagle, Mr. A.
Hinton, Mr. Wm. Haywood, Mrs. Wm. Haywood, two children and maid, Mrs. J. Garrard, Mr.
Garrard, Mrs. C. A. Blackwell, Mrs. A. Bissell,
Walter Bisschoff, Mr. V. V. Bryan, Mrs. A.
Bryan, Miss Mary Griggs, Lt. J. P. Castellan, Mr.
A. C. Smith, Mr. J. C. McDonnell, Mrs. J.
Alpin, Miss B. Garrard, Mr. J. Miller, Mrs. J.
Dougan, Mr. Geo. C. Alcock, Mr. E. R. Dyer,
W. J. Schroth, Mrs. W. J. Schroth, Mr. B.
Smarden, Rev. C. B. T. Winkley, Lt. J. F. K.
Mr. A. Brownell, Mr. G. G. Bouman, Mr. W.
Wentworth, Mr. J. C. Hall, Misses J. C. Hall,
Miss G. Scott, Mr. K. Otani, and Mr. G. K. K.
For San Francisco:—Hon. Wm. H. Tall, Col.
Edwards, Capt. Wm. Kelly Jr., Senator and
W. M. Scott, Senator P. M. Patterson, Hon. and
C. H. Greason, Hon. and Mrs. D. A. De Armon,
Hon. Charles Curtis, Hon. Theobald Ogden, Hon.
Chas. F. Scott, Hon. Swager Sherley, Mrs. P. W.
Sherley, Mr. Louis Chapin, Col. James D. Hill,
W. J. Johnston, Mr. W. R. Pedigo, Mr. H. S.
Smyman, Mr. J. M. Hausseman, Mr. A. W. Stoen, and Mrs. K. A. Riggs and infant, Mr. Geo. C.
Miss L. D. Bambauer, Mr. Jose Gonzalez, Mr.
Jacob, Mr. V. A. Correa, Mr. and Mrs. Wang by and infant, Capt. J. K. Thompson, Mr. James
Leroy, Senator and Mrs. F. F. Dillison, Senator C.
Long, Hon. and Mrs. W. P. Ephraim, Hon. and Mrs. Wm. A. Jones, Hon. Geo. E. Foss, Hon. W.
W. Howard, Hon. A. A. Wiley, Hon. W. W. Lister,
Hon. W. B. McKinley, Mr. Charles Curtis,
Clark, Mr. Burr McIntosh, Mr. A. Brooks, Mrs.
Chas. C. Smith, Miss D. Bomar, Mrs. G. S. Weaver,
Mrs. M. M. Fosdick, Major Gove, Mr. Jose Lopez
Mr. H. G. Spiner, Mr. C. Goode, Dr. W. C. Jones,
Major Guy L. Edis, Mr. Fred W. Corcoran,
Senator M. J. Footer, Hon. and Mrs. S. E. E. E.
Hon. and Mrs. G. W. Smith, Hon. Wm. A.
Cooper, Hon. and Mrs. E. J. Hill, Hon. and Mrs.
M. E. Driscoll, Hon. and Mrs. Geo. A. Jones,
D. E. McKinley, Mr. R. C. Anderson, Mr. E. E.
Copley, Mr. E. T. Jones, Miss Wm. W. C.
Pannell, Mr. and Mrs. Chas. C. Linn, Mr. C. C.
Wood, Mr. Jose Tendore, Mr. Thos. E. Logan,
W. S. Hughes, U.S.A., Miss. Chapman Higgin-
M. Lopez, Mr. C. Seivers, and Rev. W. A. E. cabin.

Per British steamer, Empress of Asia,
Vancouver B.C.:—Mr. G. Acheson, Mrs. A.
H. Baker, Mrs. Bennett, Sir Edw. Boyle,
K.C., Mr. K. G. Huchan, Lord Robert Cecil,
Cecil and maid, Mr. F. B. Deacon, Madame
Mr. F. Deloncle, Mr. L. Deloncle, Miss
Mr. W. S. Fulkerson, Mr. E. R. Fulkerson,
Fulkerson and child, Mr. S. G. French,
J. Geary, Mr. W. E. Gilbert, Miss A. Gray,
Mr. W. R. Gaffney, Commandate M. Gray,
O. H. Gray, Mr. K. G. S. Hatfield, Mrs.
and Mrs. Villiers Hutton, Maid and Val,
Cannon, Miss Crag, Miss R. Cragne, W.
K. Hemens, Mr. C. Holliday, Mrs. H.
Mr. N. C. Home, Miss M. Hoops, Mr. H. H.
Miss E. Hubbard, Mr. J. A. Hyde, Mr. H. W. and Lady Hicks-Beach, Miss Hicks-Beach,
Mrs. Irvine, child and nurse, Dr. W. V. Jones,
Mrs. Jeffrey, and 2 children, Dr. J. E. Jones,
Jones, Miss C. F. Keith, Miss C. L. King,
R. S. Kinney, Mrs. Kirby, Mr. J. Koski,
Larned, Mr. W. Lay, Master Lay, Miss Lay,
T. Longstaffe, Lady V. Dickinson, Mrs. D.
Mr. E. May, Mrs. May, Mrs. H. Morton,
McKee, Mrs. McKee and 2 children, Rev.
McLeod, Mrs. McLeod, Miss M. McLeod,
Nakayama, Mr. H. G. Parlett, Capt. W. C.
ham, Mr. A. W. Playfair, Major C. G. Proctor,
Mrs. Pritchard, Mr. W. V. Robinson, Miss
Sunder and 2 children, Mr. E. L. Simon, Mrs.
Komeya, Miss Matheson, Mr. E. Siers, Miss
Stayner, Rev. M. L. Taft, Mrs. Taft, Mr. R. W.
Mr. R. Walter, Miss R. C. Whitlock, Miss
Rev. A. T. Wilkinson, Mrs. Wilkinson and 2
Commodore H. P. Williams, Mrs. Williams, infant and nurse, Mrs. L. Wilmot, Mr. W.
Woodward, Miss Phelps and Mr. T. M. T. in cabin.

Per British steamer Australian, from Sydney, ports:—Mr. Alcock, Mr. Fuzzimons, Mrs. H. Mr. Govett, Mrs. Broham, Rev. and Mrs. H. Miss Hickling, Mrs. Timms, Mrs. Burkett, and Tilburn, in cabin; Dr. Ito, Mrs. G. O'Brien, Hunter, and 2 Japanese, in second class; 4 Japanese in steerage.

LATEST COMMERCIAL.

[SPECIALLY COMPILED FOR THE "JAPAN MAIL"]
IMPORTS.

Yokohama, September 22.
Nothing to report in Yarns; Shirts are quiet and Fancy Cottons and Woollens dull; very little business passing in any branch.

COTTON PIECE GOODS.

White Shirting—{ 40 yds. 36 in. } ... 0.10 to 0.16
{ 50 yds. 36 in. }

Grey Shirting—8 1/2 lb. 38 1/2 yds. 36 inches V. 4.00 to 4.50
Grey Shirting—9 lb. 38 1/2 yds. 45 inches 4.50 to 5.25
Prints—Assorted, 24 yards, 30 inches... 2.85 to 4.25

Cotton Italians and Satteens... 10.20 to 0.40

WOOLLENS.

Flannels ... V. 0.50 to 0.65
Italian Cloth, 32 in. ... 0.35 to 0.50
Mousseline de Laine—Crape, 24 yards, 30 inches... 0.16 to 0.22

Cloths—Pilots, 54 to 56 inches ... 0.50 to 1.00
Cloths—Presidents, 51 to 65 inches ... 0.90 to 1.00
Cloths—Union, 54 to 56 inches ... 0.50 to 1.00

Blankets—Scarlet and Green, 3 to 5 lb per lb ... 0.60 to 0.66

Velvets—Black, 35 yards, 22 inches ... 9.20 to 12.50

Victoria Lawn, 12 yards, 42-3 inches... 0.90 to 1.80

Turkey Reds—2.8 to 3.0 lb 24-25 yards, 30 inches... 1.90 to 2.25

Turkey Reds—3.8 to 5 lb, 24-25 yards, 32 inches ... 2.50 to 3.65

COTTON YARN.

Nos. 16/24, Singles ... Y. Nominal

Nos. 28/32, Singles ... Y. Nominal

Nos. 38/42, Singles ... Y. Nominal

Nos. 32, Doubles... Y. Nominal

Nos. 42, Doubles... Y. Nominal

Nos. 2/60, Plain ... Y. Nominal

Nos. 2/80, Plain ... Y. Nominal

Nos. 2/100, Plain... Y. Nominal

Nos. 2/60, Gassed ... 300.00 to 310.00

Nos. 2/80, Gassed ... 350.00 to 370.00

Nos. 2/100, Gassed ... 430.00 to 460.00

RAW COTTONS.

American Middling... 27.00 to 27.25

Indian Broach... 25.50 to 26.00

Chinese ... 24.00 to 26.50

METALS.

This market continues dull.

Round and square 1/2 inch and upward... 4.00 to 4.20

Iron Plates, assorted ... 4.35 to 4.65

Sheet Iron... 4.70 to 6.95

Galvanised Iron sheets ... 10.05 to 10.95

Wire Nails, assorted ... 6.85 to 7.15

Pin Plates, per box... 7.40 to 7.65

Fig Iron, No. 3 ... 2.40

Hoop Iron (3/4 to 1 1/2 inch) ... 5.00 to 5.50

KEROSENE.

The market is a little firmer.

American ... $3.30

Russian ... 3.14

Tangkai ... 2.99

SUGAR.

The market is practically unchanged, very little doing.

Brown Takao ... V. 9.40 to 9.80

Brown Manila ... 10.10 to 11.10

Brown Daitong ... 7.60 to 8.00

Brown Canton ... 10.00 to 12.10

White Java and Penang... 12.70 to 13.70

White Refined... 14.20 to 17.00

INDIGO.

Not much doing, replacing prices slightly dearer.

Java, Medium to best... 195.00 to 245.00

Calcutta, Medium to best ... 150.00 to 200.00

Madras (Ampak), Medium to best ... 90.00 to 120.00

Madras (Dry Leaf), Medium to best ...

EXPORTS.

RAW SILK.

Stocks having accumulated sellers have given way in their prices to some extent and a fairly large business has been done at the reduced quotations. At the time of writing it looks as if we might see some further ease next week.

QUOTATIONS.

Filatures—Extra Best, Coarse ... 1,130 to 1,140

Filatures—Extra, Fine ... 1,100 to 1,120

Filatures—Extra, Coarse ... 1,060 to 1,070

Filatures—No. 1, Fine ... 1,090 to 1,120

Filatures—No. 1 1/2, Fine ... 1,040 to 1,050

Filatures—No. 2, Fine ... 1,050 to 1,060

Filatures—No. 2, Coarse ...

Common—Coarse ...

Re-reels—Extra ...

Re-reels—No. 1 ... 1,080 to 1,090

Re-reels—No. 1 1/2 ... 1,060 to 1,065

Re-reels—No. 2 ... 1,030 to 1,040

Re-reels—Extra ... 1,040 to 1,050

Re-reels—No. 1 ... 1,010 to 1,020

Re-reels—No. 1 1/2 ... 980 to 990

Re-reels—No. 2 ... 960 to 970

Re-reels—No. 2 1/2 ... 930 to 940

Skin-Tortured Babies AND TIRED MOTHERS Find Comfort in Cuticura

INSTANT RELIEF and refreshing sleep for Skin-tortured Babies and rest for Tired Mothers in warm baths with CUTICURA SOAP, and gentle anointings with CUTICURA OINTMENT, the great skin cure and purest of emollients, to be followed in severe cases by mild doses of CUTICURA RESOLVENT PILLS, to cool and cleanse the blood. This is the purest, sweetest, most speedy, permanent, and economical treatment for torturing, disfiguring, itching, burning, bleeding, scaly, crusted, and pimply humours, eczemas, rashes, irritations, and itchings, with loss of hair, of infants and children, yet compounded.

MILLIONS USE CUTICURA SOAP

Assisted by CUTICURA OINTMENT, for preserving, purifying, and beautifying the skin, for cleansing the scalp of crusts, scales, and dandruff, and the stopping of falling hair, for softening, whitening, and soothing red, rough, and sore hands, for baby rashes, itchings, and chafings, in the form of baths for annoying irritations and inflammations, or too free or offensive perspiration, in the form of washes for ulcerative weaknesses, and for many sanative, antiseptic purposes which readily suggest themselves to women, especially mothers, and for all the purposes of the toilet, bath, and nursery. No other medicated soap ever compounded is to be compared with it for preserving, purifying, and beautifying the skin, scalp, hair, and hands. No other foreign or domestic toilet soap, however expensive, is to be compared with it for all the purposes of the toilet, bath, and nursery. Thus it combines in ONE SOAP at ONE PRICE, the best skin and complexion soap, and the best toilet and best baby soap in the world.

CUTICURA RESOLVENT PILLS (Chocolate Coated) are a new, tasteless, odorless, economical substitute for the celebrated liquid CUTICURA RESOLVENT, as well as for all other blood purifiers and humors cures. Put up in screw-cap pocket vials, containing 60 doses.

CUTICURA RESOLVENTS are sold throughout the world. Australian Depot: R. Towns & Co., Sydney. British Depot: 27-28, Charterhouse St., London. French Depot: 5, Rue de la Paix, Paris. Forras: Davis & Co., Genoa, Sole Proprietors, Boston, U. S. A.

WASTE SILK.

There is only a small business doing, buying as yet being far from general. Holders ask more than sellers are inclined to pay and the future remains uncertain.

QUOTATIONS.

Noshi—Filatures, Best ... —
Noshi—Filatures, Good ... —
Noshi—Oshiu, Best ... —
Noshi—Oshiu, Good ... —
Noshi—Oshiu, Medium ... —
Noshi—Shinshu, Best ... 100 to 105
Noshi—Shinshu, Good ... 90 to 95
Noshi—Bushi, Best ... —
Noshi—Bushi, Good ... —
Noshi—Bushi, Medium ... —
Noshi—Joshi, Best ... —
Noshi—Joshi, Good ... —
Kibiso—Filatures, Extra ... —
Kibiso—Filatures, Best ... 105 to 110
Kibiso—Filatures, Second ... 95 to 100
Kibiso—Joshi, Good ... —
Kibiso—Bushi, Fair ... —

TEA.

Stocks and settlements are very light.

QUOTATIONS.

Choicest ... Not quotable.
Choice ... V31 to 41
Finest ... 32 to 36
Fine ... 27 to 31
Good Medium ... 24 to 26
Medium ... 19 to 23
Good Common ...
Common ...

EXCHANGE.

London silver 1/4 lower and China sterling quotations 1/4 to 1/2 lower, have caused local rates on China to rule rather firmer.

London—Bank T. T. ... 8/0 1/2
— Bills on demand ... 2/1 3/4
— 4 months' sight ... 2/0 1/2
— Private 4 months' sight ... 2/0 1/2
— 6 months' sight ... 2/0 1/2
Paris & Lyons—Bank sight ... 55 3/4
— Private 4 months' sight ... 160
— 6 months' sight ... 26 1/2
Hongkong—Bank sight ... per $100 95 3/4
— Private to days' sight ... 93 3/4
Shanghai—Bank sight ... 75 3/4
— Private to days' sight ... 77 3/4

India—Bank sight ... 151
— Private 30 days' sight ... 153
America—Bank sight ... 49 1/2
— Private 30 days' sight ... 49 1/2
— Private 4 months' sight ... 50 1/2
Germany—Bank sight ... 207 1/2
— Private 4 months' sight ... 211 1/2
New York (London) ... 27 1/2
* Nominal.

JAPANESE SHARES.

Yokohama, September 22, a.m.
Mean prices for Cash Delivery of Bonds and Shares, which may be held by Foreigners in their own names.

Div'd.
Paid up. 1 year. Q'tion.
Exchequer Bonds ... Yen. per cent. Yen.
1st Issue ... 100 5 91.40
Exchequer Bonds 2nd Issue ... 100 5 87.30
Exchequer Bonds 3rd Issue ... 100 5 86.30
Exchequer Bonds 4th Issue ... 100 6 95.00
Provincial Exchequer Bonds
5th Issue ... 40 6 44.40
Consolidated Bonds (Seiri) ... 100 5 85.50
War Bonds (Gunji) ... 100 5 85.50
5 % Imperial Bonds (Gobun) ... 100 5 81.20
Navy Bonds (Kaigun) ... 100 5 81.80
Tokyo City Public Loan Bonds ... 100 6 94.50
Y'hama Water-works Bonds ... 100 6 94.50
Y'hama City Public Loan Bonds ... 100 6 89.00
Osaka Harbour Bonds ... 100 6 90.00
Sanyo Railway Debentures and ... 100 6 86.00
Sanyo Railway ... 50 10 71.50
Kyushu Railway ... 50 8 61.50
Hokkaido Colliery Railway ... 50 12.5 89.10
Sobu Railway ... 50 8.50 62.50
Tokyo Electric Car (Densha) ... 50 11 74.00
Tokyo Street Railway (Shiga) ... 50 11.04 77.50
Tokyo Street Railway new ... 12.50 11.04 28.00
Tokyo Electric Railway (Denki) ... 50 3.5 56.00
Tokyo Electric Railway, new ... 50 3.5 34.50
Yokohama Electric Railway ... 40 — 56.00
Odawara Electric Car ... 50 3 22.50
Keihin Electric Railway ... 50 8 71.20
Keihin Electric Railway, new ... 12.50 8 31.70
Tokyo Marine Insurance ... 12.50 15 36.00
Yokohama Fire Insurance ... 12.50 10 17.70
Tokyo Fire Insurance ... 12.50 12 23.30
Kanagatuchi Spinning ... 50 16 86.00
Fuji Cotton Spinning ... 50 15 77.40
* Ex dividend.

Milkmaid Milkmaid Milkmaid

TRADE MARK.

BRAND
Milk

As a guarantee of
Quality, see the
MILKMAID
on every Tin.

LARGEST SALE
in the
WORLD.

TRADE MARK.

BRAND
Milk

TRADE MARK.

BRAND
Milk

As a guarantee of
Quality, see the
MILKMAID
on every Tin.

LARGEST SALE
in the
WORLD.

Lea and Perrins' Sauce.

By Royal Warrant
to
His Majesty the King.

THE ORIGINAL AND GENUINE WORCESTERSHIRE.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS

Cure Indigestion,
Bile, Sick Headache, Giddiness,
Palpitation,
and all Internal Disorders.

THESE PILLS
ARE PURELY VEGETABLE;
they contain no deleterious
matter, and may be taken by the most delicate.

Manufactured only at 78, New Oxford St. (late 53, Oxford St.)
London. Sold by all Chemists and Medicine Vendors.

Taking

BOVRIL

means fortifying yourself against disease.

VESSELS ON THE VERGE.

For KEELUNG, via Moji (from Kobe), 24th, at 18th every month, at Noon, the "Nagato Maru" — Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

For KEELUNG, via Moji (from Kobe), 10th and 24th every month, at Noon, the "Kosun Maru" — Osaka Shosen Kaisha.

For VICTORIA, Seattle, Tacoma, Wash., Sept. 23rd, the "JASON." — Butterfield & Swire.

For CANADA, United States, and Europe, via Vancouver, B.C., Sept. 23rd, the "Takara" — Canadian Pacific Railway Co.

For MARSEILLES, via ports, and Shanghai, Sept. 23rd, at 7 a.m., the "POLYNESIAN" — E. & F. S. Co.

For SAN FRANCISCO, via Honolulu, Sept. 24th, the "CORIC" — O. & O. S.S. Co.

For LONDON, Amsterdam and Antwerp, Sept. 24th, at Daylight, the "ALCINOUS" — Butterfield & Swire.

For MARSEILLES, London, and Antwerp, via Moji, Hongkong, Singapore, Penang, Cebu, and Port Said, Sept. 24th, at Noon, the "Nippon Yusen Kaisha."

For HONGKONG via Kobe, Moji, Nagasaki, and Shanghai, Sept. 24th, the "NOMANTIA" — E. & F. S. S. & Co.

For HONGKONG, via Kobe, (Inland Sea), Nagasaki, and Shanghai, about Sept. 25th, the "Cebu" — P. M. S.S. Co.

For HONGKONG, via Kobe, Moji, and Manila, Sept. 25th, the "SHAWMUT" — Doddwell & Co. Ltd.

For MARSEILLES, London, and Antwerp, via Shanghai, Hongkong, Straits, Colombo, and Port Said, Sept. 26th, at Daylight, the "Nippon Yusen Kaisha." — O. S.N. Co.

For AUSTRALIA, via ports (from Kobe), Sept. 26th, the "AUSTRALIAN" — Comes & Co.

For SEATTLE, Wash., via Victoria, B.C., Sept. 26th, at 2 p.m., the "KANAGAWA MARU" — Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

For HAVRE, Hamburg and Bremen via ports, Sept. 28th, at Daylight, the "SLAVONIA" — C. P. R. S.S. Co.

For CANADA, United States, and Europe, via Vancouver, B.C., Sept. 29th, at Noon, the "Takara" — C. P. R. S.S. Co.

For SHANGHAI, via Kobe, Moji, and Nagasaki, Sept. 29th, at 2 p.m., the "BENVOLUNT" — Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

For BREMEN and Hamburg, via ports, Sept. 29th, 9 a.m., the "BAYERN" — H. Ahrens & Co. Ltd.

For VICTORIA, B.C., and Tacoma, Wash., Sept. 30th, the "VIRA" — Doddwell & Co. Ltd.

For AUSTRALIA and New Zealand Oct. 1st, the "CHINGTU" — Butterfield & Swire.

For TRIESTE, via Kobe, Hongkong, Singapore, Penang, Colombo, Bombay, Karachi, Aden, Port Said, and Fiume, about October 4th, the "PERSIA" — Heller Bros.

For SYDNEY, via Hongkong and New Guinea, Oct. 4th, the "PRINZ WALDEMAR" — H. Ahrens & Nachf.

For BONIN ISLANDS via ports, Oct. 5th, the "HIMARU" — Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

For SEATTLE, Wash., Oct. 6th, the "MINORCA" — Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

For GENOA, Marseilles and Liverpool, Sept. 6th, the "AGAMEMNON" — Butterfield & Swire.

(毎土曜日一便)

編輯人 エフ・アイン

發行兼印刷人 ユー・エフ・アイン

發行所 横濱市山下町五十五番

電話 二五五番

The Japan Weekly Mail.

得土曜日 A REVIEW OF JAPANESE COMMERCE, POLITICS, LITERATURE, AND ART. 一回刊行

No. 13.]

REGISTERED AT THE G.P.O.
AS A NEWSPAPER.

YOKOHAMA, SEPT. 30TH, 1905.

明治廿五年三月廿日

[VOL. XLIV.]

CONTENTS.

Summary of News	325
Editorial: Panics and the Peace	326
Agencies	327
Justicial Inquiry	327
Professor Tomita and His Colleagues	328
The Supper of the House of Lords	328
Leaves in Korea	329
Exit of the Anglo-Japanese Alliance	329
The Japanese Press on the Alliance	330
The American Silk Trade	330
Shipping Accidents	330
Landmark Notes	330
Intelligence	331
The Late Dr. Barnardo	331
The Naval Armistice	332
A Welcome of Peace	332
The Municipality and the Police	332
Asia in Japan	332
Ir. Stand on the Anglo-Japanese Alliance	332
The Hague Court	332
Very Convincing Argument	332
American Journals and Japan	332
The Encyclopedia Britannica	332
Japan	332
China	332
Performance in Memoriam of Ichikawa Danjuro	332
Notes on Current Events	332
Sea-Shell	332
Shipping	332
Reading Articles	332
The Afonso	332
The Japanese and the Romans	332
Mr. Langford and Baron Suyematsu	332
The New Anglo-Japanese Alliance	332
Notes of the "Stanley Dolls"	332
Chokusan Chess Club	332
The Law Courts	332
Notes of the Week	332
American Topics	332
Correspondence	332
The Poetry of Secretary John Hay	332
America and Japan	332
"Kinjo Maru" Disaster Fund	332
Japan	332
The Imperial Korean School of Music	332
"Kinjo Maru" Disaster Fund	332
Programs	332
Fast Shipping	332
Fast Commercial	332

people of Nagasaki who suffered severely from the storms of July.

PRINCE and PRINCESS ARISUGAWA left Tokyo for Hayama on Sept. 25th. They will stay there for some days.

THE Jiji says that the whole army in South Saghalien will be withdrawn to Aomori before the end of November.

SIR MICHAEL HICKS-Beach and party left Yokohama on the morning of Sept. 24th, by the P. & O. mail steamer Nubia for Singapore.

At 2.15 o'clock on Sunday morning a slight shock of earthquake was felt in Yokohama, the duration being about three minutes.

FIRE broke out on the morning of Sept. 26th in the village of Ikushunbetsu, near Sapporo, Hokkaido, destroying fifty-three houses.

REAR-ADMIRALS MIURA, KINOTSUKI and ARAI were promoted on Sept. 23rd to the rank of Vice-Admiral, and Captain Sakai to Rear-Admiral.

The members of the Chambers of Commerce throughout the Empire will hold a meeting on Oct. 1st in Tokyo in order to discuss post bellum financial affairs.

A Peking telegram reports that the Viceroy of Chihli intends to impose a poll-tax with a view to raising about twenty million yen. He further intends to remit various petty taxes.

SURGEON-CAPTAIN NAKAHARA died suddenly on Sept. 23rd at Fukushima, near Hiroshima, where he arrived by train on the way to Hiroaki. The cause of death is reported to have been apoplexy.

Two passenger trains collided at 11.56 a.m. on Sept. 23rd at a point between Kyoto and Sakurai, with the result that the locomotives of both trains sustained damage and several persons were injured.

A NAGASAKI telegram dated Sept. 22nd says that a foreign firm there has been authorized by the Russian Government to act as agents for the Russo-Chinese Bank and for the ships of the Volunteer fleet.

It is reported by a Shanghai telegram that the Russian warships and transports Askold, Manjour, etc., will undergo repairs there. A contract between Russian agents and a shipbuilding yard has been concluded.

WAKAMATSU in Kyushu has been ordered from October 1st for the import of the following goods:—Fresh eggs, rice, unhulled rice, barley, wheat, oat, corn, all kinds of beans, iron ore, pig iron and manure.

At 9.59 p.m. on Sept. 21st, a severe shock of earthquake was felt in Yokohama. According to the Yokohama Observatory, the duration was for 2 minutes and 22 seconds, and the direction W.S.W. and E.N.E.

LIEUTENANT Y. YAMAMOTO (retired), residing in Asakusa, Tokyo, on Sept. 22nd, inflicted severe injuries with a sword on a coolie who was working near the former's house. The man is supposed by the police to be insane.

ON Sept. 26th, some workmen employed at the weaving factories in Yamura, Yamanashi prefecture, attacked the Yamura Tax Office and destroyed furniture and official documents. Five persons sustained injuries. The cause is not reported.

A TAIPEH telegram says that on the night of September 20th, heavy rains were experienced in Kelung, Formosa, causing severe damage. The damage to the Botan gold mine, owned by the Kimura-gumi, is estimated at nine hundred thousand yen.

STRANGE as it may seem, writes a Rome correspondent, the lengthy trip which Queen Margherita of Italy is about to take to Japan is finding opposition in her household, the ladies in waiting whom she has chosen to accompany her not being pleased at the prospect.

THE Hocht says that three Russian warships, the Aurora, Oleg and Jemiching, which were disarmed at Manila after the battle of the Japan Sea, are expected to arrive in the winter at Nagasaki. After repairs, they will probably be included in the Russian squadron on the Asiatic Station.

LIEUT.-COLONEL OI, an attaché of the Japanese Legation in Berlin, will be appointed commissioner for taking delivery of Japanese prisoners from Russia. The Jiji believes that an officer of the French Legation in Tokyo will be entrusted by the Russian Government with the same duties.

COUNT TODA, an adviser of the Imperial Court, and Vice-Grand Master of the Board of Ceremonies, was appointed on Sept. 21st Grand Master of the Board, succeeding the late Baron Sannomiya. On the same day, Mr. Y. Ito, one of the Masters of Ceremony, was promoted Vice-Grand Master.

THE Asahi says that the government has decided to establish a garrison in South Saghalien consisting of a battalion and the soldiers will be selected from among the present army in the island. The duty, however, will be transferred in future, to the Seventh Division in Kamikawa, Hokkaido.

VICE-ADMIRAL SHIBAYAMA, Commander-in-Chief of the Port Arthur Naval Station, arrived in Tokyo on the morning of Sept. 23rd. He proceeded at once to the Palace, after which he paid a visit to the Ministers for the Army and Navy and Marquis Yamagata, Chief of the Staff, and Viscount Ito, Chief of the Naval Staff.

THE American steamer Barracuda (4,850 tons), which was captured by the Japanese on Sept. 21st in the neighbourhood of South Saghalien will shortly be brought to Yokosuka and handed over to the Yokosuka Prize Court for examination. It is said that the vessel was on her way to Vladivostok with contraband.

THE Jiji says that the transportation of soldiers from the front will commence at the end of October or the beginning of November. They will be brought to Ujina and Ninoshima where they will be disinfected, after which the men will be removed to the divisions of the army concerned. Alterations will be made in the time-tables of various railways in consequence.

CAPTAIN A. SHIBUYA (43) of the Army, on the retired list, was arrested on Sept. 23rd in the office of the Asahi Shimbun, Tokyo, while asking one of the writers of the journal to publish a sensational statement with regard to the peace treaty. Subsequently he was removed to the military office. It is said that previous to this, the officer had applied at the office of the Jiji for the same purpose, and been refused there.

SEVEN of the captured merchant steamers have been renamed and assigned to Sasebo and other naval stations, probably for transport service, as follows:—

	Renamed.	Assigned to.
Wilhelmina	Kagoshima	Sasebo.
M. S. D. Har	Ryohki	do.
Siam	Kinsho	Yokosuka.
Silvana	Goto	Sasebo.
Burma	Esan	Maidzuu.
Wyfeli	Shiohaki	Sasebo.
Apollo	Kanishiri	do.

"FAIS CE QUE VOUS ADVIENNEZ QUE VOUS FAIREZ"

NOTICE TO CORRESPONDENTS.

No notice will be taken of anonymous correspondence. That is intended for insertion in the "JAPAN WEEKLY MAIL" must be authenticated by the name and address of the writer, not for publication, but as a guarantee of good faith. It is particularly requested that all letters on business addressed to the MANAGER and Clerks be made payable to same; and that literary contributions be addressed to the EDITOR.

YOKOHAMA: SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 30TH, 1905.

BIRTHS.

On the morning of Sept. 23rd, 1905, at Dr. Whitney's Hospital, Akasaka, Tokyo, to the wife of Rev. R. C. ARMSTRONG, of Hamamatsu, a daughter.

On the 25th inst., at Honmoku, No. 2,917, the wife of L. SUZUKI, Esq., of a Son.

MARRIAGE.

On the 23rd of September at the American Consulate, Kobe, and afterwards at Kyoto by the Rev. Otis Cary, D.D., assisted by the Rev. H. Pittee, D.D., CORA FRANCES KEITH and Rev. CHARLES McLEAN WARREN, both of the Japan Mission of the American Board.

SUMMARY OF NEWS.

THE Japanese now in Korea number fifty-five thousand.

RUSSIAN Captain, ex-Commander of the Peresvet, died on Sept. 21st at Matsuyama.

THE Jiji says that the steamers chartered by the navy will be released at the end of September.

COLONEL S. MIHARA and YASUMURA have been promoted to the rank of Major-General.

THE Hokkai and Sapporo Electric Light companies on Sept. 25th decided to amalgamate the business.

THE Emperor and Empress distributed twenty-five hundred yen on Sept. 25th among poor

POLITICAL PARTIES AND THE PEACE.

Saturday, September 23.

A deputation of the non-parliamentary members of the Seiyu-kai waited on Marquis Saionji at Oiso on the 21st instant in order if possible to ascertain his views with regard to the attitude of the Party towards the great question of the day. But Marquis Saionji refused to be explicit. He declined to constitute himself the mouth-piece of the Party before its members had been fully consulted, or to make any explicit pronouncement further than to say that the matter would be decided at a pending general meeting.

Some thirty parliamentary members of the Party assembled in a committee room of the House of Representatives on the 21st and adopted a resolution in the sense that no time should be lost in holding a general meeting and definitely declaring the policy of the Party. There could be no doubt about the view entertained by these 30 members. They agreed, in effect, that the peace treaty failed to achieve the purpose of the war or to consolidate the results of Japan's victories, and that there should be a clear understanding whether such a compact was necessitated by the circumstances or whether it must be frankly regarded as a failure due to the Cabinet's incompetence. A committee of five was nominated to wait on Marquis Saionji and urge the importance of speedy action.

The Chuo Shimbun has a thoroughly statesmanlike article on all these doings. It urges, in effect, that the proper attitude for a great political party at this moment is one of self-contained observation. Is it the duty of a political party merely to follow the clamouring multitude in attacking a Ministry? Surely not. Such a rule of conduct would mean that stability of Cabinets was out of the question. There is no pretence that any political party is yet in a position to pass judgment on the Ministry's doings, still less is there any pretence that a political party, be it the Seiyu-kai or the Progressists, has fully thought out and prepared a post-bellum programme. To blindly rush to the assault of the ministerial citadel under such circumstances resembles the act of an irresponsible mob without any thought for the future, rather than the act of men claiming fitness to be entrusted with the direction of the Empire's affairs.

But is there—we ask as pure outsiders—is there in the record of Japanese political parties any evidence of the self-restraint and sense of discipline which are absolutely essential for the part they claim competence to act?

There have been meetings of malcontents in Nagoya and Nagasaki, as well as in other provincial centres. All passed off quietly, but all adopted resolutions strongly condemning the peace treaty.

Monday, September 25.

The deputation of seven Seiyu-kai members of the Lower House, who were chosen to wait upon Marquis Saionji and ascertain his views as to the situation as well as with regard to holding a general meeting of the Party, received from the Marquis an answer which, according to newspaper reports, was not very conclusive. The gist of it may be very briefly stated, however. The Seiyu-kai leader pointed out that any step taken by the Diet must be determined by the Diet itself—he evidently had in mind the events of a former crisis—that he desired to have the date for convening a special meeting of the Party left to his discretion; and that he considered the time had not yet come for making any hard and fast declaration of policy. We gather that his visitors made some reference to his recent speech as suggesting constructively that he would be opposed to any parliamentary impeachment of the Ministry, for he denied that it bore any such interpretation.

Subsequently some 40 Parliamentary members of the Party met at the House of Representatives, and having received from Mr. Sugita Teiichi a statement of the interview with Marquis Saionji, decided, on the motion of Mr. Soyano Hanyu—a politician hitherto little heard of—that representatives of the various local branches of the Party should be invited to assemble in Tokyo by the 5th of October, in order to collect the general view of the situation.

This resolution is evidently somewhat rebellious. Marquis Saionji, the Party's leader, had asked that the date for taking the Party's opinion en masse should be left to him, but immediately on receiving the report of their leader's desire these forty members decided to take the matter into their own hands. That is what their resolution amounts to, for when the local representatives come together after the 5th of next month, their collated opinions will irrevocably indicate the Party's policy. Marquis Saionji's plain object is to defer any public formulation of the Party's views as long as possible, so that the present passion of the nation may have time to cool. There can be no doubt that he would never think of summoning representatives of the Party to the capital at such an early date as the 5th of next month, namely, on the very eve of the arrival of the Peace Plenipotentiaries and the consequent ratification of the Treaty. But that is precisely the time chosen by these forty members on the motion of Mr. Soyano. It looks very like a revolt from Marquis Saionji's cool-headed and far-seeing policy.

On the same day (23rd) the non-parliamentary members of the Party now in Tokyo held a conference and resolved that a general meeting of fellow-thinkers should be summoned to come together soon in the capital.

The Fiji Shimpō publishes a statement that 19 prefectures have addressed to the headquarters of the Party expressions of opinion concerning the Treaty. One (Yamagata prefecture) frankly advocates withholding ratification. Eight urge that the Ministry be required to resign; six are for resignation as well as non-ratification. Three merely express general disapproval and one alone is non-committal. It is evident that the rivets of opposition are being driven more and more deeply into the Seiyu-kai.

A deputation from members of the Lower House visited the Premier on the 23rd. Count Katsura happened to be absent at the luncheon given to Sir Michael Hicks-Beach in the Palace, but the deputation awaited his return. They asked about the Anglo-Japanese alliance and about the special session of the Diet. It will be remembered that at the meeting by which these deputies were delegated, Mr. Oishi Masami had made a speech insisting that a measure of such importance as the Alliance should be published without a moment's delay and that in such a situation as the present a special session of the Diet should be summoned at once. Count Katsura, questioned in this sense, said that the alliance would be published as soon as possible, and that as it contained nothing calling for the Diet's consideration, it might be given out either before or during the latter's session. Concerning the special session, the Premier said that it was the Government's intention to summon it immediately after the return of Baron Komura. Should the latter event greatly delayed, the Government might decide to proceed independently of but the present programme was to await the arrival of the Plenipotentiaries. Latest news indicated that Baron Komura's journey would not be long delayed.

Asked whether the operation of the law siege could not be wholly or partially abolished at once, the Premier said that the Government desired to abolish it at the earliest possible date, but the reports of Eiji Sotoku and those received from other sources showed that the time had not yet come.

If, as now anticipated, Baron Komura leaves Seattle on the 5th of October, ought to arrive in Tokyo about the 20th of that month, and assuming that the date for convening a special session of the Diet issued immediately, the session would begin at soonest on the 30th of November inasmuch as a minimum period of 40 days must separate the issue of the decree and the date of convention. There can be some provision of law enabling the period of 40 days to be shortened, but we do not know of any such. The ordinary session of the Diet, however, would commence at the end of November, so that if this calculation be correct, there would be no object whatever in summoning a special session, unless it be the Government's purpose to postpone the opening of the ordinary session until next year. Such a purpose is very conceivable, as the preparation of the Budget for 1905-6 will be a very serious business. Perhaps the holding of a special session is, after all, the wisest plan, but there would be no idea of presently attaching Budget to it, nor could the ordinary session be opened for a considerable interval. The Government would thus obtain leisure to draft its financial measures for next year. There is, of course, the very likely contingency of a severe collision between the Ministry and the Lower House in a special session, but that would lead to dissolution, which would mean an interval of three months before a convention of the new House, and would also mean, in all probability, that a Ministry would be obliged to work with an existing Budget; in other words, the new war taxes now imposed would have to be continuously paid.

Wednesday, September 27.

The petition to the Emperor introduced at the meeting of the Rengo Doshu-kai in Ueno Park on the 20th instant has been sent to the Household Department by Mr. Ogawa, Nogoi and Hosono. Its contents may easily be conjectured from the tone of the various resolutions adopted and the speeches delivered by Mr. Kono. The distinguished followers since they distinguished themselves on the night of the 5th instant. The document declares that the peace just concluded forfeited the fruits of the great victories won by the country's arms; defeats the object of His Majesty had declared to have induced the war; and is altogether a stupendous diplomatic blunder as well as a personal disappointment to the nation. No end to the dilemma offers except to withhold ratification of the treaty and to deprive of all a cabinet which has signally sacrificed the interests of the Empire.

The petitioners laboured under a difficulty in drawing up this document, namely, the hey could not with any pretence of sincerity ignore the fact that His Majesty had himself consented to endorse the terms of peace which they thus unequivocally denounced. They escaped from that perplexity by pretending that the Emperor had been influenced solely by sentiments of mercy and humanity, and by a sense of deference for the President of the United States, but they assured His Majesty that the nation was in no sense wearied by the war, and that the people would gladly continue to offer their lives and their treasure for continuing the combat rather than conclude a peace so incomplete and so unworthy of the country's achievements.

Perhaps it may be well to state again, in view of the comments telegraphically attributed to a section of the English press, that the signatories of this petition do not by any means represent the Japanese nation. They represent merely a small section of it; a section whose feelings have been excited by the speeches and writings of the men fomenting this agitation. In the whole number of the leaders there is not one publicist of note, and any foreign observer who concludes that the promoters of the commotion and their followers may be regarded as spokesmen of the Japanese nation, would be labouring under a mistake. We do not wish to minimize the dissatisfaction caused by the treaty: its dimensions are certainly very considerable. Still less do we desire to throw any doubt on the patriotism and sincerity of Mr. Kono and his friends. But there can be no question that in advocating the refusal of ratification they take a line which is not endorsed by the nation at large.

The non-parliamentary members of the Progressists have also presented a petition couched in very similar terms and equally advocating refusal of ratification. They take the line that His Majesty has been deceived by bad ministers and that the peace terms do not reflect the wish of the people, but are on the contrary regarded by them as most regrettable and humiliating.

These petitions do not indicate any new movement or any renewal of the agitation. They are the outcome of the previous commotion.

Something new is the action of the non-parliamentary members of the Teikoku-to Imperialists. This Party was expected to be solidly in favour of the Government, and possibly that may be true of the members having seats in the Diet. But the 30 non-parliamentary representatives above alluded to have adopted a resolution which does not shrink from calling the peace "disgraceful" and which declares that not only should the Cabinet resign but also the elder statesmen should share the responsibility.

The Fiji Shimpō continues to publish leading articles which call upon the Ministry to resign. Our contemporary's conviction is evidently very strong. We wonder whether it advocates Ministerial surrender of office without gathering up the threads of the tangled skeins which the nation has now to unravel. Does the Fiji Shimpō seriously mean, for example, that the Cabinet should step down from its place of responsibility actually before the Plenipotentiaries have returned from America and before the accounts of the war have been compiled? If such be not our contemporary's strange contention, then to what end publish day after day these impatient articles warrantable only on the supposition that every day of the Ministry's continuance in power is so much loss to the country?

Thursday, September 28.

The anti-peace section in Aichi prefecture has addressed to the Throne a petition in the now stereotyped phraseology. The petitioners ask for the withholding of ratification and the resignation of the Cabinet. Resolutions in a similar sense have been passed by meetings in small towns of Chiba, Ibaraki, Shizuoka and other prefectures. In the main centres of political ferment, however, things seem to have quieted down. It must be now almost universally recognised that to withhold ratification is quite out of the question.

SAGHALIEN.

It is stated that Vladimirofka will be the seat of civil government in the Japanese portion of Saghalien. Korsakoff, which the Russians used for the purposes of administration in the southern half of the island, is not conveniently situated, and was, moreover, destroyed by fire at the time of the invasion, whereas Vladimirofka escaped any such catastrophe.

There are various estimates of the value of the Saghalien fisheries. The Department of Agriculture and Commerce is represented as saying that the yearly take will amount to 50 million yen, but the Amur Society puts the figure at 15 millions, and the chief of the Hokkaido Government estimates it at 5 millions. There are no data for calculating the value of the coastwise fishing privileges promised by Russia in Primorsk and as far as Behring Sea, but much will depend on the details of the convention under which the fishing is carried on.

Virtually all the Russians in south Saghalien are said to have been transported to De Castries Bay. They numbered some 1500, and were mainly convict settlers.

Mr. Kumagai, chief of the civil administration of Saghalien, is quoted as saying that nothing will be done this year on the island except to make equitable arrangements with regard to the conduct of the fishing industry. Next spring will see the inauguration of vigorous measures. The seat of civil administration has been removed to Korsakoff where it will remain during the winter. There will be a service by steamer between Soya and Noto (Cape Kondo) at the western extremity of Korsakoff Bay, and from the latter place to the town of Korsakoff a road is now being hastily constructed. Arrangements will soon be effected for a parcels post, and as soon as the troops are withdrawn the telegraphic service will be open to the general public. Steps will be taken to encourage agricultural settlers. People labour under the impression that the conditions of soil and climate in Saghalien differ radically from those in Japan, but that is a misconception which the Government will endeavour to dispel by establishing stations for conducting experiments of various kinds—in farming, in cattle-raising, and in general products.

The Kokumin Shimbun says that the total number of prisoners made in Saghalien was 7,781, namely:—

Officers	107
Rank and File	6,014
Non-combatants	1,660

All these have been transported to Japan, where the combatants are held and the non-combatants have been released.

General Haraguchi, who commanded the Saghalien expeditionary force, returned to Awamori on the 25th instant and is said to have received an enthusiastic reception. He certainly deserved such a mark of recognition, for nothing could have been better than the conduct of this whole affair from first to last. There was not one miscarriage. Everything seemed to have been thought out with the utmost care and prescience.

About a hundred members of the Seiyukai, parliamentary and otherwise, met in Tokyo on the 25th instant, and listened to a lecture from Mr. Haseba Junko who had just returned from Saghalien. The lecturer very severely condemned the arrangement for dividing Saghalien at the 50th parallel of latitude. He declared that such a method of partition was wholly impractical and took no account of geographical conditions. In the first place no line of demarcation could be clearly laid down, and in the second the topographical features of the country clearly indicated that the division should have been near the head waters of the Poronai River, for by that method a perfectly distinct delimitation could have been effected, the strategical position would have been very different for Japan, and she would have obtained possession of the coal mines of Dui, Mugati and the other deposits in the neighbourhood of Rinkoff, by holding which she would have materially changed the value of Vladivostok to Russia as a naval port. It did not appear, according to Mr. Haseba, that counsel had been taken of the General Commanding in Saghalien or of any other competent authority before selecting this extraordinary mode of division. The Plenipotentiaries in Portsmouth had no geographical knowledge and the statesmen in Tokyo did not attempt to obtain any. He characterized the whole business as a great and palpable diplomatic blunder for which the Ministry must be held accountable, and he concluded his address by calling for the resignation of the Cabinet in order that union might be restored between the Government and the people, since the completest harmony was essential for successfully managing affairs in the sequel of the war.

A JUDICIAL INQUIRY.

A number of judges, public procurators and policemen carried out on the 22nd instant a search of 26 houses in Tokyo. Among the places visited were the offices of the Niroku and the private residences of its proprietor and the chief members of its staff. Two of the latter were arrested but subsequently released. The whole affair is wrapped in some mystery, but the conjecture is that this search had some connexion with the riots on the 5th instant. One of the theories which have been circulated is that the Niroku took advantage of its old feud with the police to foment the agitation. But the truth is that there are many and various theories.

No less than thirty-three persons have been arrested in Tokyo in the sequel of the visitations made by the police on the 22nd and 23rd instant. Members of the Niroku Shimbun's staff are among those apprehended. The charge is understood to be connected with instigating the recent riot, and the Chuo Shimbun suggests, in somewhat mysterious language, that persons whom the public could not have suspected, will be found to have been implicated.

At 5 p.m., on Sept. 26th, the leading members of both Houses of the Diet held a social conference in the Peers' Club.

PROFESSOR TOMIZU AND HIS COLLEAGUES.

Professor Tomizu, who has lost his chair in the University owing to the vehemence of his political opinions, and to his manner of expressing them, is now a regular contributor to the Hochi Shimbun. We do not gather that he has become an openly acknowledged member of the paper's staff, but only that he will hereafter be one of the permanent writers, continuing to discharge his former duties in connexion with private educational institutions. His opening article in the Hochi deals with the question of ratification. The Professor devotes himself to proving that if the peace treaty be deemed injurious to the national interests there is no reason, so far as international law is concerned, why ratification should be withheld. Certainly there is no reason if the international law now relied on be that regarded as authoritative in pre-telegraph days. But since it is an open secret that the Japanese Plenipotentiaries at Portsmouth received their instructions from Tokyo, and that those instructions were drafted with the approval of the Emperor, the latter's refusal now to ratify the treaty would be a procedure irreconcilable with any theory of good faith.

Six of the original band of Seven University Professors, including Professor Tomizu, have addressed a memorial to the Throne praying that ratification be withheld. The language they employ to denounce the treaty is most unequivocal and unrestrained. They declare, among other things, that it does not accomplish even one of the objects of the war; that it forfeits an occasion absolutely unique; that it subjects the nation to disgrace which can never be wiped out; and that its evil effects upon the spirit of the people and upon their progress will be incomparably more injurious than any suffering entailed in continuing the war. As to the contention that to withhold ratification would be an act of bad faith, the six signatories of the memorial hint plainly that His Majesty's lucid judgment is obscured by evil advisers, and asks of what use it would be to preserve the ceremony of ratification at all if its refusal were never possible. The memorial, we need scarcely say, is powerfully and cleverly worded: that was inevitable in view of the ability of its compilers.

As to this question of ratification, attention must be again called to the fact that not one responsible politician denies the impossibility of withholding it. Even the most extreme among the Progressist leaders, men like Mr. Oishi himself, admit that ratification is inevitable.

Twenty Professors of the University and many teachers have memorialized the Minister of State for Education with reference to Professor Tomizu, who was deprived of his chair in consequence of his vehement espousal, in the first place, of a warlike policy and, in the second, of the agitation against the Portsmouth Treaty. The memorialists hold that the main point to be considered in such a context is the competence of a Professor to discharge the functions of his chair as well as his general conduct. The politics he may hold or proclaim are a thing entirely apart. It is denied that the memorial is inspired by any desire to plead the cause of Professor Tomizu as an individual. What the memorialists fight for is the principle that in dealing with Professors of the Imperial University the first thing to be considered is scholastic ability, provided always that it be associated with a blameless life. In the matter of scholastic ability there can be no question. Professor Tomizu is eminently the best authority on Roman Law that Japan possesses, and now that he has been removed, there is no one to take his place, the result being that the course in Roman Law is suspended and the examinations in that subject can not be held. The Professor was removed under a clause of the Bunkwan Bungen-ri (Regulations relating to the positions of civil officials) which provides that a man may be deprived of his post "at the convenience of the office." It is held by the memorialists that the term "office" here mentioned signifies, and can only signify, the office where the individual is serving. The provision can not be interpreted as referring to some other office, namely, the administrative office of the Educational Department. What is plainly meant is that so long as a man is suited to discharge the duties devolving on him, he should be secure against arbitrary removal. In fact the memorialists claim, in effect, that the Minister of Education (Mr. Kubota) has entirely mistaken the purpose of the Bunkwan Bungen-ri, which purpose is to secure civil officials against arbitrary dismissal by the Administration, not to confer on the latter power to make such dismissals. In the case of Professor Tomizu—concerning whose personal character the Minister of Education is reminded that he himself has ample evidence about his familiar friend—the words "convenience of office" are diametrically opposed to the course that has been actually adopted, for nothing could be more inconvenient than the effects of that course on the office concerned. Thus the memorialists are able to construct a very strong case which derives additional force from the names of the memorialists themselves—men like Professors Hozumi, Ume, Terao, Kanai, Hijikata, Okano, Okada and so forth, all educationists and scientists of the best type the nation possesses. The point, as we apprehend, is that although the law forbids all meddling in politics by teachers of public schools, no such veto extends to professors or instructors in the Imperial University, and that to deprive these of their chairs because their estimate of the country's best interests happens to differ from the estimate of the Cabinet in power, is a distinct abuse of constitutional freedom of speech. This is a most interesting phase of Japan's career, and its outcome will be closely observed.

THE SCOPE OF THE HOUSE TAX AWARD.

When the fiscal interpretation of the revised treaties came upon the tapis the question, as was generally recognised, turned upon the intention of the framers of the treaty, and since that intention could not be clearly ascertained or verified, an opening presented itself for arbitration. But is there, or can there be, the smallest doubt as to the nature of the question that the arbitrators were asked to decide? Was it not a question relating to the house tax pure and simple, the house tax and nothing else? Everybody knows that. Everybody remembers it vividly. Yet now an attempt is made to prove that the arbitrators decided a very much larger issue than that submitted to them: that they decided the question of all municipal taxes as well. Can any pretence of good faith be made in support of such a contention? The house tax and the house tax alone was in dispute.

How can it be honestly affirmed that the arbitration tribunal's decision was intended to cover municipal taxes also when it was not asked to decide anything about municipal taxes? If the Japanese essayed such a tricky interpretation of any document they can easily conceive the kind of adjournment that would be piled on their heads. The case is bad enough as it is. It is bad enough that a number of foreigners should be living on Japanese territory and carrying on business there under a special system which exempts them from fiscal burdens borne by their Japanese fellow-residents. Nothing could be more short-sighted or more unpolitic than such an arrangement. It is permeated with a spirit of apres moi le deluge. But to accentuate the case by attempting to disingenuously extend the meaning of an arbitration award is more policy than ever, to say nothing of morality. It can not be pretended for one moment that the Japanese Government agreed to appeal to arbitration on any question save that of the house tax, and if there be ambiguity in the phraseology of the arbitral tribunal's finding, a key must be sought in the scope of the question originally submitted. No principle of justice permits that when an arbitrator has been asked to decide a right of way and a right of way only, some matter of agricultural privilege may also be read into his award because the latter happens to be ambiguously worded.

RAILWAYS IN KOREA.

The prospects of the Seoul-Fusan Railway are improving. At the recent general meeting of the Company Professor F. C. Chief Engineer, explained that the earnings of the line had risen to an average of 4.5 yen per mile daily at the least. In 1904 the figure had been 10 yen and it is now about 9 yen, the average over the whole half year being 9.148 yen. The accounts presented were these:—

SEOUL-FUSAN RAILWAY.
Gross Receipts	4,949,400
Working Expenses	4,400,000
Net Profit	549,400
Government guarantee fund	3,600,000
Total	4,149,400
To Legal Reserve	400,000
To Dividend (6 per cent. per annum)	350,000
N. B.—The number of shares being 500,000 represents 65 yen per share.

In the case of the Seoul-Chemulpo Railway the results were not so favorable. The daily earnings per mile fell to 1.5 yen, being a drop of 5.86 yen as compared with the corresponding period of 1904. This is attributable to the fact that in 1904 the line had conveyed large quantities of material for the Seoul-Fusan and Seoul-Wiju railways as well as much baggage and stores for the army, whereas these elements of traffic had fallen off over 17,000 tons in 1905. No dividend was paid on this line, the profits being largely absorbed in paying the debt to the Government. The accounts stand thus:—

Net Profit	1,000,000
To Legal Reserve	400,000
To Payment to Government	400,000
To Interest on debt	200,000
To Special Reserve	100,000
To Capital for auxiliary work	100,000
To Carried forward	1,000,000

Speaking of construction work Professor Furuichi said that it have been much interrupted by rain, but the tunnelling had progressed well and the replacing of the temporary bridges by permanent structures had been nearly completed.

TEXT OF THE ANGLO-JAPANESE ALLIANCE.

PREAMBLE.

The Governments of Japan and Great Britain, being desirous of replacing the Agreement concluded between them on the 30th January, 1902, by fresh stipulations, have agreed upon the following Articles, which have for their object:—

(a) The consolidation and maintenance of the general peace in the regions of Eastern Asia and of India;

(b) The preservation of the common interests of all Powers in China by insuring the independence and integrity of the Chinese Empire and the principle of equal opportunities for the commerce and industry of all nations in China;

(c) The maintenance of the territorial rights of the High Contracting Parties in the regions of Eastern Asia and of India, and the defence of their special interests in the said regions:—

Art. I.—It is agreed that whenever, in the opinion of either Japan or Great Britain, any of the rights and interests referred to in the preamble of this Agreement are in jeopardy, the two Governments will communicate with one another fully and frankly, and will consider in common the measures which should be taken to safeguard those menaced rights or interests.

Art. II.—If by reason of unprovoked attack or aggressive action, wherever arising, on the part of any other Power or Powers, either Contracting Party should be involved in war in defence of its territorial rights or special interests mentioned in the preamble of this Agreement, the other Contracting Party will at once come to the assistance of its ally, and will conduct the war in common, and make peace in mutual agreement with it.

Art. III.—Japan possessing paramount political, military, and economic interests in Korea, Great Britain recognizes the right of Japan to take such measures of guidance, control, and protection in Korea as she may deem proper and necessary to safeguard and advance those interests, provided always that such measures are not contrary to the principle of equal opportunities for the commerce and industry of all nations.

Art. IV.—Great Britain having special interest in all that concerns the security of the Indian frontier, Japan recognizes her right to take such measures in the proximity of that frontier as she may find necessary for safeguarding her Indian possessions.

Art. V.—The High Contracting Parties agree that neither of them will, without consulting the other, enter into separate arrangements with another Power to the prejudice of the objects described in the preamble of this Agreement.

Art. VI.—As regards the present war between Japan and Russia, Great Britain will continue to maintain strict neutrality unless some other Power or Powers should join in hostilities against Japan, in which case Great Britain will come to the assistance of Japan, and will conduct the war in common, and make peace in mutual agreement with Japan.

Art. VII.—The conditions under which armed assistance shall be afforded by either Power to the other in the circumstances mentioned in the present Agreement, and the means by which such assistance is to be made available, will be arranged by the Naval and Military authorities of the Contracting Parties, who will from time to time consult one another fully and freely upon all questions of mutual interest.

Art. VIII.—The present Agreement shall, subject to the provisions of Article VI., come into effect immediately after the date of its signature, and remain in force for ten years from that date.

In case neither of the High Contracting Parties should have notified twelve months before the expiration of the said ten years the intention of terminating it, it shall remain binding until the expiration of one year from the day on which either of the High Contracting Parties shall have denounced it. But if, when the date fixed for its expiration arrives, either ally is actually engaged in war, the alliance shall, ipso facto, continue until peace is concluded.

In faith whereof the Undersigned, duly authorized by their respective Governments, have signed this Agreement and have affixed thereto their Seals.

Done in duplicate at London, the 12th day of August, 1905.

(Seal) Signed: TADASU HAYASHI.

Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of His Majesty the Emperor of Japan at the Court of St. James.

(Seal) Signed: LANSLOWNE.

His Britannic Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs.

THE JAPANESE PRESS ON THE ALLIANCE.

The Fiji Shimpō thinks that, over and above the sentiment evinced by the language of the treaty, the high contracting parties must have been swayed by a powerful impulse towards alliance or they could not have arranged the terms so readily and so rapidly.

Four points are specially signalized by the Japanese journals. The first is that the limits of the old alliance have been extended by the new so as to embrace the whole of East Asia and India; the second, that the spirit of the alliance is radically changed, since it is converted into a distinctly offensive compact binding each Power to take part in any war legitimately urged by the other in assertion of certain clearly defined interests and objects; the third, that the scope of the alliance is greatly extended with regard to Korea since it recognises the paramount (takusatsu naru) interests of Japan in Korea and recognises also her right to take whatever measures seem necessary for asserting and securing those rights; the fourth is that the original period of 5 years has been extended to 10.

The Fiji Shimpō thinks that the treaty must cause profound satisfaction not only to the peoples of Japan and England but also to those of all civilized nations, for if the interests of the two former are safeguarded, the opportunities of the latter are explicitly guaranteed. The Fiji has special reason to rejoice for it was the first among Japanese journals to advocate this extension of the alliance, and it now finds that its hopes are more than realized. It frankly recognises the credit due to the Cabinet for such an achievement, but it adheres to its view that the Portsmouth treaty was a great diplomatic blunder.

The Asahi Shimbun regards the new alliance as a matter of the greatest satisfaction to Japan and finds that its terms are in accord with the highest expectations that could have been formed. Unhappily in the present dejected frame of the nation's mind the treaty will not receive in this country the exuberant welcome that would have awaited it under different circumstances. It is one of the greatest events of modern times, and must be regarded as standing as a model for twentieth-century international compacts. Japan may congratulate herself on two splendid achievements, her victorious war with Russia and this treaty with England. She did not reap from the former all the advantages that might have been obtained, but the latter is a perfect accomplishment, and its fruits now offer themselves to be gathered in the near future.

The Kokumin Shimbun finds in the alliance a practical expression of the sentiment that has long animated the Japanese people. But our contemporary is careful to point out that the agreement contains nothing startling nor anything in the nature of a menace. It is simply an assertion of the principles that ought to inform the policy of all civilized states. No third Power has any reason whatever to feel umbrage. The sentiments mutually animating the English and the Japanese peoples have steadily deepened and extended during recent years, and this new alliance may justly be described as a natural outcome of that growth. It can not be denied that the alliance increases the responsibilities of the high contracting parties but, on the other hand, it guarantees to them at least a proportionate increase of security. There could be no greater mistake than to imagine that the treaty is directed against any third Power. Its signatories are animated solely by a desire for peace, and in prosecuting that object they take care to show the utmost respect for the rights and opportunities of all other countries. Japan and Russia have now laid down their arms. They return to the old conditions of friendly intercourse existing prior to the war. The people of this empire entertain no grudge against their great northern neighbour, and their statesmen were not influenced by any hostile feeling when they entered into a compact which, for the rest, does not in any respect trespass upon Russia's rights. Russia must surely recognise this, and as for Japan's friends, Germany and France, there is no reason whatever for the slightest umbrage on their part.

The Nichi Nichi Shimbun devotes four columns to the discussion of the alliance. It considers that the alliance extends to such a case as a war between England and another Power in Europe, not less than to any war in East Asia. In other words, should England engage in any Occidental struggle, Japan must stand ready to protect India in every phase of that struggle. Hitherto the friendship between the two nations may be said to have lingered on the threshold of completion: it has now been carried to the most intimate point. Japan had previously recognised the necessity for such a compact. England has also recognised it, and the two nations are satisfied by the consummation of their desires. Undoubtedly Japan's responsibilities have been increased, but she has a corresponding reward. Her tranquillity is assured for a long time and she is enabled to devote herself in security to the development of her resources. Those that shrink from the new responsibilities, must remember that Japan has now been admitted to fellowship with the greatest States of the world, and that, as the proverb says, the tall tree feels the blast. She must live up to her station. The world of to-day is a world of alliances. The leading Powers deem it necessary to conclude with one another compacts for their mutual protection. Japan cannot be unique. She can not stand alone, especially among nations which are racially different from her and have different creeds. If Japan has cemented this invaluable alliance with a sincerely friendly Power, she must not shrink from the fact that some sacrifices are involved. Every just compact involves an interchange of advantages and mutuality of obligations. The Nichi Nichi further expresses its belief that each of the contracting parties has agreed to keep its military and naval preparations up to a point consistent with its responsibilities and that neither is to fold its hands in inactive reliance upon the other. The only point to which our contemporary objects is the scope of the 3rd article relating to Korea. It seems to think that Japan's hands are somewhat tied thereby.

The Miyako Shimbun also, while welcoming the alliance in warm terms, thinks that the reservation in the 3rd article, namely, the provision that Japan's measures in Korea must not be contrary to the principle of equal opportunities for the commerce and industry of all nations—may furnish a basis for foreign interference and may thus hamper Japan.

The Chuo Shimbun rejoices at the conclusion of such an alliance and asks what Power or combination of Powers will venture to defy it. The peace just concluded is not sufficient in itself to secure peace, but this alliance guarantees to Japan the tranquil opportunity which would otherwise have been lacking. Even when Germany had crushed France, Bismarck considered it necessary to conclude the Triple Alliance. How much more heartily must Japan recognize the essential character of this compact. As for the objection that Japan may have to take part in military operations in India, the Chuo asks whether she could have expected to obtain such great gains for herself without paying any price for them. Nor does it follow that she would have to send troops to India should the contingency contemplated by the treaty arise. That would be a matter of strategy. Very possibly her cooperation might take the form of an attack at some other point in Asia. This country may feel unalloyed joy at having become the ally of the greatest Power of the Occident.

The Shogyo Shimpō observes that if the former alliance had absolutely effective influence in preventing the interference of any third Power in the war, the new alliance will be equally efficacious in preventing any third Power from attacking either of the allies. Looking back to the extension of the Russo-French alliance which took place immediately after the conclusion of the first Anglo-Japanese compact, it may well be doubted whether France will sacrifice her recently accomplished entente with England for the purpose of making a corresponding extension on the present occasion. Another alliance may possibly be cemented elsewhere, but if so it will be an aggressive alliance not a conservative one like the Anglo-Japanese, and will thus be discredited from the outset. Besides, it need scarcely be pointed out that no two Occidental Powers could array in Eastern Asia a naval and military force competent to make head against England and Japan. The London Times recently spoke of this alliance as the pivot of the world's policy. It was no exaggeration.

The remaining Tokyo journals have not yet found time to discuss the matter editorially.

Speaking through the columns of the Nichi Nichi and the Nippon, Count Okuma expresses himself profoundly gratified by the news of the alliance. Japan used to be despised by the Occident as a country without religion, and regarded as a Yellow Peril. But by her victories over Russia she won respect, and now by this alliance with Great Britain she takes her place unequivocally among the most highly considered nations in the world. There may be some who think that Japan incurs great responsibilities in the matter of India and that a new conflict confronts her in the East. Those imbued with such a fear must be singularly short-sighted. Russia has been effectually crippled by the war. Her great policy of East-Asian expansion has been shattered. Her navy has been annihilated. She has lost tens of thousands of men. Her national debt has been raised to over 8,000 million of yen. She has proved herself to be a mediæval Power rather than a modern. Her domestic disorders are constantly increasing. What reasonable probability is there that she can again draw the sword? However short-sighted the Tsar may be he must appreciate the situation to that extent, and is there any other Power that will venture to defy Japan allied with England? There will be no new war in the near future. But if there should be it will be a new opportunity for Japan to discharge her heaven-sent responsibility of utterly eradicating the aggressive designs of Russia.

It is stated that the Emperor himself attended the meeting of the Privy Council at which the Alliance was considered. The Prime Minister offered explanations and answered questions and the Council unanimously approved the compact. The meeting took place at the Palace. It is perhaps misleading to say that the Council "considered" the Treaty, for, as a matter of fact, the Privy Councillors were not invited to discharge any consultative functions: the Treaty was merely reported to them, the Sovereign having already concluded it in the exercise of his Constitutional prerogatives.

The announcement of the Alliance has evidently exercised a most wholesome effect upon the people. Flags were hung out and illuminations displayed at several places in Tokyo, and it is stated that a general feeling of relief and rejoicing has been caused. If the Government would now turn its hand resolutely to Korea and utilize the opportunities it has acquired there, the dejection caused by the peace terms would be largely dispelled.

THE AMERICAN SILK TRADE.

The semi-annual review of the American Silk Trade, compiled for the Silk Association of America, is to hand by the China's mail. Mr. Franklin Allen has again prepared a most lucid review of the movements in the silk trade of the States as well as many pages of statistics dealing with every phase of the work in which the Silk Association is interested. We take the following paragraphs from the report:—

The silk season, 1904-1905, just closed has been phenomenal. The supply of raw silk for the silk manufacturers of the world was the largest in the world's history, and amounted to 41,998,402 pounds (19,050,350 kilograms). The excess of supply over the previous year was 11.5 per cent., say 4,311,175 pounds, and 4 per cent., say 1,645,414 pounds, over 1901-1902 season which previously held the record for the greatest total supply in the world's history.

The accompanying tables show that both Italy and Japan have exceeded in the season just closed all their previous figures of supply and export of raw silk. The supply from China fell off four per cent. from the previous season, and is 4,235,411 pounds less than in 1899-1900 season, which previously was China's record year. In that season China shipped abroad 15,452,045 pounds of raw silk, not including Tussahs. None of the foregoing figures include Tussah silks, 2,612,933 pounds of which were shipped from Shanghai in the past season.

Coincident with this increase of raw silk supplied for the silk manufacturers of the world, the American market was in a position to do its share for a wider distribution than ever before of well made and well finished silk fabrics. In the past season the United States have imported 70 per cent. of the silk shipped from Japan, 40 per cent. of the production of Italy, and 24 per cent. of the silk shipped from China. In other words, the American market has taken nearly 40 per cent. of the world's supply of raw silk in the season, the total figures of import reaching 17,436,414 pounds, say 130,773 picul bales.

It has been repeatedly pointed out in the reports of this Association that the consuming markets of the United States do not readily respond to parity prices for goods when raw materials are relatively high, and on the other hand, when prices are moderate that there is practically no limit to the enterprise and ability of our silk manufacturers in supplying the American market.

There are no visible signs menacing the permanency of general prosperity in the United States. A survey of the country's most important statistics reveals much that is encouraging and little to excite apprehension, certainly not for the immediate future. At this writing, seed crops are promising well, railway earnings surpass last year's, merchants are more liberal in their orders, the percentage of idle machinery is much smaller than usual, business failures both in number and amount are less than customary, and in general there is plenty of work of all kinds for willing hands to do, even in the lowest forms of manual labor. General conditions may therefore be said to be most favorable for all mechanical and textile industries in our country.

It being obvious that higher prices for raw materials require higher prices for finished goods, prudent manufacturers must and will soon control the silk situation, either by securing a commensurate advance for their goods, or by limiting their output, which in turn will react upon the advancing price of raw materials. The supply of raw silk in the coming season bids fair to be plentiful. Although not so great as last year, it promises to exceed the output of any other previous year, with the possible exception of 1901-1902.

The following letter, under date of Aug. 28th, has been received at the Yokohama Silk Conditioning House from the New York Silk Association, copies of which have also been sent to the Department of Agriculture and Commerce, the Yokohama Native Silk Guild, the Foreign Silk Committee, Yokohama, the Yokohama Chamber of Commerce, and the Silk and Sericultural Industry Institute, Tokyo.

DEAR SIR.—"I take great pleasure in informing you that our Board of Managers on the 22nd instant approved the report of the Silk Conditioning Committee and adopted the following resolutions:—

Resolved—After mature discussion and careful consideration of the subject of the report of the silk conditioning Committee, the Board of Managers of the Silk Association of America recommend that after the expiration of the calendar year 1905 all purchases of Japanese silks for the American Market be based on the conditioned weight of the Japanese Imperial Silk Conditioning House at Yokohama; conditioning and quotations to be on "Conditioned Weight."

Resolved—That in the judgment of the Board of Managers of the Silk Association of America it is highly desirable that every bale of Japanese silk for export should be packed under the supervision of the Japanese Imperial Silk Conditioning House."

We reproduce above a letter addressed by the Silk Association of America to various societies, firms and individuals connected with the silk trade of Japan, making several suggestions and conveying the sense of some resolutions recently passed by the Association with regard to Japan's raw silk business. We are informed by one of the chief silk exporting firms in Japan that the opinion of most of the foreign silk houses is that there are insuperable difficulties in regard to carrying out the suggestions made by the Silk Association of America. One of the difficulties is that the capacity of the Raw Silk Conditioning House at Yokohama is totally inadequate to deal with the amount of raw silk under the requirements of the system suggested. Other suggestions emanating from the Silk Association of America are impracticable from a business point of view.

SHIPPING ACCIDENTS.

The steamer Anton Maru, which recently went ashore off Gensan, Korea, was floated on Sept. 20th. She will shortly be brought to Osaka for repairs. Her damage is reported not to be severe.

On the evening of Sept. 20th, the steamer Senshu Maru, 1,623 gross tons, ran on to a sunken ship, about a mile off Golden Hill, Port Arthur, on her way from the naval station to Japan. She sustained severe damage to her bottom. The cargo was landed by lighters. The ship on which she struck is believed to be a Russian transport.

Original from

MANCHURIAN NOTES.

Telegrams from Yingkow to the Jiji Shimpō say that General Linevitch had made all preparations for a strong attempt to win a great victory by assuming the aggressive in the event of a rupture of the peace negotiations. Broadly speaking his programme was to cover the direct approaches to Harbin by a series of powerful fortifications where a comparatively small portion of his forces would have sufficed to check any advance of the Japanese. That precaution adopted he would have made a wide sweeping movement through Mongolia so as to place himself on the left rear of the Japanese line. He had disposed his armies with that object, had filled up the vacancies in his ranks and had substituted first-class troops, newly arrived, for the Cossack material which has proved itself of so little value during the war. It is evident that such strategy would have been immensely risky, for the Japanese right being considerably more advanced than their left, might have been pushed forward towards Harbin from the south-east as soon as the Mongolian movement of Linevitch had fairly developed, and thus the Russians would have seen their base menaced and the whole of their railway communications with the Amur region in danger of being severed. Besides, if Linevitch contrived to provide commissariat facilities for such a force as it would have been necessary to move through Mongolia, he accomplished a feat of unparalleled magnitude. The Japanese, too, were not unprepared. It is an open secret that a whole new division, if not two, had been placed on their left in extension of their lines westward of Fakumun.

China is reported to be dissatisfied with two parts of the peace treaty, namely, the provision that Russia and Japan shall withdraw their troops within 18 months, and the provision that each Power shall be free to post guards in limited numbers along the railway. The Government of Peking thinks that 18 months is too long a period and that the posting of guards without China's consent is a violation of her sovereignty. But while these objections may have some abstract validity, China has to remember, after all, that her sovereignty in Manchuria had become almost wholly a dead letter before the war, and would never have recovered vitality, so far as human probabilities go. Besides, she was herself a consenting party to the posting of Russian railway guards before the outbreak of hostilities.

Assuming that Russia has six hundred thousand combatants and non-combatants in Manchuria—and she cannot have much less—their removal at the rate of a thousand a day would occupy more than 18 months. Japan might operate her withdrawal much quicker, and doubtless will operate it, since she can avail herself of sea transport. But Russia's access to the sea is at Vladivostok only, and with the exception of forces now forming the garrison of that place or stationed in its immediate vicinity, any troops destined for embarkation at Vladivostok would have to be carried so far by railway that little would be gained as compared with transporting them at once westward. On the whole the 18 months' limit seems reasonable.

It is alleged that when the news of peace reached Yingkow there was a proposal to give the troops a great ovation as they took their departure, but on examining the terms of the peace this purpose was abandoned. One may be permitted to hope that such news is unfounded, and that it is despatched by a correspondent who knows that it will be in tune with the policy of the journal he represents. The Japanese would be guilty of a great and unreasoning act of injustice if they extended their disappointment to the troops who have fought so splendidly. Towards the army and navy at any rate there should be no stinted display of gratitude.

Rumour persists in attributing to China a design to purchase the East Chinese Railway from Russia and Japan. It is said that the negotiations will be commenced with Russia, for unless she consents to dispose of her portion, Japan certainly will decline. It would doubtless be an arrangement calculated to make for peace that this railway should be in the hands of China, assuming her ability to retain possession of it. But there are evidently many and great difficulties in the way of carrying out the scheme.

Tokyo journals continue to debate the question of railway gauge in Manchuria and Korea. The Russian East Chinese line was originally of the 5-feet gauge, and the portion of it remaining in Russian hands, namely, the portion north of Changtu—for the Japanese had not actually acquired the line beyond that point when peace was concluded—is still of the old gauge. But the Japanese portion from Port Arthur to Changtu has been altered to the 3½-feet gauge, and the Korean lines are on the 4 feet 8½ inch gauge. How all these systems are to be reconciled no one seems to certainly foresee. In connexion with this question much interest naturally attaches to the exact terminology of the peace-treaty. London makes it speak of "establishing a junction," whereas Portsmouth telegraphs the words "joint operation." The prevalent idea, however, is that the treaty merely points to mutual coöperation, and makes no reference which can be construed in the sense of through running. Another most interesting problem is the financial outlook of the road. Mr. Furukawa, Chief Engineer of the Railway Bureau, has just returned from Manchuria. He estimates the cost of working the line at 2¼ million yen annually, and he speaks of the competition of the Liao-river traffic as very formidable. Much therefore will depend on the productive capacity of the Fushun mines.

KUTSUJOKU.

We observe that the Nichi Nichi Shinbun in a leading article which has for immediate object to denounce the shallowness of the pretence that Japan made large concessions in the interests of humanity and civilization, repeatedly applies the epithet kutsujoku (disgraceful) to the Portsmouth Treaty. Nothing is easier than to choose a disagreeable title, and by prefixing it constantly, to create a sentiment of discredit. But we can not imagine for a moment that a journal like the Nichi Nichi Shinbun employs such tactics. If it uses the term "disgraceful" it must see some valid reason for doing so. May we not request our contemporary to explain what element or what feature of the Treaty is "disgraceful; or in short what justification there is for such an adjective. Certainly Japan did not get everything she asked for. We have never heard of a conference which resulted in absolutely and unreservedly satisfying a victor's proposals. Compromise is in the very essence of conference, and compromise involves the idea of concessions. Russia made several concessions which it must have hurt her previously to make. They were concessions that concerned the cardinal objects of the war, and she made them in deference to Japan's demands. Japan made concessions which did not in any way concern those objects and they were in the nature of mere reductions of the terms originally formulated by herself, not at all in the nature of yielding to Russia's dictation. Truly it is hard to see where the element of "disgrace" comes in for Japan. Perhaps too much has been said about the cause of humanity and civilization. Nations have never been known to take large account of such sentiment in the sequel of a great war. We shall be nearer the truth if we say that Japan estimated the gain of continued fighting at a lower figure than the sacrifice, and therefore she concluded peace without exacting the last pound of flesh. But the "disgrace" of the thing, that is what we entirely fail to detect, and since it may be assumed that the Nichi Nichi does not choose significant epithets without some care for their significance, we would seriously ask it to explain just what constitutes the "disgrace."

THE LATE DR. BARNARDO.

It falls to the lot of few men to influence for good the lives of over 50,000 boys and girls. Yet that is the record of the quiet, unassuming doctor of medicine whose passing away at the age of 60, we chronicle this morning. Like many other movements which in their subsequent developments have had a far-reaching influence, Dr. Barnardo's life work was started almost at hap-hazard. As a young medical student walking the London hospitals, he was going home late one night in 1864 when his attention was directed to a poor little waif who in answer to questions said he was homeless, motherless, hopeless. He carried the neglected laddie home with him and thus entered on the work which afterwards grew to such gigantic proportions under the name of Dr. Barnardo's Homes for Waifs and Strays. His first Home was opened at Stepney Causeway, but the accommodation soon grew too limited and as the years went by others were continually being added, until at last 86 distinct Homes, dealing with every class and age of destitute children, were under his supervision and care. Three of these Homes are in Canada, one is in Jersey, 17 are in the English counties, while the rest are in London. At his village Home in Ilford, Essex, 52 separate cottages are utilised to bring up girls on the family system under "Mothers." This has been a great success. Indeed, notwithstanding the persecutions and disappointments which hampered him in his early days, Dr. Barnardo's work has everywhere been crowned by the criterion of approved success. In the great emigration schemes as well as in his work in the old country his failures have been few, and at the great meeting held in London the other day in celebration of his 60th birthday, it was said that only 2 per cent. of all the boys and girls he had befriended had failed to come out right in after life. The news of Dr. Barnardo's death will bring sorrow to many hearts, but the good which he did will live after him, for in his latter years the noble hearted Irishman gathered around him so many staunch friends that the movement inaugurated on his last birthday to raise a fund sufficient to place the future of his Homes beyond fear of financial collapse at his death, has won substantial support and is likely to be fully maintained.

THE NAVAL ARMISTICE.

In order to effect arrangements for the armistice at sea Rear-Admiral Shimamura received orders from Admiral Togo to proceed with a squadron to Lajin Bay, where he met Rear-Admiral Essen on behalf of Russia. The following convention was concluded:—

CONVENTION RELATING TO AN ARMISTICE ON THE SEAS.

Rear-Admiral Shimamura and Rear-Admiral Essen, having been duly empowered by the respective Naval Authorities, have discussed and concluded the underwritten convention:—

Along the shores of the belligerent Powers the following shall be the maritime lines, namely: from Rogeehoff cape 30 nautical miles south-east to north latitude 42° and east longitude 136°; from the point thus determined to north latitude 46° and east longitude 140°. (Here follow other details of latitude and longitude.)

The navies of the belligerent Powers shall not cross the line indicated above.

This convention shall come into force from the day of its signature and shall have the effect of an armistice instrument.

(Signed.)

SHIMAMURA, &c.
ESSEN, &c.

Dated, 18th September, 1905.

Apart from the above convention it is agreed that as the people on the Kamchatka Peninsula will be short of provisions and as communication with them will be closed two weeks hence, therefore in order to succour these people for the sake of humanity, a transport laden with food-stuffs and daily necessities may be at once sent from Vladivostok to Petropavlovsk in accordance with the request of Rear-Admiral Essen, Rear-Admiral Shimamura issuing a special permit for that purpose as the matter is pressing.

The line of demarkation indicated in the above convention states from a point 30 nautical miles south east of Lajin Bay, runs thence nearly due east, then nearly due north, then trends north-west, passes through the Tartary Straits, turns round the north of Saghalien and extends to Shimushu in the Kuriles.

It is semi-officially stated that early on the 18th instant Rear-Admiral Shimamura, with the Iwate, the Nitaka and the destroyers Akatsuki and Akebomo met Rear-Admiral Essen with the Rossia, the Bogatyr and 2 destroyers outside Lajin Bay. The Russians presented a proposal containing 8 conditions and drawn up in a manner suggesting that the negotiators were on an equal footing. Of course the Japanese objected to anything of that kind, but it was not easy to come to terms with the Russians. They devoted 4 hours to reasoning, complaining and appealing. Finally some consideration was extended to their proposals and the armistice protocol was drawn up. Our readers will have perceived, however, that the limits fixed in the document were such as to confine the Russians altogether to their own coasts and shut them off in toto from the Japanese coasts.

IN WELCOME OF PEACE.

The editor of the Fukui Shinpo writes as follows under the above title in the issue of the 7th inst. This leading Christian paper is bold enough to stand with the very small minority among the secular papers.

The great war which has lasted nearly two years is about ended. During this grievous war the Empire may be considered to have passed through a severe examination in patriotism, self-denial, and self-sacrifice, and to have fought far more bravely than the world expected. The victories on both land and sea have raised immeasurably the position of the Empire among the Powers. The relations between the East and the West have been changed completely, and opportunity has been given for a new development in the history of mankind. Russia, for example, has been awakened from her dream of religious and political superstition, and there seems a tendency to hasten reforms.

Such results are fruitful and glorious, and already the ends have been accomplished for which war was declared. We have subdued the violence of Russia in Manchuria, strengthened our position in Korea, and increased our power in the Liaotung Peninsula. In spite of our dissatisfaction in having to give up half of Saghalien, there is still reason for our people to welcome peace even on these terms. For example, it should by no means be overlooked that the fishing rights obtained bring honour and profit to the country.

The whole nation regrets the surrender of the claim for an indemnity, but the two armies have confronted each other for some four months without fighting, and we have no certainty that our force is superior to that of the enemy, nor is the power of Russia to be despised. Considering these things, there is room for the nation in wisdom and magnanimity to bear her disappointment at the capitulation of Portsmouth and the giving up of the indemnity. We can see no reason whatever in the arguments of those who would insist on an indemnity even at the cost of further fighting.

For these reasons we rejoice in the signing of the armistice and are thankful for the approaching peace. But we must not neglect to tighten the helmet strings after victory; and, in particular, we must make great efforts for the spiritual development of the Empire.

The preceding editorial was dated Sept. 4th, probably to show that it was written before the riots, which began the next night. In the issue of Sept. 14th there is a long editorial, of which the following are two divisions:—

THE RESULTS OF THE PEACE.

"The results of the Peace Conference of course do not satisfy the desires of the people; but, as we said in our last issue, the conditions are such at present that we must be satisfied with these results. If those unduly puffed up people, who, intoxicated with victory, despise the enemy, were to make a treaty of peace on their own terms, demanding an indemnity under any conditions, into what great dangers would they bring the nation! Again, this love of fighting might so grow as to have no limit save in the destruction of the Empire. In the excitedly light-hearted state of the people this discontent, with the terms of peace may perhaps be an antidote to the poison in their veins."

THE FAR GREATER DISGRACE.

Those who are dissatisfied with the treaty of peace say that such terms are a disgrace to Japan. But we think that there is no fear that the Powers will despise Japan, nor that her success will be undervalued. We do not consider such terms a disgrace. But if they be a disgrace, then a disgrace far greater still than that said to have been brought upon the Empire by the Government, has been caused by those irresponsible journalists—blind leaders of the blind—who praise the violent deeds of unbalanced men, speaking of them as chivalrous conduct, righteous indignation, and the like. It is such a course as this that brings disgrace upon the nation, and causes the glory of victory to lose much of its lustre. Anarchy in the Capital, the burning and destruction of churches, the prevalence of rioters,—these are but little different from the violence of the Boxers in North China, and than this there is no greater disgrace in the world. These journalists, seeing the note in the eyes of others, overlook the beam in their own eyes, and cry out against the disgrace of others. How inexpressibly pitiable it is!"

THE MUNICIPALITY AND THE POLICE.

The Tokyo City Assembly has decided to move for the abolition of the Police Bureau as a part of the Central Administration and its subordination to the Governor of the Prefecture. This proposal is based on the events of the 5th instant when the city was thrown into a condition of confusion and bloodshed by the police's attempt to close the Hibiya Park to the citizens. This system of separating the police from the Municipality exists in Tokyo alone among Japanese cities and has long been subjected to severe criticism by political parties. It is no doubt a remnant of the times when the police were charged with the performance of duties other than the mere preservation of public peace and good order in the usual acceptation of the terms. The Chief of Police was then an important semi-political personage and the force under his command occupied a prominent place among instruments employed by the Government to check the extravagance of over-zealous reformers. It is therefore distinctly a step of progress that this special system should be abolished, but the Government will have to consider seriously whether the time is ripe for such a step. The least biased person must admit that the conduct of the citizens of Tokyo—or, at any rate, of a section of them—on the 5th instant did not constitute a qualification for the change now suggested, and besides there in the general consideration that a moment of popular excitement is seldom well chosen for the inauguration of changes. The city assembly, however, represents the reflecting classes of the metropolis and in proposals deserve all respect.

TAXES IN JAPAN.

It is now the time for the Japanese to put their house in order and they are naturally thinking how to accomplish the task. The Nichi Nichi Shimbun makes some interesting comments on the situation. In 1903, the year before the war, the aggregate income derived from taxes and State monopolies was 158 million yen, to which was added in 1904 and 1905, a war tax totalling 191 millions, so that the entire payment reached 294 millions. In other words, whereas the taxation had been about 3.30 yen per caput before the war, it rose in consequence of the war to 6.30 yen, being thus very nearly doubled. Turning now to the taxes of other countries the following table is obtained:—

	Taxes Yen.	Amount per head. Yen.
England	1,209,300,000	22.10
Germany	451,680,000	8.00
France	1,326,144,000	34.00
Italy	589,978,000	17.70
Belgium	100,967,000	14.40
Russia	1,185,165,000	9.30
Holland	99,776,000	16.30
United States	992,000,000	13.90
Japan	294,423,000	6.30

In this figure for Japan, the war taxes and the State monopolies are included. The table suggests that the Japanese are very lightly burdened but if we consider their taxes in the context of their export trade the contrast is by no means so favourable. Taking the figures for 1902, the result is this:—

	Exports. yen.	Taxes per 100 yen of Exports.
England	3,008,170,000	40
Germany	2,565,130,000	17
France	1,790,160,000	74
Italy	609,680,000	96
Belgium	84,120,000	12
Russia	908,500,000	130
Holland	1,625,830,000	6
United States	2,985,150,000	33
Japan	289,500,000	103

Curiously enough Japan and Russia make the worst showing in this table, Russia's place being at the bottom of the list and Japan standing immediately above her. Japan's exports are steadily growing and in a few years her record will undoubtedly be much better, but if her necessities compel her to continue her present scale of taxation, that is to say, if she can not see her way to reducing any part of the war imposts, she will have a comparatively heavy burden to bear.

It is reported by the Nichi Nichi that the Army Department intends to withdraw the armies in Manchuria and Korea within six months after the ratification of the peace treaty. The expenses during the period will amount to some four hundred million yen.

MR. STEAD ON THE ANGLO-JAPANESE ALLIANCE.

Nothing that a Conservative cabinet does can possibly be right in the eyes of Mr. W. T. Stead. Indeed, one is disposed to think at times that he was born into the world with an instinctive hatred for governments of all complexions, since it is rarely, very rarely, that the course pursued by any Ministry pleases him. The Anglo-Japanese alliance is the last stick that he has found to beat the Ministerial dog. He is a bitter opponent of the alliance; so bitter that when he approaches the consideration of the subject he becomes oblivious of everything else. Thus, writing in the Review of Reviews for August, he alleges that the alliance has never been debated in parliament; that "never a word has been said about it in either House," that the Opposition know nothing about it and that "what they know they disapprove." Yet it is a fact familiar to all ordinarily careful readers of the London newspapers that the question of the alliance actually did come up for debate in the House of Commons, that not one speaker condemned it, and that representatives of the Opposition endorsed it cordially. Mr. Stead's intelligence must have been so monopolized by the alliance when he set out to discuss it that everything else faded from his perception.

Another statement made by him is that the alliance "commits England to a hostile attitude to the two most powerful military empires of the world, Russia and Germany, since Germany's antagonism to Japan is only one degree less pronounced than that of Russia." What warrant has Mr. Stead for saying that, we wonder. He offers no explanation. On the strength of his own ipse dixit he asks us to believe that Russia which has just fought a terrible war with Japan and been badly beaten by her, feels only one degree more enmity towards Japan than Germany feels though Germany has never fallen out with Japan and professes to be her friend. It is difficult to share Mr. Stead's convictions. The only noteworthy point in his essay on this subject seems to be his opinion—an opinion now gaining wide credence—that Germany and Russia will hereafter be found in the same camp.

THE HAGUE COURT.

It may well be supposed that the Tsar's assumption of the initiative in summoning another meeting of the Hague Peace Tribunal is regarded with much surprise in Japan. The Tsar was the obstacle to convening the tribunal on the occasion of a proposal from President Roosevelt during the progress of the war. Japan agreed conditionally—that is to say, she agreed provided that the war itself was not brought within the purview of the tribunal—but Russia declined in toto, and thus the meeting had to be abandoned. With President Roosevelt, therefore, and not with the Tsar, rests the right of initiative on this occasion, and the Japanese press is astonished that the President should have stepped down in the Tsar's favour. There is also a keen consciousness of the farcical side of Emperor Nicholas' procedure. That he, the great disturber of the peace, should pose as it guardian before the sword he drew for purposes of perjured aggression is yet dry, before the fumes of the powder burned by his armies on many battle-fields have been dissipated, and before the grass has begun to grow on the graves of thousands of the victims of his lust of empire, is certainly a striking evidence that whatever His Majesty lost in the war, he did not lose his faculty of make-believe. However, there can be no doubt as to his courage in thus coming into open court. For if the Japanese please to draw up an indictment they can place the great White Monarch in an embarrassing position vis-à-vis the rules of war prescribed by this very same tribunal when originally convened at his own instance; they can prove that His Majesty's troops murdered the wounded and mutilated the dead; that they used dum-dum bullets; that they again and again abused the red-cross flag as well as the white flag; that they fought disguised as civilians; that his ships sunk non-combatant vessels in neutral waters; as well as laid mines in seas frequented by neutral ships, and that his officials repeatedly and continuously violated the neutrality of China. It is hard to see how the Japanese delegates can fail to formulate these charges for it will be their plain duty to show that laws which, by the world's common consent, were declared essential in the interests of humanity, have no binding force over the armies of the Sovereign at whose instance these laws may be said to have been enacted. One imagines that the Tsar would not have thrust himself into the foreground as the convener of the tribunal under these circumstances; and especially that he would not have shown haste which is almost indecent in view of the fact that the peace treaty is not yet ratified. On the other hand the world never wearies of being credulous where the good intentions of monarchs are concerned. There will be plenty of people ready to applaud the Russian potentate for seeking to provide bars for the doors of the temple of Janus after keeping them so long open, and plenty of people ready to believe in his sincerity. We confess that we too have not lost all faith in His Majesty's "craving after good," and inasmuch as each new public display of the mood should tend to give it stability, we welcome the convening of the Hague tribunal.

A VERY CONVINCING ARGUMENT.

Early in September, or at the close of August, we can not recall the exact date, a letter was addressed to a Kobe paper by an Anglo-Saxon resident of Korea, alleging that a tract of land three miles square in the suburbs of Seoul had been requisitioned by the Japanese for military purposes, and that the compensation promised to the owners by the Korean Authorities did not amount to one-thirtieth of the value of the property. A transaction on such a large scale attracted much attention. We made inquiries in official quarters and learned that nothing of the affair had been heard in Tokyo, with the exception of a piece of land intended for the railway station, whence we expressed the conviction that the statements of the writer of the letter had no foundation in fact. Had such a project been contemplated, we wrote, as the appropriation by the Japanese Authorities in Korea of a tract of land three miles square "including almost all of the valuable river front opposite Seoul," there would certainly be some official record of the circumstance.

This comment of ours is now denounced by the Korea Daily News. It declares that the statements made by the Seoul correspondent of the Kobe paper "were entirely true," and it adds "we can endorse them from our own observation, and a paragraph which appears in another column confirms them."

The paragraph adduced in confirmation of the original assertion is this:—

The Japanese Minister has requested that 13,000 metres of land on Nan San be loaned to the Japanese Government for the use of the Japanese Department of Communications. The Minister for Foreign Affairs conferred with his Majesty, who granted the request.

It is worth while to compare this with the allegation which it nominally confirms. The allegation was that a tract of land 3 miles square had been requisitioned by the Japanese for military purposes, the compensation promised to the owners by the Korean authorities being less than one-thirtieth of the property's value. The confirmation is that the Japanese Minister has requested the loan (presumably the lease) of 13,000 metres of land—doubtless square metres are meant—for the use of a Japanese Department. Thus a request for the lease of 13,000 square metres of land is said to be equivalent to the virtual confiscation of over twenty-three millions of square metres. That is the kind of evidence out of which are manufactured anti-Japanese libels of the kind uttered by the newspaper mentioned above.

Another curious feature of the incident is that the daily German organ of Yokohama, commenting on the Japanese Minister's "request" for the loan of 13,000 square (?) metres of land, says:—

Such action on the part of Government officials is termed "a loan"; if it was the act of private individuals it would be described as "robbery." But such is the result of war the whole world over.

An editor must be pitifully swayed by prejudice when he pens criticisms of such a nature. Requests for the loan (or lease) of land whereon to erect a legation, a consulate or some other official building are preferred all the world over, and are normal incidents of international relations. To call them "robbery" is a childish misuse of terms.

AMERICAN JOURNALS AND JAPAN.

Many American journals are not conspicuous for stability of judgment. They are easily captured by any one that supplies good copy, or easily driven into bitter opposition by any show of indifference. M. Witte showed his knowledge of them at Portsmouth. He pandered so adroitly to their passion for news as to win them effectually to Russia's side and turn them against Japan of whom they had previously penned only warm eulogies. Not all were equally variable. A few declined to change their faith for such petty reasons, and among those few The Independent seems to have dealt in the most trenchant and consistent manner with the backsliders. We quote its remarks:—

After having for two years shown an almost indiscriminating sympathy with Japan in her contest with Russia, the American daily newspaper press has within a fortnight begun to adopt a tone of opposition which cannot fail to suggest unpleasant reflections. The arguments that are being put forth against the Japanese terms of peace are in themselves unworthy of intelligent men and are discreditable to the American people, if they really represent American opinion.

We do not know whether the newspapers will prefer to have the public believe that a large sum of Russian money has been judiciously distributed—and unpleasant rumors to that effect have been in circulation—or would like better to be regarded as just plain incompetents, whose editorial comments have the quality of the conversation that goes on within the walls of institutions for the feeble-minded. It is enough to remark that they have placed themselves "up against" this alternative, and if they continue to address themselves on this particular subject and in their present vein to that being whom they are pleased to call "the intelligent reader" they will do so with amazing effrontery.

In saying this we do not here offer to pass any judgment whatsoever upon the justness or the expediency of the Japanese terms of peace. It may be that these terms are both righteous and wise; it may be that they are hard and absurd; we do not pretend to say. We are dealing only with the American newspaper arguments against them. These arguments are in substance two—namely, that Japan is a pagan nation, and therefore, of course, wicked in her dealings with a Christian Power; and, secondly, that if the civilized world permits her to extort these terms from her discomfited foe she will become so formidable an empire that Western interests will be imperilled.

The argument that Japan is a pagan nation has precisely the quality of that criticism which the committee of estimable clergymen made to President Lincoln upon General Grant, that he relied too much on his whisky, and it should be taken in the spirit of Lincoln's humorous reply. If Japan's achievements are a product of her paganism, the sooner the Christian world cultivates that particular kind of paganism the better off we shall be in both morals and worldly success. A nation that can conduct a Government without corruption, keep her word to the letter, do things instead of boasting and in maintaining a vast army on foreign soil lose fewer men by illness than in battle obviously has some of the qualities that St. Paul recommended in the twelfth chapter of his Epistle to the Romans and which the Christian nations have not been too diligent to remember. Indeed, Emperor William, forgetting his Yellow Peril picture, now says that it is the Christian virtues of Japan that have enabled her to win against Russia.

As for the contention that by extorting these terms of peace Japan will become a dangerously formidable Oriental Power, it is worthy of that particular specimen of the schoolboy who occupies the dunce block. Japan either is a formidable Oriental Power or she is not. If she is, the concession of these terms of Peace will not make her stronger; the denial of them will not make her weaker. If she is not formidable she will not be able to hold any nominal advantage that these terms may seem to give her. The real question is, What are her elements of strength and how are they likely to develop? If she has the resources and the military genius to dominate the East any refusal by the Western world to concede the advantages that she has won in the present war will amount to as much as did the withholding from her of the fruits of her victory over China. It is only a question of time when she will get what she wants. If she has the ingenuity and the industry to develop a vast manufacturing activity she will force her way into the markets of the East, whether the Western world wants her to do so or not. If her people have the vitality, the temperance and the frugality to multiply more rapidly than the people of the West, no cry of "Yellow Peril" will prevent their spreading over great areas that are now occupied by less vigorous stocks.

Only one thing can be accomplished by an ungracious attitude toward Japan in the present crisis of affairs. The nations that adopt it can incur her displeasure, as they did after the war with China. She will not retaliate by open hostility, but she will be a less friendly co-operator with them in advancing a policy of fair and equal trade opportunities for all competitors throughout the Orient, and she will be less disposed to look kindly upon Western influences of every sort, religious, educational and political. The only real "Yellow Peril" is that which lurks in narrow-mindedness and animosity. The Japanese have shown themselves to be friendly in disposition and receptive of all genuine thought, invention and idealism. So long as they care for these things and are willing to do their part in promoting them the Japanese Empire cannot be a peril to any worthy interest.

If the Japanese terms of peace are wrong and unreasonable, let that fact be shown by discussing them on their merits. It is unworthy of the American people to protest against them on the ground that the Japanese are Oriental pagans or that their national advancement is a dangerous rivalry of American interests.

We confess frankly that not during the remaining years of our life, be they many or few, did we expect to see in American journals such writings as those condemned by The Independent, and above all could we not have imagined that they would be produced by such a petty cause as a Russian statesman's accessibility to interviewers. It is a rude shock, calculated to prove either that America's friendship for Japan is much more superficial than we had imagined or that America's newspapers do her very little credit.

The Japanese public continues to have its feelings harrowed by the comments and stories of American journalists. In the Jiji Shimpō we find a long telegram purporting to set forth the views of the American press. Need we say that the omniscient journalist, the man with the yellow telescope, knows exactly what happened? His version now is that the movement of surrender was ordered from Tokyo and that its proximate cause was the unwise and pragmatic interference of Baron Kaneko, who mixed himself up in the business and sent to Marquis Ito in Tokyo telegrams which caused the latter to weaken. It is further stated by this authority that Baron Komura and Mr. Takahira were radically opposed to such concessions but that they had to bow to the decree from Tokyo and that their chagrin was profound. We can only trust that these sensational narrations of American newspapers will not add fuel to the fire already burning in Japan. Elsewhere we have endeavoured to expose the flagrant fallacy of the contention that Russia won a victory at Portsmouth, and we do not think that any reasoning man can question the justice of our conclusions. But the mood of the masses in Japan has little to do with reason just now and much to do with passion. Even President Roosevelt's good offices will be discredited if the utterances of certain American journals be taken literally.

Above we reproduce the comments of the Independent upon writings which had appeared in certain American journals; writings which displayed anti-Japanese prejudice very novel in journals of the United States. The Independent did not indicate the newspapers to which it alluded and we are thus left in the dark as to their general character and standing. Here, however, we append some quotations from journals received by the last mail:—

The emptiness of Russia's "diplomatic victory" is rudely exposed in the quick reaction from the first exultation over the news of Japan's magnanimous concessions. The whole world was taken by surprise when Japan yielded the long disputed points of the peace negotiations. In Russia the rejoicing was immoderate. Indemnity had been waived and half of Sakhalin, in possession of the enemy, was to be restored. But in less than twenty-four hours the world realized, and Russia in particular realized, that what had become the crucial issues of the protocol were, after all, insignificant in comparison with what Japan had gained by the war and through the concessions previously secured.

Russia stands to-day an admittedly whipped nation, having yielded territory, ports, railroads, fishery privileges, vast investments and other things of immeasurable value, having lost practically its whole navy and tens of thousands of soldiers, and having suffered incalculable loss in prestige—and all for nothing, absolutely nothing! Japan has lost in men and treasure, but materially and politically Russia's losses were its gains.

And the strange thing about it is that Russia has stood the confessed loser of the war for days by the earlier agreements of the conference, but the full humiliation of its predicament was not felt until peace was concluded. And even then temporary hysteria over Japan's final concession blinded the Russians to the significance of Japan's achievements. Under the circumstances the great "diplomatic victory," which caused even such a seasoned diplomat as M. Witte to lose his head, is a day's sensation. Japan's victory—military, political and moral—has changed the map of the world and has stamped upon history more plainly than ever before the grace and efficacy of the victor's magnanimity.—Kansas City Times.

The Japanese have displayed common sense as well as magnanimity. The prolongation of the war because of inability to get a large sum in hard cash from Russia might have proved the undoing of Japan. The credit of that country is not so firmly established that it could resist the strain of another year of fighting. Rumours that the conference would be futile depressed Japanese securities. Had it come to naught there would have been a further decline. To carry on the war Japan would have been obliged to borrow either here or in England, and it would not have been able to get money for the prosecution of an unnecessary war except on hard terms.

As Japan has secured all that it went to war for, and something more, and as its great need is an opportunity to recuperate, wisdom dictated that it should get peace and let the pleasing dream of an indemnity go. The interest on the war debt must be paid and to do that industry must be encouraged. The half million or more soldiers must be allowed to go to work. The first duty of Japan, as it was of the United States in 1865, is to earn money and pay debts.—Chicago Daily Tribune.

Showing far reaching statesmanship of the highest order and with a magnanimity that has no parallel in history victorious Japan, through its plenipotentiaries, agreed this morning to make peace with Russia.

To accomplish this humanitarian result the government of Japan deemed it necessary to make sacrifices which, probably, will not be approved by many of its people.

But with a superb disregard of the possible consequences to itself and having in mind only the injury which would be done civilization through a further prosecution of the war the emperor and the council of the elder statesmen threw their votes yesterday for concessions and an end of hostilities in the Far East.—Chicago Daily News.

"THE ENCYCLOPEDIA BRITANNICA."

We observe in the columns of our local German contemporary a strange reference to The Times and the Encyclopædia Britannica. The paragraph runs thus:—

The difficulties experienced by foreign concerns in Japan in regard to running an installment business has been again exemplified in a case which came before the local court the other day, when the representative of the Yokohama Office of the London Times sued a Japanese for the balance of instalments on a set of the Encyclopædia Britannica. The case was apparently undefended, though the defendant, with some show of reason, might have urged that in selling a work which was many years out of date as new the plaintiffs came perilously near obtaining money under false pretences. No doubt the installment system would be as safe in Japan as elsewhere if properly worked, but to hand over a set of alleged valuable books for a nominal payment of ¥5 hardly seems the way to do satisfactory business.

We need scarcely comment on the amusing contradiction between the two statements that while "the installment system would no doubt be as safe in Japan as elsewhere if properly worked" yet "to hand over a set of alleged valuable books for a nominal payment of 5 yen hardly seems the way to do satisfactory business." The very essence of the installment system is that sets of books are thus handed over in exchange for small initial payments, and if that is not a "satisfactory way of doing business," then it is silly to allege that the installment system is safe if properly worked. But inconsequential blunders are as nothing compared with the gross charge here deliberately preferred against the agents of The Times, namely, that they sold as new a work which was many years out of date, and that they thus "came perilously near obtaining money under false pretences." This unscrupulous and lying accusation was originally made by the Kobe Chronicle, a journal which is never deterred by trifles where the gratification of its own spite is concerned, and was publicly proved in the most conclusive manner to be an unprincipled slander. It is now repeated by the German daily of Yokohama which must nevertheless know well that the libel is without a particle of truth. When the Kobe Chronicle and the Japan Herald undertake to teach commercial morality to the proprietors of the London Times, impudence has reached its zenith.

On the morning of Sept. 25th, fire occurred in Osaka harbour on a lighter having 450 cases of kerosene oil aboard. Two of the sendo and several firemen were injured. The cause is reported to have been tobacco ashes. The oil had been removed from the Osaka Shosen Kaisha's steamer Atsuke Maru.

KOREA.

Saturday, September 23.

It is reported that a rising has taken place in Chungchongdo, southward of Seoul. The insurgents are said to number about a thousand, and their motto is "Down with the Japanese." It is not imaginable that they should be able to accomplish anything tangible, beyond the sacrifice of their own lives. If they are a really patriotic band, inspired by a desire to assert their country's independence, they would deserve full sympathy, but in that case their insurrection should be directed, not against the Japanese, but against their own Government which, by its intrigues and political blindness, has condemned the country to choose between the alternatives of being absorbed into Russia's dominions or preserving at least a semblance of independence under Japan's protection.

The impression conveyed by a traveller who has just returned from Korea, whose report appears in the Miyako and the Yomiuri, is that the peace terms have given a bad blow to Japanese prestige in Korea. Politicians in Seoul imagine that Russia is much stronger than the events of the war seemed to indicate and that she will presently be once more mistress of the situation in the Far East. This conception is said to be strengthened by the fact that the Japanese allowed the Russians to occupy north-eastern Korea throughout the war and did not take any vigorous measures to expel them up to the very moment of making peace.

It is impossible to discern how much of this analysis is subjective and how much objective: how much is based on actual observation of the situation; how much on the speaker's estimate of what the situation ought to be. He goes on to condemn Japan's procedure in Korea as too weak and he alleges that one foreign Representative does not hesitate to fill the ears of the Court with predictions that Russia will soon recapture the citadel of East Asia with flying colours.

The Fiji Shimpō has a leading article which echoes this tone of discontent. In unequivocal terms our contemporary urges the adoption of a much stronger policy in Korea; a policy consistent with the position Japan has won there by treaty. It animadverts strongly on the vacillations and evasions that are permitted to Korean officials and it insists that this Empire must bring to the solution of the Korean problem a spirit of much greater determination than has hitherto been shown.

The Chuo Shimbun, without directly alleging any want of competence or absence of resolution on the part of the Japanese authorities, endorses the Fiji's views as to the necessity of adopting vigorous measures. A very obvious line of argument is taken, namely, that if Japan postpones the enforcement of the rights she has now acquired by treaty, the occasion to exercise them will inevitably disappear. She will, in fact, be establishing precedents against herself. A right suffered to lie in abeyance is, in effect, a right surrendered. Russia has now openly pledged herself to step out of Korea. Great Britain, it may be presumed, has by the new treaty of alliance recognized Japan's exceptional position in the peninsula. The rest is for Japan herself to do, and she had better do it without loss of time and of opportunity.

In the context of these articles we read a rumour that a new convention will soon be concluded with Korea.

The branch line to Masampo from Fusan was opened to traffic on the 23rd instant.

Tuesday, September 26.

News from Korea indicates that the insurrection in Chung-chong-do is increasing in magnitude. The Seoul authorities are not taking any effective steps to quell it, and the Progressists (Il-chin-hoi) have accordingly asked the authorities for permission to undertake the work of restoring order, and have requested that 500 rifles with ammunition be placed at their disposal. The Government is said to be much embarrassed. Meanwhile another trouble is reported from Tai-gwal-yong in Kwangwon-do. There a body of some 600 "righteous troops" are said to have assembled. They are obstructing communications and have wounded or killed several Japanese.

The Koreans have chosen their time badly. If they were bent upon making a disturbance, they should have done so while the Russians were still on the scene. To break out just as the war is over and just as the hands of the Japanese are freed to deal with them is not only futile, but also calculated to fortify the reasons inducing the Japanese to assume a really resolute attitude in the peninsula.

It is to be sincerely hoped that the Japanese will lose no time in assuming such an attitude. Nine-tenths of the difficulty hitherto experienced in dealing with Korea is that Japan has been obliged to refrain from exercising anything like the authority of a suzerain, and that the Koreans have been abandoned to their own devices of perpetual plotting and unpatriotic intrigues. Japan has now acquired a mandate to undertake the control of Korean affairs and if she shrinks from accepting the situation, it is never likely to occur again. Korea should be reduced to the position vis-à-vis Japan that Egypt occupies towards England. That is the very lowest estimate of what is needed to remove this perpetual menace to the peace of the Far East, and to secure Japan against dangers too formidable to be ignored.

Thursday, September 28.

Mr. Min Pyonghyok, who was among the members of the recent embassy to Japan, has been charged since his return to Seoul with bringing the Empire into disgrace by exhibiting a false document which purported to be an imperial commission authorizing negotiations to obtain the services of Marquis Ito for the direction of Korea's administration. There is some mystery connected with this affair. It is predicted that the culprit will be sentenced to three years' banishment and will then be immediately pardoned.

Mr. Hyong Yongun, who was arrested some days ago in connexion with Li Yong-ik's intrigues, will probably be released, it is said, there being no evidence against him.

There is evidently a very strong feeling, among some publicists in Japan that the only way to deal with Korea is to give practical effect to the position which this country has won by war and by treaty. Korea, as she is at present, constitutes a perpetual source of friction; an unending menace to the peace of the Far East. Her statesmen appear to think that intrigue is the main object of their existence, and just so long as foreign powers are represented in Seoul, so long will these intrigues and political manoeuvres be continued by the Mins, the Lis, the Kims and the rest of the uneasy crowd. Therefore it is urged, by the politicians whom we are quoting, that the step now immediately waiting to be taken is an arrangement for the withdrawal of the foreign legations from Seoul and the entrusting of the country's foreign relations entirely to Japanese direction and control.

The Kokumin Shimbun, however, does not endorse that view. It writes in an unappreciative strain, minimizing the danger apprehended by those that advocate strong measures, and insisting that the procedure already adopted in Korea is adequate to meet the immediate situation. Our contemporary suggests that some alarm has probably been created by observing the sudden injection of German interference in Moroccan affairs. Japanese publicists ask themselves whether this does not imply that a third Power may at any moment thrust itself between Japan and Korea. But the Kokumin is disposed to ridicule that fear, and to advise that instead of indulging in vain alarms, people should sit down quietly and try to put their forecasts into tangible shape. That practical process would soon expose the chimerical character of the spectre. This campaign places the Fiji Shimpō and the Kokumin in direct antagonism, for the Fiji strongly advocates the adoption of radical measures.

Mr. Hayashi has informed the Korean Government that unless speedy and effective steps be taken to quell the insurrection in Kwangon-do, Japanese troops will be sent thither for the purpose. Meanwhile the request of the Il-chin-hoi to be supplied with arms and ammunition for the purpose of dealing with the rioters has been refused, and it is stated that the lives and properties of Japanese subjects have suffered considerably.

Friday, September 29.

Mr. Hyong Yong-un has been convicted of intriguing with Russia and has been expelled from Seoul. This is the gentleman who simulated so much progressive and pro-Japanese disposition at the time of Marquis Ito's visit to the Korean capital. He has evidently some skill in utilizing his opportunities.

CHINA.

A shocking outrage was committed at Peking on the 24th instant. It had been arranged that the departure of the five envoys who are to visit Japan and thence to proceed to the Occident for the purpose of investigating the working of constitutional institutions, should take place on that morning by the 10.40 train, and a great number of distinguished persons, including the Foreign Representatives, assembled at the station to bid them farewell. The five envoys were Chang Ying, Prince Tsai Tse, Tan Fang, Hsu Shihchang and Tai Hung-tsu. Just before the train started and when the party had taken their places in the carriage set apart for their use, a bomb which had been previously placed in the carriage exploded, killing four and wounding ten of the envoys' suite. Among the envoys themselves only two were injured, namely, Prince Tsai Tse, whose hurts were slight and who evoked much admiration by ministering to the wounded members of the suite in spite of his own injuries, and Mr. Chang Ying, who was more seriously wounded, though happily his life is in no danger. The conjecture is that the outrage was the work of the conservatives who are bitterly hostile to the sweeping reforms now contemplated by the Chinese Government.

It is stated that the Chinese Representative in Berlin, Mr. Yin Chang, will be recalled to take command of the forces in Chili, his successor being Mr. Yang Ching-yin, now Minister at Vienna, who, in turn, will be succeeded by Li Ching-mai, son of the celebrated Viceroy Li. The Berlin Representative originally accompanied Prince Chun to Europe, and has been chiefly occupied investigating military affairs during his sojourn in Germany.

It is stated by telegraph that the thrower of the bomb which exploded in the railway carriage at Peking was himself blown into fragments and that, consequently, no clue as to the origin of the affair is obtainable. Mr. Chang, whose are hurts the most serious, will be convalescent in a week, it is expected, and the embassy will then resume its journey. Mr. Wu Ting-fang, who had come to the station to see the envoys off, was among the wounded. He was taken to the French Hospital. His injuries are trifling, except that he has not recovered his hearing. There are various rumours. The German newspaper of Shanghai, faithful to its anti-Japanese role, alleges that the outrage was the work of Chinese students educated in Japan, as though these youths could possibly have entered such a protest against the prosecution of the very programme of reform which they themselves are endeavouring to promote. The Koku-min Shimbun's correspondent says that the outrage was intended to take vengeance, on Mr. Tan Fang, who, while Governor of Hupeh, put several of the revolutionary party to death. He is reported to have received a threatening letter a few days before the event. Another report attributes the attempt to Russian instigation, but the most credible explanation is that the act was simply due to conservative anger against the new reform movement. The bomb had not been placed in the carriage as was originally stated. It was thrown by hand.

An opinion seems to prevail that the bomb-throwing episode in Peking was planned by men who sought to take vengeance upon Tan Fang, one of the envoys, who behaved with severity which they consider unmerited during his governorship of Hupeh. But the idea that it was a demonstration against reform in general is also held in many quarters.

Mr. Tsukuda, legal adviser to Viceroy Chang, has just returned to Japan. He delivered an interesting lecture at the Bankers' Club in Tokyo on the 26th. The gist of what he said was that China has really entered the path of material progress, and that, on the other hand, she has exchanged her former unreasoning dislike of foreign intercourse, for a sentiment that in developing their country's resources the Chinese must rely upon themselves and must resist foreign exploitation. Mr. Tsukuda did not affirm these things as a matter of certainty. He merely gave them as his own opinion.

The bomb-throwing in Peking is now said to have been the work of revolutionists. Mr. Chang's injury proves to be more severe than was at first supposed. He will not be restored to health for some time. It is stated that the Court showed a disposition to abandon the embassy, but the Envoys have represented that such a course would evoke public ridicule. A proclamation has been issued offering a reward to any one who identifies the remains of the bomb-thrower.

There having been no case of plague for ten days, the issue of clean bills of health was resumed at Hongkong on the 12th inst.

A telegram has recently been received by the Waiwupu from the Imperial agent at K'urun (Urga) to the effect that a Russian subject has opened a gold mine outside the district defined by treaty, without having previously obtained permission for the same. The Agent requests that the Russian Minister be communicated with in the matter, which was accordingly done.

The term of office of Sir Liang-chen as Minister at Washington expires very soon, and the Nanfengpao has it on good authority that in case he is not re-appointed—which is not very likely to happen—Taotai Chu Pao-fay will be his successor. The latter is well known to the Westerners in the East and will no doubt be a persona grata to the American Government.

We understand that the erudite Mr. Ku Hung-ming, whose writings have aroused so much comment, has just finished his translation of the Chinese Classic known to the world as "The Doctrine of the Mean." He will next render into English the work to which Dr. Legge gave the title of "The Great Learning," and which Mr. Ku considers as nothing but a treatise on the subject of higher education.

The Nanfengpao says that the following telegram has been despatched by the people of Manchuria to the Department of Foreign Affairs in Japan.—

In spite of your victory in the present war, you have brought it to a close by your magnanimous concessions. If such was the treatment of your enemies, what good treatment must be in store for us, which is a matter of congratulation to the people of East Asia. The knowledge of the Chinese is being widened, and unity gradually prevails among us. We discriminate clearly the right and wrong, and shall repay for any good turn done us. Both foreign countries and the Far East respect you for your policy in Manchuria, and we trust that you will maintain it to the end.

A Peking dispatch states that Prince Tsai Hsun, Third Order, a near kinsman of the cashiered Ex-Prince Tuan, has received a telegram from the latter, who is residing in a small town, not far from the City of Hsian, the capital of Shensi province, to the effect that he is suffering from a serious malady, and also that he is in need of money to maintain and feed the few devoted retainers who have followed their Chief into banishment. As the anger of the Empress Dowager against ex-Prince Tuan has not yet subsided (her Majesty naturally blames Tuan for having caused her flight from Peking in 1900), Prince Tsai Hsun did not dare to tell her Majesty of the plight of the father of the ex-Heir Apparent, P'u Chun, and to beg her Majesty to send Tuan some assistance, so recourse was had, it is stated, to Prince Ching and one or two other relatives of the ex-Prince. A sum of Tls. 5,000, odd, was quietly collected and eventually sent to Tuan, but his prayer that his son, the ex-Heir Apparent, now called Duke P'u Chun—a title given him by the Empress Dowager when taking away from him in 1901 the Heirship to the Dragon Throne—should be sent to Shensi to attend upon him had, perforce, to be denied, no one daring to ask this favour from the Empress Dowager.

It is reported from Tientsin that Viceroy Yuan Shih-k'ai has in hand a scheme to levy a poll tax on the population of Chihli and to abolish certain other taxes under which the people have been suffering for generations. While making the burden on them lighter the Viceroy expects to get more revenue by his scheme; it being estimated that he will be able to get twenty-five million taels out of the tax, the only sufferers by the reform being the officials connected with miscellaneous tax offices in the province. As there are many vested interests to attack and the new scheme may also tempt dishonest officials to tamper with the census that will have to be taken and so cause dissatisfaction and insurrection, the Viceroy with his usual shrewdness recognises the necessity of proceeding slowly and carefully in the matter and the question will be thoroughly threshed and discussed in its pros and cons before any active steps are taken. It is stated, remarks the N. C. Daily News, that the main object of the Viceroy in wishing to inaugurate the poll tax is first, of course, the increased revenue it promises, and next, and just as important, that it will enable the authorities to know just how many able-bodied men the province of Chihli can furnish in case of hostilities occurring.

A Soochow letter, translated by the N. C. Daily News, states that news has been received there from Ch'engtu, the capital of Szechuan province, to the effect that, owing to the energetic action of H.E. Viceroy Hsi Liang, representatives of the gentry and merchants of that province have taken in hand with much enthusiasm the scheme for the construction of a railway between Ch'engtu and Hankow, a line, which is feared that a French syndicate (which had been working for it) would succeed in getting from the ministers of the Waiwupu and Shanghai, spoiling the officials, gentry and mercantile classes of the province into energetic action to strongly oppose. The present estimate of the cost of a railway from Ch'engtu over the border into Hupeh province (to which Hankow belongs) is about ten million taels, and as far as Hankow six millions or so more. Advices received at Soochow from Ch'engtu state that, so far, ten million taels has been guaranteed by the gentry and merchants of Szechuan (this being the reputed one of the wealthiest provinces of China Proper), who on the other hand have been promised by Viceroy Hsi Liang an any sum falling short of ten million taels to be made good by their Provincial Government. The plan now is that as those Szechuan are ready to contribute ten million of the sixteen to twenty million taels need to complete the proposed railway, as to natives of Szechuan who are in the seven provinces, either as officials or as merchants, ought to be made calling upon them to contribute their share and to use their share with the monied classes amongst whom they are residing to subscribe to, and pay shares in, the proposed railway. This appeal has now come in Soochow; the first to receive it being Tan Ch'en Yu, Chief Commissioner of the German-modelled Gendarmerie of Soochow, who is a native of Szechuan, and who has received official permission from Viceroy Hsi Liang, of Szechuan, authorising him to establish in Soochow city an office for the sale of shares in the Ch'uan-Han Railway. It is thought that this method of appealing to their fellow-provincials throughout the Empire, there need be no fear on the part of the people of Szechuan of failure in procuring the necessary fund—that is to say, if those appealed to have the necessary faith, not so much in the success of the venture, as in the honesty and probity of the people in handling the cash.

Besides the 1,000,000 taels already appropriated for the expenses of the autumn movement, the Viceroy of Chihli intends to raise 200 million taels, as, should their Majesties want the original sum would not be sufficient for the purpose.

A Chinese paper says that negotiations have been going on between one of the Grand Secretaries and the Japanese Minister for the establishment of a Chino-Japan Bank at Peking. The terms of the contract will be the same as those of the Russo-Chinese and the Deutsch-Asiatic Bank.

A school for daughters of princes, nobles, and high Ministers of State has been sanctioned by the Empress Dowager in response to the recommendations of their Excellencies Mr. Pei-hsi, Minister of Education and President of the Board of Revenue, and Tan Fang, Governor of Hunan province and one of the five Imperial High Commissioners going abroad.

On November 15th there will be held on the banks of the Yellow River a grand celebration in honour of the completion of the bridge, which is one of the greatest feats in the history of engineering. Among those expected to be present are Their Highnesses Prince Ching, Prince Chun, Viceroy Yuan Shih-k'ai, the Governor of Hunan, and other high officials. Special trains will be run from Peking and Hankow convey the distinguished guests, and feasts, Chinese and foreign, will be served at all important stations. It is reported that 20,000 taels will be expended in celebration of the occasion.

Several returned students from Europe and America have applied to the Board of Education at Peking asking that they be granted a special examination, which would entitle them to receive the degree of Hanlin. It will be remembered that in the 5th Moon several returned students from Japan were given this degree. The Board will grant the petition, and will request the Throne to appoint some date before the end of the year for holding this examination.

The report of the Douglas Steamship Co., Ltd., for the year ended the 30th of June last shows a divisible balance of $196,101, which includes the profit, $128,060, over their book value, realised by the sale of the Hailong and Thaler. It is proposed to pay a dividend of 7 per cent on the paid-up capital, $1,000,000, to write off 46,462 from the value of the company's properties, and place the balance, $79,639, to the credit of the reserve fund.

The revenue collected during the April-June quarter of this year by the Imperial Maritime Customs of China shows an advance of nearly 29 per cent over last year, the totals being, in Haikuan taels:—

Chinese Ports	9,613,372	7,401,816
Kowloon & Lappa	188,138	169,978
Lungchow, Mengtze, Saemao, & Tengkueh	9,879,885	76,037

It may be noted that the revenue collected at Shanghai in the second quarter of this year was Hk. Tls. 3,450,188, against Tls. 2,228,915 in the same quarter of 1904, and Tls. 2,712,707 in 1903.

It is stated in the N. C. Daily News that in order to gain the good will of the terrible Dragon, who rules the waves of the Yellow River and whose wrath has often devastated by inundation vast tracts of land on either side of "China's Sorrow," and to obtain his dragonship's protection over the newly-built Yellow River railway bridge, the Empress Dowager will send Prince Tsaichen, the son of Prince Ching, to sacrifice at the river side and at the Temple of the Dragon King, near the vicinity of the new railway bridge. It is also stated that the Prince will promise, in their Majesties' name, new titles and attributes to the Dragon King if he obeys the Imperial wishes and grants continued protection to the railway bridge from storm and wave.

The North China Daily News records with deep regret the death at his post of Mr. Julius Neumann, Commissioner of the Imperial Maritime Customs at Mengtze, Yü. Our contemporary learns that Mr. Neumann had been suffering for some time from fever, but the exigencies of the service did not permit of his being relieved, and he has died in harness. A native of Hanover, he came out originally to China to the firm of Siemens & Co., and not seeing much prospect of early advancement, joined the Customs service in 1878, and proved himself a most valuable member of the service. Kind-hearted, hospitable, generous, and extremely well informed, he was a pleasant companion and a warm friend, and so genial was his nature, that he could not have made an enemy in this life. It has been his fate of late years to be stationed in rather inaccessible parts of the Empire, but he had nevertheless a large number of friends to whom the news of his death in the far south-west will come as a sad blow.

The writer of Native Notes in the N. C. Daily News says that a private letter from Peking states that the Empress Dowager has decided to establish for the present only what may be called an Upper House of Legislature, to be composed of the Viceroy and Governors of all the provinces of the Empire, who are to go up to Peking once a year to confer on matters of national importance. At other times, while in the provinces, a Viceroy, if any business of importance arises, shall confer with the Governor or Governors under him, and a Governor with Provincial Treasurer, Provincial Judge, Salt Commissioner and substantive Taotais, generically termed "Sze-tao," under him. Prefects, sub-prefects, and departmental and district magistrates shall confer with the gentry and notables of their respective cities, and when the commonalty have anything to propose they shall present their proposals to their own gentry and notables, who shall bring them to the notice of the officials immediately over them. This method of "popular" government will continue until education becomes more general and the masses understand better their individual responsibilities and duties of citizenship.

PERFORMANCE IN MEMORIAM OF ICHIKAWA DANJURO.

There is now going on at the Kabukiza theatre in Tokyo an interesting performance in commemoration of the third anniversary of Ichikawa Danjuro's death. Several plays are represented, among them the well known historical drama of Kwanjen-cho, in which the great Danjuro used to act so splendidly the part of Benkei. The occasion is particularly favourable for foreign visitors since the management have caused excellent English epitomes of the plays to be compiled, so that even without being able to follow the Japanese dialogue an onlooker can apprehend the meaning of what he sees. All the performers are pupils of the renowned actor and the interest is greatly enhanced by the consent of his two daughters to appear in several dances. Our readers are aware, doubtless, that women do not act upon the Japanese stage, female parts being taken by men. It has long been felt, however, that this restriction should not be maintained. Not originally a feature of the Japanese stage, the exclusion of women was a rule enacted in the interests of morality, and may now be regarded as somewhat obsolete. Danjuro, at all events, seems to have held that view, for the education he caused to be given to his daughters pointed evidently to their ultimate adoption of the histrionic career. He did not, however, consummate his purpose. The young ladies danced from time to time in public on special occasions and charmed every one by their exceedingly graceful and skilled performance, but of late years, and especially since their distinguished father's death, they appear to have retired altogether into private life. Now, however, on this third anniversary of their parent's decease, they have decided to lend their aid, and the explanation they give of their motives, as well as the announcement made by Danjuro's pupils are very touching:—

We respectfully beg to inform the general public that we have been invited to take part in the dramatic performances which are to be given in memory of our deceased father, Ichikawa Danjuro, by his pupils. As we left the stage several years ago and specially as one of us is a married woman, we thought it rather improper to re-appear before the public and at first declined the invitation. Many of the friends and patrons of our father, however, urged us to reconsider, saying that there was nothing objectionable in our participating in an enterprise which would please his spirit. They further told us that it would not be good for us were we to stand aloof from what our father's pupils undertook with such praiseworthy sentiment. In the end, we were prevailed upon to waive our first decision. We earnestly beg the general public that it will kindly appreciate our motive and give patronage to the undertaking, taking us as something of our father's image and overlooking the inferiority of our performances.

JISU-KO AND FUKI-KO,
Daughters of the late Danjuro.

September, 1905.

Time flies like an arrow. Three years have already passed since our master Ichikawa Danjuro IX departed from this world.

In order to commemorate the sad anniversary, we have agreed among ourselves and, after due consultation with the family of our late lamented master, have decided to give dramatic performances in his honour at Kabukiza theatre. The pieces we have selected, as mentioned in the programme, are among the favourite dramas of our master. Placed beside his art, ours is so inferior as to forbid comparison. Still, we venture to hope that the general public, which admired his excellent art, will be interested by being reminded of it by seeing our performances. It is our intention to give something which will convey his memory to posterity. We hereby earnestly solicit the warm patronage of the general public.

Pupils of the late Ichikawa Danjuro.

NOTES ON CURRENT EVENTS.

On the 16th instant the Foreign Office in Tokyo published the following telegram:— "The Berlin Tageblatt, the Berlin Bourse Gazette and other journals, in a tone similar to that of the Vossische Zeitung, condemn the disturbances in Tokyo and elsewhere. They say that in view of such facts the civilization of Japan, which had obtained the applause of the world, is really open to doubt. The saying familiar to the world as applicable when criticising the Russians, will now be said to be applicable to the Japanese, namely, 'take off the skin of a Japanese and you find a barbarian.'

We make this translation for the benefit of our German local contemporary since it has ventured to question whether the journals of Berlin made any such statements, and has also been betrayed by its own defective intelligence into accusing us of misconstruction.

The Hochi says that 26 privately owned Japanese ships were sunk by the Russians during the war, namely, 10 steamers, 13 sailing ships of foreign rig and 3 junks. Twenty fishing smacks also disappeared. No arrangement having been made at Portsmouth for compensating the unfortunate owners of these ships, they are virtually without resource.

Count Toda succeeds the late Baron San-nomiya as Chief Chamberlain, and Mr. Ito Iukichi becomes Vice-chief, retaining his former post of Equerry to Prince Arisugawa.

Rear-Admiral Nebogatoff and the Commanders of the ships that surrendered with him in the Sea of Japan, having been deprived of their commissions by order of the Tsar, are now private individuals and as such can no longer be properly detained as prisoners of war. The Emperor of Japan, with his usual clemency, has therefore given them permission at their own request to return to Russia. These unfortunate officers have been condemned in Russia without a hearing. Doubtless they sent to St. Petersburg a full written statement of their case, but without detailed examination of the men they commanded by a duly constituted court of inquiry, it is hard to understand how justice can have been done to them. Does the Russian Government intend to lay down the principle that whereas a military man may surrender in the face of circumstances which render resistance altogether hopeless, such latitude of choice is denied to a naval man? Naturally, without knowing the exact details of the facts by which the Russian authorities are guided to their decision it is impossible to form a definite opinion, but the decision certainly seems to suggest the above conclusion.

It appears that Admiral Rojestvensky's condition is not at all satisfactory. The wounds on his body are healed but that on his head is still open, and there are plain evidences that the bone has been splintered.

But as the wound is deep, reaching to the immediate neighbourhood of the brain, the surgeons can not meddle with it. In addition to this the Admiral is attacked by gastric troubles from which he has long suffered. He is unable to move without assistance, and his legs are much swollen. If this last symptom comes from the heart, the case is serious.

Baron Komura appears to be now convalescent. It is expected that he will leave New York for Vancouver on the 26th instant.

A sensational story has been published to the effect that Captain Iijichi, of the Mikasa, was so much afflicted by the burning of the ship that he threw himself from a window and was picked up badly hurt. This is officially denied. The truth is that he received a slight injury in the torpedo section at Saseho, and that he is now undergoing treatment in hospital. Nothing is officially stated as to the nature of the injury, but rumour alleges that it was due to slipping accidentally from some elevated platform which Captain Iijichi was crossing. Everything that happens just at present receives a sinister aspect at the hands of the agitators.

Count Matsukata's trouble is now said to be of the brain. His Excellency was attacked with illness while travelling recently in the interests of the Red Cross Society, of which he is President. He returned to his villa at Kamakura where he is now undergoing medical treatment. On the 21st the Emperor sent His Majesty's Chief Physician, Dr. Oka, to visit the patient, and a Chamberlain was despatched on the following day to inquire as to the Count's condition.

In the cases of the following four ships, and their cargoes the appeals lodged against the decisions of the Prize Courts at Saseho and Yokosuka have been dismissed and the vessels are declared lawful prizes of war:—

German steamer Fughing (1,393 tons) with the money (67,000 roubles) found on board.
Swedish steamer Vegga (2,562 tons) with her cargo of 3,626 tons of Cardiff coal.
British steamer Pruderman (3,019 tons) with her cargo of 4,000 tons of Cardiff coal.
British steamer Scotsman (1,679 tons) with her cargo of 20,000 bags of Saigon rice.

The Kokumin Shinbun says that there can be no doubt that some 1,500 Japanese are held prisoners in Russia. Our contemporary gives the following list of combatants so held:—

	Officers, N.C.	Officers	Men.	Totals.
Army.....	21	77	932	1,024
Navy.....	4	14	14	22
Total.....	25	75	946	1,046

In addition to the above there are 341 non-combatants, bringing the total to 1,387. We do not know how the Kokumin reaches the figure of 1,500. On the other hand, the Russian prisoners in Japan number 72,000. It is expected that when the time comes for handing them over, all those in Shizuoka and eastward will be given up in Yokohama; those in Yamaguchi and westward, in Nagasaki; and those in the central districts, in Kobe.

It is at least a display of desperate courage on the part of the German local daily, to endeavour to shield the Berlin newspapers from the consequences of their utterances by denying that they said anything of the kind. But the falsehood is very clumsy, for the Foreign Office's telegram summarizing these utterances was published by all the Tokyo journals, and the accusations thus preferred against Japanese civilization in connexion with the recent Tokyo riots are perfectly familiar to the Japanese nation at large. We recommend the German local daily to measure public credulity by a standard a little less liberal.

It appears that London has been invaded by mosquitoes. They have been carried over-sea in some unexplained manner, and making their appearance in the first place at the docks, they gradually spread until they are now found almost everywhere. Especially plentiful are they in the lower marshy part of the Thames Valley and in the neighbourhood of Muswell Hill. The curious thing is that either they are much more venomous than their Far-Eastern relatives, or else people in England are much more susceptible to their poison than Occidentals living in China and Japan. For we read that men, women and children who have been bitten find it necessary to seek medical advice. "One doctor in Bowes Park," says the Daily Chronicle, "treated as many as forty cases within a week. The bites have serious effects. They are succeeded by cellulitis and the part becomes swollen and indurated, in some instances accompanied with a septic rash over the joints. In other instances vertigo has occurred, with an intense feeling of depression." It is not only in London that the mosquitoes are causing trouble. Near the head waters of Portsmouth Harbour they have become so serious a pest that recourse has been had to mosquito nets as the only means of securing to quiet night.

The German Government is nothing if not thorough. Its methods of inducing German subjects to emigrate from Australia to the Bismarck archipelago are very striking. "Emigrants," we read, "are offered 250 acres of land free, and free rations of biscuits and meat for twelve months; thirty indentured labourers were to be allowed every twelve families, also two oxen and a horse, while maize and cocoanuts for planting can be obtained gratis; and to complete the list of benefactions—that are to be showered like the leaves of Vallombrosa on the heads of intending settlers—they are offered free passages in the Norddeutscher boats for themselves, their wives and their families." The Australian Review of Reviews notes that in spite of these extraordinary inducements only 8 emigrants have hitherto responded, and one of them is already on his way home disgusted.

Akiyama, the Soshi leader, has been arrested. It is stated that he led the attack upon the Christian churches on the night of the 5th.

The following naval promotions are announced.

Rear-Admiral Miura Ko to be Vice-Admiral.
Rear-Admiral Kimotsuki Kaneyuki to be Vice-Admiral.
Rear-Admiral Arai Yukuan to be Vice-Admiral.
Captain Sakai Tadatoshi to be Rear-Admiral.

We may mention here that Vice-Admiral Rojstvensky has been promoted to the rank of full Admiral. The Kokumin, in reporting this promotion, says that it is in accordance with the time regulations.

It is confidently stated, though not officially, that the Novik will be floated this month. Work has been busily carried on so as to bring her to the surface before the northern seas begin to freeze, which event may be looked for in October. Doubtless the Japanese would be very glad to add the Novik to their fleet. Among all the Russian battle-ships and cruisers she is the only one that really distinguished herself from the day of the first fight under the guns at Port Arthur to the day of her sinking in Korsakoff Bay. Her proceedings were certainly open to censure on the ground of rashness, but had her consorts behaved similarly, the result of the maritime situation might have been very different.

The people of Odaka in Fukushima prefecture have distinguished themselves by inaugurating a ceremony of rejoicing for the restoration of peace. On the 23rd instant they took this step, and they deserve to be sincerely complimented on it.

The Kokumin Shinbun has a telegram denying the statement of Colonel Ogorodnikoff's suicide. Other Tokyo journals repeat it, however, and assign the cause to the defalcations of a clerk whom the Colonel had in his employ. We imagine that the Kokumin's information is the most trustworthy.

It is stated that Captain Gunji is held prisoner by the Russians at Milysk, which is some 80 miles from Petropavlovsk. He will of course be released in common with the other Japanese held by the Russians, but it is doubtful whether the event will be in time for him to return home before the freeing of the Sea of Okhotsk.

A very pretty book to send to those friends is published by Mr. Tamamura, the photographer of Benten-dori. It is entitled "The Ceremonies of a Japanese Marriage," and relates in some twenty pictures a ritual which still prevails in a middle-class family from the time the go-between arranges a marriage until the third day after the ceremony, when the bride goes to pay calls on friends or relations who have offered congratulations upon the event. The pictures are in coloured bromide and are executed with all the delicacy and charm which we are accustomed to associate with all Mr. Tamamura's work as a matter of course.

The task of raising the Mikasa has been entrusted to Vice-Admiral Arai, who was successful in rescuing the Varyag. Operations have already commenced, and it is expected that the historic battle-ship will soon resume her place on the list of Japan's effective naval forces.

The six men arrested on the 5th and accused as instigating the people to riot have been released, the public prosecutor deciding that no sufficient testimony offered for proceeding against them.

The great naval demonstration which is to take place in Tokyo Bay will probably be in the middle of October. A powerful British Squadron will be present as well as a large part of the Japanese fleet. The occasion will mark the end of the war on sea, as the auxiliary cruisers will then be released and there will be a celebration in honour of the restoration of peace. A grand banquet at the Palace is spoken of. We presume that Admiral Togo and his distinguished fellow-commanders will be obliged on the occasion to show themselves to the public as long to receive the ovation which their countrymen long to give them.

The Fiji Shimpo believes that the next talked of special session of the Diet will precede the ordinary session by more than a week. Many reasons—our contemporary calls them "excuses"—will be found for postponement, but it appears to us that the simplest and most obvious reason is one of time. Even if the special session were announced immediately after the ratification of the peace treaty, the Houses could not meet before the middle of November, and they will meet at the end of that month or in the beginning of December at any rate.

The number of wounded men in Japan, which at one time reached the great figure of some sixty thousand, is now reduced to 31,152, of whom 27,127 are in hospital, the rest being convalescent but not yet entirely released from medical treatment. Tokyo has the largest number of hospital patients (6,333) and Hiroshima stands next (4,766).

The Reviann has been re-named the Hisen. Nothing is officially stated as to her condition or the probable time of her voyage to Japan, but the idea is that in order to render her fit for sea repairs occupying until the end of October will be necessary. The Pallada having suffered from fire, will probably have to be docked at Port Arthur before she can come to Japan. We take these details from the Jiji Shimpo. Meanwhile work is vigorously continuing on the Pohieda, and the outlook is that by the end of this month or the beginning of next at latest she will be floated. It is stated that something like a hundred steam-launches, destroyers and gun-boats are still lying on the bottom of the harbour. Their removal is necessary in order to restore freedom of navigation, but until they are raised it is impossible to say whether they will be of any value. The entire work will probably be concluded by the close of this year. Port Arthur has been a veritable grave. History contains no parallel instance of such destruction as the place has witnessed.

It is stated that the Third Army, General Nogai's, will embark for home at Yingkow and that transports are already being prepared for it. But the Third Army is still at a great distance from Yingkow and unless the railway can be employed to transport it, many days must still elapse before it can reach Yingkow.

Admiral Nebogatoff and the Captains of the three vessels which surrendered at the same time as the Nikolai I. were released on parole on the 26th instant and have left Kobe, en route for home.

It is stated that the Russian Volunteer Fleet will employ a number of the Norddeutscher Lloyd steamers for the purpose of restoring the Shanghai-Vladivostok line, via Nagasaki and Korean ports.

BASE-BALL.

Seven runs to one looks like a bad licking, but as a matter of fact the score in the match between the Y. C. & A. C. and the Nobles' School, played in Yokohama on Saturday afternoon reads much worse than it was in reality. Up to the seventh innings the chances were even and there was quite a sporting feeling afloat that the one nine would manage to bring off the necessary run and win out. The batting on both sides as good, the fielding beyond reproach, the itching smart and at times troublesome, the catching most commendable. A better exposition of the game we have never seen on the Yokohama ground: every player was "in the game for the game." Then came that fatal seventh when Yokohama met its Marathon and found a stubborn fight turned into a wholesale rout. A wild throw by Correa began the débâche, which led to the Nobles' School team getting back me; while Atkinson gave the opening opportunity to his opponents in the eighth innings. Then wild throw by pitcher, and a muff by Merriman followed, and they were errors that had to be paid for very dearly—three runs. Perhaps it was that Yokohama's staying powers were not equal to the big drafts drawn upon the team's resources by such a capital but trying game: perhaps it was merely the "luck" of the game, the sporting chance which lends savour to all athletic contests. At any rate the Japanese team won and won on their merits. Teams:—

Y. C. & A. C.		Nobles' School.
Correa	P.	Y. Mishima
Thorn	C.	K. Tachibana
Blake	1 B.	K. Shimadzu
Merriman	2 B.	S. Naito
Mollison	3 B.	N. Kuroda
Atkinson	S. S.	M. Tokugawa
Gonzales	L. F.	Y. Ohara
Thompson	C. F.	T. Yamasawa
Messer	R. F.	I. Tsuboi

SCORE BY INNI GS.		1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9	Total.
Nobles' School	0	1	0	0	0	0	3	3	0	7
Y. C. & A. C.	0	1	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	1

Mr. Egbert of the Cincinnati and Mr. K. Yamamoto were umpires.

A six-inning game of baseball took place on the Cricket-ground on Tuesday between the Y. C. and A. C. and a team from the U.S.S. Cincinnati. The boys in blue romped round the home nine just as they felt inclined and the game ended in 17 runs being chalked down to the Cincinnati to never a one for Yokohama. The local representatives, however, had a chance of seeing what baseball is really like and perhaps their little experience will stand them in good stead when the return game is played. Teams:—

U. S. S. CINCINNATI.		Y. C. and A. C.
Tyler	P.	Correa
Weaver	C.	Thompson
Stevenson	1 B.	Blake
Tighe	2 B.	Merriman
McAhey	3 B.	Mollison
Jennings	S. S.	Atkinson
Green	R. F.	Messer
Egbert	C. F.	Thorn
Corning	L. F.	Gonzales

Score by innings:—

		1	2	3	4	5	6	Total.
Y. C. and A. C.	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	0
Cincinnati	0	1	7	3	2	4	17

YACHTING.

INTERPORT RACES: MOSQUITO YACHT CLUB AND KOBE SAILING CLUB.

YOKOHAMA WINS THE RUBBER.

The first race, sailed on Saturday morning, resulted in a win for Yokohama. The Winsome was sailed by Messrs. W. W. Campbell and W. Carst, representing the Kobe Sailing Club; the Mosquito Yacht Club representatives, Messrs. Gunn and Hall, sailed the Pele.

The two boats made a good start at 10.26 a.m., Winsome being slightly in the lead and to windward. But before the Harbour Entrance was reached, Pele had drawn ahead, and was able to tack across Winsome's bows near the white light. The wind was easterly and both boats made a short board on starboard tack before they went for the lightship. Leaving the lightship to port they were timed:—

Pele	11.04.00
Winsome	11.3.00

Pele's crew lost some time on the next leg, as instead of looking for the mark boat between the Lightship and Tsurumi, they sailed for some distance first towards Tachibana before discovering their mistake. Hauling on the wind they reached the mark boat only 51 seconds ahead of Winsome. Returning to the Lightship, Winsome lost 12 seconds, and Pele continued to gain to the finish, the times being:—

Pele	11.41.30
Winsome	11.43.06

In the afternoon the second race was sailed, and resulted in a win for Kobe.

The boats were changed and the Kobe crew sailed Pele, against the Mosquito Yacht Club men in Winsome. The wind was very light and uncertain, but Pele went away in front and was never caught.

The wind, which was light and from the eastward at the start, got lighter as the race progressed. The yachts crossed the line at the following times:—

Pele	2.37.17
Winsome	2.37.33

Pele got out of the harbour first, and at the Bluff mark, with the wind gradually dying away, the times were:—

Pele	4.42.30
Winsome	4.46.21

On the beat back to the Quarantine ship the conditions were practically unaltered, as these times show:—

Pele	5.20.30
Winsome	5.23.52

At sundown the breeze freshened a trifle and things got more interesting from this point. With spinnakers out the run to the Harbour Entrance was quickly negotiated and Winsome considerably reduced her rival's lead, so as they entered the harbour Pele's advantage was only 58 seconds. But coming down the harbour she drew away again and the finishing times were:—

Pele	5.55.46
Winsome	5.57.00

The third match came off on Sunday morning, over a course from Yokohama to Tomioka, a distance of 12¼ miles. The breeze was easterly and moderate. Again Pele, this time sailed by the Yokohama representatives, bore away the honours, winning the race with 2 mins. 39 secs. to spare. The record of the race as told by times at various points can be easily followed. Start 10.25.

Winsome	10.25.01
Pele	10.25.10

LIGHT SHIP.

Pele	10.54.00
Winsome	10.54.32

NAGAHAMA BUOY.

Pele	11.50.30
Winsome	11.50.9.5

WIDOW BUOY.

Pele	12.35.30
Winsome	12.37.05

FINISH.

Pele	1.10.58
Winsome	1.13.57

The Kobe Sailing Club's representatives were entertained to luncheon at Tomioka by the Mosquito Yacht Club at the conclusion of the race, and a merry time ensued, 14 "Wet bobs" sitting around the hospitable board.

The Yokohama Yacht Club had three races on the programme, on Saturday but the wind during the afternoon was too light to enable any satisfactory racing. The Cruising Class started at 2 p.m. to sail over the Widow Buoy course for the Kingfisher Cup. Kathleen got away best at the start and was never caught up. Wanderer and Surprise gave up. Nina was obliged to anchor as the ebb tide was stronger than the wind, but she eventually finished the course. Kathleen and Asagao were able to get well inshore out of the tide and kept going all the time. Edna finished first in the 21 raters, but Witch won on handicap.

According to investigations published by the Agricultural and Commercial Department, the production of gold and silver in Japan, including Formosa, is as follows:—

	Gold.	Silver.
	MONNIE.	MONNIE.
1901	943,360	14,598,749
1902	1,194,278	15,371,045
1903	1,158,030	15,627,245
1904	1,180,969	16,532,821
1905 (Jan-July)	815,235	11,611,131
" (whole year's estimate)	1,338,288	20,004,703
—monne. 3.7565 grams.

Taking the price of gold at yen 5 and silver at sen 14 per monne, the following calculations are arrived at:—

	Gold.	Silver.
	yen.	yen.
1901	4,716,800	2,043,825
1902	5,991,390	2,151,945
1903	5,790,150	2,187,814
1904	5,904,845	2,300,595
1905 (Jan-July)	4,076,175	1,602,559
" (whole year's estimate)	6,691,442	2,800,658

THE AFTERMATH.

THE newspaper accounts of the final scenes in Portsmouth at the time of the conference are now reaching Japan, and from a leading article in the Nichi Nichi Shimbun we gather that the New York Tribune's description of the ovation given to M. WITTE and Baron ROSEN when they returned to their hotel, and of M. WITTE's proud exclamation pas un sou, is causing some fresh commotion in this country. It is true that a still more vociferous ovation was accorded to Baron KOMURA and his party, but the Tribune says that the Japanese Plenipotentiaries showed dejection whereas the Russians were brimming over with elation. These things are evidently interpreted as conclusive evidence that the public regarded the issue of the conference as a victory for Russia, and from the Nichi Nichi Shimbun's writing we gather that no little chagrin is felt in our contemporary's sanctum whence the sentiment will spread to the Japanese people and probably renew their feeling of hostility to the treaty. It is indeed a bitter trial to the Japanese people. That they made a great concession is beyond question and that Russia successfully maintained the semblance, at all events, of being prepared to continue the war unless that concession were made, is equally incontrovertible. It amounts to, this in crude terms—Japan asked for certain things; Russia retorted, "If you insist upon those demands I will continue the fight;" Japan replied, "Very well, I will withdraw the demands." That is the case in unqualified outlines. Of course Russia rejoices. Nobody supposes that after a war of terrible dimensions, she welcomes peace with less enthusiasm than any other State would welcome it. Equally of course M. WITTE and his colleagues claim a diplomatic victory. Why should they not, since they obtained what they did not expect and since they accomplished a mission which seemed at one moment hopeless? The chagrin of the Japanese is thus natural and inevitable. But let us look a little deeper. Upon whose shoulders really rests the reproach of having made money the crucial question: upon the shoulders of Russia who stood before the world protesting vehemently that she would continue the combat rather than re-imburse Japan's outlays, or upon the shoulders of Japan who, by actually abandoning her demand, afforded a conclusive proof that she valued the lives of her soldiers more highly than the money she might have gained by sacrificing them? It is claimed by Russia's admirers that the adroit manoeuvring of her plenipotentiaries brought Japan face to face with the dilemma of having to choose between prolonging the war or consenting to pay her own expenses. But is it not perfectly plain that in order to place Japan in such a dilemma the Russians themselves had to assume the unequivocal attitude of preferring to fight rather than to pay? They left the choice to Japan and she chose in accordance with the dictates of humanity and civilization. They deprived themselves of the choice and deliberately ignored those dictates. If that was adroit manoeuvring, one can only say that it was very brutal adroitness. In Russia's case the jingling of the guinea can evidently heal the hurt that honour feels. For although she would fight rather than pay money, there were other things for which she would not fight. She would not fight rather than openly accept the responsibility of having caused the war by her iniquitous breach of international faith and by her unscrupulous aggressions. To accept that responsibility seemed in her eyes a lighter thing than to disburse a sum of money. She indubitably accepted it when she ultimately bowed to concessions en masse by accepting which originally in part she might have averted war altogether. She would not fight to restore the prestige of her flag. It seemed in her eyes a lighter thing to sheathe the sword after an unbroken series of defeats on sea and on shore than to disburse a sum of money. She left the lists absolutely defeated by a foe whom she had professed to regard with supreme contempt but—she carried her purse with her in her retreat. That is what the story comes to when we analyse it. Yet some Japanese are tormented by the thought that their country suffered diplomatic discomfiture, and many Russians are saying that if they had their Yalu, their Port Arthur, their Liaoyang, their Heikau-tai, their Mukden and their Japan Sea, they had also their Portsmouth. Some Japanese think that by an act of noble magnanimity their splendid victories were tarnished; many Russians think that by a display of money-worship they obliterated the disgrace of their long series of defeats.

THE JAPANESE AND THE ROMANS.

MANY foreign observers undertake from time to time to analyse Japanese character and it can not be denied that they bring to their task at least as much assurance as perspicacity. Seldom, however, do we learn direct from the Japanese what they think about their own character, and when they do become communicative on such a topic their remarks are all the more interesting. An instance is furnished in the columns of three periodicals published in Tokyo. One of them is called the Jidai Shicho (Thoughts of the Times), which has for editors the well known Mr. YOKOI TOKIO and Mr. ANEZAKI MASA HARU. This magazine, in a recent issue, catalogued certain traits of disposition which the Japanese and the Romans of old seem to have in common. The principles inculcated by bushido head the list. The followers of bushido cultivate valour, respect for truth and eschewal of everything dishonourable. They are prepared to sacrifice their lives at any moment for their country's sake (pro aris et focis) and they prefer death with honour to life with shame. These were Roman characteristics also. In politics again history shows the two peoples to have similar natural endowments: both exhibit a disposition to adapt their administrative systems to the circumstances of the time. Rome was first a kingdom; then a republic and then an empire. Japan had first a patriarchal polity; then a feudal, and then a constitutional. The two nations were always practical and materialistic rather than theoretical or metaphysical. Their philosophy was a kind of ethics; their literature dealt with the simple every-day thoughts of humanity. Further the Romans were eminently defective in economic ability. They never realized the prime necessity of basing their politics on the economic organization of society, and thus, though they conquered many countries the power of the central government declined, the real strength of the State passed into the hands of the localities and the empire fell. Japan is now on the eve of a great post-bellum expansion, and unless she shows more capacity to adapt her policy to her economic conditions, it will fare ill with her also.

To this article, of which the gist is here set down, the Dai-Nippon (Greater Japan) replied. The Dai Nippon has for editor-in-chief Mr. MATSUMOTO KUMPEI. It prints a Chinese section and an English section, and it thus seeks a field in three nations. Its view is that if resemblances are taken: constituting a likeness, then a snake's head may be said to be like a tortoise. In the matter of militarism the Romans and the Japanese may well be compared but in the matter of political endowments they are very different. The Japanese are clever in small things but have no genius for great things: their eminent deficiency. As for the Romans on the contrary, they had no sooner conquered a nation than they at once assimilated it and the conquered people gladly became Romans. On the other hand the Japanese, though by martial prowess they have won victories over several foreign nations, yet to be quite wanting in the power of assimilation and consequently their armed successes have no permanent result. A case in point is that of Korea. In 1894-5 the Japanese drove the Chinese from Korea, but they did not yet the least appearance of the Koreans placing confidence in the Japanese. The war just concluded has brought them more completely than ever within the sphere of Japan's influence, but it is doubtful how far the latter's future conduct of her Korean relations will confirm the effects of her victory. The Dai Nippon arrives at the conclusion that instead of contentedly resting on points of resemblance the wise course is to discover and repair defects by searching for points of dissimilarity.

The Shin-Koron (New Public Opinion) takes up this question of power of assimilation and avers that the Japanese, so far from possessing any capacity to assimilate other nations, are prone to be assimilated by them. How many Japanese are there, the magazine asks, who, after spending 5 years in China, have failed to become "sinicized." Set a Japanese in even Korea for 10 years and he is found to have adopted many Korean customs and methods. Still truer is this of the results of sojourn in the Occident. A certain member of the Japanese Legation in Paris, unconsciously alluded to France as "our country" after his return to Tokyo, and Baron NISHI became so thoroughly Russified by his stay in St. Petersburg that he sang the praises of autocratic government and advocated the abolition of the constitution. Few people of any nationality escape entirely the influence of their environment but the Shin-Koron thinks that its countrymen are particularly prone to be thus affected, and that their title to be called a great nation is correspondingly defective.

Commenting on the above, the Dai Nippon says that to be assimilated is in many respects to suffer moral defeat, and that to be deficient in power of assimilation is to display inferiority of moral essentials. Seeking to make a great figure in the world despite such deficiency is like ascending a tree to look for fish. Suppose that Japan were to fall in ruins, what vestiges would remain of Japanese spirit or Japanese civilization? The one and only thing she has now to be proud of is her military capacity. Remove this and in all respects she is in a vanquished position vis-à-vis other countries.

We make no comment on these remarks but simply present them to our readers as an expression of Japanese opinion.

MR. LONGFORD AND BARON SUYEMATSU.

BARON SUYEMATSU, at the request of the Editor of the Magazine of Commerce, has replied to Mr. JOSEPH LONGFORD's scathing denunciation of Japanese merchants in the Contemporary Review. No reply to such charges can be conclusive. If on a general survey of a man's career he is accused of being a rascal, the imputation can not be rebutted effectually merely by saying that he is not. This difficulty of constructing a valid defence against a charge couched in general terms becomes doubly great where the victim is a corporate body, for it must either be discussed as an entity, in which case proofs can never be convincing, or examined individually when only the most partial deductions may be drawn. Baron SUYEMATSU is evidently conscious of this difficulty, nor can we say that he has fully overcome it. Perhaps his best answer would have been one that did not occur to him because of want of knowledge, the answer, namely, that few more prejudiced critics ever went into court than Mr. LONGFORD. There are some men who from the moment of landing in Japan until the moment of leaving it seldom succeed in discovering any good trait in the Japanese. We have known several of these men and Mr. LONGFORD was one of them. He believed, of course, that he had ample warrant for his opinions, nor did he allow himself to be influenced for a moment by the fact of his own singularity. Something had warped his judgment at the outset and he never recovered his mental balance so far as the Japanese were concerned. Take, for example, his assertion that "oppression and social degradation combined to make the (Japanese) merchant a * * * striking model of dishonesty and timidity, unwilling and unable to make the smallest monetary sacrifice for his own or his country's fair fame." Does not that assertion suffice to discredit the whole of Mr. LONGFORD's testimony? How can he, how can any foreigner, possess materials sufficient to warrant the formulation of a charge so sweeping as that the Japanese merchant is unwilling and unable to make the smallest monetary sacrifice for his own or his country's fair fame? If Mr. LONGFORD had paused for a moment to think he must have perceived, despite all his prejudice, that the story of the war just ended furnishes a complete contradiction of his accusation. The heavy taxes which they paid without a murmur, their large subscriptions to the war loans, their munificent donations to the Red Cross Society, and their handsome contributions to the volunteer-fleet fund—are these things consistent with the wholesale charge that Japanese merchants are unwilling and unable to make the smallest monetary sacrifice for their own or their country's good? But the fact is that Mr. LONGFORD is as blind to the conditions of the present day as he is indifferent to the history of the past. We commend to his attention the annals of Japanese Commerce as set forth in the "Oriental Series." He will there learn things about the Japanese merchant which are evidently quite unknown to him at present, and perhaps he will see reason to modify his views, though as to that we do not profess to be sanguine.

In answer to Mr. LONGFORD's scathing denunciation of the class of Japanese traders who flocked to the open ports in the early days, Baron SUYEMATSU, speaking with apologetic tones—for even in the face of such abuse of his countrymen he does not forget to be polite—suggests that perhaps there was some fault on the foreign side also. There was. To the open ports at all times since trade with Japan commenced, there came foreigners of varied quality: many merchants of the highest type to be found anywhere, many of exceedingly mediocre type, and a few of distinctly evil type. What Sir RUTHERFORD ALCOCK wrote on this subject in 1859 is instructive:—

Looking at the indiscreet conduct, to use the mildest term, of many, if not all the foreign residents, the innumerable and almost daily recurring causes of dispute and irritation between the Japanese officials of all grades and the foreign traders, both as to the nature of the trade they enter into, and the mode in which they conduct it, open in many instances to grave objection, I cannot wonder at the existence of much ill-feeling. And when to those sources of irritation and animosity among the official classes, are added the irregularities, the violence, and the disorders, with the continued scenes of drunkenness incidental to seaports where sailors from men-of-war and merchant ships are allowed to come on shore, sometimes in large numbers, I confess, so far from sharing in any sweeping conclusions to the prejudice of the Japanese, I think the rarity of retaliative acts of violence on their part is a striking testimony in their favour.

Our own people and the foreigners generally take care that there shall be no lack of grounds of distrust and irritation. Utterly reckless of the future; intent only on profiting if possible by the present moment to the utmost; regardless of treaties or future consequences, they are wholly engaged just now in shipping off all the gold currency of Japan. . . . Any coöperation with the diplomatic agents of their respective countries in their efforts to lay the foundations of permanent, prosperous, and mutually beneficial commerce between Japan and Western nations is out of the question. On the contrary, it is the merchants who, no doubt, create the most serious difficulties. It may be all very natural and what was to have been anticipated, but it is not the less embarrassing. And in estimating the difficulties to be overcome in any attempt to improve the aspect of affairs, if the ill-disguised enmity of the governing classes and the indisposition of the Executive Government to give practical effect to the treaties be classed among the first and principal of these, the unscrupulous character and dealings of foreigners who frequent the ports for the purposes of trade are only second, and scarcely inferior in importance, from the sinister character of the influence they exercise.

This is very strong testimony and we can not suppose that its truth was limited to the days when Sir RUTHERFORD wrote. There is fault on both sides, but the difference is that the Japanese has refrained from complaint while the foreigner has complained loudly. It is not to be denied that many foreign merchants of the highest probity have suffered severely at the hands of Japanese who had neither ability nor disposition to distinguish between the good and the bad. But even these men will admit that the outcry against Japanese commercial improbity has been swelled by penny-a-liners to absurdly extravagant dimensions.

THE NEW ANGLO-JAPANESE ALLIANCE.

AT first sight the new Anglo-Japanese alliance seems to be a purely defensive compact. But that idea is dispelled by closer scrutiny. If either of the contracting parties, being subjected to unprovoked attack or threatened with aggressive action, becomes involved in war, the other is pledged to come to its assistance at once. Now in modern times there is no such thing as a war in which each of the belligerents does not claim to have been forced into the lists by unprovoked attack or aggressive action on the part of the other. Thus had South Africa been within the purview of such an agreement, Japan would have been obliged to go to Great Britain's assistance in the Boer war; and had this alliance existed two years ago, England would have been obliged to take the field on Japan's side in the Russo-Japanese war. The strictly defensive character of the contract is therefore illusory. Nevertheless the pacific intentions of the contracting parties show themselves unequivocally. They have been careful to prepare an instrument which gives no evidence whatever of truculence, and which may be confidently counted on to preserve the peace for at least ten years to come, and also for as much longer as neither of the Powers concerned desires to denounce the arrangement. In fact the treaty may almost be called a permanent guarantee of tranquillity in East Asia. There is a special extension in the cases of India and Korea. Japan is to be free to take such measures of guidance, control and protection as she may deem proper and necessary to safeguard and advance her paramount political, military and economic interests in Korea, and Great Britain is bound to support her in any consequences such measures may entail. On the other hand, Great Britain is to be free to take in the proximity of the Indian frontier such measures as she may find necessary for safeguarding her Indian possessions, and Japan is bound to support her in any consequences such measures may entail. These clauses are wide in their scope. They leave to each Power a great deal of discretion, for they absolve Japan from any obligation to respect the independence of Korea, and they warrant England in invading Afghanistan or Tibet should such a step suggest itself to her statesmen as indispensable in the interests of India's safety. Further, the independence and integrity of the Chinese empire are guaranteed. Henceforth no Power may venture to trespass upon China's territories without incurring the hostility of England and Japan, neither may any Power attempt to acquire exclusive privileges in any district of the twenty-one provinces. That is a most extensive veto. It puts an end to several dangers which menace China at the present moment. China, indeed, is one of the principal beneficiaries of the treaty, for England and Japan constitute themselves guardians of her independence and integrity. It has been repeatedly asserted in several quarters that any compact of this nature must be construed as hostile to Russia and even to Germany. But the terms of the convention show explicitly that it is not directed against any Power which refrains from attempting to subvert the status quo in East Asia, to disturb the principle of equal opportunities for the commerce and industry of all nations in China, or to challenge the territorial rights of the contracting parties. Any State essaying such enterprises will find itself confronted by the united strength of England and Japan, but no one would be justified in classing Germany as such a State, and although Russia's past history warrants her inclusion in the category, she would be the last to admit the imputation and therefore she should be the last to complain directly or imply indirectly that this alliance is directed against her. In fact no civilized Power can retain its title to civilization if it takes umbrage at a compact inspired by the highest motives that have ever graced an international agreement. English conservatives will doubtless be found who condemn the alliance as a departure from England's traditional policy of "splendid isolation," but even if it were preferring to endorse the unreasoning dictum that any policy ever conceived by human intelligence is suitable for all conditions and all times, it would still be an honour and a credit to Great Britain that she had joined hands with another State to defend against selfish aggression the noble principle of equal opportunities for all nations. It is a lasting to credit the Allies that they have united for the attainment of such an object, and it is a matter of profound congratulation for Eastern Asia that peace and tranquillity are assured to it during ten years at all events.

They left

LOSS OF THE "STANLEY DOLLAR."

The following is the finding and order of a Naval Court held at the British Consulate-General, Yokohama, on the 23rd day of September, 1905, to investigate the circumstances attending the wreck of the British steamship Stanley Dollar, of the port of Victoria, B.C., official number 95,524, on a voyage from San Francisco to Kobe, and the cause of such wreck, and to enquire into the conduct of the master, certificated 1st mate, second mate and crew of the said vessel.

The Stanley Dollar was a steam vessel of 1857 tons registered tonnage, official number 95,524, built at West Hartlepool 1889 and belonging to the port of Victoria, B.C., Lawrence Casey, Master, holder of Board of Trade Master's Certificate No. 017,209 of May 16, 1890.

It appears from the evidence given before this Court that she sailed from San Francisco, U.S.A. on or about the 14th August, 1905, bound for Kobe with a cargo of barley and tanned bark and a crew of 40 hands all told, as well as 2 passengers.

At noon on September 5 her position was Lat. 35.27 N., Long 142.37 E. At 9 p.m. the course was altered to W. The morning of the 6th opened with a fresh breeze and fine clear weather. At 2 a.m. the course was altered S. 74 W. correct magnetic, at 3.15 a.m. to S. 60 W., and at 7 a.m. land was sighted bearing West. The vessel encountered a current setting her inshore and for this some allowance was made. At 8 a.m. the weather was clear with a fresh breeze and a moderate sea. At 9.30 a.m. the course was altered to S. 50 W. and the vessel was kept on that course (except from time to time avoid fishing boats) until at 10.45 a.m. she struck on a sunken rock off Hachiman-saki, the point bearing about W.N.W., then considered to be distant 3 miles, since corrected to about, but not less than, 2½ miles. The engines were at once reversed and soundings taken, showing 4 fathoms forward, 5 fathoms amidships and 12 fathoms aft. Nearly a quarter of an hour later the vessel backed off, when soundings taken all round the ship showed no bottom at 20 fathoms. As water was found to be rapidly gaining in the No. 1 hold, the master considered it necessary in the interests of all concerned to beach the vessel and proceeded slowly towards Kawadzu village with a Japanese fisherman on board to pilot her to the best position. At 1.30 p.m. he anchored off the shore in 5 fathoms and having despatched a message to the ship's agents at Yokohama for assistance, set the crew to shift cargo from No. 1 hold until at 3.30 p.m. water prevented further operations. Holds Nos. 2, 3, and 4 then contained 14 inches of water and it became necessary to blow down steam. At 2 p.m. a representative of the steamer's agents arrived and stayed by the vessel till the 11th. Capt. Tipple, Surveyor to Lloyd's agents also arrived, but returned to Yokohama the following afternoon when a telegram was received from the vessel's agents announcing the abandonment of the vessel to the underwriters. On the 13th the salvage gear was removed. From the 11th to the 16th fine weather prevailed with a smooth sea and during this period 5,500 bags of barley were discharged. On the 17th the weather became threatening and on the 18th at 6 p.m. the vessel's agents' representative on the spot instructed the master to leave the mate, William Thomas, at Kawadzu, and himself and his crew to proceed to Yokohama, where they arrived at 6.30 p.m. on the 19th. On the morning of the 21st the master applied for the present enquiry.

The Court, having regard to the circumstances above stated find as follows:—

The casualty to the steamer Stanley Dollar was caused by that vessel striking at 10.45 a.m. on September 6th, 1905, on an isolated sunken rock at a distance of about but not less than 2½ miles E. S. E. from Hachimansaki, Katsura, Chiba Prefecture. She was got off immediately but being found to be seriously damaged was beached at Kawadzu village where she was finally abandoned by the crew on Sept. 18. The evidence does not fix the position of the rock with absolute precision but it is clearly not marked on recent Japanese charts. The United States chart corrected to June 2, 1898, used by the master, does not indicate danger in the neighbourhood, and the China Sea Directory of 1894 used by him, and the British Admiralty Sailing Directions for Japan, etc., 1904, consulted by this Court, only warn vessels against closing the land in the locality within 1½ miles.

In consideration of these facts the Court exonerates the master from blame in the matter of the present casualty, but considers that in navigating these waters he should see that the vessel be commanded is provided with more recent sailing directions and more up to date and larger scale charts than those he used. It is to be regretted that he did not ascertain the ship's position more accurately before the ship struck.

The remaining certificated officers and the crew behaved properly and are entirely free from blame.

After the accident discipline was well maintained on board and master, officers and crew did what lay in their power to save the vessel.

The present casualty once more draws attention to the perils of the coast running northwards from Hachimansaki. In 1903 the King Companion was wrecked at a distance of nearly 3 miles off the Naruihana shore and the inquiry with which vessels touch rocks at distance varying from 1¼ to 2½ miles off this coast tends to confirm the opinion arrived at by the King Companion enquiry that the danger zone in this locality extends in places beyond the 1½ mile limit.

The Court, in pursuance of the powers vested in it by section 483 of 57 and 58 Vict. c. 6, orders that the sum of £6.9/0, being the costs of the proceedings before the said Court, be paid by the master, one of the parties thereto, and he is hereby ordered to pay the said amount accordingly.

The expenses of this Court, fixed at £6.9/0, are approved.

Dated at the British Consulate-General, Yokohama, the 23rd day of September, 1905.

(sailing)

E. M. HORART HAMPTON

Acting British Consul-General, Yokohama, President of the Naval Court.

DAVID DAVIS,

Master of the British merchant ship Monkseaton, of Newcastle on Tyne. Official number 86,099.

DOUGLAS W. CAYE,

Master of British merchant ship Oceanic, of Rochester, official number 10650.

YOKOHAMA CHESS CLUB.

The following is the report of the Committee to be presented to the annual general meeting of the Yokohama Chess Club to be held on Monday, October 2, 1905, at 5.15 p.m.:

The first session of the revived Club has been successful: the interest taken in the proceedings was well sustained and the roll of members increased until there were 46 names on the books. Death has since claimed one of our number, Mr. W. D. Cox. He was an enthusiastic lover of Chess and a generous opponent over the board. He had been a member of this Club for many years and his memory will long be cherished by his fellow members.

The championship of the Club, which came with it the custody of the President's Trophy, was keenly contested and many close fought games were played. The result was a tie between Mr. Bruce-Mitford and Mr. E. Geisen, which was played off and eventually won by Mr. Geisen, who is to be congratulated on his success.

The Handicap Tourney, for which the Club provided two prizes, secured 18 entrants and the interest in this contest was well sustained to the end, Messrs Bent and Pearson taking respectively the first and second prizes.

The Treasurer's account is submitted herewith, resulting in a balance in hand of yen 49.29.

The property of the Club is in good order; boards and men in thorough repair ready for the new campaign; time clocks provided for the Championship Tourney and match games; fresh books added to the library; new members are in prospect to replace some who have left the port, and all promises well for the future.

The thanks of the Club are due to the Directors and Manager of the Club Hotel, who housed the Club most comfortably during the past season; and with best wishes for the Club's future welfare and prosperity your committee tender their resignation.

A. E. PAWSEY,
Hon. Sec., Y. C. C.

TREASURER'S ACCOUNT.

	Yen.
To bal. in hand from 1901.....	105.09
" 46 Subscriptions at yen 3	138.00
" 3 Entrance fees at yen 3	9.00
" President's Cheque for Champion Trophy	100.00
Total.....	352.09
By Insurance	5.00
" Circulars and Adv.	13.05
" Collector's fee.....	5.00
" Stationery	15.30
" Postage and Petition	3.12
" Sub. to Lasker's Mag.	6.00
" Furnishing a/c Sundries	18.25
" Trophy 100 yen; Prizes 39 yen.....	139.00
" Club Hotel.....	50.00
" Club Hotel boys.....	10.00
" Chess Clocks and Score Sheets	37.48
" Bal. in hand	49.29
Total	352.09

A. E. PAWSEY,
Hon. Treas. Y.C.C.

Audited and found correct:
H. J. NEVILLE.

THE LAW COURTS.

DIVORCE CASE.

An action lodged by Mrs. Gretchen Marie Dorothea Rhine, Hamburg, petitioning for divorce from her husband, Mr. Charles Ferdinand Rhine, No. 220, Bluff, Yokohama, came up on Sept. 27th in the Yokohama District Court before Judge Yasuda.

It may be remembered that Mr. Rhine has also instituted a similar suit against his wife and the first hearing took place on April 21st in the same Court before Judge Nakanishi. Since then the action has been postponed.

In the present case, the plaintiff, Mrs. Rhine, was represented by Mr. Sawada, and the defendant by Mr. Sato, as in the other suit.

At the outset of the hearing, plaintiff's Counsel stated that the couple lodged petitions each against the other for divorce in the same Court, and the hearing of Mr. Rhine's action, defendant in the present case, is going on before another Judge. Counsel asked the Court to amalgamate the two cases, as that course would not only be convenient to the parties, but would facilitate the settlement of the case for the Court.

Defendant's Counsel consented to the proposal. The Court said that it would consult with the Judge concerned in the other petition, and adjourned the hearing sine die.

CLAIM FOR DAMAGES.

The hearing of a case filed by Mr. F. Retz against the Shimoda Construction Co., claiming yen 3,911, was resumed on Sept. 27th in the Yokohama District Court.

At the outset of the hearing, the Court said that the statements made by Mr. Yendo and another architect who inspected the buildings which the defendants had built under instructions of the plaintiff and which are stated by Mr. Retz to be imperfect, had been handed to the parties through the Court. The Court added that the present hearing would be devoted to the experts' statements if convenient to the parties.

Defendant's Counsel stated that previous to the hearing, he should like to say that the cost estimated by the experts was between fifteen and sixteen thousand yen. These figures are about four thousand yen more than the amount for which the defendants had made a contract with the plaintiff for building the houses in dispute. As had frequently been repeated, the Japanese architects built the house at a most moderate cost. Plaintiff, however, complains that the work is not perfect. Under these circumstances, a dispute arose between the parties, on which they instituted four cases, including the present petition. The proceedings in these cases are now going on in the same Court—one has been removed to the Tokyo Appeal Court. Counsel thought that the dispute would be better settled out of court, on the condition that the plaintiff shall pay the balance of the amount of the contract between the parties—the claim for the foregoing balance by the defendants is connected with the other case—as well as a portion of the difference between the sum named in the contract and the experts' estimate, and on the other hand, the defendants shall complete the work that Mr. Retz wants done. Counsel asked the Court to exhort the plaintiff to settle the dispute out of court on these conditions.

Plaintiff's representative submitted that his client might be willing to settle the case amicably but he could not pay any more money for the further work required. He, however, would ask Mr. Retz about what the defendants' Counsel requested.

At this stage the Court told counsel to try to arrive at an amicable settlement with their clients, and adjourned the hearing till Oct. 10th.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

On Sept. 27th, 819 invalids were brought in three transports from the front to Hiroshima.

The tama silk factories of Maebashi have agreed to stop work for some days owing to the fall in prices.

Mr. S. Fukazawa on Sept. 27th was appointed assistant Public Procurator of the Yokohama Local Court.

On the morning of Sept 27th, fire broke out in the village of Tanabe, near Awamori, destroying twenty houses.

Mr. Goto, Chief of the Formosan Administrative Office, arrived in Seoul on Sept. 24th. He will leave there on the 26th for Japan.

Lieut-General Haraguchi, Commander-in-chief of the Saghalien Army, will arrive in Tokyo to-day, Sept. 29th, by the 10 a.m. train.

The Emperor and Empress have distributed yen 3,388 among families of officers and men who died through the sinking of the Mikasa.

The marriage between of Mr. Y. Ozaki, Mayor Tokyo, and Miss Yei Ozaki will take place on Oct. 17th in St. Andrew's Church, Shiba, Tokyo.

Japanese in Korea, including the government officials, number 110,150. The figures, however, do not include soldiers and others concerned with military affairs.

A telegram received by the Nichi Nichi from Seoul says that the Korea Daily News receives a subsidy from the Korean government of five hundred yen per month.

Prince Nashimoto, who recently arrived at Moji from the front, proceeded on Sept. 27th, to Beppu, Oita prefecture, for the sake of his health. He puts up in the Hinako Hotel.

The German Asiatic Bank has asked the Japanese Minister of Finance for permission to open a branch at Yokohama. The Bank is now ready to commence business, having bought the building formerly occupied by the Russo-Chinese Bank, for yen 300,000.

The repairs of the second line of cable between Nagasaki and Shanghai, which was damaged by the storm of Sept. 1st, is reported to have been completed on Sept. 27th.

The Moji City Assembly intends to establish a triumphal arch and to make preparations for welcoming the soldiers returning from the front. The expenses are estimated at ten thousand yen.

The Emperor of Korea has presented the First Order of the Sacred Treasure to Miss Alice Roosevelt. She will leave Seoul to-day, Sept. 29th, for Fusan, where she embarks for Japan.

King Edward has decorated Baron Komura, and Viscount Hayashi, Minister in London, with the First Class of St. Michael and St. George and the First Class of the Victorian Order respectively.

On the morning of Sept. 25th, frost was registered at Tokatsu and Kushiro, Hokkaido. In Tokatsu, the frost is one day earlier than last year and in Kushiro, nineteen days later than last year.

T. Shinohara, a member of the Shiba Urban Division Assembly, Tokyo, was arrested on Sept. 26th and subsequently removed to the Tokyo District Court. The charge is reported to be fraud.

It is said that the Yokohama Railway Co. intends to raise a loan abroad, for which purpose the directors of the company are conducting negotiations with a German office representing a syndicate at home.

An armed man on the night of Sept. 26th intruded into the villa at Omori belonging to Baron M. Kikuchi, a member of the House of Peers. By menacing the employees, the man obtained a small amount of money.

It is reported by a Sapporo telegram that Mr. R. Hara of Yokohama, has purchased the Rumoi Coal mine for yen 300,000. A capitalist of Tokyo is promoting the establishment of a railway between Rumoi and the harbour.

M. Harmand, French Minister, paid a visit on Sept. 27th to Admiral Rojestvensky and his staff officers at Fushimi near Osaka. The minister subsequently left for Kobe to see Rear-Admiral Nebogotoff, who is on his way home.

Miss Alice Roosevelt will arrive in Yokohama about Oct. 7th or 8th on her way home from Korea. It is said that on her arrival in the city, she will immediately embark on a mail steamer for San Francisco, and will not go up to Tokyo.

We have received from the Legation of Sweden and Norway a copy of an address presented to King Oscar by the Swedish parliament, wherein is set out most temperately the Swedish side of the question now agitating the two Scandinavian nations.

Mr. H. Minakami, Director of the Yokohama Customs, was released on Sept. 27th at his own request. As reported, he has been elected to the mayoralty of Kobe. The vacancy at the Customs will be filled by Mr. Hashimoto (Keizaburo), Secretary of the Tobacco Monopoly Bureau.

Admiral Ito, Chief of the Naval Staff Office, and Admiral Yamamoto, Minister for the Navy, have presented to Vice-Admiral Rojestvensky, now at Fushimi near Osaka, a case of champagne, and some boxes of Egyptian cigarettes. The condition of the Russian officer's wounds is improving.

From Messrs. Helm Bros., Ltd., agents for Messrs. Pitt and Scott, Ltd., the well-known shipping agents of London, we have received a book of coupons by the use of which shippers can secure the special freight-tariff which Messrs. Pitt and Scott have arranged for importers or exporters shipping small quantities at a time.

We are informed by the local Agent of the Chartered Bank of India, Australia and China that he is in receipt of a telegram from the London Office intimating that the Directors of this Bank have declared an interim dividend at the rate of 12 per cent, per annum free of Income Tax for the half year ended the 30th June last.

The Hochi says that Messrs Ginsburg and Co., a Russian firm patronized by its Government, intends to start a shipping business at Vladivostok with a subsidy from the Government, and to open a regular steamship service between Japan, Korea and China. The real object, the Hochi considers, will be to oppose the organization of the Japanese volunteer ships.

During the first half of this year, the following amount of cotton was consumed by cotton spinning factories throughout the Empire: Indian, 12,761,195 kwammie; American, 7,675,679 kwammie; Chinese, 4,071,584 kwammie; Egyptian, 427,552 kwammie; Annam and other countries, 53,266 kwammie; Japanese 1,824 kwammie. (kwammie=3,7565 kilograms.)

On Thursday evening Governor Sufa entertained at his official residence the superintendents and police inspectors of the Isezaki-cho and other stations who rendered meritorious service towards settling the recent disturbances in Yokohama. On the following day, he distributed money among the policemen in recognition of their good work on that occasion.

An Osaka correspondent reports that at the beginning of October, thirty steamers, each of over six thousand tons, are expected to arrive at Moji from America. These are chartered by the Russian Government to carry away the prisoners now in Japan. The price of coal has accordingly advanced extraordinarily. It is said that at least sixty thousand tons will be needed by the transports.

The wrecked French cruiser Sully still remains on the rocks where she went ashore some months ago, notwithstanding the efforts of the Hongkong salvage party. During the recent typhoon much of the work that had already been done was rendered useless, the most serious damage being the destruction of the huge pontoon which was doing good work. During the height of the typhoon it was dashed about in such a manner as to render it useless. The cruiser had been raised about 12 feet previous to the typhoon but had to be allowed to sink back on the rocks again when the men were withdrawn during the storm. In spite of their many disappointments the salvors under Mr. Jack (of Messrs. E. C. Wilks and Company) still hope for success and are now again hard at work repairing the Sully's bottom and blasting away the rocks on which she is resting. The cruiser, it is satisfactory to learn, was uninjured by the typhoon, and does not appear to have suffered any further damage, notwithstanding the boisterous weather which continues to prevail in her vicinity.—China Mail.

AMERICAN TOPICS.

Abraham Lincoln's birthplace was sold on August 28th by Commissioner Hendley for $3,600. The purchaser was Robert J. Collier of New York, member of the firm of publishers.

Commissioner of Pensions Warner has completed his annual report, and on August 28th submitted it to the Secretary of the Interior. It is said the amount expended for pensions last year is nearly $142,000,000, or a few thousands less than the appropriation.

According to a bulletin issued by the Census Bureau, the aggregate financial transactions of the 175 cities of the United States having a population of over 25,000 equal in magnitude those of the national government, excluding the postal service. The total corporate receipts for these cities amount to $547,624,203 in 1903, and the total corporate expenditures to $535,804,200. The national debt in 1904 amounted to $895,157,410; the aggregate debt of the 175 cities, exclusive of sinking fund assets, was $1,134,578,785. The receipts, expenditures and debt for the city of New York represent about one-third of the city totals.

Professor James C. Monaghan, of the Department of Commerce and Labour, in the course of a recent lecture on "The Expansion of Wealth in the United States," said:—"Half a century ago the wealth of the United States was estimated at a little more than $7,000,000,000. At the present time it is placed at $110,000,000. During this half century the population of the country multiplied by less than three and one-half, while the wealth multiplied by a little more than thirteen. During this period every person's share in the total wealth was multiplied by four. The census of fifty years ago showed that the United States in point of wealth stood below half a dozen nations of the old world. To-day all those nations have been entirely outdistanced.

First Assistant Secretary of State Francis B. Loomis will probably be appointed United States ambassador to Brazil, to succeed David E. Thompson, who is to be made ambassador to Mexico. Although no official announcement has yet been made, it was learned on August 25th that the post has been offered to him, and that he is about to take a trip to Brazil as special commissioner of the United States to inquire into the trade relations of that country with this. This will give him the opportunity of determining whether or not to accept the appointment as ambassador. Brazil has long been anxious for a reciprocity treaty with the United States, and the administration is inclined to negotiate such a treaty. It is understood that the President has offered Mr. Loomis the mission, with the understanding that eventually he will be transferred to a better place in Europe.

The contributions of Marshall Field to the public coffers of Cook County were announced in Chicago on Aug. 15th by the board of review. They will far exceed those from any other individual source and will be larger than any he has ever made before in the course of his long career in Chicago. Mr. Field will pay taxes on a real estate valuation of $30,000,000, and on a personal property valuation of $10,000,000, as nearly as can be estimated at this time, when the members of the board of review are readjusting on thousands of complaints based on the board of assessors' valuations. Nor does Cook County get all the taxes that Mr. Field pays. He contributes to the public funds of not only many other cities and counties of his country, but of almost all the leading foreign nations. He pays in Europe and Asia taxes on factories that turn out the linens, silks and hundreds of other things that go to make up to the stock carried at the mammoth stores on State Street. There are those who declare that if Mr. Field were to realize full value on all his possessions he could sign a cheque for $200,000,000. The more conservative, however, estimate his wealth at between $100,000,000 and $150,000,000. Nobody but Marshall Field knows.

A persistent decline of the birth rate in the United States is regarded as the result of an investigation by the Census Bureau. At the beginning of the nineteenth century the children under ten years of age constituted one-third and at the end less than one-fourth of the total population. The decrease began as early as the second decade of the century and continued uninterruptedly, though at varying rates. In 1860 there were 634 children under five years of age to every 1,000 potential mothers, i.e., women from fifteen to forty-nine years, while in 1900 the number had sunk to 474; or, in other words, the proportion of children to potential mothers in 1900 was only three-fourths as large as in 1860. In 1900 the proportion of children was only two-thirds as great in cities as in the country districts, considering the United States as a whole. In the north Atlantic division, however, it was almost as great in the cities as in the country. The figures gathered by the Census Bureau seem to indicate a considerably greater degree of fecundity among foreign-born than among native women, the births per 1,000 women of child-bearing age being 710 for the former as compared with 462 for the latter in the year 1900. Regarding the causes of the decline in the birth rate, Professor Willcox, who has prepared the bulletin, expresses no definite opinion, holding that the vital statistics of the United States are not yet sufficiently developed to afford a sound basis of judgment.

The statistics of the Interstate Commerce Commission covering the income and disbursements of the railroads of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30th, 1904, present a most interesting exhibit when reduced to a per mile basis. The following is a table showing the income account of the railways of the United States per mile of road during 1904 and the two preceding years:

	1904	1903	1901
Mileage	212,243	205,313	200,154
Gross	$9,306	$9,258	$8,677
Expenses	6,308	6,125	5,777
Net	2,998	3,133	2,900
Other income	1,002	1,002	971
Total income	4,000	4,135	4,000
Charges	2,686	2,692	2,577
Net income	1,314	1,443	1,423
Dividends	1,046	960	971
Surplus	268	483	452

It will be observed that while the gross earnings per mile were larger than those in preceding years, there was an even greater increase in the expenses of operation, so that the net earnings were per mile $135 less than in 1903, $10 less than in 1902, but $144 more than in 1901. The other income was per mile the same as in 1903, while the total income was $135 less than in 1903 and $29 less than in 1902, but $127 more than in 1901. The fixed charges against income have not changed greatly in three years, the charges for 1904 being only $6 per mile less than in 1903 and $7 more than in 1902. There was a considerable falling off in net income per mile in 1904 as compared with both 1903 and 1902. Yet there was a large increase in dividends, which amounted per mile to $1,046, against $960 in 1903. The surplus left was very much less than in the preceding years. The statistics of the Interstate Commerce Commission are always a fiscal year later, appearing a month after the close of the fiscal year 1905. Therefore, in order to get an accurate idea of the results for the past year, we will have to wait until 1906, but in meantime the Wall Street Journal estimates the 1905 net income per mile at $1,500.

Mr. Marshall Field, of Chicago, at the age of 46 has married in London Mrs. Della Spencer Caton. Though there have been frequent and persistent rumours that the marriage was imminent, the fact that the late Mr. Caton's death took place but nine months ago was urged by the friends of Field in Chicago that the rumours were without foundation. Marshall Field, whose wealth is variously estimated at between $100,000,000 and $150,000,000, is 70 years old. Mrs. Caton was Miss Della Spencer, daughter of the member of that name, who founded the hardware establishment of Hibbard, Spencer & Bartlett, is 46 years old. She is one of the leading figures in Chicago society. By the marriage of Marshall Field and Mrs. Caton the alliance of the great firm founded by Field, the largest of its kind in the world, and those of Hibbard, Spencer and Bartlett, the largest hardware establishment in the world, will be in a measure linked together. Mrs. Caton is herself wealthy being an heiress not only to the estate of her husband, but of a large portion of the estate of her father. She is reputed to be worth between $1,000,000 and $2,000,000.

Mr. Charles Dewey, the only surviving brother of Admiral Dewey, is dead at his home at Mepher, aged 79 years. He was president of National Life Insurance Company from 1877 to 1900, retiring from business at that time.

It was learned in New York on Sept. 28th subpoenas to appear before the legislative insurance committee, of which Senator William Armstrong is chairman, have been served nearly all the officers of the Equitable, New York Life, Mutual, Metropolitan and Mutual Reserve. This is merely the beginning. There are forty insurance companies doing business in the State and according to the statement of one of the investigating committee all of them will probably be called before the committee before the inquiry is ended. The committee in pursuing the inquiry does not intend to take up the examination of each company separately. Witnesses will be called from companies indiscriminately from time to time to testify regarding certain general subjects, but the idea that the committee is going to deal with general conditions to the utter exclusion of all inquiry into personal transactions, it was declared, was entirely without foundation. The $685,000 blind loan of the Equitable account is supposed to have been used for paying lobbying fees, campaign contributions and other improper expenses, and will be looked into thoroughly. The Dewey loan will be investigated, despite its repayment. Since Paul Morton has been president of the Equitable he has saved the stockholders $1,500,000. He has effected the return to the Equitable of large sums and has slashed salaries and discontinued various pensions and retainers. At the end of the first year of his incumbency it is estimated the running expenses of the Equitable will be found largely reduced.

The suggestion has been thrown out by the States Commissioner of Charities and Correction of New Jersey that the product of the labour of prisoners should be devoted to the support of the families of the criminals whose incarceration has deprived them of means of support, and who, in consequence, often become charges upon the community. The matter is being widely discussed and many profess to see in it a solution of difficult problem, namely, how to utilize the labour of convicts without causing dissatisfaction to working-men, who protest against prison labour being employed competitively.

Hezekiah Butterworth, the author, died at Warren, R.I., on Sept. 5 of diabetes. Mr. Butterworth was born in Warren, R. I., in 1839, and when less than 20 years of age the "writing fever" took such possession of him that he left the farm on which he was born and went to begin a literary career. Poor, friendless and unknown, his experience was like that of many other young writers. He found that he had chosen "a hard road to travel," but he was not to be turned from his purpose by any obstacles in his way. In time he became connected with the editorial department of Youth's Companion, and for more than a quarter of a century he held this position, finally giving it up that he might be free to travel. The result of these travels was a series of books, half fact and half fiction that have had a wide circulation. More than 500,000 copies of his famous "Zigzag Journeys" have been sold. Besides his scores of prose works he has written verse distinguished for strength and beauty. His best-known books are "Great Composers," "In the Boyhood of Lincoln," "Songs of History," "Poems of Christmas," and the histories, "In the New England" and "Popular History of North America."

These pointed comments upon the conclusion of peace were made by Mark Twain, Grover Cleveland, and Ex-Ambassador Andrew D. White:

Mark Twain.—Russia was on the high road to emancipation from an insane and intolerable slavery, as hoping there would be no peace until Russian liberty was safe. I think that this was a holy war, the best and noblest sense of that abused term, that no war was ever charged with a higher mission; I think there can be no doubt that that mission is now defeated, and Russia's shackles retained, this time to stay. I think the Czar will now withdraw the small humanities that have been forced on him, and resume his medieval barbarisms. I am relieved spirit and an immeasurable I think Russian liberty has had its last chance, and has lost it. I think nothing has been gained by the peace that is remotely comparable to what has been sacrificed by it. One battle would have abolished the waiting chains of millions upon millions of unborn Russian, and I think it could have been fought. I hope I am mistaken, yet in all sincerity I believe that this peace is entitled to rank as the most conspicuous disaster in political history.

Grover Cleveland.—It reinstates the faith of those who believe that advance of civilization should mean peace, and means the abandonment of war and slaughter, and the taking up of agencies of national progress and greatness.

Andrew D. White.—I am glad that peace has come. I am glad that the Japanese seemed so very magnanimous. I expected that peace would come, but that it would be necessary to leave some points to the decision of commissioners or to The Hague Tribunal. Japan will now take her place among the nations of the world, and the name of Togo will rank in history with that of Nelson. President Roosevelt is deserving of great credit, and the result of his efforts will make him a historical person. I am satisfied that there will now be great reforms in Russia similar to those following the Crimean war.

The Secretary of the U. S. Navy, Mr. Bonaparte, issued to the officers of the Navy on Sept. 1 a circular letter calling their attention to the provisions of the regulations in regard to the duties of officers who may have charge of the engineering departments of warships. The circular is based upon the gunboat Bennington disaster and includes that part of the Secretary's order for a court-martial for Commander Lucien Young and Ensign Wade in which he discussed certain navy regulations. One of the regulations is that the junior officer in immediate charge of the engines and boilers shall at once report to his senior officer any defect or irregularity in their working. Other regulations are "When performing duty by watches the engineer officer on duty shall exercise close supervision over the warrant or other machinists in charge of the engine-room and watch over all others engaged in running or in attendance on the engines. The engineer officer about to take charge of watch duty shall not relieve his predecessor until he has satisfied himself what the condition of the machinery is."

London financiers are being sounded quietly by Chicago capitalists as to the possibilities of raising $1,500,000 of London money toward putting up a hotel in Chicago. M. M. Jamieson of Chicago and member of the New York and Chicago Stock exchanges is said to be at the head of the enterprise. During his stay in London he met a number of English investors, who some years ago made rather extensive commitments in various Chicago enterprises—among them being A. J. Forbes-Lieth. English investors have on the whole been more successful in Chicago investments than the troubles of the breweries' companies and some other concerns would indicate. There is in consequence a disposition on the part of English capitalists to go into Chicago enterprises upon the knowledge that the most reliable Chicago men are at the head of the undertaking and the business will be well managed. It is proposed to erect a hotel in Chicago to be operated upon the plan of Claridge's in London. There is none in Chicago run upon quite the same principle. This hotel is frequented by the nobility and rich colonials and Americans, who must be introduced to the management before they will be received as guests.

The monthly statement of the public debt shows that at the close of business August 31, 1905, the debt, less cash in the United States Treasury, amounted to $1,005,524,595, which is an increase as compared with last month of $3,475,594. This increase is accounted for by a corresponding decrease in the amount of cash on hand. The debt is recapitulated as follows: Interest-bearing debt, $895,158,700; debt on which interest has ceased since maturity, $1,256,534; debt bearing no interest, $386,706,704. Total $1,283,121,939. This amount, however, does not include $1,002,961,969 in certificates and treasury notes outstanding, which are offset by an equal amount of cash on hand, which is held as trust funds for their redemption. The cash in the treasury is classified as follows: Gold reserve, $150,000,000; trust funds, $1,002,961,969; general fund, $153,769,381; in national bank depositories, $64,059,171; in Philippine treasury, $4,485,951. Total, $1,375,240,443, against which there are demand liabilities outstanding amounting to $1,097,643,099, which leaves a cash balance on hand of $277,597,344.

STUDYING THE CHINESE CHARACTERS.

By A MISSIONARY.

The writer has been nearly 18 years in Japan. He came in the days of the Romajikwai and in his impressionable first year or two was in the leading-strings of one of its prominent members and did not imbibe strong views in favour of giving much attention to the Chinese characters. Later, still under the inspiration of his mentor of those days, the Romajikwai being dead and buried and some of its quondam members sadly reprobate, he got started at the study of the characters, using the Japanese school readers as a basis. But by that time other duties and other studies made steady application difficult, the study was unsystematic and frequently intermitted for months at a time, and always with the result so well expressed in the Japanese verse:

Tenarai wa saka ni kuruma wo osu goloshi;

Yudan wo sureba ato ye to modori.

(Studying the characters is like pushing a cart up hill; if you let go it is soon at the bottom again).

Fifteen months ago, after over 16 years of hit and miss, I found on making an inventory that there were just about 700 characters that I recognized. That was about 45 a year—and at that rate it would take, according to Mr. Chamberlain, just 100 years to make me, in the study of the character, "no longer a student, but a scholar."

It was at the beginning of a good vacation that this little sum in arithmetic stirred me up to try another method—which was not a new one at all, but the old card method widely used by missionaries in China. I had tried cards 10 years before but failed to work out a good system and once more had struck gravel at the foot of the hill. But the plan upon which I settled in the summer of last year proved a workable and fascinating one, and after the two months I found my stock increased by 1100 characters, making it 1800 in all. Any one acquainted with Mr. Gamble's investigations will recollect that with 1800 characters one is equipped to recognize 97 per cent. of the characters he meets in print. The acquisition of those 1100 new characters gave such freedom in reading that I could not have been so delighted if every one of them had been a shining golden sovereign fresh from the mint. And it took just 2 months, working 4 or 5 hours a day.

After the summer I could not give half so much time to the study, and twice had to drop it altogether for 3 or 4 weeks each time. But in the 6 months of fall and winter I was able to keep up the 1800 and add 1200 to them, making 3000 in all.

Thus in the old and often tried case of System vs Hit and Miss, System won out once more, H. and M. giving 700 characters in 16 years and S. 2300 in 9 months.

A friend has written me for some suggestions, and it has occurred to me that other missionaries, not only new ones but old ones who have all but given up the characters as a hopeless job, may find my experience and suggestions helpful, so I venture to ask our good friend, the Japan Mail, to publish them for the common good.

I should say:—

1. Make Chamberlain's lists in Meiji no Shikube your task; first the 2,350 (2,407, counting double forms) which every school-boy learns, and second, the tough lot of 1961 at the back of the book, which will make you "no longer a student, but a scholar." Later, as a little pastime, you might add about 550 which appear in Lay's list of 3,020 common characters but are not found among the 4,368 of Chamberlain's two lists.

2. Use the card system. Some prefer oblong cards. I like them square with the characters written as large as the first 400 in Chamberlain's book. Visiting cards 4 by 2 inches, cut in two, make a handy card 2 inches square. Be careful not to have it so thick that the bundles of cards will be too bulky, or so thin that the cards will too easily bend or crack. Have your Japanese assistant write the characters, and yourself write on the backs the meanings—first, the Chinese one, then the Japanese meaning, then the English. Use Meiji no Shikube and Lay's and Gring's dictionaries in doing this.

3. Do not at first try to write the characters. It is bad enough to have to learn to read them in three languages. Leave writing as an accomplishment to be acquired after you have learned to read. By attempting too much at once you jeopardize the whole enterprise. You will be told that it is necessary to write in order to remember the forms, but on a fair trial you will probably disprove that often repeated statement.

4. Do not waste time over characters that you know thoroughly and are in little danger of forgetting. Put them away and only bring them out every 3 months or so and run through them once to see that you are losing none of them.

5. Keep your characters in 3 or 4 lots and give most time to those that need it most. A good plan is to have a variegated character-box shading from black, through blue and red say, to white, keeping in the black section those that need most attention and graduating into the white end those that you have mastered, promoting or degrading the characters every 2 or 3 weeks whenever new ones are added to the box. My box is a tin one, 18 by 12 inches, divided altogether into 30 compartments, each capable of holding 200 characters. Half of the box is white. Of the other half, a fifth is black, a fifth blue, and three-fifths red. The characters in the white end are those that I know best and propose to look at only 3 or 4 times a year to be sure that I am not losing any of them. In the black end I keep a few, never more than a hundred or so, upon which I spend a few minutes every day, never leaving them so long as there is one which I cannot recognize, telling at least its Japanese and English meanings. In the blue section are a few hundreds that are gone over twice a week for 2 or 3 weeks till promotion day, when some are sent up to red, some down to black, and some kept where they are. In the red section are a lot that get only one day a week, but there are so many here that you will go through only a third of them in one day, giving three days to the section.

6. Attack the characters not by units, but by hundreds. Keep them in elastic bound bundles of 100 each. You will find that you can learn to recognize a new hundred characters in 1 hour—that is, you can tell the kana and the English meaning, and from the primitive or phonetic you will be able to tell the on of many of them even before you learn their meanings. You will need to spend about an hour on your new hundred the day you first put them into the black end of your box. The next day you will have forgotten half of them perhaps, but in a few minutes you will pick them up again. On Wednesday it will be still easier, and by Saturday you can go through the hundred in less than 10 minutes, recognizing every one the first time. Keep them in the black section another week or two before adding another hundred and making a general promotion.

The above are the main points. What suits one student will not suit another, and each will modify whatever system he starts with. It is good to do some reading along with the character grind. A helpful and pleasant bit of reading is the foreign telegrams in a good daily like the Jiji or Asahi. The headings are printed without Kana, making a good lesson in the characters. When you get just the thousand mark you can take a paper that prints the telegram itself without Kana—the Nippon, for instance. But make the character grind the first thing for this year or two. Sharpen your axe well and you will do brave cutting when your time comes to go into the woods.

It is a pity that we have to spend time on this antiquated and exasperating system of writing, especially as the Japanese are getting as disgusted with it as we are and are going to throw it overboard in a generation or so. If they could abolish it at once, we could afford to do without it, but they cannot and we cannot. Unless we are content to remain in the ranks of the illiterate and be dependent upon cooks, jinrikisha-men, and school children to read visiting-cards, advertisements, tax papers, newspaper extras, and the like, for us—to say nothing of getting a respectable use of Kango for conversation, teaching, and preaching—we must aim at mastering several thousands of the characters. And after all it is not so hard as it looks. The second thousand are easier than the first, and the third than the second. The characters are in family groups, and you come to recognize the family likeness, and the further you go the better you recognize these likenesses and frequently you will find that you can tell not only the Chinese pronunciation, but also the approximate meaning of a new character the first time you see it. They are a bad lot, but, like many another bad lot, on getting close to them you find they are not nearly so bad as they seem.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE POETRY OF SECRETARY JOHN HAY.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—Some days ago there appeared in one of the daily papers an article in regard to Secretary Hay in which he was spoken of as the author of "Jim Bludsoe" and "Little Breeches." These were mentioned as examples of Mr Hay's genius and poetical ability. It ought to be known, however, that these were productions of his college days, and he evidently disliked to have them referred to in his riper years. His later productions were of a very different type and gave evidence of a marked change in his life and thought. Of these later poems the following is a sample.

SINAI AND CALVARY.

From Sinai's cloud of darkness
The vivid lightnings play,
They serve the God of vengeance,
The Lord who shall repay.
Each fault must bring its penance
Each sin the avenging blade;
For God upholds in justice
The laws that he hath made.
But Calvary stands to ransom
The earth from utter loss,
In shade than light more glorious,
The shadow of the Cross.
To heal a sick world's trouble,
To soothe its woe and pain,
On Calvary's sacred summit
The Paschal lamb was slain.
The boundless might of Heaven
Its law in mercy furled,
At once the bow of promise
O'erarched a drowning world.
The law said, "As you keep me
It shall be done to you,"
But Calvary prays, "Forgive them,
They know not what they do."
Almighty God! direct us
To keep thy perfect law!
O blessed Saviour help us
Nearer to thee to draw;
Let Sinai's thunders aid us
To guard our feet from sin,
And Calvary's light inspire us
The love of God to win.

The following verses, entitled, "Humility," were also written by him for the World's Christian Endeavour Convention which met at Washington a few years ago. Both of these have now an enduring place among the hymns used in ordinary Christian worship.

Lord! from several climes we come
To meet at last in thee, our Home.
Thou who hast been our guide and guard
Be still our hope, our rich reward.
Defend us, Lord, from every ill.
Strengthen our hearts to do thy will.
In all we plan and all we do
Still keep us to thy service true.
O let us hear the inspiring word
Which they of old at Horeb heard;
Breathe to our hearts the high command
"Go onward and possess the land."
Thou who art Light, Shine on each soul!
Thou who art Truth, each mind control!
Open our eyes and make us see
The path which leads to Heaven and Thee!

Yours faithfully,

H. LOOMIS.

Yokohama, Sept. 19th, 1905.

AMERICA AND JAPAN.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—The justice of your strictures upon that part of the American press which appears to have been influenced by M. Witte's empty boasting over things which would be a disgrace to any country must be sorrowfully admitted by those of us most reluctant to admit anything to America's discredit. But it is not the real America which speaks in such columns, as letters received from many parts of the country while the Conference was in progress abundantly testify.

America truly sympathized with Japan throughout the whole war because she approved of Japan's motives in the beginning and admired the rapidly and consummate ability with which she forced so proud a foe to yield all the points in dispute.

The fact that the Russian as well as the Japanese Representatives at Portsmouth were guests of the nation had much to do with making Americans desirous of extending friendly sympathy to both. But the different spirit in which our President's desire to serve both was met was also perfectly clear to those who shared his desire in sincerity.

May the shades of Hospitality pardon me if I transgress in averring that America was not deceived at the beginning of the Conference, by the talk about Russian "honor," into thinking that Russia's honor was intact. The one thing that could have rescued, in American eyes that vanishing quantity was a little of the consideration manifested by Japan for the real interests of civilization and the peace and prosperity of the world.

The contrast between the moderation of Japanese demands and the extortionate spirit which strove to abuse such moderation; between the straightforward dignity with which Japan stood and maintained her views and the childlike whininess which answered first one thing and then another; between the littleness which drove us upon Japan the stigma of continuing the war and the magnanimity with which Japan set all this aside and made peace at a costly sacrifice rather than disgrace the world by a war fought for money—the contrast was sufficiently striking to all thoughtful, fair minded Americans. When the real voice of American opinion comes to be heard I think it will be evident that Japan has increased by her enlightened and generous terms of Peace that respect and confidence which she won by her methods of pursuing a righteous war. America has always been glad of Japan's friendship, and she is proud of it.

Thanking you for the space afforded,
I am Respectfully yours,

AN OLD SUBSCRIBER

Tokyo, September 24, 1905.

"KINJO MARU" DISASTER FUND.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—In Yokohama this Fund has been disregarded and ignored as if it had no claim on the people living here. Kobe responded liberally. For a cause so good surely it is not too late, for the many good Soldiers' and Sailors' Widows and Orphans frequently assuages a gnawing want that they never felt by the good people of the City. I feel sure lots of people would mischievously matter were feelingly brought before them. Can anything be done to arouse some practical souls in the Fund?

Yours truly,

T.L.

N.B.—I enclose a subscription of yen 15—Irishman and Two Old Salts.
Yokohama, September 28th, 1905.

DALNY.

By J. H. DE FOREST, D.D.

This "flat city" that boasts the highest chimney in all the East, that was built at a cost of Russian roubles, has broad macadam streets and cement sidewalks lined with fences of brick and stone, behind which serried of the same material, each with an architectural beauty of its own. A deep, broad, red sharply separates this Russian part of Dalny from the larger Chinese settlement, where are seen deep dust or deeper mud, flanked by dingy shops and labourers' hovels. On one side of the double town is the large harbor that makes it important to the East. I used to wonder why the Russians should build a new city twenty-five miles from Port Arthur when they had there a harbor and the beginnings of a city. Apart from military considerations Port Arthur is too small. Dalny's harbor is fifty times as large, and a small section of those massive piers placed across the mouth of the Arthur would bottle up that little harbor so effectively that did the twenty-seven ships that drove into its entrance.

On the other side of the town lies a high plain where are the beginnings of a park, with fine passing the permanent barracks toward the hills. In this city are no trees nor are there the plateau and hills beyond. Even the beauty of the Russian offices and residences is marred by blackened and roofless houses, and the spacious city hall, that were looted and when the Russians hurriedly evacuated the place.

As our steamer, on which was a regiment of soldiers, entered the harbor we were signalled to the bay and land at Ryujin, six miles off. Apparently the docks were congested with some of which were unloading up with the army, while others were loading up with the sick and wounded Japanese from the Mukden battles, and others yet were being taken thousands of Russian prisoners bound for Japan.

A Government launch brought us back to town and one glance at the near streets showed that town was as congested as the harbor. Hundreds of disarmed Russians sitting upon the abounding dirt of the streets and guarded occasional Japanese soldier. The large buildings that had been converted into hospitals were overflowing with the sick and wounded of both sides, and the fine residences, together with the cathedral, were requisitioned for the same use. "Be ready for 10,000 wounded," was the order for Dalny, alone before the Mukden battle began. And that figure would begin to cover the army of unfortunates that steadily poured down from the north in several train loads a day for weeks. Every time I went to the temporary station during the last week in March the ground all around was either covered with wounded or else the Chinese coolies were there with stretchers awaiting the next train. Later on, as I gradually went north, every few hours we passed a long train loaded with the victims of the war. The very length of the trains was suggestive of the horrors of those fifteen days of battle. I often counted over fifty cars, and the worst of it was that they were mainly platform cars open to the cutting winds and cold of early Manchurian spring. It was a tortuous ride of thirty hours on springless trucks.

Such was the traffic coming down the Eastern China road into Dalny. What went up from Dalny was very different. You might well think it was troops, for they were landing by thousands every day, but not a train of soldiers rode north while I was in Manchuria, and I doubt whether one has gone since. For it exhausts the carrying capacity of the line to take only the absolutely necessary provisions and ammunition for the half million and more soldiers on the battle line above Mukden. There is a third-class passenger car attached to one train a day for swell passengers, such as foreign military attachés and a few Japanese officers. On other trains there was nothing better than a box freight car, and sometimes not even that.

No, the soldiers all have to tramp north, at the rate of fifteen miles a day, with their sixty pounds of fighting apparatus. Day after day I saw whole regiments on either side of the railroad tramping through the fluffy, powdery dust of the plains toward the battlefield. Dalny Harbor is the only good place where Japan could land her troops and provisions so long as the harbors of Niuchwang on the west and Antung on the east were icebound. What a pressure was on Dalny and the railroad there may be inferred from the fact that on March 31st, when the ice broke out of the Liao River, I saw forty-five steamers crowding into the river mouth at Niuchwang and Newkatou.

Dalny in the hands of the Japanese was what made possible every victory from Port Arthur to Mukden. Those huge siege guns that sent destruction into the forts around Port Arthur and pounded to death the Russian battleships cooped up in that harbor were landed at Dalny. Kuroki's army, of course, never could have brought sorrow to Kuropatkin at Liouyang but for the help of Oku's army, that was provisioned from Dalny. Nogi's army vanished as soon as Port Arthur fell, and when next heard from by the outside world and Kuropatkin, too, he was far north of Mukden, having made that splendid flanking movement which resulted in the collapse of the right wing of the Russians, and so insured that crushing defeat of Kuropatkin's entire army. Yet Nogi could not have done it but for Dalny as his base.

This is the one great impression Dalny made on me as a military base. When I first entered the Chinese part of the town it seemed as though I must be in Egypt in the midst of hundreds of pyramids. But instead of containing mummies these pyramids were the very life of the army, being composed of bags of rice, wheat, charcoal, clothing, shoes, ammunition and boxes of all descriptions. Even the kindling wood necessary for the troops had to be brought from Japan.

Now, Japan is one of the wet lands of the earth, with an occasional dry spell thrown in, but Manchuria is just the opposite—a dry land for six months, with no danger of even a real shower. On the cemented streets of Russian Dalny there could be no great accumulation of dust even if it never rained, but in Chinese Dalny the powdery dust was three inches deep, and when the wind blew this became three hundred feet deep, making life miserable for man and beast. But there was no danger of damage from the climate to these army stores piled up in pyramids fifty feet high. Enormously long freight trains were carrying these pyramids north day and night. I heard it said that even though the Baltic fleet should sink Togo's ships and cut Manchuria completely off from Japan there were provisions enough to last the army a year.

Dalny was interesting not only as a base of supply, but it was delightful on account of the persons I met there and the exceptional privilege granted me of addressing large bodies of soldiers. Among the persons, first of all was the Military Administrator of Liouyang Peninsula, General K. Nishi. I had occasionally met him during the years he was in command of the garrison at Sendai, but I was astonished at the cordial welcome this busy man gave me. At one of his dinners he introduced me to two Buddhist priests, one of whom was the younger brother of Count Otani, head of the famous Hongwanji temple at Kyoto. At another dinner, given in honor of Lieutenant-General Burnett of the English army, there were three generals from the Sendai Division—a very pleasant event for me. Concerning the cordial welcome I received from the officers and men of the army not only in Dalny, but everywhere I went, General Burnett's words express my mind: "In all my life I have never experienced such kindness and hospitality as I have received since I became a guest of the Japanese army."

The three evenings spent with these gentlemanly warriors gave me a new insight into the common soldiers as of the officers. Major-General Kamio, Chief of Staff, had fought through the entire siege of Port Arthur, and he said that what impressed him most was that the farmer soldiers, whose ancestors were not military men, had caught so perfectly the samurai spirit and were absolutely fearless of death. They would go to the trenches, or at the wire entanglements, or in a bayonet charge, with a smile, though certain one-half of them would never come back. Never a coward among them! At the close of the Chinese War a Chinese said to General Kamio: "We were badly put to it because your men are fearless of death, while ours run away." He replied, and I have heard similar words many times since this war broke out: "Our men don't like to die. They do not go carelessly to death. But there are things they prize more than life, and death in the pursuit of these is nothing." Major-General Okazaka spoke in similar terms with real admiration of the soldiers who had fought under him not only in that desperate and repeated attempt of the Russians to recapture the Motien Pass, but clear through the hundred and fifty miles from the Yalu River to Liouyang. He said that if he were to single out one from many impressive facts it would be the joy of the soldiers in the battle line and even in death. "I've seen them torn and dying with ghastly wounds, yet smiling and saying with their last breath, 'Heika!'" This was a common experience and it was profoundly affecting. On being asked what were the especial delights of a soldier's life he shot out this quick reply with a hearty laugh: "Seeing the enemy run and running after him."

Here I had my first acquaintance with the interpreters of the army and learned another secret of Japan's success. Foreign military attachés and war correspondents from all over the world, speaking pretty much every language except Japanese, are within the army lines and must be cared for by interpreters. Besides this, the battles are fought in a country where only Chinese is spoken, and the tens of thousands of common prisoners taken use only Russian. Interpreters are a necessity, and since the world sees the Japanese army mainly through them their position is one of great responsibility. I found them without exception splendidly equipped fellows, many of whom had studied at the great universities of Europe and America. Lieutenant Kudara was the first one into whose hands I fell, and as he had studied political science at Yale and in Berlin it was a daily pleasure and profit to spend whole hours with him.

Besides the social meetings with the men who had done things, my Dalny visit was memorable for the public meetings held with a thousand or more soldiers. When the war broke out there were numerous requests on the part of the Christians to be allowed to accompany the army as chaplains. It was known that every division could take three chaplains, and it was hoped that one or two Christians would be permitted to go, even though the number of Christians in the army is comparatively small. But every place was given to Buddhists, and even when Shintoists were permitted to go it was under another name than chaplain. I said to a Major who had come to bid me farewell: "Of course, we foreign missionaries have nothing to say, but you army men have always invited Buddhists to address the soldiers and have never yet asked a Christian. It seems to me that you are not fair in persistently keeping out of the camp Christian speakers who are thoroughly capable of interesting and benefiting the soldiers." To which he replied: "Wait till this war is over and you shall have your chance."

I had never dreamed that this opportunity would come to me and on Manchurian soil, too. But when invited by the Young Men's Christian Association to visit their work in the field, both of their Excellencies the Minister of War and the Prime Minister gave me warm letters of introduction as a Christian missionary of thirty years' standing and asked that proper facilities for accomplishing the purpose of my visit should be granted me all through Manchuria and Korea. So a new thing happened at Dalny. The Chinese theatre was twice well filled with officers and soldiers to hear a missionary speak.

Now, I think there never was an army whose officers were more sincerely desirous than those of this army that their soldiers should be kept from temptations and braced with earnest moral purpose. It was because the Young Men's Christian Association in Tokyo had attracted the attention and co-operation of many leading men that at last the moral-loving military authorities permitted the experiment of Christian work among soldiers. I found in Dalny three Japanese workers in a building provided by General Nishi, who spoke kindly of the work that was being done. Here the soldiers could meet and play games, read magazines, cut each other's hair with Young Men's Christian Association clippers, listen to gramophones in either English or Japanese, write letters, and all at no expense, while there were daily Bible readings, followed by earnest and bright sermons.

To find Christian workers welcomed among Japanese soldiers in a city under martial law made Dalny seem more than a promising terminus for the Siberian Railway, more than a mere base of supplies for a huge army, and more than a rival port to Niuchwang. The military authorities there must have spoken very emphatically of the Young Men's Christian Association work or surely there would have been no Imperial gift of 10,000 yen for this Christian work—a gift so significant and unprecedented that a war correspondent deemed it worthy of a special cable to the papers of America.

It may sound strange, but Dalny seemed to me to have a serious, almost religious, atmosphere. It was manifest to others, too. When I asked General Burnett how he, a soldier, accounted for such a series of unparalleled victories he replied: "You have asked a straight question and I'll give you a soldier's straight reply. I'm not much on religion, but I verily believe that God Almighty had a great work to do here in the East, and so He raised up Japan to help Him do it." General Kamio was similarly serious in what he said: "The samurai cares little for religion (meaning, I suppose, religious ceremonies), but nevertheless all his mental, moral and spiritual powers come from heaven."

Dalny lingers in my mind as a rare and delightful experience.

THE IMPERIAL KOREAN SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

Perhaps very few of our readers know that it was Dr. McLeavy Brown, to whom not only the Koreans but also the foreign residents here owe so many improvements in the capital, who caused the creation of the Imperial Military Band. Being himself a great lover of music and as His Majesty the Emperor had often expressed a desire for a Military Band Mr. Brown at once made preparations for obtaining a capable teacher, whom he secured in the person of Herr Franz Eckert, who holds a German Music Diploma and who has distinguished himself in Japan as a first class organizer and conductor of the Naval and Military as well as of the String Band of the Imperial Palace in Tokyo. After having fulfilled his duties successfully and faithfully for twenty years Herr Eckert received, when leaving Japan, from the Japanese Government, a life pension as a recognition of his service, and by the Emperor of Japan he was decorated a second time. Therefore, Dr. Weipert, the German Consul, in recommending Herr Eckert felt sure that the man would and could form a good Military Band. Dr. McLeavy Brown ordered at once the necessary instruments and other requirements for music and Herr Eckert responded willingly to the call of the German Consul, and arrived in Korea in February 1901. The difficulties there were in store for him are barely describable.

To select fifty men or more, from the different Seoul regiments, as he had received orders to do, was not so easy as it may appear to those unacquainted with Korea. For a man, who for instance is meant to play the trombone, must have specially formed lips; reed instruments require well shaped teeth and fingers; they all must have powerful lungs and chests. All this and much more had to be considered in choosing his pupils.

With a young but intelligent Korean from the German Language School Herr Eckert started his arduous work in one of the Military Barracks near the old Palace gate. How he managed to get along with his fifty soldiers, of whom a considerable number could scarcely read or write their own language, is hard to understand. One could see him there training his men one after the other to learn to beat time, conducting them with a short stick, and constantly counting loudly eins, zwei; until they could satisfactorily do it all together; then the fourths, etc.; that took many hours and days for the object was to teach them how to keep proper time later on. With these exercises, went hand in hand the teaching of notes and their value; semibreves, minims, crotchets, quavers, etc., then the scales in all the different keys; sharps, flats, major and minor. Finally he began teaching all the different instruments of which each has its own peculiarities. Each scholar had first to be taught how to hold, to treat, to clean, and then how to use it, which was the most difficult task of all, for each grip of the fingers, all the manipulations of the lips, teeth and tongue, in producing the right sounds had to be explained and practically shown by the indefatigable teacher, whom we have seen frequently returning home with swollen lips and tongue, so that he could hardly speak.

But success crowned his work, and in September of the same year, on the occasion of the birthday celebration of His Majesty at the Palace the Imperial Band was already capable of playing several selections, of which we still remember the Togauer March as being encored more than once that day. Everyone was astonished at the progress made by the musicians in so short a time. Mr. Brown was much pleased and Dr. Allen, the U. S. Minister, exclaimed: "How was it possible? How did you do it, Mr. Eckert?" and congratulated him heartily upon his achievements, all the other ministers doing the same. But His Majesty was the most pleased of all and soon afterwards when Herr Eckert composed and arranged the Korean National Anthem the Emperor decorated him with the 3rd class of the order of the Tai-kuk.

Teaching at the Barracks was often interrupted by the constant practice of the buglers of the regiment quartered there. Mr. Brown, to whom Herr Eckert confided his grievances, again came to the fore and caused the present large and commodious buildings with a fine Music Hall close to the Marble Pagoda to be erected and set apart for Mr. Eckert's use.

Undisturbed and quite alone the Professor has trained his men there, up to such a high standard, that they can favourably be compared with any foreign Military Band. We have heard them perform the finest marches, the sweetest waltzes, touching church music and grand overtures.

May it also be mentioned that everything his musicians are playing has been re-written by the Professor himself and according to his musical ideas he determines whether the instrumentation shall be simple or quite artistic. This requires time and arduous brain work; holidays are therefore unknown to him, and during the so-called summer vacations he allows his men only a few days liberty each week; keeping them in constant training; one of the secrets of his great success.

Dr. McLeavy Brown has the satisfaction of knowing that the outlay upon the Imperial Band has borne fruit manifold; his and Herr Eckert's name will be for ever associated with the History of European music in Korea, and it is only to be hoped that Mr. Brown's successor may support the Imperial Military Band in the same generous manner as his predecessor. — Seoul Press.

THE "KINJO MARU" DISASTER FUND.

We beg to acknowledge receipt of the following sums on behalf of the widows and orphans created by the Kinjo Maru disaster in the Inland Sea:—

	Yen.
H. E. Sir Claude and Lady Macdonald.....	200
Mr. J. T. Hamilton	100
Capt. and Mrs. Brinkley	50
Mr. E. M. Hobart Hampden	25
M. N. Gobhai & Co.	25
Capt. and Mrs. Young	20
Mr. Geo. H. Barclay	50
Mr. V. A. Caesar Hawkins.....	10
Mr. A. F. White	10

Per Mr. Montague Beart:—

Mr. Montague Beart	5
Mrs. Beart.....	5
Staff of "Home Circle"	5
Mr. T. H. R. Shaw	5
Mr. A. E. Pearson	5
Mr. C. W. Cooper	5
Mr. J. T. Dixon	5
Captain Lyceit, S. S. "Yangtze"	5
Captain Clrimes, S. S. "Orestes"	5

Subscriptions of members of the Yokohama King's Daughters' Circle	40
Messrs. Sale and Fazar, Ltd.	100
An Irishman and Two Old Salis	15

TELEGRAMS.

(REUTER'S SPECIAL SERVICE.)

DR. BARNARDO DEAD.

London, Sept. 21.

The death of Dr. Barnardo, the famous philanthropist, is announced.

SWEDEN AND NORWAY.

The conference between Swedish and Norwegian delegates at Karlstad, in Sweden, continues. While the main question of the demolition of the Norwegian fortresses and the eventual reference of certain other questions to arbitration have been virtually agreed upon, other knotty points remain unsettled. It is believed, however, that they will be adjusted satisfactorily. Meanwhile troops are kept in the vicinity of the frontiers.

GERMAN REVERSE IN AFRICA.

The Hottentot chief Witboor, evading a sweeping movement of General Trotha, captured a convoy near Kietmanshoep. The escort was surprised and practically annihilated; a thousand cattle, 122 wagons—some laden with ammunition—and a number of rifles were captured.

RENEWED DISORDERS IN RUSSIA.

London, September 22.

A crowd at Riga stormed the prison and killed or wounded five guards, liberating two important political prisoners. The criminals were not liberated.

A revolt in the Orel prison was quelled by the troops, the casualty list being one killed and five wounded.

SWEDEN AND NORWAY.

Later.

The Swedish and Norwegian Parliaments are to meet on Oct. 11th to discuss the result of the Karlsbad Conference.

COL. FRANK RHODES DEAD.

Colonel Frank Rhodes has died at Cape Town of blackwater fever.

AMERICAN INSURANCE COMPANIES.

An official investigation into the affairs of the leading American Insurance Companies is proceeding in New York. It has disclosed astonishing irregularities. Large loan transaction are not recorded in the private books. Free advances have been made to party funds and to persons for political purposes.

THE MOROCCO IMBROGLIO.

London, September 23.

From semi-official Paris reports, it is still believed that the Morocco negotiations will lead to an understanding, but owing to German demands and objections, especially with reference to policing the frontier and financial arrangements, an agreement is less imminent than expected.

THE SUEZ CANAL.

Later.

The Suez Canal Company's commission has decided to blow up the wreck of the steamer Chatham, probably on Thursday.

MANCHURIA TO BE PARTIALLY EVACUATED.

It is stated in St. Petersburg that Manchuria is only partially to be evacuated, several army corps being left on the Chinese frontier.

BRITISH SOUTH AFRICA.

Earl Selborne is touring through the Transvaal and receiving Boer deputations. He declared to one deputation that the majority of the Chinese miners are peaceable. The Government were now empowered to repatriate criminals. He pointed out that the repatriation of all the Chinese would result in shutting down one-third of the Rand mines.

FINLAND

The Russian forces in Finland are being considerably reinforced.

RUSSIA'S MILITARY ACTIVITY.

London, September 24.

It is stated in St. Petersburg circles that the Russian troops in Turkestan will shortly be strongly reinforced. Russia's activity in the direction of Persia is increasing.

NORWAY AND SWEDEN.

London, September 24.

The Karlstad conference has terminated. It is officially announced that an agreement has been reached and that the protocols will be published next week at Christiana and Stockholm simultaneously. Orders have been given to the Norwegian and Swedish troops to withdraw from the frontier.

AUSTRO-HUNGARIAN RELATIONS.

The Emperor Francis Joseph, desiring to make a final attempt to restore a constitutional regime in Hungary, summoned to Vienna the leaders of the Opposition, who are in a majority in the Diet. He requested them to form a Cabinet, but positively declined to entertain any modification affecting the union of Austria and Hungary or anything affecting the Army. He warned them earnestly of the responsibility they would incur if they obstinately adhered to the old standpoint, and referred them to Count Gulochowski, whom they declined to see because he was not a Hungarian. Count Cziraky has therefore been appointed to conduct the negotiation.

CONSEQUENCES OF THE ANGLO-JAPANESE ALLIANCE.

London, September 25.

The acquisition of the Tanjong Pagar Dock forms part of Sir John Fisher's Imperial defence scheme, comprising the establishment of naval bases at Gibraltar, Dover and Singapore, and the abandonment of Wei-hei-wei, Trincomalee, Halifax and Esquimaux. The Observer announces that the establishment of a naval base at Singapore practically forms part of the Anglo-Japanese agreement for mutual self-protection.

THE AUSTRO-HUNGARIAN EMBROGLIO.

London, September 26.

Intense anger is expressed in Budapest at the treatment meted out to the leaders of the Opposition by the Emperor Francis Joseph. He received them standing and did not shake hands with them. The Emperor addressed the Hungarian leaders curtly in German and gave them no opportunity to speak, dismissing them in four minutes.

The leaders of the Hungarian Opposition informed Count Cziraky yesterday morning that they declined to form a Government on the Emperor's conditions, and Count Cziraky promised to bring them the Emperor's reply by 2.30 o'clock. On arriving at their hotel at 3.15 p.m. Count Cziraky found that the Hungarian leaders had already returned to Budapest.

THE BAKU TROUBLES.

A conference of leading Tartars and Armenians at Baku has concluded peace.

A POPULAR OVATION.

Later.

The leaders of the Hungarian Opposition were greatly ovated on their return to Budapest.

FRANCE AND VENEZUELA.

The relations between France and Venezuela are becoming acute. President Castro recently closed the French cable, alleging a breach of contract. The French Chargé d'Affaires is endeavouring to negotiate, but Castro is adopting an arrogant attitude.

THE ANGLO-JAPANESE TREATY.

London, Sept. 27.

The text of the Anglo-Japanese treaty has been published in London.

THE HUNGARIAN SITUATION.

London, September 27.

The Hungarian Opposition parties will meet on the 30th inst. to draft a formal reply to the Emperor Francis Joseph.

M. DE WITTE IN GERMANY.

M. de Witte had prolonged interviews yesterday with Baron von Richthofen, German Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, and with Prince Buclow, the Imperial Chancellor.

BARON KOMURA.

Baron Komura starts homeward tomorrow via Vancouver.

CANADA AND THE JAPANESE TARIFF.

Canada asks the Imperial Government to arrange for Canada to become a party to the Anglo-Japanese Commercial Treaty of 1895 and thus secure the minimum tariff. The present arrangement is advantageous to American products.

THE TANJONG PAGAR DOCK.

London, September 27.

The British Admiralty disclaims all connection with the purchase of the Tanjong Pagar Dock. It is officially explained that the Government of the Straits Settlements is the purchaser of the Dock, not the Imperial Government.

Reuter also wires 237 words giving a summary of the text of the Anglo-Japanese agreement, which was issued in extenso by the Foreign Office in Tokyo on the 27th.—Ed. J.M.]

BRITAIN EXPLAINS TO RUSSIA.

London, September 28.

A letter written by Lord Lansdowne, Principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, under date of the 6th of September, instructs Sir Charles Hardinge, British Ambassador to Russia, to communicate the text of the Anglo-Japanese treaty to the Russian Government. Lord Lansdowne explains that the treaty, which was signed on the 12th of August and not been published hitherto with a view to the peace negotiations proceeding between Japan and Russia, and trusts that the Russian Government will recognise that the new agreement is an international instrument unexceptionable to Powers interested in Far Eastern affairs. The letter especially draws attention to Article II, laying stress on the words "unprovoked attack"; it also calls attention to Article III, and the position of Japan in Korea, and concludes that the British Government anticipates that as the Alliance is designed with objects purely peaceful and for the protection of rights and interests, the validity whereof is incontestable and whereon the parties concerned are fully entitled to insist, it will be regarded with approval by the Russian Government. The British Government is justified in believing that the conclusion of the Anglo-Japanese alliance has not been without its effect in facilitating the termination of the war and trusts that it may for many years be instrumental in securing the peace of the world in the regions within its scope.

Lord Lansdowne has sent to France also a despatch identical to the one sent to Russia.

ANOTHER CAPTURE.

(PUBLISHED BY THE NAVAL DEPARTMENT.)

A cruiser of the Northern Squadron has captured the American steamer Barracouta on the north coast of Saghalien.

(Received at the Imperial Naval Head Quarters on the 22nd inst. from Vice-Admiral Shibayama, Commanding at Port Arthur.)

THE "RETVIZAN."

The battle-ship Retvizan (12,902 tons, 18 knots) was floated at 6 p.m. on the 22nd without mishap.

(On the 18th of December last Admiral Togo reported that the Retvizan was lying on the east of the Pollara heading in the same direction. She was sunk much deeper than the Pollara, her stern-deck being generally under water, and she had a list of 5° to starboard. Hence, doubtless, the difficulty of raising her was greater. The only vessel now remaining to be floated is the battle-ship Pobeda.—Ed. J.M.)

(RECEIVED AT THE FOREIGN OFFICE)

BARON KOMURA.

Baron Komura leaves New York on the 27th inst. to embark at Vancouver on the 2nd of October. He will probably reach Yokohama on the 16th October.

PROBABLE NEW RUSSIAN CABINET.

The Vienna Neue Freie Presse republishes the statement of the Novoye Vremya and the Russ to the effect that M. Witte is to be appointed President of the Cabinet and that the new Cabinet will be formed at the time of the general elections to the new national assembly.

The Russ gives the probable formation of the Cabinet as follows:—

President	Witte.
Minister of Finance	Romanoff.
Minister of Justice	Nordhoff.
Minister of Foreign Affairs	Lamsdorff.
Minister of Agriculture and Commerce	Sukhomitoff.
Minister of War	Rediger.
Minister of Marine	Birleff.
Minister of Education	Trubetskoi.
Procurator General of the Holy Synod	Shuremitz.

(RECEIVED BY THE "KOKUMIN SHIMBUN.")

SUICIDE OF COLONEL OGORODNIKOFF.

The Russian Military Agent at Tientsin, Colonel Ogorodnikoff, has committed suicide. Rumour says that it was on account of misapplying public funds. He is reported to have owed the Peking Telegraph Office five thousand dollars.

MAIL STEAMERS.

NEXT MAIL IS DUE

From	Line	Steamer	Date
Europe	M. M.	Caledonien 1	F. Sept. 29
Hongkong	B. T.	Lyra	F. Sept. 29
Vancouver	C. P. R.	Athenian 2	Sa. Oct. 7
Europe	N. L. D.	Zieten 3	Sa. Oct. 7
America	O. & O.	Doric	Sa. Oct. 6
Tacoma	B. T.	Tremont	M. Oct. 9
Hongkong	P. M.	Siberia	Th. Oct. 12
America	P. M.	Manchuria 4	F. Oct. 13
Vancouver	C. P. R.	Em. of India	M. Oct. 16
Hongkong	C. P. R.	Em. of China	Th. Oct. 26
America	P. M.	Korea	F. Oct. 28

- 1 Left Shanghai on the 25th inst.
- 2 Left Vancouver on the 18th inst.
- 3 Left Hongkong on the 27th inst.
- 4 Left San Francisco on the 27th inst.

NEXT MAIL LEAVES

For	Line	Steamer	Date
Vancouver	C. P. R.	Em. of Japan	F. Sept. 29
Shanghai	N. Y. K.	Benvorlich	F. Sept. 29
Europe	N. D. L.	Bayern	Sa. Sept. 30
Tacoma	B. T.	Lyra	Sa. Sept. 30
America	T. K. K.	America Maru	Sa. Sept. 30
Hongkong	C. P. R.	Athenian	Sa. Oct. 7
Europe	M. M.	Caledonien	Sa. Oct. 7
Hongkong	O. & O.	Doric	Su. Oct. 8
Europe	P. & O.	Pera	Tu. Oct. 10
Portland	P. & A.	Nicomedia	Tu. Oct. 10
Hongkong	B. T.	Tremont	Tu. Oct. 10
Hongkong	P. & A.	Numania	Th. Oct. 12
America	P. M.	Siberia	F. Oct. 13
America	P. M.	Manchuria	Su. Oct. 15
Hongkong	C. P. R.	Em. of China	M. Oct. 16
Hongkong	P. M.	Korea	M. Oct. 30

LATEST SHIPPING.

ARRIVALS.

Coptic, British steamer, 2,744, Wm. Finch, 22nd Sept.—Hongkong via ports, and Kobe, 21st Sept. Mails and General.—O. & O. S.S. Co.

Peik, Norwegian steamer, 74r, J. Lorentzen, 22nd Sept.—Taku and Newchwang via ports, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Wakanoura Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,556, J. Arakawa, 22nd Sept.—Otaru via ports, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Windsor, British steamer, 1,853, John B. Booth, 22nd Sept.—Hakodate, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Auchenblae, British steamer, 2,597, Geo. Mair, 22nd Sept.—Moj, Ballast.—Dodwell & Co., Ltd.

Taiwa Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,123, F. Yemomoto, 22nd Sept.—Keelung via Osaka, Rice.—Osaka Shosen Kaisha.

Resolut, Norwegian steamer, 865, Jorgesen, 22nd Sept.—Hakodate, General.—Japanese.

Zoroaster, British steamer, 2,384, John Ewan, 22nd Sept.—Christmas Island via Hongkong, Phosphate Rock.—Cornes & Co.

Kanjo Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,041, M. Honda, 22nd Sept.—Yokkaichi, 21st Sept., General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Saint Fillans, British steamer, 2,307, Cafferata, 23rd Sept.—New York via Suez and ports, and Kobe, 21st Sept., General.—C. Illies & Co.

Tartar, British steamer, 2,768, W. Davison, 23rd Sept.—Hongkong via ports, and Kobe, 21st Sept., Mails and General.—C. P. R. Co.

Bayern, German steamer, 3,158, H. Formes, 24th Sept.—Hamburg and Bremen via ports, and Kobe, 23rd Sept., Mails and General.—H. Ahrens & Co., Nachf.

China, American steamer, 3,186, D. E. Friele, 24th Sept.—San Francisco via Honolulu, 6th Sept., Mails and General.—P. M. S.S. Co.

Shawmut, American steamer, 6,195, E. V. Roberts, 24th Sept.—Seattle, Wash., 6th Sept., Mails and General.—Dodwell & Co., Ltd.

Belgian King, British steamer, 2,153, J. Hayton, 24th Sept.—Kobe, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Alston, British steamer, 2,563, Wilson, 25th Sept.—Shanghai, 20th Sept., Ballast.—Cornes & Co.

Kanagawa Maru, Japanese steamer, 3,813, J. W. Wale, 25th Sept.—Kobe, Mails and General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Bjorn, Norwegian steamer, 722, A. N. Christensen, 25th Sept.—Moj, Coal.—Drabble & Co.

Benlawers, British steamer, 2,510, D. Clark, 25th Sept.—London via ports, and Kobe, 24th Sept., General.—Cornes & Co.

Braemar, British steamer, 2,316, S. L. Saxby, 26th Sept.—Kobe, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Norrona, Norwegian steamer, 973, H. Anderson, 25th Sept.—Newchwang via ports, General.—Yamagata.

Eutin, German steamer, 1,734, J. Bulman, 26th Sept.—Shanghai, General.—Drabble & Co.

Dolores, American schooner, 120, V. A. Herrero, 26th Sept.—Guam, General.—H. McArthur & Co.

Silda, Norwegian steamer, 2,097, Lei, 26th Sept.—Java, Sugar.—Drabble & Co.

Agamemnon, British steamer, 4,462, Robt. Day, 26th Sept.—Glasgow and Liverpool via ports, and Kobe, 25th Sept., General.—Butterfield & Swire.

Benvorlich, British steamer, 2,164, W. Thomson, 26th Sept.—Shanghai via ports, Mails and General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Mortlake, British steamer, 1,680, F. W. Batten, 27th Sept.—Moj, Coal.—Rikimatsu Nanimatsu.

Ruth, Norwegian steamer, 2,239, Hellison, 27th Sept.—Kuchinotsu, Coal.—Drabble & Co.

Kanjo Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,041, M. Honda, 27th Sept.—Yokkaichi, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Ohio II, American steamer, 755, Gundersen, 28th Sept.—Hamburg via Suez and Singapore 12th Sept., General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Tzenkai, British steamer, 3,016, H. Harris, 28th Sept.—Glasgow and Singapore via ports, Kobe 27th Sept., General.—Butterfield & Swire.

Breconshire, British steamer, 2,323, G. E. Elliott, 28th Sept.—Otaru via ports, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Empress of Japan, British steamer, 3,003, H. Pybus, 28th Sept.—Hongkong via ports, and Kobe, 27th Sept., Mails and General.—C. P. R. Co.

DEPARTURES.

Pleades, American steamer, 2,932, F. G. Purrington, 22nd Sept.—Taku and Newchwang via ports, Mails and General.—Dodwell & Co., Ltd.

Woodford, British steamer, 1,860, Jas. Seddon, 22nd Sept.—Muroran, Ballast.—Hokkaido Tanko Kaisha.

Macduff, British steamer, 1,882, John B. Muir, 22nd Sept.—Kobe, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Syfang, German steamer, 1,147, U. Degener, 22nd Sept.—Moj, Ballast.—Simon Everts & Co.

Aragonia, German steamer, 3,324, Ernst, 22nd Sept.,—Portland, Oregon, via Honolulu and San Francisco, Mails and General.—P. & A. S.S. Co.

Kanjo Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,041, M. Honda, 23rd Sept.,—Yokkaichi, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Polyusien, French steamer, 2,916, Broc, 23rd Sept.,—Marseilles via ports, Mails and General.—M. M. S.S. Co.

Coptic, British steamer, 2,744, Wm. Finch, 23rd Sept.,—San Francisco via Honolulu, Mails and General.—O. & O. S.S. Co.

Ganges, British steamer, 2,721, W. Sibbald, 23rd Sept.,—Kobe, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Bentleuch, British steamer, 2,679, Reid, 23rd Sept.,—London and Antwerp via ports, General.—C. Cornes & Co.

Barotse, British steamer, 2,619, A. Lee, 23rd Sept.,—London and Antwerp via ports, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Elka, Norwegian steamer, 2,079, Weibust, 24rd Sept.,—Wakamatsu, Ballast.—Drabble & Co.

Oro, British steamer, 2,147, W. Ransome Coleman, 23rd Sept.,—Otaru via ports, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Tartar, British steamer, 2,768, W. Davison, 24th Sept.,—Vancouver, B.C., Mails and General.—C. P. R. Co.

Takeshima Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,052, T. Tashika, 24th Sept.,—Wakamatsu, General.—Drabble & Co.

Taiwa Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,123, F. Yenomoto, 24th Sept.,—Osaka, General.—Osaka Shosen Kaisha.

Windsor, British steamer, 1,853, John B. Booth, 24th Sept.,—Kobe, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Slavonia, German steamer, 3,206, Roerden, 24th Sept.,—Havre and Hamburg via ports, General.—C. Illies & Co.

Richmond, British steamer, 2,059, F. T. Nicolle, 24th Sept.,—Mooran, Ballast.—Hokkaido Tanko Kaisha.

Resolut, Norwegian steamer, 865, Jorgesen, 24th Sept.,—Taku, General.—Japanese.

Nubia, British steamer, 3,824, F. G. Fox, 24th Sept.,—Marseilles and London via ports, Mails and General.—P. & O. S.N. Co.

Wakanoura Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,556, T. Aikawa, 24th Sept.,—Kobe via Yokkaichi, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Alcinous, British steamer, 4,278, J. Pulford, 23th Sept.,—London, Amsterdam and Antwerp via ports, General.—Butterfield & Swire.

Anchenblue, British steamer, 2,597, Geo. Mair, 24th Sept.,—Portland, Ballast.—Dodwell & Co., Ltd.

America Maru, Japanese steamer, 3,460, P. H. Going, Sept.,—Kobe, General.—Toyo Kisen Kaisha.

Prik, Norwegian steamer, 744, J. Lorentzen, 25th Sept.,—Taku and Newchang via ports, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Prussia, American Barque, 1,131, A. Johnson, 26th Sept.,—Port Townsend, Ballast.—Jardine, Matheson & Co.

Powhatan, British steamer, 1,640, Turner, 26th Sept.,—Otaru via ports, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Marco Polo, Italian cruiser, 4,500, Comde. Costantino Verde, 25th Sept.,—Kobe.

China, American steamer, 3,186, D. E. Friele, 26th Sept.,—Hongkong via ports, Mails and General.—P. M. S.S. Co.

Swanley, British steamer, 2,908, D. P. Dawson, 26th Sept.,—Kobe, General.—Dodwell & Co., Ltd.

Calliope, British steamer, 2,498, Jno. G. Soulsby, 26th Sept.,—Moji, Ballast.—Ed. L. van Nierop & Co.

Belgian King, British steamer, 2,153, J. Hayton, 26th Sept.,—Yokkaichi, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Kanagawa Maru, Japanese steamer, 3,813, J. W. Wale, 26th Sept.,—Seattle, Wash., via Victoria, B.C., Mails and General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Sophie Rickmers, German steamer, 2,262, Walsen, 27th Sept.,—Kobe, General.—C. Illies & Co.

Alston, British steamer, 2,563, W. Wilson, 27th Sept.,—New York via ports and Suez, General.—C. Cornes & Co.

Saint Fillius, British steamer, 2,307, Cifferalia, 24th Sept.,—Port Verie via Moji, Ballast.—C. Illies & Co.

Ras Dara, British steamer, 2,495, McCambridge, 27th Sept.,—Kuchinoitsu, Ballast.—C. Cornes & Co.

Kanjo Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,041, M. Honda, 18th Sept.,—Yokkaichi, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Ohio II, American steamer, 755, Gunderson, 28th Sept.,—Yokosuka, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Norrona, Norwegian steamer, 973, H. Anderson, 28th Sept.,—Osaka, General.—Yamagata-ya.

Jason, British steamer, 4,880, T. G. Steeves, 18th Sept.,—Puget Sound ports via Hakodate, Mails and General.—Butterfield & Swire.

Shawmut, American steamer, 6,195, E. V. Roberts, 28th Sept.,—Manila and Hongkong via ports, Mails and General.—Dodwell & Co., Ltd.

PASSENGERS.

ARRIVED.

Per British steamer Coptic, from Hongkong via ports:—Mr. E. E. Bracy, Mr. T. D. McKay, Mr. J. M. Maitland, Mr. H. F. Teverson, Mrs. Stanley, child and nurse, Mr. E. Shellin, and Mrs. E. Shellin and amah, in cabin. For San Francisco:—Miss C. Ainslie, Lieut. F. Joslyn Baum, Mr. Edgar K. Bourne, Rev. W. T. Cherry, Mrs. W. T. Cherry and infant, Master Willie Cherry, Master Clinton Cherry, Mr. Raphael Corpus, Miss Lillian Fuller, Mr. Gault Ingram, Mrs. W. H. Ickis, Miss Catherine Ickis, Consul General F. D. Cheshire, Mr. G. Van Gordon, Mr. J. W. Kennedy, Capt. C. J. Kinder, Mrs. Wm. Muat, Master Wm. Muat, Jr., Rev. Carl W. Nelson, Mrs. W. D. O'Brien, Mr. W. J. Powell, Mrs. F. C. Peck, Mr. H. E. Partridge, Mr. R. Rolla, Capt. A. J. Robertson, Mr. S. Stuyvesant, Rev. J. B. Thomas, Mrs. J. B. Thomas, Miss Lillian Thomas, Miss Edith Thomas, Master Walter Thomas, Mr. A. H. Warnecke, Mrs. A. H. Warnecke, and Miss Harriet Warnecke, in cabin.

Per American steamer China, from San Francisco via Honolulu:—Miss J. Axline, Mr. W. A. Baas, Rev. Chas. Bowman, Bishop S. C. Breyfogle, Miss E. R. Campbell, Mr. Sydney Collier, Mrs. Sydney Collier, Mr. A. Fuehr, Mrs. A. Fuehr, child and amah, Mrs. C. Fickert, Mr. T. E. Gibbon, Mrs. T. E. Gibbon, Miss Alice Griffith, Mr. U. Y. Hirsse, Mr. H. E. Hunter, Dr. Geo. Hueber, Mr. M. W. Kochen, Mrs. M. W. Kochen, Miss E. Kuhn, Miss Stella Lewis, Miss L. Oldham, Mr. G. B. Perkins, Mrs. G. B. Perkins, Miss V. Smart, Mr. J. L. Stearns, Mrs. J. L. Stearns, Mr. S. Terano, Mr. S. J. Umbreit, Mrs. S. J. Umbreit, Mr. J. C. Underwood, Mr. E. C. Uhlheim, Mr. R. A. Uhlheim, Mrs. J. H. Wallace and child, Miss A. Wieland, and Mr. R. Weidensall, in cabin. For Kobe:—Miss J. M. Johnstone, Dr. J. Noble, Mrs. J. Noble and two children, Rev. A. W. Wasson, Mrs. A. W. Wasson, in cabin. For Nagasaki:—Rev. J. W. Cline, Mrs. J. W. Cline and daughter, Rev. J. C. Hawk, Mrs. J. C. Hawk, Miss Susan Mitchell, Rev. J. C. Ogden, Mrs. J. C. Ogden, Miss S. Ward, in cabin. For Manila:—Mrs. A. R. H. Alfred, Mr. H. C. Anderson, Mr. Chas. H. Bright, Mrs. Chas. H. Bright, Miss Tillie Burns, Mr. A. S. B. Davies, Mrs. A. S. B. Davies, Mr. Le Roy Dixon, Mr. Jas. Dixon, Rev. Philip Finnegan, Mr. H. S. Forbes, Dr. J. A. Graham, Mrs. J. A. Graham, Miss M. Graham, Rev. Bruce L. Kershner, Mrs. Bruce L. Kershner, Mr. Jas. Lawler and infant, Rev. Dennis Lynch, Rev. Chas. Magill, Mrs. Chas. Magill, Rev. Jas. P. Monaghan, Mr. D. D. L. McGrew, Rev. Jas. R. O'Neill, Rev. C. O'Reilly, Miss E. T. Pollock and daughter, Miss M. Saunders, Mr. F. J. Whittaker, Mr. John R. White, and Miss E. M. Chase and child, in cabin. For Hongkong:—Miss E. D. Anderson, Mr. A. Barnard, Mr. D. O. Cunningham, Mrs. D. O. Cunningham, Mr. M. S. Doty, Master Wm. S. Doty, Miss Minnie Hayden, Mr. W. H. Lawrence, Mr. J. H. Macoun, Mr. L. M. Robbins, Mrs. L. Schwenzer, Mr. H. C. Saum, Mrs. H. C. Saum and son, Rev. Hugh Taylor, Mrs. Hugh Taylor and children, and Mr. L. Schweitzer, in cabin.

Per British steamer Tartar, from Hongkong via ports:—Sir Pelham Warren, Capt. C. S. Smith, Miss Mendelsod, Mr. T. B. Garrison, and Mr. J. Elmer, in cabin. For Vancouver:—Mr. W. L. Molyneux, Dr. Otto Loewe, Mr. J. Thornborrow, Mr. J. A. Rowat, Mr. A. Ellis, Lieut. N. Mosley, Mr. W. M. Mason, Mr. H. W. Bourke, Mr. A. Rizzini, Mr. and Mrs. Redoroff, Mr. G. P. Vallack, Mrs. S. Wagmester, Misses Y. and G. Wagmester, Mr. Paul Legrand, Mr. J. S. Janeway, Mr. B. R. Elliott, Mr. A. A. Elliott, Miss M. Harvey, Miss E. Scott, and Mr. and Mrs. B. Baxter, in cabin; 50, in steerage.

Per German steamer Bayern, from Europe via ports:—Mr. Legationsrat von Ergert, Dr. and Mrs. Specka, Mr. and Mrs. Julius J. Foster, Mr. Arthur H. Bibby, Mr. S. G. Glover, Mr. J. L. Quintos, Mr. and Mrs. John Meier, Mr. An Mun Yee, Mr. Arnold, Mr. and Mrs. Siloott, Mr. and Mrs. E. H. Clement, Mr. A. B. Clement, Mr. E. J. W. C. Clement, Mr. Fritz Rittmüller, Mr. R. Siebenschein, Miss Mölle, Miss Lee, Major von Weise, Mr. E. Becker, Mr. R. Reiff, Mr. H. Geslin, Mr. M. Raspe, Mr. Richard Rietzschel, Mr. Ko Okabe, Rev. Andrews and family, Dr. R. Tamura, Mr. B. Tidy, Mr. Dedo Sterbeck, Mr. C. C. Bliss, Capt. W. W. Pyne, Mr. Schneider, Mr. Tahilram, Mr. Shamatmal, Mr. Pang, Mr. Woo, Mr. Weng, and Mr. M. Brettschneider, in cabin.

Per American steamer Shawmut, from Seattle, Wash.:—Rev. and Mrs. N. S. Honn and 4 children, Mr. C. H. Bliss, Dr. Clay MacCauley, Dr. and Mrs. T. E. Moss and child, Miss M. E. Polley, Mr. C. Subjano, Mrs. R. D. White, Mr. and Mrs. G. E. Garbutt, Mrs. F. E. Liebenow and 2 children, Mrs. M. E. Kidder, Mr. J. Barsley, Mr. J. M. Tuther, Mr. L. O. Hibbard, Mr. J. W. Cameron, Mr. A. Cameron, Mr. and Mrs. W. P. Turner and 3 children, Mrs. A. S. Elliott, Mr. J. S. Burgess, Rev. and Mrs. J. T. Ward, Mr. J. McMullen, Mr. T. Yamato, Rev. and Mrs. A. T. Bowen and 3 children, Mr. and Mrs. E. M. Sollers and child, Miss L. M. Stewart, Mr. and Mrs. G. M. Fisher and child, Mr. C. E. Lundgreen, Major and Mrs. J. Mills and 2 children, Mr. and Mrs. B. E. Thoms, Miss F. E. Hunt, Mrs. C. V. Hibbard and child, Miss F. Kawahata, Mr. W. Burt, Mr. W. K. Bachelder, Mrs. H. W. Durbarre, and Mr. R. Anderson, in cabin.

Per British steamer Empress of Japan, from Hongkong via ports:—Mr. and Mrs. W. Cruikshank, Mrs. Neyes, Mrs. R. W. Borthwick and child, Mr. G. Armstrong, Mr. F. Barry, Mrs. D. Goldman and son, Mr. D. A. Darling, Mr. G. Mosser, Mr. R. S. Freeman, Mrs. C. T. Hardy, Mrs. F. Robins, Mr. R. Ahufelt, Mr. W. Cowan, Major and Mrs. White, Mrs. Pillow, Miss Halford, Major and Mrs. Rendleton, Mrs. Dawson and 2 children, Miss Tripler, Mr. and Mrs. Heller, Mr. A. M. Knapp, Mr. R. Otani, Misses S. and T. Otani, Mr. R. Fujishima, and Mrs. Parker, in cabin; 1, intermediate; 4, in steerage. For Vancouver:—Mr. W. H. Bond, Mr. and Mrs. Boggan and child, Miss Sheffield, Capt. P. Beresford, Mr. P. Kraft, Mr. J. Quin, Mr. and Mrs. Serebrenikow, Mrs. F. E. Garden, Mr. W. J. N. Dyer, Mrs. R. Richards, Mr. Pennycock, Mrs. W. B. Knapp, Mr. R. M. Bagen, and Mr. L. E. Bennett, in cabin; 30, intermediate; 330, in steerage.

DEPARTED.

Per British steamer Tartar, for Vancouver B.C.:—Mr. W. Barnes, Mr. E. G. Baxter, Mrs. E. G. Baxter, Mr. Herbert Boothby, Mr. H. W. Boarke, Miss M. D. Brackman, Mr. Robt. W. Collins, Mr. L. Cooper, Miss Ethel Cummins, Mrs. M. L. Edwards, Mr. B. R. Elliott, Mr. F. F. Eliot, Mr. A. Ellis, Mr. N. D. Fedoroff, Mrs. N. D. Fedoroff, Miss M. Harvey, Mr. Jas. T. Helm, Mr. S. Honda, Mr. J. S. Janeway, Mr. J. Kodira, Rev. H. L. Latham, Mrs. H. L. Latham and child, Master Latham, Mr. Paul Legrand, Dr. Otto Loewe, Dr. Mary H. McLean, Miss Jean McLean, Mr. W. M. Mason, Mr. J. H. Meiklejohn, Mr. J. H. Molyneux, Lieut. N. Mosley, Mr. K. Noda, Mr. S. Noguchi, Mr. G. A. Ohlinger, Mr. K. Onchi, Mr. W. L. Pattenden, Mr. A. Rizzini, Mr. J. A. Rowat, Mrs. J. B. Saunders, Miss Saunders, Miss E. Scott, Mr. T. Suzuki, Mr. T. Tanabe, Mr. K. Tanaka, Mr. J. Thornborrow, Mr. J. Unoki, Mr. G. P. Vallack, Mrs. S. Wagmester, Miss Y. Wagmester, Miss G. Wagmester and Mr. K. Watanabe in cabin.

Per British steamer Coptic, for San Francisco via Honolulu:—Miss C. Ainslie, Mr. J. Arakawa, Mr. O. P. Austin, Mrs. O. P. Austin, Lieut. F. Joslyn Baum, Mrs. A. Blackwell, Mr. H. Bohme, Mr. Edgar K. Bourne, Mr. A. C. Bryer, Mr. C. E. Cardew, Mrs. C. E. Cardew, Rev. W. T. Cherry, Mrs. W. T. Cherry and infant, Master Willie Cherry, Master Clinton Cherry, Consul-Gen. F. D. Cheshire, Mr. Raphael Corpus, Mr. W. S. Deakin, Miss Douglas, Mr. A. Dreyer, Mrs. Lillian Fuller, Mr. A. S. Giles, Mrs. A. S. Giles, Mr. Leo Goodkind, Mr. G. Nan Gordon, Mr. A. F. Hinton, Mr. K. Ichikawa, Mrs. H. W. Ickis, Miss Catherine Ickis, Mr. Galt Ingram, Mr. C. Inouye, Mr. J. W. Kennedy, Capt. C. J. Kinder, Mr. F. H. Long, Mrs. Wm. Muat, Master Wm. Muat, Rev. Carl W. Nelson, Mrs. W. D. O'Brien, Mr. H. E. Partridge, Mrs. F. C. Peck, Mr. W. J. Powell, Capt. A. J. Robertson, Mr. R. Rolla, Mr. H. Specht, Mrs. Stanley, child and amah, Mr. S. Stuyvesant, Rev. J. B. Thomas, Mrs. J. B. Thomas, Miss Lillian Thomas, Miss Edith Thomas, Master Walter Thomas, Mr. A. H. Warnecke, Mrs. A. H. Warnecke, Miss H. Warnecke and Mr. Chas. D. Young in cabin.

Per British steamer Nubia, for London via ports:—Lord Robert Cecil, Mr. Chas. Bryan, Mr. A. R. Paget, Mr. J. B. Sutor, Sir Pelham Warren, K.C.M.G., Mr. J. R. Bennett, and Mr. C. Ammer, in cabin.

Per American steamer China, for Hongkong via ports:—Mrs. A. R. H. Alfred, Mr. H. C. Anderson, Miss E. D. Anderson, Mr. A. Barnard, Mr. Chas. H. Bright, Mrs. Chas. H. Bright, Miss Tillie Burns, Rev. J. W. Cline, Mrs. J. W. Cline & daughter, Mr. D. O. Cunningham, Mrs. D. O. Cunningham, Mrs. M. S. Doty, Master Wm. S. Doty, Mrs. J. A. Graham, Miss M. Graham, Rev. J. C. Hawk, Mrs. J. C. Hawk, Miss Minnie Hayden, Miss J. M. Johnstone, Rev. Bruce L. Kershner, Mrs. Bruce L. Kershner, Mrs. Jas. Lawler and infant, Mr. W. H. Lawrence, Rev. Dennis Lynch, Mr. J. H. Macoun, Rev. Chas. Magill, Mrs. Chas. Magill, Mr. D. D. L. McGrew, Miss Susan Mitchell, Rev. Jas. P. Monaghan, Dr. J. Noble, Mrs. J. Noble and 3 children, Rev. J. C. Ogden, Mrs. J. C. Ogden, Rev. Jas. R. O'Neill, Rev. C. O'Reilly, Mrs. E. T. Pollack and daughter, Mr. L. M. Robbins, Miss M. Saunders, Mr. H. C. Saum, Mrs. H. C. Saum, Mr. L. Schweitzer, Mrs. L. Schweitzer, Rev. Hugh Taylor, Mrs. Hugh Taylor and 2 children, Miss S. Ward, Rev. A. W. Wason, Mr. Frank J. Whittaker, Mr. John R. White, Rev. A. W. Wason, Mr. G. C. Bauman, Capt. W. P. Chambers, Mrs. W. P. Chambers and infant, Mrs. M. A. Dike, Miss M. Grey, Miss Stella Lewis, Miss L. McDonald, Mr. L. H. Shedden, and Mr. H. C. White, in cabin.

LATEST COMMERCIAL.

[SPECIALLY COMPILED FOR THE "JAPAN MAIL"]
IMPORTS.

Yokohama, September 22.
Yarns. Some business in 2/42s Plain and also in 2/60s and 2/80s Cassed has been reported. Grey Shirtings. Deliveries of contracted goods are satisfactory but no new business is reported.
Fancy Cottons and Woollens. Market remains very quiet and clearances continue poor.

COTTON PIECE GOODS. PER YARD.
White Shirting—{ 40 yds. 36 in. } ... 0.10 to 0.16
{ 50 yds. 36 in. } ... 0.10 to 0.16

Grey Shirting—8 1/2 lb. 38 1/2 yds. 36 inches V. 4.00 to 4.50
Grey Shirting—9 lb. 38 1/2 yds. 45 inches 4.50 to 5.35
Prints—Assorted, 24 yards, 30 inches... 2.85 to 4.25

Cotton Italians and Satteens... 0.30 to 0.40

WOOLLENS. PER YARD.
Flannels... V. 0.50 to 0.65

Italian Cloth, 32 in... 0.35 to 0.50

Mousseline de Laine, 24 yards, 30 inches... 0.16 to 0.22

Cloths—Pilots, 54 to 56 inches... 0.50 to 1.00

Cloths—Presidents, 51 to 65 inches... 0.90 to 1.00

Cloths—Union, 54 to 56 inches... 0.50 to 1.00

Blankets—Scarlet 3 to 5 lb per lb... 70 to 80

Velvets—Black, 35 yards, 22 inches... 9.20 to 12.50

Victoria Lawns, 12 yards, 42-3 inches... 0.90 to 1.80

Turkey Reds—2.8 to 3.0 lb 24-25 yards, 30 inches... 1.90 to 2.25

Turkey Reds—3.8 to 5 lb, 24-25 yards, 32 inches... 2.50 to 3.65

COTTON YARN. PER SPIN.
Nos. 16/24, Singles... V. Nominal

Nos. 28/32, Singles... V. Nominal

Nos. 38/42, Singles... V. Nominal

Nos. 32, Doubles... V. Nominal

Nos. 42, Doubles... V. 200 to 208 1/2

Nos. 2/60, Plain... V. Nominal

Nos. 2/80, Plain... V. Nominal

Nos. 2/100, Plain... V. Nominal

Nos. 2/60, Cassed... V. 300.00 to 310.00

Nos. 2/80, Cassed... V. 350.00 to 370.00

Nos. 2/100, Cassed... V. 430.00 to 460.00

RAW COTTONS.
American Middling... 34.00 to 36.00

Indian Broach... 25.50 to 26.00

Chinese... 24.00 to 25.50

METALS.
This market continues dull.

Round and square 1/2 inch and upward... V. 4.00 to 4.20

Iron Plates, assorted... 4.35 to 4.65

Sheet Iron... 4.70 to 6.95

Galvanized iron sheets... 10.05 to 10.95

Wire Nails, assorted... 6.85 to 7.15

Tin Plates, per box... 7.40 to 7.65

Pig Iron, No. 3... 2.40

Hoop Iron (3/4 to 1 1/4 inch)... 5.00 to 5.50

KEROSENE.
The market maintains its firmness.

American... $3.30

Russian... 3.14

Langkat... 2.99

SUGAR.
Very little doing. The autumn sales so far have been disappointing.

Brown Takao... V. 9.40 to 9.50

Brown Manila... 10.10 to 11.10

Brown Daitong... 7.60 to 8.00

Brown Canton... 10.00 to 12.10

White Java and Penang... 12.70 to 13.70

White Refined... 14.20 to 17.00

INDIGO.
Java, Medium to best... 195.00 to 245.00

Calcutta, Medium to best... 150.00 to 200.00

Madras (Karyak), Medium to best... 90.00 to 120.00

Madras (Dry Leaf), Medium to best... —

EXPORTS.
RAW SILK.
Prices have weakened daily during the week and a considerable business has been done at the decline. Market closes flat with prospect of further ease.

QUOTATIONS.
Filatures—Extra Best, Coarse... 1.130 to 1.140

Filatures—Extra, Fine... 1.080 to 1.090

Filatures—Extra, Coarse... 1.030 to 1.040

Filatures—No. 1, Fine... 1.090 to 1.100

Filatures—No. 1, Coarse... 1.030 to 1.040

Filatures—No. 1 1/2, Fine... 1.010 to 1.020

Filatures—No. 2, Fine... 1.030 to 1.040

Filatures—No. 2, Coarse... —

Common—Coarse... —

Re-reels—Extra... 1.080 to 1.090

Re-reels—No. 1... 1.060 to 1.070

Re-reels—No. 1 1/2... 1.030 to 1.040

Re-reels—No. 2... 1.000 to 1.010

Kakedas—Extra... 1.020 to 1.030

Kakedas—No. 1... 990 to 1,000

Kakedas—No. 1 1/2... 950 to 960

Kakedas—No. 2... 930 to 940

Kakedas—No. 2 1/2... 900 to 910

SAVE YOUR HAIR

With Shampoos of Cuticura Soap and Light Dressings of Cuticura.

This treatment at once stops falling hair, removes crusts, scales, and dandruff, soothes irritated, itching surfaces, stimulates hair follicles, supplies the roots with energy and nourishment, and makes the hair grow upon a sweet, wholesome, healthy scalp when all else fails.

MILLIONS USE CUTICURA SOAP

Assisted by CUTICURA OINTMENT, for preserving, purifying, and beautifying the skin, for cleansing the scalp of crusts, scales, and dandruff, and the stopping of falling hair, for softening, whitening, and soothing red, rough, and sore hands, for baby rashes, itchings, and chafings, in the form of baths for annoying irritations and inflammations, or too free or offensive perspiration, and for all the purposes of the toilet, as well as by millions of women in the form of washes for ulcerative weaknesses, and many sanative, antiseptic purposes which readily suggest themselves to women and mothers.

COMPLETE TREATMENT FOR EVERY HUMOUR,

Consisting of CUTICURA SOAP, to cleanse the skin of crusts and scales, and soften the thickened cuticle; CUTICURA OINTMENT, to instantly allay itching, inflammation, and irritation, and soothe and heal; and CUTICURA RESOLVENT PILLS, to cool and cleanse the blood. A SINGLE SET is often sufficient to cure the most torturing, disfiguring, itching, burning, and scaly skin, scalp, and blood humours, with loss of hair, when all else fails. Sold throughout the world. Australian Depot: E. TOWN & CO., Sydney. British Depot: 27-29, Charterhouse Sq., London. French Depot: 5 Rue de la Paix, Paris. PORTER DRUG AND CHEM. CORP., Sole Props., Boston, U. S. A.

CUTICURA RESOLVENT PILLS (Chocolate Coated) are a new, tasteless, odorless, economical substitute for the colorless liquid CUTICURA RESOLVENT, as well as for all other blood purifiers and humor cures. Put up in screw-cap pocket vials, containing 10 doses. CUTICURA PILLS are alterative, antiseptic, tonic, digestive, and the purest, sweetest, most successful and economical of blood and skin purifiers, humor cures, and tonic-digestives.

WASTE SILK.

Rather more doing at quotations and holders are strong in their attitude. Stocks are ample but so far buyers have to pay full rates for their purchases.

QUOTATIONS.

Noshi—Filatures, Best	—	—
Noshi—Filatures, Good	—	—
Noshi—Oshiu, Best	—	—
Noshi—Oshiu, Good	—	—
Noshi—Oshiu, Medium	—	—
Noshi—Shirashu, Best	100 to 105	105
Noshi—Shirashu, Good	90 to 95	95
Noshi—Bushi, Best	—	—
Noshi—Bushi, Good	—	—
Noshi—Bushi, Medium	—	—
Noshi—Joshiu, Best	95 to 100	100
Noshi—Joshiu, Good	90 to 92 1/2	92 1/2
Kibiso—Filatures, Extra	115 to 120	120
Kibiso—Filatures, Best	105 to 110	110
Kibiso—Filatures, Second	95 to 100	100
Kibiso—Joshiu, Good	—	—
Kibiso—Bushi, Fair	—	—

TEA.

Arrivals have stopped. Hardly any Stock. Season practically finished. We withdraw quotations.

QUOTATIONS.

Choice	—
Finest	—
Fine	—
Good Medium	—
Medium	—
Good Common	—
Common	—

EXCHANGE.

Yokohama, September 28

London silver and China sterling quotations being unchanged no alteration has been made in local rates which close for the mail per steamer Empress of Japan as under.

London Bank T.T.	2/0 1/2
— Bills on demand	2/0 1/2
— 4 months' sight	2/0 1/2
Private 4 months' sight	2/0 1/2
— 6 months' sight	2/0 1/2
Bank 4 months' sight	2/0 1/2
Private 4 months' sight	2/0 1/2
— 6 months' sight	2/0 1/2
Bank 6 months' sight	2/0 1/2
Private 6 months' sight	2/0 1/2
Bank 6 months' sight	2/0 1/2
Private 6 months' sight	2/0 1/2

Bank sight	75*
Private 10 days' sight	77*
India Bank sight	151
Private 30 days' sight	153
America—Bank sight	49 1/2
Private 30 days' sight	49 1/2
Private 4 months' sight	50 1/2
Germany—Bank sight	207 1/2
Private 4 months' sight	211 1/2
Bar Silver (London)	28 1/2

JAPANESE SHARES.

Yokohama, September 29, a.m.
Mean prices for Cash Delivery of Bonds and Shares, which may be held by Foreigners in their own names.

	Paid up.	1 year.	Q'tion.
	Ven.	per cent.	Ven.
Exchequer Bonds	100	5	93.00
1st Issue	100	5	93.00
Exchequer Bonds 2nd Issue	100	5	91.50
Exchequer Bonds 3rd Issue	100	5	91.00
Exchequer Bonds 4th Issue	100	6	98.00
Provincial Exchequer Bonds
5th Issue	70	6	76.80
Consolidated Bonds (Seiri)	100	5	88.00
War Bonds (Gunji)	100	5	88.00
5% Imperial Bonds (Goburi)	100	5	85.00
Navy Bonds (Kaigun)	100	5	82.80
Tokyo City Public Loan Bonds	100	6	95.00
Y'hama Water-works Bonds	100	6	94.50
Y'hama City Public Loan Bonds	100	6	98.00
Osaka Harbour Bonds	100	6	91.00
Sanyo Railway Debentures 2nd	100	6	86.00
Sanyo Railway	50	10	73.00
Kyushu Railway	50	8	62.20
Hokkaido Colliery Railway	50	12.5	93.00
Sobu Railway	50	8.50	63.20
Tokyo Electric Car (Densha)	50	11	74.30
Tokyo Street Railway (Shigai)	50	11.04	75.20
Tokyo Street Railway new	25	11.04	39.40
Tokyo Electric Railway (Denki)	50	3.5	56.50
Tokyo Electric Railway, new	30	3.5	34.70
Yokohama Electric Railway	40	—	60.00
Odawara Electric Car	50	3	22.50
Keihin Electric Railway	50	8	71.00
Keihin Electric Railway, new	12.50	18	31.20
Tokyo Marine Insurance	12.50	15	38.00
Yokohama Fire Insurance	12.50	10	17.85

* By dividend.

Milkmaid Milkmaid Milkmaid

TRADE MARK.

BRAND
Milk

As a guarantee of
Quality, see the
MILKMAID
on every Tin.

LARGEST SALE
in the
WORLD.

TRADE MARK.

BRAND
Milk

TRADE MARK.

BRAND
Milk

As a guarantee of
Quality, see the
MILKMAID
on every Tin.

LARGEST SALE
in the
WORLD.

Lea and Perrins' Sauce.

By Royal Warrant
to
His Majesty the King.

THE ORIGINAL AND GENUINE WORCESTERSHIRE.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT

IS A HOUSEHOLD NECESSITY

It cures Rheumatism, Sciatica,
Stiff Joints,
Glandular Swellings,
Sore Throat, Quinsy, Numps,
Burns, Piles, Fistulas, &c.

AND EVERY
FORM OF SKIN DISEASE.

Manufactured only at 78, New Oxford St. (into 538, Oxford St.),
London. Sold by all Chemists and Medicine Vendors.

"I tell you, man,
it's as good as gold!"

VESSELS ON THE BERTH.

- For KERLUNG, via Moji (from Kobe), 3rd, and 18th every month, at Noon, the "NAGATO MARU."—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.
- For KERLUNG, via Moji (from Kobe), 10th and 25th every month, at Noon, the "KOSHUN MAUR."—Osaka Shosen Kaisha.
- For GENOA, Marseilles and Liverpool, Sept. 29th, the "AGAMEMNON."—Butterfield & Swire.
- For BREMEN and Hamburg, via ports, Sept. 30th, at 9 a.m., the "BAYERN."—H. Ahrens & Co., Nachf.
- For VICTORIA, B.C., and Tacoma, Wash., Sept. 30th, the "LYRA."—Dodwell & Co., Ltd.
- For AUSTRALIA and New Zealand Oct. 3rd, the "CHINGTU."—Butterfield & Swire.
- For TRIESTE, via Kobe, Hongkong, Singapore, Penang, Colombo, Bombay, Karachi, Aden, Suez, Port Said, and Fiume, about October 4th, the "PENSIA."—Heller Bros.
- For SYDNEY, via Hongkong and New Guinea, Oct. 4th, the "PRINZ WALDEMAR."—H. Ahrens & Co., Nachf.
- For SHANGHAI, via Kobe, and Nagasaki, Oct. 3th, at 2 p.m., the "NIPPON YUSEN KAISHA."—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.
- For BONIN ISLANDS via ports, Oct. 5th, the "HIOGO MARU."—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.
- For SEATTLE, Wash., Oct. 6th, the "MINNESOTA."—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.
- For HONGKONG, via Kobe, Inland Sea, Nagasaki, and Shanghai, about Oct. 7th, the "ATHENIAN."—Canadian Pacific Railway Co.
- For MARSEILLES, via ports, and Shanghai, Oct. 7th, at 7 a.m., the "CALEDONIAN."—M. M. S.S. Co.
- For MARSEILLES, London, and Antwerp, via Kobe, Moji, Hongkong, Singapore, Penang, Colombo, and Port Said, Oct. 7th, at Noon, the "DEN OF MAINS."—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.
- For HONGKONG, via Kobe, (Inland Sea), Nagasaki, and Manila, about Oct. 8th, the "DORIC."—O. & O. S.S. Co.
- For PORTLAND, Ore., Oct. 10th, the "NICOMEDIA."—P. & A. S.S. Co.
- For MARSKILLES, London, and Antwerp, via Kobe, Shanghai, Hongkong, Straits, Colombo, and Port Said, Oct. 10th, at Daylight, the "PERA."—P. & O. S.N. Co.
- For LONDON, Amsterdam and Antwerp, Oct. 10th, at Daylight, the "DIOMEDE."—Butterfield & Swire.
- For HONGKONG, via Kobe, Nagasaki, Shanghai, and Manila, Oct. 12th, the "DAKOTA."—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.
- For HONGKONG via Kobe, Moji, Nagasaki and Shanghai, Oct. 12th, the "NUMANTIA."—P. & A. S.S. & Co.
- For HAVRE, Hamburg and Bremen via ports, Oct. 12th, at Daylight, the "SEGROVIA."—C. Illies & Co.
- For SAN FRANCISCO, via Honolulu, Oct. 13th, at 3 p.m., the "SIBERIA."—P. M. S.S. Co.
- For HONGKONG, via Kobe, (Inland Sea), Nagasaki, and Shanghai, about Oct. 15th, the "MANCHURIA."—P. M. S.S. Co.
- For HONGKONG, via Kobe, Inland Sea, Nagasaki, and Shanghai, about Oct. 16th, the "EMPEROR OF INDIA."—Canadian Pacific Railway Co.
- For AUSTRALIA, via ports (from Kobe), Oct. 24th, the "EMPIRE."—Comes & Co.

(毎土曜日一發行)

編輯人 エフ・ブリンダー
發行兼印刷人 エー・ビー・ブロン

東京市山下町五十五番
電話一〇四〇

The Japan Weekly Mail.

第 14 号 A REVIEW OF JAPANESE COMMERCE, POLITICS, LITERATURE, AND ART. 一四四号

No. 14.]

REGISTERED AT THE G.P.O.
AS A NEWSPAPER.

YOKOHAMA, OCT. 7TH, 1905.

明治三十五年三月廿七日
第三千四百四十四號

[VOL. XLIV.]

CONTENTS.

Summary of News...	373
The Japanese Press on the Alliance...	374
Individual Opinions on the Alliance...	375
The Colonial Nursing Association...	376
Naraku Meigwa-Ten...	377
The United Chambers of Commerce...	378
Conscription in Japan...	379
The Japanese Shipping Industry after the War...	380
The British Squadron...	381
Manchuria...	382
Saghalien...	383
Fire at Hiroshima...	384
Russian Prisoners...	385
Germany's Position...	386
The Peace Treaty and the Alliance...	387
Japanese Destroyers...	388
The Tokyo Question...	389
Not Founded on Facts...	390
The Money Market...	391
Korea...	392
China...	393
The Tobacco Monopoly in Japan...	394
A Distinguished Visitor...	395
Palmer Qui Merit...	396
Notes on Current Events...	397
Ladies' Advisory Committee...	398
Leading Articles:—
Germany and the Alliance...	399
Korea...	400
Persistent Slender...	401
Miss Roosevelt...	402
Ishida's Charge...	403
Yokohama Amateur Rowing Club...	404
The Kin's Daughters...	405
Yokohama Literary Society...	406
Yokohama Chess Club...	407
Yokohama St. Andrew's Society...	408
Cricket...	409
Christ Church, Yokohama...	410
The Law Courts...	411
News of the Week...	412
Oil Orphanage Fund...	413
Correspondence:—
Japanese Public Companies' Accounting...	414
The Keifu Railway...	415
Kinjo Masu Relief Fund...	416
Seigo's Feast...	417
The Incarnation...	418
Telegram...	419
Latest Shipping...	420
Latest Commercial...	421

"FAIS CE QUE DOIS: ADVIENNE QUE POURRA"

NOTICE TO CORRESPONDENTS.

No notice will be taken of anonymous correspondence. What is intended for insertion in the "JAPAN WEEKLY MAIL," must be authenticated by the name and address of the writer, not for publication, but as a guarantee of good faith.

It is particularly requested that all letters on business be addressed to the MANAGER, and Cheques be made payable to same; and that literary contributions be addressed to the EDITOR.

YOKOHAMA: SATURDAY, OCTOBER 7TH, 1905.

BIRTHS.

On the 28th Sept., at No. 70 Yamashita-cho, Yokohama, the wife of EDMOND BARON, of a Son.

At No. 90-B Bluff, Yokohama, on the 4th inst., to Mr. and Mrs. F. J. HALL, a Son.

DEATH.

At the General Hospital, on September 28th, GEORGE PALMER, of the P. & O. Co.'s service, formerly of Shotley Common, Ipswich, aged 65 years.

SUMMARY OF NEWS.

MAJOR-GENERAL Ijichi, Commander of the Yura Fort, is very ill.

DURING September, the export of coal at Moji was 19,801 tons.

It is stated that H. E. Sir John Jordan will shortly leave Seoul on furlough.

The battleship Hizen (formerly Retvisan) has been assigned to the Sasebo Naval Station.

It is rumored, says the Yorodzu, that Marquis Ito will shortly leave for Korea and China.

By Imperial Korean edict, the order of Su Fong Chang (Phoenix) has been conferred upon Lady Om.

The Nichi Nichi says that the Crown Prince will be promoted Major-General and Rear-Admiral on the Emperor's Birthday, Nov. 3rd.

He is now Colonel and Captain and an attaché of the Imperial Headquarters.

The Buddhist priest Teramoto, who has visited Lhasa in Tibet, left Shanghai on Oct. and on his way from India to Japan.

ABOUT the middle of this month, the usual chrysanthemum garden party will be held in the gardens of Akasaka Palace.

A TELEGRAM received at Nagasaki states that the French squadron intends to pay a visit to Kiaochow at the end of this month.

At 3.30 a.m. on Oct. and, fire broke out in Tokushima and destroyed ninety-eight buildings, including a post office and a church.

WORKMEN employed in the earthenware factories at Seto, near Nagoya, struck work on Sept. 28th, for an increase of wages.

THE Yokohama City Assembly has decided to pay yen 2,347.63 for the reconstruction of the police-boxes destroyed during the riot.

GREAT Britain and Germany propose that an international conference be held to decide the Chinese questions of likin and the coinage.

IN connexion with the transportation of soldiers returning from the front, alterations in the railway time tables will take place on the 15th inst.

THE special and ordinary members of the Nippon Red Cross Society in Yokohama number 82 and 6,901 respectively, including many foreigners.

A KAGAWA telegram says that the bye-election for a representative took place on Sept. 28th. Mr. H. Kubo of the Seiyu-kai was elected on 8,615 votes.

THE greater portion of the Saghalien army arrived on Sept. 29th at Awomori. The following day, the soldiers were despatched to their various divisions of the army.

M. HARMAND, French Minister, returned on Sept. 29th from Kobe where he paid a visit to the Russian prisoners and saw Rear-Admiral Nebogotoff on his departure for home.

CAPT. C. CURTIS and the crew, 35 in all, including a Russian, of the captured American steamer Barracouta, which has been brought to Yokosuka, were released on Sept. 28th at Yokosuka.

A SHELL exploded on Sept. 28th in the village of Akiyoshi, Yamaguchi prefecture, while soldiers from the Shimonoseki forts were training. Two artillerymen were killed and four injured.

MR. E. H. HARRIMAN arrived in Seoul on September 30th. Mr. Megata, Japanese Financial Adviser to the Korean Government, gave a garden party on the following day in honour of the visitor.

BARON KOMURA left Vancouver on October 2nd by the Empress of China and is expected to arrive on the 16th at Yokohama. The peace treaty arrived in Yokohama on Thursday by the Dakota.

A CORRESPONDENT at the front reports that all the foreign military attaches with the Japanese army have left for Japan. A Turkish colonel who embarked on Sept. 29th at Yinkow was the last one to depart.

THE Nichi Nichi says that in connexion with the naval scandals at Kure, Commanders N. Iwata and K. Satake were sentenced on Sept. 30th in the Hiroshima Appeal Court to six years' minor confinement. Fifteen others who participated were also sentenced to between two months and two years' imprisonment with hard labour; K. Takasu and one other were acquitted.

It is reported by a telegram from Toyama that Yoshida, a policeman, murdered a farmer on Sept. 18th in the village of Miyakawa. The cause is reported to be a simple dispute following excessive intoxication.

THE captured steamers Thea and Burma were renamed on Sept. 26th by the Minister of the Navy Nihokawa Maru and Yurakawa Maru respectively. The former was assigned to the Kure Naval Station and the latter to Maizuru.

THE work of floating the Novik at Korsakoff is progressing. As the nature of the damage is not severe, she will be floated in the near future. The Nichi Nichi says that the cruiser was built under the special instructions of the late Admiral Makaroff.

A SEOUL telegram says that on Sept. 20th, a Japanese postman was attacked by a number of natives at Chongju, and yen 500 which he was carrying to a post office was taken from him. The message adds that at the present time much trouble appears in this district.

AN official report from Formosa says that on Sept. 28th about eighty savages attacked four police stations in the Banshoryo jurisdiction division near Taipei. One policeman and two natives were killed. A number of policemen were sent to the district from Taipei and the disturbance was settled.

J. KUMAMOTO (28), one of the guests in the Kurihide-ya hotel, Ubako, Hakone, on Sept. 27th committed suicide with a revolver in a wood near the hot-springs. The cause is not yet reported. He had been staying in the hotel since Sept. 16th and described himself in the hotel book as a citizen of Kyoto.

Tokyo journals say that the question with regard to the house-tax will shortly be submitted to the Cabinet by the Ministers of Finance and Home Affairs, the investigations being nearly concluded. After confirmation by the Cabinet, the taxes which have been paid by foreigners will be repaid through the city officers.

FROM January to August, the import of foreign rice amounted to yen 40,244,995. These figures show a decrease of about yen 2,600,000 for the same period of last year. As to the cause, the Nichi Nichi says that the prolific crop last year and the enforcement of the duty from July 1st seem to have barred imports in spite of the war.

A SAPPORO telegram says that on the morning of Sept. 29th, frost was experienced in that district, four days later than last year. The Shiei-beshi mountain was covered by snow the same morning. On the following day, snow fell on Mount Teina, 23 days earlier than last year. A Hirosaki telegram reports that on the morning of Sept. 30th, the Hachikoda and Imaki mountains were white with snow.

IN connexion with the house-tax, as to which a decision was delivered this year by the Hague Court, Dr. Paul Kitter, Swiss Consul-General, has made enquiry of Mayor Ichihara of Yokohama with regard to the repayment of the tax which foreigners had paid to the City Office before the delivery of the decision. It is reported by the City authorities that after the enquiry of the Swiss Consul-General, Mr. Ichihara paid a visit to the Departments of Home Affairs and Finance and inquired about the affair. The replies of the Ministers concerned were that the matter is still under investigation so that the repayment of the tax is to be deferred for the present.

Original from

THE JAPANESE PRESS ON THE ALLIANCE.

Last week we epitomized the gist of what the Japanese papers had thus far to say about the new treaty of alliance. The remaining journals of the capital now speak. To the Nippon the alliance in its present form suggests something of post-facto wisdom. Had the original alliance taken this form there would probably have been no war. The belated feature detracts from the credit of those who negotiated the compact. As for the terms, what is primarily notable is that the Korean problem is now finally solved if Japanese statesmen know how to seize the occasion. The conditions of peace had secured Russia's recognition of a Japanese protectorate over Korea, but unless other Powers were in agreement as to this arrangement, Russia would have sought and found opportunities to again interfere. England's public and unequivocal recognition of the fact makes all the difference in the world. Nothing now remains for Japan except to take the position she has won.

The Yomiuri, an old advocate of this extended alliance, is thoroughly satisfied. It believes that the dangers of Occidental interference in Far-Eastern affairs, dangers which were more or less imminent as the outcome of conditions in Europe, have now been averted. The prominent features of the new alliance are that England, recognising Japan's paramount position in Korea, pledges herself to assist in securing that position, while Japan in return, engages to assist in securing India for England. It is a fair exchange. Those that find Japan's responsibility disproportionately heavy, take a superficial view of the facts. The Yomiuri is a little uneasy about the restriction contained in the second article, "by reason of unprovoked attack or aggressive action." That is a matter of interpretation. Each of two hostile Powers invariably lays against the other a charge of unprovoked attack or aggressive action, and it may be that if one of the allies should feel reluctant to come to the other's assistance, materials for excuse are here furnished. But if the compact is kept in an honest, frank spirit, there will be no such danger.

The Hochi Shimbun thinks that the alliance is an inevitable outcome of the world's conditions and that it may be regarded simply as the materialization of a sentiment pervading the two nations. It is to be welcomed with acclaim. Every country should welcome it as a powerful instrument making for the peace of the world. No State, however powerful, will be able to cause a ripple on the surface of the calm sea in the face of such a compact. It is to be sincerely hoped that Japan will not waste the period of peace thus secured to her.

The Yorozu Choho thinks that the alliance secures not only Korea and India but also the peace of the world. There may be a few who will say that Japan is thrust into an onerous and dangerous position, but they forget to ask themselves whether any Power in the world save England could have extricated Japan from the perils that always menaced her at the hands of States which, in differences of race, of customs and of religion, find pretexts for oppression and aggression. Japan has now been placed fairly on the stage of the world, and the way to take her new place worthily is not to shrink from its natural responsibilities.

Viscount Tani is the leader of a small party—apparently a very small party—whose members think that the obligation imposed on Japan by the Alliance, the obligation of assisting to protect India, is a formidable affair. The Nippon does not think so. Its conviction is that the occasion will never arise, inasmuch as Russia will know well that if she engages in a war in East Asia with England and Japan for opponents, the combat will not be limited to Asia but will extend to Europe also. This argument is not easy to follow, but we gather that our contemporary's conviction is opposed to the possibility of Russia venturing to take the field against such a coalition, and there we entirely agree. We are not sure, however, whether the Tokyo journal's purpose in writing is to combat Viscount Tani's idle alarm or to attack the pusillanimity of the Government in the Portsmouth negotiations. At any rate the latter purpose occupies a very prominent place in the article, the Nippon's line of reasoning being that if the Japanese negotiators made large concessions to Russia on account of the alliance with England, they must have assumed that Japan, had she stood alone, would not have been able to hold even the small advantages secured by the truncated treaty of peace. But surely such reasoning is very far-fetched? And how can it be reconciled with the contention so vehemently advanced by the opponents of the peace terms, the contention that peace has not been secured but only a truce? The Nippon itself now confesses in the most unequivocal terms that the Alliance assures the permanency of peace, and it thus constructively admits that the Alliance corrects precisely the defect alleged against the Portsmouth Treaty. In other words, on the showing of the Nippon itself, the Japanese Government, having the alliance convention already in its pocket, knew that the Portsmouth treaty would achieve the prime objects of the war, namely, the restraint of Russia's aggressions and the establishment of lasting peace.

A strong article appears in the Fiji Shimpō insisting that the Allies must be careful to avoid any relaxation of military and naval preparations merely because they have agreed to join forces. That would not be the way to secure peace; it would be the way to jeopardise it. The strength of the Alliance is represented by the sum of the Allies' forces, and if these be reduced or suffered to grow weaker, the combination may be less powerful than each of its units would have been independently had both been careful to keep up their efficiency. There are Japanese who talk with trepidation of the magnitude of such a task as sending troops to India. But troops may have to be sent to more distant places than India, as is very evident when one considers carefully what aggressions the Alliance is intended to check and what Power is likely to be the aggressor. Evidently the Fiji's greatest apprehension is that Japan, relying on England's overwhelming strength at sea, may pay little attention to the necessity of keeping up and increasing her own navy, but it appears to us that between the lines of our contemporary's writing we read also some fear lest England should now abandon those army reforms which her most prudent statesmen deem necessary.

The Nichi Nichi expresses itself in a manner which may fairly be regarded as reflecting the sentiment of educated Japan with regard to the attitude of the Russian and German press towards the Alliance; namely, the view that any nation denouncing as high-handed, menacing and aggressive a compact which is unequivocally inspired by motives of self-protection only, and which explicitly safe-guards the equal rights of all States in the regions concerned, is a nation suffering under the sense that its own menacing, high-handed and aggressive policy is thwarted by the Alliance. It will be observed that our Tokyo contemporary includes Germany in this criticism, but evidently the article was written prior to the receipt of the telegrams published by the Tokyo Foreign Office on the evening of the 1st. Reuter has been very positive about Germany's attitude. Hitherto—we are writing on the morning of the 2nd—he has told us that with a few weighty exceptions the German newspapers denounce the Alliance as most menacing, and that there is much talk in the journals of St. Petersburg and Berlin about a close rapprochement between the two empires as a rejoinder. But that is scarcely borne out by the intelligence received at the Foreign Office, which speaks of the Tagblatt alone as condemning the alliance. The Tagblatt is an important organ of public opinion and its utterances deserve all consideration, but if it stands alone it can not be supposed to represent the German nation. On this point judgment has to be reserved.

It need scarcely be said that the moderate and high minded tone of the French press is heartily welcomed by the Nichi Nichi. French interests in the Far East are scarcely inferior to those of Russia and are much superior to those of Germany. Yet France does not speak of the Alliance as "menacing," or "aggressive" or "high-handed." She recognizes it to be what it is, namely, a compact which, if the prime object is the self-defence of the contracting parties, pays no less regard to the legitimate interests of others.

The Nippon, though deprecating the idea of attaching great importance to mere phraseology, has something to say about the diction of the Alliance. In the 2nd Article occurs the statement that if either of the allies becomes engaged in war owing to "unprovoked attack" or aggressive action on the part of a third Power, the other ally must come to its assistance. As a matter of experience every State when it becomes involved in war claims that on its adversary rests the responsibility of unprovoked attack. Japan made that claim against Russia in the recent war and Russia made it against Japan. That is not the point which troubles the Nippon, however. Its main objection is that whereas England in northern India occupies such a thoroughly defensive position as to defy assault, and consequently would not be obliged to assume the offensive, which is often the strongest form of defence, Japan is differently circumstanced, and might be obliged at any moment to take action which, though really self-defensive, would be capable of interpretation in the sense of aggression or unprovoked attack. Therefore the allies do not stand on an equal footing.

Our contemporary's second point is that whereas the 3rd Article speaks of Japan taking "proper and necessary measures" in Korea, the 4th Article applies only the adjective "necessary" as qualifier of the measures taken by England in India. The Nippon thinks that this difference reduces the margin of liberty accorded to Japan in Korea. But our contemporary has apparently failed to note that the exact wording of the 3rd Article is "such measures in Korea as Japan may deem proper and necessary." The judgment is left wholly in Japan's hands, and thus, in point of fact, her liberty is greater in Korea than in England's on the Indian frontier, since Japan may do not only what she thinks necessary but also what she thinks proper.

The Nippon, however, qualifies its criticisms by saying that little importance attaches to words as compared with the spirit that animates the Alliance.

INDIVIDUAL OPINIONS ON THE ALLIANCE.

Baron Shibusawa, speaking for the business world of Japan, says that the honour of achieving the new alliance would be fully accorded to the Ministry, quite apart from any question relating to the terms of peace. This alliance secures tranquillity to the East for a period of at least ten years, and already the invigorating influence of such security in felt in the market. From Japan's point of view the peace terms were not satisfactory, but from the world's point of view they were dictated by the interests of humanity, and now this alliance brings within certain reach the fruits of the terrible struggle. Japan fought for peace and it has been assured. It may be expected that foreign capital will henceforth be freely offered and it should be welcomed. Korea, for example, invites vigorous enterprise. The Japanese should boldly respond to the occasion, for, after all, there is not much difference now between Korea and Japan.

Count Itagaki had long regarded the Anglo-Japanese alliance as a necessity of the time, and he thinks it more than ever necessary in view of the Portsmouth Treaty. It is by means of this alliance, in short, that Japan is enabled to achieve the purpose for which she fought. Without the alliance the rewards of her victory would have been few. Count Itagaki then proceeds to attack the peace treaty. The nature of his criticisms may be gathered from the fact that he blames the Japanese negotiators for obtaining the cession of Russia's Liaotung lease only instead of obtaining permanent possession of the peninsula. He forgets altogether that Russia had no competence to confer on a third State a permanent title to Chinese territory. We find him on apparently more solid ground when he argues that the peace treaty repeats the old error of assuming Russia's good faith in observing treaties. This contention will have weight with folks who do not pause to think that unless respect for conventional obligations be attributed to a State, the idea of making a convention with it would be extravagant and futile. The gist of Count Itagaki's analysis, however, is less open to cavil, for there can be no doubt that this extended alliance is the means of bringing to Japan results which the Portsmouth Treaty did not fully assure. On the other hand, we suggest to Count Itagaki and his fellow-thinkers that the alliance was concluded before the signature of the Portsmouth Treaty, and that in arraigning the Ministry both of these events must be considered as essential factors of the general policy pursued. Count Itagaki laughs at the notion that Japan has any reason to be anxious about her new responsibilities in the direction of India.

Dr. Hatoyama thinks that the alliance is invaluable, because it effectually averts any fresh exercise of Russia's aggressive designs in Eastern Asia. She had not abandoned these designs. Korea, India, Mongolia and China still loomed large on the horizon of her ambition. But that is all changed now. Nor is there any probability of another alliance competent to make head against this. France would not be a party to such a compact, and Russia and Germany together could not accomplish much. As for the fear entertained by some that a heavy responsibility devolves on Japan with regard to India, Dr. Hatoyama attaches little importance to it, and argues that at any rate Japan must give if she takes.

The one dissentient voice is that of Mr. Ozaki Yukio. Mr. Ozaki has always advocated a Russo-Japanese alliance or entente. Naturally he is now dissatisfied. But he refrains from expressing an opinion on the general fact, and confines himself to criticising details, which feat he performs in his usual clever manner. The preservation of China's integrity and the open door was already internationally guaranteed: why should it have again been inserted in a treaty? Besides, does the world contain any physician capable of saving the life of a patient in extremis? If China can not help herself, if she be really moribund, is it within the competence of outside states to help her? Then again Japan's responsibilities have been extended to India but it does not appear that England's responsibilities have undergone any corresponding expansion. Some claim that the final settlement of the Korean problem is Japan's reward for shouldering the Indian burden. The Korean problem should have been settled by the war of 1894-5, or at any rate by the war just ended. If these great efforts failed to solve it, how can the Alliance be more efficient. Finally, as for the contention that peace has been secured by the Alliance, the facts are that Russia is exhausted by the war she has just fought; that for six or seven years to come she would not under any circumstances have been likely to draw the sword again, and that there was certainly little chance of her returning single-handed to the task of struggling against this Empire. Peace was secured therefore without the alliance. "But if you ask me," says Mr. Ozaki, "I say that the former Anglo-Japanese alliance was the cause of the war just fought, and I do not see how a renewal of the alliance can bring peace." Mr. Ozaki concludes this sweeping condemnation by the strange assertion that he reserves judgment.

THE COLONIAL NURSING ASSOCIATION.

One of the successes of the time is the Colonial Nursing Association. In accounts of its last annual meeting—which was held at Sunderland House by invitation of the Duke and Duchess of Marlborough—we read that there were 260 present, among them being Her Royal Highness Princess Henry of Battenberg, Patroness of the Association, Princess Alexis Dolgorouki, Lady Emily Nugent, Mrs. Joseph Chamberlain, Sir Archibald and Lady Alison, and a long list of titled or notable personages. This meeting is in itself an evidence of the great development the Association has made since 1895, when it was started by Lady Francis Piggott on her return from Mauritius, where Sir Francis Piggott, now Chief Justice of Hongkong, was serving as Advocate-General. The Association has more than 200 nurses in all parts of the British Empire and the Colonial Office has given it the monopoly of Government Hospital appointments in the Crown Colonies. Would it not be greatly to the advantage of the Yokohama General Hospital to go to this Association for its nursing staff, seeing that each nurse's qualifications are specially scrutinized; that a high standard of proficiency is required, and that all arrangements as to passage from England are made by the director? In this country the want of English nurses is not very pressing since there is a large staff of trained Japanese who do the work about as well as it can possibly be done. But with many foreign patients, being, as they are, much more masterful and restless than the people of the country, the Japanese nurse is generally too gentle and too yielding, added to which defect there is the painful drawback of difference of language. A place for the foreign nurse will always offer, therefore, and it would be most reassuring to know that Yokohama had the advantage of obtaining experts from the Nursing Association. In The Hospital we observe the following reference to the annual meeting mentioned above:—

There is one distinction in the list of Birthday Honours which is of special interest to the nursing world. The King has conferred the dignity of Knight Bachelor upon Mr. Francis Taylor Piggott, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the Colony of Hongkong. Sir Francis Piggott is the husband of the indefatigable lady who originated and founded the Colonial Nursing Association, and the recognition of his services to the State will cause many congratulations to be offered to her. It was while her husband was fulfilling the duties of Procurator and Advocate-General in Mauritius that Mrs. Piggott passed through the personal experience which so painfully impressed her with the need of trained nurses in the Crown colonies, with the result that when she returned to England she set herself to the task of supplying the want. How admirably she succeeded, in the face of much discouragement and many difficulties, is well known to those of our readers who are familiar with the history of the Association, which was published a few years ago in our columns. Lady Piggott, although unable in present circumstances to take an active part in the work of the Association, remains its honorary Vice-President.

"NANSHU MEIGWA-YEN."

The fourth part of the Nanshu Meigwa-yen (Garden of Chefs-d'œuvre of the Southern School) has just been published by the Shimbi Shoin. It contains ten pictures, eight from the brushes of Chinese artists and two by Japanese painters. For the sake of those who can not read the ideographs we append a list of subjects, artists and owners:—

- | SUBJECT. | ARTIST. | OWNER. |
|---|---|--------|
| 1. "A remarkable Chu Lang of the Ming Dynasty. View of Mountain and Valley." | uchiNoburu, of Tokyo. | |
| 2. "Spring Trees in Li Tsuta of the Professor Rain." | Ming Dynasty, Otsuke. | |
| 3. "The Voice of Yu Hsien of the Viscount Oki-the Cataract in Ming Dynasty. Pine Valley." | moto. | |
| 4. "Birds by the Wang Chien of Mr. Oha's Water's Margin." | the Ming Shigeo. Dynasty. | |
| 5. "Forest and Lin Shun of Jun-Mr. Suzuki Waterfall." | known period. Mohel. | |
| 6. "Limpid Water Kau Tsen of the Mr. Suzuki in the Pine Valley." | Tsing Dynasty. Mohel. | |
| 7. "Farming in Hwang Pi of the Mr. Suzuki Spring Mists." | Tsing Dynasty. Mohel. | |
| 8. "Landscape." | Chu Angchi of Mr. Yamano-the Tsing uchiNoburu. Dynasty. | |
| 9. "Maple Grove." | Ike Taiga (Japanese artist). Tanjirō. | |
| 10. "Ten beautiful Watanabe Ka-Mr. Suzuki Flowers." | zan (Japanese artist). Mohel. | |

All the Chinese pictures in this album are veritable master-pieces, except perhaps the second, the beauty of which is impaired by the coiled-rope contours of the hills. In the other seven the Chinese artist may be seen at his best; strong, tender, bold, delicate, broad and chaste. It has been said of late by a competent English critic that China produced one of the greatest schools of landscape painters in the world. We have never doubted the fact, but to those, whose name is legion, that will scoff at the notion, these exquisite albums of the Shimbi Shoin may be strongly recommended.

THE UNITED CHAMBERS OF COMMERCE.

On the 3rd instant Mr. Chinda, Vice-Minister of Foreign Affairs, addressed the United Chambers of Commerce now assembled in Tokyo. He was evidently hampered by the impossibility of making any frank disclosures, but what he did say was very much to the point. He had been asked to speak on the subject of Korea and Manchuria, but he reminded his hearers that the eyes of the world were intently fixed on these two regions and that not one word could be lightly uttered with regard to them. As to the Empire's foreign policy, it had been frequently outlined in Imperial utterances and in treaties. He need scarcely remind them that its cardinal bases were the maintenance of Japan's integrity and the preservation of peace. These purposes had underlain the convention with Korea as well as the Anglo-Japanese Alliance. Upon the merchants and manufacturers whom he was addressing devolved the responsibility of turning to full advantage the privileges obtained by treaty and convention. The interests and facilities of which diplomacy sowed the seeds had to be garnered by the business classes. Japan had acquired such interests and facilities in Korea but their fructification was still unachieved. In several of the special settlements obtained by treaty, nothing was now to be seen but luxuriant crops of weeds. This state of affairs could not be laid entirely at the door of officialdom. The country was now on the verge of restored peace, and it was to be earnestly hoped that the people would show energy and ability in utilizing the resulting opportunities. On the Government's side there would be no failure to supply every facility. In the development of commerce and industry there were three routes; that in which statesmanship took the lead; that in which statesmanship went hand in hand with industrials and merchants; and that in which the business men marched in front. It was to be hoped that the second route at any rate would be followed by the Japanese nation, and that the men of affairs to whom he now addressed himself would vigorously perform their part in the programme of development.

Mr. Ishii, Chief of the Commercial Bureau in the Foreign Office, said that in spite of the despatch of an army of seven hundred thousand Japanese over sea, the country had not experienced any financial inconvenience; its commerce had been in no sense interrupted; there had not been any evidence of scamped methods of manufacture and exports had increased, all of which results had attracted the admiration and received the applause of foreign observers. After the restoration of peace tens of thousands of able-bodied workers would re-inforce the ranks of the productive population. It would be a prime duty to open routes for their profitable employment, and to take such measures as might extend the foreign markets for their products. Manchuria was a land rich in natural resources, and its wealth had been largely augmented by the great expenditures of two immense armies during a period of nearly twenty months. The enterprising nations of the world would fix their eyes on the opportunities thus afforded and would compete to take advantage of them. Japan would have to show industry and enterprise, especially in the regions that had come under her political influence. Capital would have to be invested there and every effort must be made to eliminate the abuses which tended so much to hamper commercial and industrial development. The Government would not be wanting on its part, and had already put its hand to such organizations as fell within its province. He trusted that all those practically interested would have no hesitation in applying to the Foreign Office where, he promised, no reluctance or want of industry would be shown in furnishing information or providing every possible facility.

At a meeting of the united Chambers of Commerce now taking place in Tokyo Mr. Sakatani, Vice-Minister of Finance, made an interesting statement as representative of the Minister. He said that the sums which the Government had been authorized to raise at home and abroad since the commencement of the war up to the present time aggregated 1,350 million yen. That total had been slightly exceeded—here Mr. Sakatani evidently alluded to the loan of 300 millions recently floated in London and New York—, nevertheless had the war continued to the end of the fiscal year, the funds thus obtained would not have proved sufficient. This was because the greatly increased scale of the military programme after the battle of Mukden had produced a corresponding increase of outlays. Peace being now in sight, however, these heavy expenditures would cease in the main, but sums had still to be paid out for bringing back the armies at the front and for repairing war-ships. Nevertheless so far as could now be anticipated, no occasion would arise calling for further loans. The budget for next year would be far from light, but as yet the figures could not be stated, since the outcome of the belligerent situation was still more or less in doubt. Speaking broadly, however, the estimates would fall under three heads, namely, extraordinary expenditures, outlays on account of the Manchurian guards and the ordinary budget. In the first section would be included the cost of bringing home the troops and repairing war-ships, which would have to be defrayed by continuing the war taxes and by means of loans if necessary. We do not clearly understand this part of Mr. Sakatani's speech. Next fiscal year begins on April 1st, 1906. It would seem therefore that the return of all the troops before that date is not contemplated, since the expenditures referred to as appearing in next year's budget must be incurred subsequently to March. However, the main fact is that there will not be any material reduction of the war taxes, if any reduction at all. Mr. Sakatani proceeded to point out that the adjustment of the finances after the war of 1894-5 had been comparatively easy, since no loans had been raised abroad, but in this war considerable liabilities had been incurred in Europe and America; liabilities involving an annual payment of some 50 millions of yen. He did not anticipate any serious difficulty. Probably a large part of this money would remain in Japan, and at any rate by encouraging exports and the effective spirit of economy the situation might be met.

Mr. Kioura, Minister of Agriculture and Commerce, speaking at the meeting of united Chambers of Commerce in Tokyo, said that the period for the next Exhibition would naturally fall in 1908, the 41st year of Meiji. Some were in favour of making it an international exhibition; others advocated a domestic exhibition. Whichever form it took, it would be on a much larger scale than the last Osaka exhibition, and possibly there might be occasion to choose a later date than 1908. We presume that Tokyo will be the place for this exhibition, inasmuch as the last held in the capital was in 1900, and Kyoto and Osaka have both had their turn since then.

Baron Shibusawa addressed the United Chambers of Commerce on the forenoon of the 4th. The heads of his speech were the necessity of adjustment and development. It was essential above all things that the finances should be adroitly handled; and to that end conversion of short loans at high rates of interest into long loans at comparatively moderate rates should be accomplished. At the same time every possible economy of administrative expenditures should be effected. Now if ever was the time to accomplish such a reform. On the other hand, it was not to be denied that the post-bellum situation might demand increased outlays in various directions; for example, in that of national armaments. The people would not shrink from that, but they looked to the Government to proceed according to the old system of shimin kinto, namely, equal attention to the conditions of the four divisions of society, the military, the agricultural, the industrial and the commercial. Solid progress was not possible if the State's resources were not applied for the simultaneous development of all four. The country had new burdens to bear and must endeavour to strengthen itself for the task by adding to its resources. Thus the restoration of the balance of trade was essentially cardinal, and should be effected by encouraging exports, especially those of raw silk and of cotton yarns, as well as by improving facilities of communication. In Korea development of agriculture seemed most desirable, and in Manchuria it was essential that the railway system of Korea should be brought into connexion with that of Manchuria and that maritime carrying machinery should be improved with China. Japan's trade with China did not yet reach to one-third of America's trade with the latter, a state of affairs which ought to be remediable by industry. The speaker did not endorse either the pessimistic or the optimistic views held by sections of the public. He entered neither camp but rather espoused a middle view, believing in the feasibility of gradual and sound progress.

In the afternoon Mr. Oura, Minister of Communications, spoke to the Chambers. He said that on the outbreak of war it had been considered financially advisable to suspend all railway construction, but the line communicating with Maizuru had been carried on for military reasons, and so had a few other roads which could not be abandoned without heavy loss. It was very desirable that the old progress in railway building should be resumed, but, on the other hand, the post-bellum finances might necessitate retrenchment in that direction. Great apprehensions had been felt in official and business circles about the effect of the war upon the mechanism of communications. It had been feared that the heavy work connected with the transport of troops must greatly impede the carriage of goods. Happily that forecast had not been altogether verified, but they now found themselves on the verge of a period when more than ever the strain upon the railways would be heavy. Something like a million of men would have to be carried home within the next five months. Some relief would be afforded by using ships, but greatly as the available fleet of steamers had increased it could not altogether meet this emergency, and obviously there could be no question of keeping the troops abroad at enormous expense. They must make up their minds to great congestion of the goods traffic just at a time when the normal demands on it were heaviest. The Minister then alluded to the state of railway enterprise in Japan. There were no less than 37 companies owning only 3,280 miles of road. Such a state of affairs was obviously inconsistent with economical management. The combination of small companies into large, and the subsequent improvement of junctions and of the lines themselves, were urgent questions of the hour, as bearing directly on the commercial and industrial development of the Empire.

On the motion of Mr. Doi, of Osaka, the United Chambers of Commerce, now in session in Tokyo, have decided that a great festival in the form of a garden party be organized in Tokyo to celebrate the Anglo-Japanese alliance. The decision was unanimous, and was supplemented by a scheme which indicates that arrangements are to be on a large scale, but as we read in the Nichi Nichi Shinbun that the celebration is to be on the 6th instant in the Koishikawa Park, it is hard to see how anything on a very extensive footing can be organized.

CONSCRIPTION IN JAPAN.

The Fiji Shimpō is now engaged in a vigorous campaign to promote the development of the Japanese army and navy. It considers that the only certain way to secure peace is to be fully prepared for war. Arguments as to the necessity of raising the navy to much more powerful dimensions have already been pretty well exhausted, but the Fiji, so far as we know, is first in the field as an advocate of army increase. It takes up a contention advanced some years ago—by the Yorozu Choho if we remember aright—namely, that the three years' period of military service should be reduced to two years. Originally this change was advocated in the interests of economy. Outsiders imagined that by cutting down the period from 3 years to 2, one-third of the outlays might have been saved. We need scarcely say that any such judgment is very rough and defective, and that it omits many cardinal elements from the calculation. Nevertheless there would certainly be a considerable economy. The Fiji Shimpō, however, does not base its argument on any question of economy. It frankly urges military expansion. Were the three years' period reduced to two, the Fiji thinks that the 13 divisions now maintained might be increased by six more, which would add, in effect, 50 per cent. to the strength of the army. It is also pointed out that the nation would welcome the change, but that forecast is not so self-evident for although youths of conscript age would certainly prefer 2 years' service to 3, the additional number enrolled under the new system would, one imagines, fully balance that advantage. The war just concluded has proved, we believe, that two years' training is ample to fit conscripts for active service. That question therefore, a question much and anxiously discussed, may be considered settled so far as Japan is concerned. We observe that the Fiji does not make any estimate of the numerical strength of the army it contemplates. That is a point about which very curious differences of opinion exist among foreign onlookers. Thus we hear the assertion constantly made that the full fighting strength of a Japanese Division on a war footing is some twenty thousand men of all arms. A moment's thought as to the working out of such a number should show its incorrectness. For what is quite certain is that the Japanese army, according to the Post-Bellum Programme of 1896, consisted of only 13 divisions, including the Guards—we say nothing of the present number of divisions. Now 13 divisions at twenty thousand men each makes a total of 260,000 men. Does any one seriously imagine that such a figure represented the full strength of the Japanese army on a war footing three years ago? Even thirty thousand per division would still be short of the truth. Were the Fiji Shimpō's suggestion adopted Japan would be able to put nearly three quarters of a million of men into the field, to say nothing of the highly elastic additions made to her military establishment by changes made in the Kobi system during the recent war.

THE JAPANESE SHIPPING INDUSTRY AFTER THE WAR.

This is a subject which naturally causes some uneasiness. There has been quite an abnormal increase in the mercantile marine during the past two years. In December 1903 the country possessed 197 steamers aggregating 511,661 tons, whereas in July 1905 the number of steamers had grown to 283 and the tonnage to 726,310, an increase of 86 in number and 214,642 in tonnage. Further, as the Shogyo Shimpō points out, the Nippon Yusen Kaisha and the Osaka Shosen Kaisha have several large steamers on the stocks, which represent another 40,000 or 50,000 tons, and there are some 88,000 tons of steamers, prizes of war, which will presently to be placed on the Japanese register. The Volunteer Fleet, too, will soon be an accomplished fact, so that, on the whole, the increase due to the war will be from 350,000 tons to 400,000, and Japan's mercantile marine will have leaped from half a million tons to nearly a million. Prior to the war the majority of the country's steamers were engaged in the coastwise trade or neighbouring seas. Even there, however, competition was constantly becoming keener. Thus plying eastward of Singapore Norway had 108 steamers displacing 177,000 tons, and Germany had from 50 to 60 vessels aggregating 75,000 or 100,000 tons. Moreover these Norwegian and German vessels, especially the former, are for the most part new steamers, whereas many of those recently added to the Japanese marine are comparatively old ships, picked up at the spur of immediate necessity in connexion with the war. British, American, Russian and French vessels have also to be taken into account. Doubtless there will be a developed and developing need for ships on the North-China, Liaotung, Korea and Saghalien route, but the demand in those waters will certainly not absorb the supply. The Nippon Yusen Kaisha, working for the most part on fixed routes, has some 64 vessels aggregating 239,000 tons. Subtracting these there remain 219 steamers of over 1,000 tons, with a displacement of 485,000 tons which belong to the Mitsui, the Mitsu Bishi, the Toyo Kisen Kaisha, the Osaka Shosen Kaisha and a number of smaller companies. The Shogyo Shimpō believes that the only way to escape something like a crisis in the maritime carrying industry is for all these vessels to form a monster combination and to pool their earnings. The Fiji Shimpō, writing on the same subject, notes that there will probably be a marked deficiency of sailors and officers to man the newly acquired vessels, but that is a secondary question.

THE BRITISH SQUADRON.

The British squadron numbering 12 ships was to reach Kobe on Thursday. Three Japanese vessels were waiting there to welcome the visitors, and the Governor of Hyogo is to give an evening party on the 7th. In Tokyo there is to be a banquet, followed by a ball at the British Legation on the 16th. The squadron will reach Tokyo Bay on the 9th, it is expected. The Tokyo Municipality has appointed a reception committee of nine. A hundred students of the Tokyo Language School are to act as interpreters for parties of officers and men desiring to go round Tokyo. It is evident that much enthusiasm is evoked by this visit of the squadron. An extraordinary meeting of the City Assembly was held on the 5th instant, when it was unanimously resolved to devote a sum of fifty thousand yen to purposes of welcome. The Assembly further decided that a public welcome should be given to Admiral Togo and his ships, and that the question of expenses should be left to the discretion of the City Council.

The Kokumun has telegrams from Kobe saying that the Tsukushi has already arrived there to meet the British Squadron, and will be followed by the Iwate, the Takachiho and the Kasagi. The inhabitants are making great preparations. The welcome meeting given by the town is to be at 3 p.m. on the 6th. There will be present 230 British officers, 30 American and 100 Japanese. On the 7th and 8th from 2 p.m. to 5 p.m. an entertainment will be given at the Nan-ko-sha. It is expected that there will be 3,500 British subjects present, 700 Americans and 1,500 Japanese. Refreshments will be provided and there will be various amusements. On the evening of the 7th the Governor of Hyogo gives a ball to which 1,000 persons will be invited. Mr. Kawasaki, of the Kawasaki Docks, is also to give a party to English, American and Japanese officers.

Admiral Noel and his officers will be received by the Emperor in audience and will lunch at the Palace. It is expected that the Emperor will confer various decorations and that a duck-hunting party will be got up in the Imperial preserves, though it is somewhat early for any pastime of the kind since the sporting season does not open until the 15th instant. Tokyo city has appointed a committee of preparation and arrangements for welcoming the Englishmen are being vigorously pushed. It is anticipated that there will be some 4,000 officers and men in the squadron, and that they will be divided into two parties for the purposes of the fête, which will extend over as many days. Passage by train between Yokohama and Tokyo will be free; there will be gala performances of several kinds in the Hibiya Park, and all places of interest in the city will be thrown open to the visitors. The Naval Department is furnishing most of the reception officials.

It is to be hoped that this unique demonstration, in which will be included both the Japanese and English fleets, making the greatest assemblage of war-ships ever seen in the Far East, will completely shake Tokyo out of the fit of ill-humour which has possessed it since the news of the peace treaty was received. The agitators will then have no further practical metier, since ratification will have become an accomplished fact, and nothing will remain for them but to attack the Cabinet.

MANCHURIA.

Letters from the front in Manchuria indicate that since the armistice was concluded the Russians have largely increased their forces opposite one part of the Japanese left. Under the circumstances such procedure is strange and suspicious, but it is probable that the movement represents some feature of a manoeuvre for which all arrangements had been made prior to the armistice, and that convenience of commissariat necessitates the completion of the scheme. There is, of course, nothing illegitimate in any disposition of troops that the Russians may make within their own lines, but since Lincvitch can not be supposed to anticipate any re-opening of hostilities, the movement referred to in these letters must be capable of some simple explanation.

Manchuria has become very cold. The thermometer falls to freezing point in the early morning, but the Japanese troops are well supplied with winter clothing. Preparations are in rapid progress to commence withdrawal so soon as the peace treaty is ratified.

The Russians seem to be still ignorant of the numbers or conditions of the Japanese forces, and to be very anxious to correct their ignorance. Many spies are employed by them, in spite of the existence of a truce. These men—Chinese or Manchurians—devote their attention mainly to the Japanese right, but they are now such a familiar incident of the day's work that they can be easily kept out of the lines, and probably the reports they convey to their employers are not at all illuminating.

The officer by whom the above details as to weather and spies are communicated to the Asahi Shimbun, says that the Russians are much perplexed about their Hungtutz allies. A large number of these were enrolled in the ranks of Mischenko's cavalry on the right and Madorloff's on the left. They are, for the most part, natives of Liaoyang, Mukden and Hsinmintun. Now that the time for their active service is past they begin to be anxious about the future and, apprehending that after the withdrawal of the Russian army they are likely to fall into the hands of the Japanese railway-guards, they are soliciting permission to be allowed to settle within Russian territory. But Russia naturally shrinks from adding such an element to her population.

Yingkow reports to the Jiji Shimpō that all the newspaper correspondents and military attaches who were with the Third Army have now withdrawn and are on their way home.

A telegram received at the Foreign Office in Tokyo says that according to news from St. Petersburg published in Vienna, pest has broken out at Dalainor and two other places in Manchuria. There have been 20 cases at Dalainor and ten of them ended fatally. The Russian Authorities have therefore declared the Trans-Baikal region to be pest infected.

Dalainor is at the point where the Trans-Asian Railway enters Manchuria on the west. It is strange that the telegram does not clearly indicate the other two centres of trouble, but precision of locality is scarcely needed to enhance the horror of the incident. It means that the fell disease may fasten on the huge Russian army stationed in northern Manchuria, and may not only decimate it, but may also be carried by the returning troops into Russia proper. An easily conceived contingency is that the Russian nation should rebel against having the troops brought back at all under such circumstances.

The immediate approach of the cold season is some consolation, but even that may not save the situation. Further intelligence about this momentous incident will be awaited with the keenest interest and anxiety.

SAGHALIEN.

Despatches to the Jiji Shimpō speak in almost pitiful terms of the state of affairs in southern Saghalien. The Russian settlers have all evacuated the region but there are no Japanese to take their place. The farm houses lie uninhabited except by ownerless cattle, horses and poultry which seem to await the arrival of human beings to tend them, and the crops stand half-reaped in the fields. Many Japanese subjects had proceeded to the island, but, according to the Jiji's correspondence, their eyes were originally fixed on the opportunities offering in the northern regions, and now that the island has been partitioned, they see no temptation to remain and are flocking back to Japan before the winter sets in. Mr. Haseba Junko, a member of the Diet, who visited Korsakoff recently and has just returned to Japan, complains bitterly of the unsympathetic demeanour of the civil officials and says that, so far from meeting with any assistance from them, it was with no little difficulty that he succeeded in obtaining a small space of land to pitch a tent. It is probable that large inducements will have to be offered to settlers who are no fishermen.

Very boisterous weather is reported from northern Saghalien. At Alexandrofska the Kwangtung Maru's cable parted and she was driven on a rock. Small craft also suffered more or less injury. It is impossible to withdraw the Japanese troops under such circumstances. The direction of the wind is not stated, but all stormy weather renders Alexandrofska a most dangerous anchorage. Ships have been accustomed to run across to the opposite coast at the first symptom of a wind rising.

The Nichi Nichi Shimbun says that possibly the Japanese troops may not be withdrawn from northern Saghalien before next summer. The thermometer at night already falls to 11°F. and the mountains are covered with snow, while the weather is so inclement that the embarkation of troops is quite out of the question. An idea was entertained that the forces might be moved across to Terpenia (Patience) Bay and there put on board ship, but this project has had to be abandoned, and as southern Saghalien offers no means of supporting or housing several thousands of soldiers, the only course at present apparent is to keep the men where they are until next summer. That would be most unfortunate, and it is to be sincerely hoped that the weather may moderate sufficiently to allow of embarkation before the ice closes over the Sea of Tartary.

Lieutenant-General Haraguchi and Rear-Admiral Naito had a warm reception at Uyeno station when they arrived in Tokyo from Saghalien. Marquis Yamagata, Admiral Viscount Ito, General Viscount Sakuma, General Terauchi, Rear-Admiral Ijuin, representatives of the Emperor, the Empress, the Prince Imperial and the Princes of the Blood, and many other prominent personages assembled at the station to welcome them. From Uyeno they proceeded to the Head Quarter Staff Offices, where they lunched with Field Marshal Marquis Yamagata, General Terauchi, Count Katsura, etc., after which they proceeded to the Palace and were received by the Emperor.

FIRE AT HIROSHIMA.

There has been a very serious conflagration at Hiroshima. At 2 a.m. on the 1st flames broke out in a warehouse where machinery for compressing hay is erected. This warehouse was one of a series in which clothing and provisions were stored for the army at the front. The troops in garrison worked hard to extinguish the fire, but owing to a high wind their efforts met with little success and twenty-nine houses were destroyed. There are very conflicting estimates as to the amount of loss incurred, some putting it at several millions of yen, but the official statement is that a large part of the clothing stored in the warehouses had been removed elsewhere before the conflagration, and that four of the destroyed buildings were repair shops, so that the pecuniary dimensions of the disaster are not at all as serious as rumour states them to be. The origin of the fire is as yet unknown. There is talk of incendiarism. There always is talk of incendiarism.

The Army Department has published a statement of the loss involved in the recent conflagration at Hiroshima. The figures are:—

Buildings (20 temporary store-houses covering 400 tsubo each=75,440 yen, and 5 horse-fodder ware-houses also of 400 tsubo each=12,920 yen)	88,360
Provisions and horse-fodder, approximately	1,682,571
Clothing, approximately	78,176

Total 1,849,107

There were also burned some miscellaneous objects of no great value, concerning which no exact statement can yet be made.

RUSSIAN PRISONERS.

The Russian Government is said to have complained through the medium of the French Legation that some of the prisoners held in Japan were punished under the civil law for attempts to escape. This is a mysterious announcement. Nothing has been heard here of any such change of procedure, and had it been made the Russians are the last who should complain, for civil law is more lenient than military. On the whole, considering the big army of Russian prisoners in Japan and the special difficulties of managing them caused by differences of language and customs, the remarkable absence of trouble that has to be recorded speaks eloquently not only for the docility and good behaviour of the men themselves but also for the excellence of the Japanese arrangements. This is a subject which has hitherto attracted little comment, but to appreciate the facts one has only to consider what would be involved in incarcerating some seventy thousand Russians even in England, where there would be comparatively little divergence of manners and customs between the people of the country and their prisoners. The mere question of language would constitute a stupendous obstacle to smoothness of management, although in England it would be evidently much less than it is in Japan. Suppose this obstacle supplemented by a radical difference in methods of life and in manners and customs in general, and we obtain some idea of the task the Japanese have had to perform—the task which they have performed with such marked success.

Vice-Admiral Ijuin, Vice-Chief of the Naval Staff, and Captain Eto, an officer on the Staff, returned on Sept. 28th from Saghalien.

GERMANY'S POSITION.

Germany's position is attracting a good deal of journalistic attention in Japan. Reuter persists in representing her as dissatisfied with the Anglo-Japanese compact and anxious to form a counterbalancing combination. Tokyo journals seem to accept that view, perhaps because it accords with forecasts formed before the text of the Alliance was published. At any rate the Fiji Shimpō discusses the matter on the assumption that Germany has been ruffled. The question arising is: what kind of counter-combination can she form? With Russia alone a sufficiently strong union could scarcely be cemented. The ideal coalition from Germany's point of view would be one including France also. But France is obviously unlikely to join such a brotherhood. Certainly she is not ready to clasp hands with Germany in Europe, and the statesmen of Berlin can hardly hope to draw France and Russia into the same camp with themselves in East Asia while continuing the triple alliance of Germany, Austria and Italy in Europe for the purpose of making head against Russia and France. That kind of diplomatic juggling is out of the question. There must either be a total reconstruction of States' unions, or Germany must abandon any hope of forming an efficient alliance for Asiatic purposes. The Nippon takes much the same view. It thinks that France might possibly respond to a proposal to join forces with Russia and Germany for some special purpose in East Asia, but it does not think that any German persuasions will suffice to draw France into permanent bonds of alliance. With France standing aside, then, where can Germany obtain materials for a puissant coalition? The Chuo Shimbun writes in an almost identical strain, but it premises at the outset that Germany is unquestionably hostile to the Anglo-Japanese Alliance, a proposition which to us seems to await demonstration. France is put aside by the Chuo as most unlikely to enter any such combination as Germany contemplates, and, on the other hand, the rivets of the Triple Alliance in Europe have been gradually loosened during recent years. Germany is thus the centre of interest in Europe. She will seek to re-shuffle the cards, but into what groups? That is the question. The Yomiuri Shimbun writes with conspicuous frankness. It says that all really civilized and pacific countries like France and America must approve of the Anglo-Japanese Alliance, but it hesitates to include Germany in that category, and it is at any rate persuaded that she resents the Alliance and would fain form a counter-coalition. But with what materials? She has her allies, Austria and Italy, in Europe. These, however, would be of little use to her in East Asia, and there is not the least prospect—so the Yomiuri thinks—of drawing France into such a compact. That Russia should join it would be natural enough at this moment, but would the cooperation of Russia insure Germany against the dangers she avowedly contemplates at Kiaochow, and would it guarantee her against the consequences of attempting to extend her Shantung enterprises by the high hand? Our contemporary concludes that her wisest plan would be to rely on the Anglo-Japanese alliance and the sincerity of the Allies.

The Kokumin Shimbun takes a different line. It does not doubt, apparently, that the Alliance has caused excitement in Germany and that Berlin statesmen would gladly accomplish some counter-stroke. But it evidently thinks that their wisdom will restrain them. England attaches no great importance to Russian hostility, but she would be most reluctant to break with France. The latter contingency, however, has been averted by the entente between London and Paris, so that Great Britain is now free to stretch out her hand whither she pleases. Germany alone feels cramped and restrained, and the eyes of the world are keenly fixed on her next move. It may be that had Russia been still invested with all the panoply of magnificent might formerly ascribed to her, Germany would join hands with the great Northern Power even against such a coalition as England, Japan and America—for the Kokumin assumes that in spirit the people of the United States are with the Anglo-Japanese allies. But Russia has been shorn of much of her glory. Germany must see very clearly that aided by such a comrade alone she would make but a poor show in East Asia against the Anglo-Japanese-American federation. The Kokumin concludes, then, that Germany will not attempt the stroke attributed to her. Besides, she has shown herself Japan's friend. It is commonly believed that she had a secret understanding with Russia when the latter obtained a lease of Liaotung and the former seized Kiaochow. Nevertheless Germany has always maintained an unimpeachably friendly front towards Japan, and it would be unwarrantable to assume that she will now suddenly change. (There is no ring of sincerity in the latter part of this article.)

Berlin telegraphs that Germany is not at all disturbed about the Anglo-Japanese Alliance and that she has not made any approaches to St. Petersburg on the subject. But London wires (Nichi Nichi Shimbun) that a definite arrangement has been concluded between Germany and Russia with regard to their East-Asian policy, and that the two countries are now on the eve of asking France to join their combination. It is hard to know where the truth lies. We have often noted that Germany's peculiar situation in Europe necessarily invests her policy with an element of doubt in the eyes of the world, and that this is enhanced by the possession of a Sovereign whose activities are extraordinary and who is not gifted with the reserve usually observed by monarchs of great nations. On no occasion has the Protean opinion of the nations with regard to Germany been more forcibly illustrated than on the present. People are still wrangling about what passed between the Kaiser and the Tsar on board the Hohen-sollern, some now confidently alleging that the German Sovereign counselled his Russian brother against paying indemnity, while others allege that Emperor William's advice was frankly pacific. Probably this problem of a secret understanding vis-à-vis the Anglo-Japanese alliance will remain a source of public perplexity and conjecture for a long time to come. If all the stories circulated about the Kaiser since the war began, or if even a part of them, were true, his empire and the Tsar's should be very close friends now.

THE PEACE TREATY AND THE ALLIANCE.

The Dakota carrying Mr. Yamaza and his party reached Yokohama on the 5th. Mr. Yamaza bears the peace treaty. It will doubtless be immediately ratified by the Emperor and we may therefore look for its ready publication. The Fiji Shimpō says that His Majesty will then summon Admiral Togo at once to Tokyo, and the distinguished commander is likely to come accompanied by the whole fleet to the number of some two hundred vessels of sorts. This will be the triumphant return of the Navy par excellence. The whole of the ships will parade in Tokyo Bay, where no naval review has ever previously taken place, and the citizens will have an opportunity of welcoming the brave sailors who have conferred such lustre on their country's name. It is indeed regrettable that the flag-ship Mikasa will not be present. Such of the prize-vessels as are fit for sea will, it is believed, form part of the assemblage.

Speaking of the agitation, we hear nothing just now of the police investigation, nothing of the mysterious individual who acted such an important part in the riot. He has been described by several eye-witnesses as a man of mature years—some say old—wearing a beard and dressed in a costume which betokened easy circumstances. The course pursued by him would seem to have been part of a regularly organized scheme. He would ride in a jinrikisha to the neighbourhood of a police-box and there blow on a flute which he carried in his sleeve. At this signal several men and youths would run up and attack the police-box, and after its destruction the old flute-player, having handed out two or three bundles of bank-notes, would ride on to the next police-box and repeat the performance. Very likely this cryptic figure has been embellished by rumour with attributes which it did not possess, but there seems to be very little room for doubt that such a leader contributed largely to the method which informed the destructive mood of the mob.

There appears to be no doubt that the Privy Council has approved the peace treaty. It held a meeting on the 4th for the purpose of considering the document. Of course no one doubted this result, but it drives another nail in the coffin of Mr. Kono Hironaka and his fellow-agitators who clamour for non-ratification. We may assume that the text of the treaty will be published to-day (6th) or to-morrow, ratification taking place immediately on the arrival of the bearer of the treaty.

The same Council decided that martial law should be abolished at Sasebo, Nagasaki, Tsushima and Hakodate. This has nothing to do with the recent riot in Tokyo. The places mentioned were put under martial law on the 14th of February, 1904, as a measure connected with the war, and now that the latter has terminated, this special system may be abolished. It is stated, also, that the pending arrival of the British Squadron is a proximate cause, though that line of reasoning is not altogether intelligible.

It had been expected that much discussion would take place in the Privy Council when the treaty was presented to it, inasmuch as several of the Councillors were known to be opposed to the terms. But there was no discussion whatever. The explanation is that the matter had been fully threshed out already at a meeting of the Council's Committee, when Count Katsura attended and gave various explanations. Doubtless the Council felt also, or, to speak more correctly, its recalcitrant minority felt, that for Japan to withdraw from the agreement at this stage would be an unthinkable act of international bad faith.

The procedure doubtless will be that on the arrival of Mr. Yamaza in Tokyo, bearing the text of the Treaty, the Emperor's ratification will at once take place, and the fact will be communicated to the French Representative in Tokyo, who will convey it to St. Petersburg. Simultaneously, or as nearly simultaneously as the difference of longitude allows, the Tsar will ratify and intimate ratification to Tokyo through the medium of the United States Representative in St. Petersburg. This will be regarded as the exchange of ratifications and the document will then be published.

Mr. H. W. Denison, adviser to the Foreign Office, and Mr. Y. Yamaza, Director of the Bureau of Political Affairs, two of the staff of the Japanese Peace Plenipotentiaries, who are understood to be bringing the peace treaty, arrived on the afternoon of Oct. 5th by the Dakota from America. Governor Sufu, Mr. Ichihara (Mayor) and various officials of the Kencho, the District Court and the Foreign Office proceeded to the steamer to welcome them. Messrs. Denison and Yamaza landed at 5.30 p.m. at the English Hatoba, where Mrs. Yamaza and her daughter and officials from the various Departments of State were awaiting them. Subsequently, they drove to the railway station in carriages furnished by the Kencho, and left for Tokyo by the 6.42 p.m. train. The Hatoba and railway station as well as Honcho-dori along which they passed were guarded by many policemen and gendarmes.

JAPANESE DESTROYERS.

When Japan went into the war with Russia she had 19 torpedo-destroyers, namely the Asashiro, the Shirakumo, the Kasumi, the Harusame, the Ikasuchi, the Akatsuki, the Sazanami, the Oboro, the Shinonome, the Yugiri, the Kagero, the Murakumo, the Shuran, the Usugumo, the Murasame, the Asagiri, the Akatsuki, and the Hayatori. The two last of these struck Russian mines at Port Arthur and went to the bottom, leaving 17 in Japanese possession. From the Russians, however, she captured 3, the Reshitelni (which was renamed the Akatsuki), the Vedovi (renamed the Satsuki) and the Silni (renamed the Fumizuki). These 3 were added to her force, bringing the number of destroyers to 20. Further, during the past two years, building has gone on steadily and 9 new destroyers have been turned out. They are the Ariake, the Fubuki, the Arare, the Kamikaze, the Hatsushimo, the Yayoi, the Kisaragi, the Ushio and the Nenohi. Thus the Japanese Navy at present musters 29 of this class of craft. Finally 19 more are either launched or on the stocks, and when they are finished the total will stand at 48. The names of the new boats are:—

Shiratsuyu	Hayakaze	Fubiki
Shirayuki	Oite	Shirokaze
Matsukaze	Yunagi	Hatsuharu
Asakaze	Yugure	Wakaba
Harukaze	Yudachi	Hatsuzuki
Shigure	Mikazuki
Asatsuyu	Nowake

THE TOKYO QUESTION.

The question between the Tokyo Municipality and the Home Department is becoming acute. Certain complications of procedure make the details difficult to understand, but the gist of the matter is that the Municipality wants to have the office of chief of police abolished, and in order to bring pressure on the Home Department in that sense, refuses to vote the city's share of the expenses involved in restoring the police boxes smashed or burned by the mob on the 5th and 6th. Sept. So far as the mere amount is concerned it is not large—a total sum of about twenty-three thousand yen, out of which the central treasury proposes to pay eleven thousand, approximately, the city disbursing the remainder. Thus far the Prefectural Council alone has spoken. It declines to grant the money, and the Prefect, deeming the matter one of urgency, has ordered the necessary steps to be taken over the head of the Council. This has exasperated the latter, and it is expected that at the next general meeting of the Prefectural Assembly in November, a bill will be introduced declaring want of confidence in the Prefect. It would appear that the Municipality's methods in this instance are somewhat ultra vires for they amount to direct interference with the composition of the administrative machine, which is quite beyond the purview of any municipal body. The occasion, too, is not very well chosen, for the Municipality lays itself open to the reproach of indirectly endorsing the conduct of the mob on the night of the 5th. We have to remember, however, that the special system of Government—Kokui Seido as it is called—which exists in Tokyo, Osaka and Kyoto, has long been objectionable to the citizens, who claim that the three great cities should have as much local autonomy as other towns in the Empire. Every opportunity is therefore seized to accomplish that change.

Meanwhile the committee of members of the House of Representatives are urging their contention that the investigation of the alleged offences committed by the police on the night of the 5th should not be left to the police themselves, but should be taken from them and placed in the hands of the judiciary. The Barristers Association are taking much the same line. They contend that the police wounded and killed a number of innocent citizens during the riot, and they point out that whereas many of the citizens have been arrested and held for trial on the charge of disturbing the public peace, scarcely any constables have been arraigned for their offence of killing and wounding indiscriminately. This agitation on the part of the barristers re-inforces the arguments of those that advocate abolition of the office of chief of police.

NOT FOUNDED ON FACTS.

On the morning of the 28th our American local contemporary published the following report of the Seoul-Fusan Railway's accounts during the past half year:—

	Yen.
Net profits	325,431.81
To reserves	434.81
To dividend	325,000.00

A correspondent of the same journal, commenting very severely on the failure of Japanese companies to carry sufficient sums to their reserves, adduced the above account as an illustration. But it is a very defective illustration, showing nothing except want of detail on the part of the journal that published the report. The true account was this:—

	Yen
Gross Receipts	489,638
Working Expenses	489,942
Net Profit	8,696
Government guarantee fund	316,738
Total	325,424
To Legal Reserve	434
To Dividend (6 per cent. per annum)	325,000

The newspaper ignored, as did also its correspondent, that the Seoul-Fusan Railway is at present guaranteed by the Government. Its nett earnings were not 325,484 yen, but only 8,696 yen, and of that amount the directors carried 5 per cent.—as legally fixed—to the reserves. Take the case again, of the Seoul-Chemulpo road. Its accounts were thus rendered:—

	Yen.
Net profits	128,258
To Legal Reserve	4,097
To Payment to Government	45,000
To Interest on debt	7,602
To Special Reserve	8,500
To Capital for auxiliary work	10,000
To Carried forward	53,059

This railway, although it earned 128,258 yen net profit, did not pay any dividend at all. It placed nearly 10 per cent. to its reserves, paid off 45,000 yen of debts, carried forward 53,059 yen and applied the rest to interest or special capital. The correspondent in question declares that "not an item in the methods of local (Japanese) companies is overlooked in New York." He certainly chose most unfortunate illustrations when he selected the railways in Korea to demonstrate this accuracy.

THE MONEY MARKET.

The Japanese money market remains easy and there are no signs of any immediate activity. Statistics show the following figures for the Tokyo banks:—

	Deposits.	Loans.	In hand.
	Yen.	Yen.	Yen.
12th August	143,864,000	144,980,000	15,436,000
19th do	145,172,000	144,708,000	16,629,000
26th do	144,231,000	143,496,000	16,283,000
2nd Sept.	146,291,000	142,920,000	16,688,000
9th Sept.	147,216,000	142,756,000	20,524,000

This table shows no evidence of any demand for money. The returns of the Bank of Japan also indicate a reduction of 16 million yen in loans to the general public, and an increase of 18½ millions in loans to the Government, while the issue of convertible notes has been reduced by some 10 millions since the middle of August. The figures are:—

	7th Sept.	14th Aug.	Difference.
	Yen.	Yen.
Convertible Notes	252,000,000	262,000,000	—10,000,000
Specie Reserves	102,000,000	109,000,000	—7,000,000
Note Issues above Legal Limit	30,000,000	33,000,000	—3,000,000
Loans to Government	40,000,000	21,000,000	—18,500,000
Loans to People	78,000,000	94,000,000	—16,000,000

The only item which shows an increase is that of loans to the Government. So far as the general public are concerned they stood in the Bank's books for 16 millions less on the 7th of September than on the 14th of August. This stagnancy is expected to continue until the end of October, but thereafter a question arises. Undoubtedly the failure to obtain an indemnity from Russia disappointed the merchants and manufacturers and depressed public spirit, but that is a temporary phenomenon which will gradually yield to the healing influence of time, to the improved prospects of the rice crop and to the news of the Anglo-Japanese alliance. By and bye the demand for money will be much keener, especially as the settling time at the end of the year approaches. Journals like the Keizai Zasshi and Nichi Nichi insist that steps should be taken to reduce the Bank's loans to the Treasury as well as the convertible note issues.

At 8.17 a.m. on Oct. 4th, a slight shock of earthquake was felt in Yokohama. The duration was 2 minutes and 24 seconds and the direction west to east.

KOREA.

The Korean insurgents seem to have directed their fury against post-offices and letter-carriers. In Kangwon-do they have murdered two post-men and gibbeted their heads, and in Chhunchong they have burned a post-office. It is stated that a number of disbanded soldiers are included in their ranks. Nothing is heard of any effective official measures to quell the disturbance.

A Japanese subject, Mr. Sasabuchi, has obtained from the Korean Government, it is said, an unconditional charter to capture whales on the Korean Coast and to erect stations on shore for curing them. This concession is supposed to be very valuable. There has been much competition for it. Mr. Sasabuchi is stated to be in partnership with a wealthy capitalist in Tokyo. He awaits the arrival of new-pattern ships from Europe, when he will commence operations.

The Asahi Shimbun supports the Jiji Shimpō in insisting that the only effective course for Japan to pursue in Korea is to procure the withdrawal of all foreign representatives, and to take into her own hands the conduct of foreign affairs as France did at Tunis. The argument is that the Koreans have proved themselves constitutionally addicted to intriguing with foreign States. They have never abandoned that practice since the country was opened to the outer world and it would be fatuous to suppose that they will abandon it now. Essentially a peculiar people in that respect, they cannot be justly compared with any Western nation, nor can apposite precedents be sought in the latter's experiences. There would doubtless be some outcry were the Japanese to take such a step, but if it be not taken now the opportunity is not likely to occur again. Japan is not bound to anything beyond ensuring equal commercial and industrial advantages for all nations within the limits of the Korean State. If she continues the futile attempt to control without administering, she will only perpetuate the evils which are already beginning to injure her reputation among observers conscious of her obligations but unappreciative of her difficulties.

Li Yong-ik has left Shanghai by one of the Messageries Maritimes steamers. He is accompanied by a French interpreter.

It appears that an armistice has not yet been concluded in north-eastern Korea. There have been three conferences, but the fixing of a line of demarcation has not yet been found possible. The Russians insist that the line shall run within the bounds of the position now actually occupied by the Japanese, but the latter decline to consent to any such arrangement, and thus, although the ratification of the peace treaty is on the verge of taking place and although the armistice convention was signed at Portsmouth on Sept. 1st there has not yet been any formal agreement to cease fighting in north-eastern Korea. In other words a full month has proved insufficient for the commanders in this part of the field to come to a mutual understanding. The armistice became an accomplished fact in Manchuria on Sept. 16th and at sea on the 18th, so that the delay in the Korean region is very singular. Fortunately both sides have refrained from any fighting so that no material harm is done.

According to the latest statistics compiled by the Japanese Legation in Seoul, the number of Japanese subjects resident in Korea is as follows:—

	Residing in or near the Settlement.	Residing outside the Settlement.	Total.
Seoul	7,208	3,737	10,945
Chemulpho...	12,997	472	13,469
Fusan	12,684	2,676	15,360
Masampo...	594	815	1,409
Yuesan	3,057	284	3,340
Songjin	219	—	219
Mokpho	1,402	322	1,724
Kunsan	1,286	902	2,188
Chinnampo...	3,146	1,138	4,284
Pyongyang...	1,794	341	2,136
	44,388	10,687	55,075

This is a much larger number than has generally been supposed. Another interesting point is that 10,687 are living outside the settlements. How are these men governed? They are not within easy reach of any consulate, and the Korean police are too timid or too weak to control them. In all probability they constitute the most mischievous element of the situation, for they are virtually beyond the range of efficient restraint, and according to all accounts they include many men of exceedingly evil character. These are the Japanese whose doings in the peninsula evoke so much criticism. The remedy is to make due provision for their government, and that can be effected only by the Japanese "taking hold" in a really resolute manner.

The revolt in Kanwong-do seems to be increasing in dimensions. Two thousand insurgents are said to be involved, and their violence and depredations affect a large area. On the 30th ultimo the Korean Government informed the Japanese Legation that a company of infantry had been sent to quell the disturbance. But a company of infantry is obviously inadequate for such a task. We shall probably hear next that the soldiers have gone over to the rebels. It is expected that the Japanese authorities themselves will take up the matter vigorously.

It is reported that Mr. Hayashi, Japanese Representative in Seoul, has had one audience of the Emperor of Korea and is about to have another for the purpose of discussing some very important question. There appears to be a tolerably wide-spread impression that Japan contemplates assuming towards the Peninsular Empire an attitude much more practical than that now held by her, but rumour is unable to define the steps likely to be taken for that purpose. Undoubtedly every advocate of progress must desire to see the present position largely modified.

There is also said to be another question on the tapis—the question of a loan of a million and a half of yen by Japan to the Korean Court. The idea, according to rumour, is that the money should be lodged with the First National Bank, and the interest should be paid annually into the privy purse. We have no special information on this point. The Korean monarch has not given any evidence of ability to use wisely the funds already at his command. One does not see why they should be increased. But it may be assumed that there is some kind of quid pro quo.

Mr. Megata has agreed to combine with the duties of his present post those of financial adviser to the Household Department.

It is expected that the Seoul-Fusan Railway will soon become the property of the Japanese Government, by whom a large part of the cost of construction has been defrayed.

The line between Seoul and Fusan was to have been completely opened to traffic on the 4th instant, the bridges having been restored which were injured by the recent floods. It was on this subject—the subject of unadvertised interruption—that a correspondent recently addressed us from Seoul, and we trust that the inconveniences to which he alluded have now been remedied.

It was a mistake to say that Mr. Megata had agreed to combine the duties of adviser to the Court with those of his present post. Mr. Kato Masuo is the official of whom this should have been related.

There is a report that Mr. Hayashi is about to return to Tokyo from Seoul on important official business. It is stated that all kinds of rumours are circulating in Korea, being invented and put abroad by enemies of Japan.

The Jiji Shimpō has a strong article on the subject of the peninsula. It takes the line that although the convention between this country and Korea forbids the latter to enter into any engagements with foreign countries without Japan's consent—that is to say, agreements contrary to the spirit of the convention—, there is no machinery which Japan could employ against a foreign Power entering into such a compact with Korea. It would be possible to hold Korea to account for her violation of the Convention, but there would be no remedy against the foreign State. Therefore the Jiji urges that the conduct of Korea's foreign affairs should be taken frankly and fully into Japan's hands. The position acquired by Japan in Korea is the one substantial gain that she obtained at the Portsmouth negotiations and the must not forfeit it.

The Yomiuri Shimbun, writing on the same subject, declares that the system of advisers has broken down in Korea, and should now be replaced by something less equivocal and more practical. It was a system inaugurated out of deference to the susceptibilities of the Powers, and not only has its futility been now demonstrated but also the necessity for such deference has disappeared. It is something that Mr. Kato has been appointed to a substantial official post (Sansankwan)—not merely "adviser" as was previously stated—though the office is not one that carries great weight. The Yomiuri, however, is for sweeping away the advisory programme, and boldly appointing Mr. Megata to be Minister of Finance, Mr. Hashi to be Minister of Foreign Affairs, Mr. Kato to be Minister of the Household and General Hasegawa to be Minister of War.

CHINA.

In answer to Peking's protests that the period for the military evacuation of Manchuria should be shortened, and that the guards on the East Chinese Railway should be reduced, Japan is said to have replied that the Portsmouth Treaty not having yet been ratified, the discussion of such matters would be premature.

It is rumoured that the advisability of opening Mongolia as a protection against Russia's aggressive designs in that quarter is seriously occupying attention in Peking.

The Chinese Court, Prince Ching and the great Viceroys are represented as being much pleased by the Anglo-Japanese alliance, which guarantees the integrity of China and opens up an era free of menace and diplomatic pressure. On the other hand, there is a certain sentiment of isolation. The talk of equal opportunities for all suggests to the Chinese that they are to be a common prey, and they are accordingly debating the desirability of an alliance with Japan. The pending discussion about Manchurian affairs will be a good opportunity, Peking thinks, to open that question.

Such is the gist of the Hochi's telegrams from Peking. But the Asahi's cables say that the Chinese Minister in Washington has received President Roosevelt's assurances of readiness to help China and the Representatives of France and Germany have tendered similar professions in Peking. A man may be really in sound health, but if several persons come to offer medicine, he is apt to imagine himself ill.

It is again repeated that the President of the United States has assured the Chinese Government through the latter's representative in Washington, that China shall receive from the United States every assistance in preserving her integrity. If this news be trustworthy, it would seem to indicate a kind of indirect adherence to the Anglo-Japanese Alliance, with the objects of which, for the rest, America is in entire sympathy.

The authors of the bomb outrage in Peking have not yet been discovered, and the five Envoys are strictly guarded, a renewal of the outrage being anticipated.

It is alleged that the Chinese Government has borrowed a sum of 3½ million dollars from British capitalists on the security of the taxes of Hupeh, Hunan and Kwangtung. The money is to be devoted to the construction of the Yeh-Han Railway, namely, the line (600 miles) from Canton to Hankow.

Preliminary arrangements having been completed on the Peking-Whentai section of the Peking-Changkiakow Railway, it is expected that work will be commenced immediately. This is the road which will connect Peking with Mongolia. Russia showed much activity in attempting to secure the charter, but she did not succeed.

A steamer—the Shih-ho,—belonging to the China Merchants, struck a floating torpedo on the 30th ultimo near the Shihtau light-house, en route from Chefoo to Shanghai. The vessel went to the bottom and 16 lives were lost. Seventy-one of her survivors, including all the passengers, were picked up by passing ships. The exact locality of the catastrophe is given as north lat. 33° 25' and east longitude 122° 37'.

Yingkow telegraphs that the limits of Japanese residence and trade have been extended from Liaoyang to Mukden, with the restriction, however, that no Japanese subject may live within the walls of Mukden.

A cable from Shanghai to the Nichi Nichi Shimbun says that the Anglo-Japanese Alliance has produced a profound sensation in China. There is universal and joyful recognition of the fact that the Alliance Treaty protects China against aggression and secures the integrity of her dominions.

Peking is represented to be still much perturbed about the length of the period fixed for the evacuation of Manchuria. And indeed we can not be surprised. To the Chinese it must seem that they are about to witness a rehearsal of the evil old drama. These promises of Russia to evacuate Manchuria within a year or within eighteen months are historically mal-odorous. Experience deters credence, and if the Chinese foresee fresh prevarication and renewed mala fides, can Russia blame any one but herself? She has established a bad reputation in such matters. Peking is said to be about to approach Japan with a proposal for shortening the time, and, if that be impossible, then the Chinese statesmen want to have a solemn promise extracted from Russia that she will keep her engagement. But what promise can be more solemn than that already made by her; a promise given in the sight of the whole world and embodied in a treaty to which all nations may be said to be parties? If Russia means to break faith—which we do not for a moment believe—no formula of asseveration or ceremony of pledge will bind her. It is like lending a man money. If he does not intend to pay an "i.o.u." is mere waste of paper.

Curiously enough, and not unsuggestively, a telegram comes from London that Russian statesmen have decided to lose no time in doubling the Siberian Railway and in building a line direct from St. Petersburg to Omsk. But there is already railway communication between Omsk and the Russian capital. A line from Omsk to Tashkend, which was recently spoken of would be another matter. The doubling of the Siberian Railway, however, is the most suggestive measure of all. Certainly the ordinary traffic on the line does not at present warrant such a step. Military transport alone can be in contemplation.

The report of William Powell, Ltd., of Hongkong for presentation at the fourth ordinary general meeting, shows a credit balance on the Profit and Loss account of $27,624, from which has to be deducted the interim dividend of 5 per cent. paid in April, and directors' and auditors' fees. From the remaining $19,324, the Directors propose to pay a final dividend of 7 per cent., absorbing $8,400, and after writing off stock, fixtures and fittings and providing for bad debts, equalisation and dividend account, and a bonus to manager and staff, they will carry forward $676.95.

The North-China Daily News takes the following notes from the Nanfengpao:—

The mineral deposits are said to be very rich in Hsuancheng District in Anhui. In 1901 the mining rights within this district were granted to a Japanese concessionaire by H. E. Sheng Kungpao on his own responsibility. The concession, however, was subsequently cancelled on account of the former's failure to raise the funds required by the contract. We now learn that some unscrupulous Chinese have been intriguing lately with certain foreigners to obtain this concession; but the true nature of their scheme having been detected, the Shangpu telegraphed a few days ago to the Governor of the province in question, asking him to investigate this matter and submit a report thereon as soon as possible.

One of the most hopeful signs of progress of China is the number of Chinese young men and women going abroad to prepare themselves for the future service of their country. Quite a party of students, consisting of both youths and young ladies, left by the steamer Minnesota for Seattle. The young ladies include Miss Sze, late Assistant Principal of the Anti-Footbinding Girls' School; Miss Chen, daughter of the late Mr. Chen Oi-ting; Miss L. Y. Zau, daughter of the late Rev. Dr. Zau Tse-zeh, of Soochow; and Miss Chu, daughter of Taotai Chu Pao-fay. Miss Chen is accompanied by two of her brothers. The majority of the party will make Seattle their adopted home.

Notwithstanding repairs having only recently been made, the Yellow River bridge seems to be in a deplorable condition again since the rising of the freshets in the present month. We are told that the damages are so serious that the labours of the men repairing them are inadequate for the work, and we have the private opinion of a foreign engineer that the bridge would not last for many years.

With reference to the bomb outrage in Peking, the writer of the Native Notes appearing in the N.-C. Daily News says:—

A private dispatch from Tientsin states that several days before the bomb outrage at Peking H.E. Viceroy Yuan Shih-k'ai received reliable information that a number of the followers of Sun Yat-sen, the "Red Republican," as he has sometimes been termed, had arrived from the South and were scattered both about Tientsin and Peking. In consequence of this information Viceroy Yuan Shih-k'ai at once telegraphed the news to Na Tung, the Commandant of the Peking Gendarmerie, and to Hu Yu-fen, Director of Public Works and the Department of Public Safety, asking them to keep a good watch and to arrest all strangers and suspicious characters who could not give an account of themselves. The same instructions were quietly issued to all officials concerned in Tientsin. There is reason to believe therefore that the bomb outrage of Sunday was perpetrated by Sun Yat-sen's men. In consequence of the uncertainty and panic in the air caused by the outrage their Majesties have decided at the earnest request of their advisers, to forego their trip to Hochienfu to witness the autumn army manoeuvres early next month. The High Commissioners will however proceed on their journey abroad in a few days.

The following telegram concerning Viceroy Chang Chih-tung's railway schemes is from the Nanfengpao. It is dated Peking, the 27th inst.:

I have just secured the contents of a secret memorial sent here three weeks ago by telegraph, in which Viceroy Chang Chih-tung reported that he had succeeded in cancelling the Canton-Hankow Railway Agreement by the payment to the J. P. Morgan Syndicate of 6,750,000 gold dollars. This sum was to be paid in three instalments; the 1st to be paid at the signing of the Agreement cancelling the concession; the 2nd instalment to be paid two months later; and the 3rd and last instalment, six months later. The money for this purpose was borrowed entirely from the British Government at four and a half per cent. for the period of twenty years. No discount on the loan was charged. The security for the loan is the tax on prepared opium collected in Hukwang and Kuangtung provinces.

I have learnt from a reliable source that, besides the security, the British Government demanded that the half of the foreign engineers of the line should be British, and, besides, any further loan is to be made for the construction of the road, the British should have the first option.

Viceroy Chang has also tentatively promised that the Szechuan Railway will be constructed with British money.

He has, moreover, given a pledge to the effect that the other half of the engineers will be composed of Japanese. Wang Feng-ying, the Viceroy's Chief Secretary, acted as intermediary.

A Tientsin dispatch, translated by the North-China Daily News, states that their Excellencies Viceroy Yuan Shih-k'ai and T'ieh Liang, President of the Board of War, have drawn up a memorial to the Throne strongly recommending the advisability of allowing, in the future, military and naval officers, soldiers and sailors, students in the military and naval academies, who are studying for commissions in the Army and Navy, and officers and men of the newly organised police or gendarmerie in Peking and provinces, to assume uniforms after the Western style. The question of cutting off the queue is not touched, but it will be fair to assume that should the memorial of their Excellencies be sanctioned and made law by Imperial edict, the cutting off of queues will naturally follow, as there are no queues in the "Western style" of dress. Their Excellencies being the most important members of the Council—not even excepting Prince Ching, who is the President of the Council—controlling the Army Reorganisation Department, they have the right to memorialise the Throne on the subject of uniforms, etc., relating to the reorganised fighting forces of the Empire. It will, however, be remembered perhaps, that on a former occasion their Excellencies suggested to the Throne the necessity of allowing military officers and soldiers to cut off their queues, and got reprimanded by the Empress Dowager for their pains, her Majesty considering the loss of the queue as the casting off of the badge of subjection to the Manchu dynasty. Hence in the present memorial which is to be handed up to the Throne no mention is made of this delicate subject, but once a change of uniform to the Western style is granted, we may soon see the queue coming off.

The P. & T. Times records the death of Hauptmann Scasa, a German officer, who died while under medical treatment at the Tientsin German Military Hospital, by his own hands. It appears that in a fit of depression he took out his pocket knife and stabbed himself in the region of the heart, the blade penetrating that organ.

THE TOBACCO MONOPOLY IN JAPAN.

We are indebted to Mr. K. Shōda, Secretary to the Minister of Finance and Chief of the Bureau of Documents in the Treasury Department, for an interesting brochure of 46 pages setting forth a succinct account of the working of the Tobacco Monopoly in Japan, to which are appended tables apparently furnishing all the additional information on the subject that could be desired, and reprints of the relative laws. The contents of the pamphlet are in English, the various measures and values being mainly expressed in acres, pounds sterling, etc. The reading matter is introduced by an excellent map, on which are indicated in colour the tobacco growing areas and the different offices, warehouses and manufactories. From this it is gathered that the chief centres of cultivation lie in Satsuma and Ōsumi provinces; Idzumo-Bitchu-Bingo (extending from Yonago on the Sea of Japan across the peninsula to the Inland Sea); Iyo-Awa in the Inland Sea districts of Shikoku; and Hitachi, where is produced the Mito tobacco which shares with the leaf of Satsuma and Hadano in Sagami the distinction of being the pick of Japanese leaf. This may be supplemented by the following figures showing the examined area of tobacco plantations in successive years:—

	Acres.		Acres.
1900-01	91,799	1903-04	73,686
1901-02	56,114	1904-05	79,656
1902-03	58,668

Tobacco was first taxed in Japan when the Tobacco Tax Regulations were put in force in January, 1876. These were twice subjected to revision, and at length the financial requirements resulting from the war with China called into existence the Leaf Tobacco Monopoly Law in January, 1898, which, despite many drawbacks in its operation, yielded a steadily increasing revenue—the amount in the 30th fiscal year (April 1st, 1903—Mar. 31st, 1904) being yen 14,900,000 or about five times the stamp duty under the former regulations, which realized only yen 3,000,000. The disadvantages already mentioned, however, suggested a change, and as the national progress called for an increase in the revenue, led to the passing of the Tobacco Manufacture Monopoly law in Mar. 1904.

The Monopoly was initiated in almost the original form of the law except that the indemnity to tobacco manufacturers was calculated on sales instead of on income as at first intended (the total grant amounted to yen 9,100,000) and the first stage in the undertaking was the manufacture of cigarettes for which purpose the well-equipped factories of Murai Bros., Matsuei Chiba and Matsuei Iwawa were taken over. There are now in full operation two factories in Tokyo, and one each in Kyoto, Osaka and Kagoshima. One of the Tokyo factories and the Kyoto establishment produce cigarettes with mouthpieces (chiefly for native consumption)—the Shikishima, Yamato, Asahi and Yamazakura brands, the names of which are derived from the well-known verse:

Shikishima no
Yamato gokoro wo
Hito towaba
Asahi ni niwo
Yamazakura kana.

There are three foreign style kinds (without mouthpieces)—Star, Cherry, Lily, and one with mouthpieces, Camelia. As a guide to the quality of these products it may be noted that the four brands to suit native taste cost respectively in the order named sen 8, 7, 6, and 5 per 20 pieces, the foreign style cigarettes costing sen 7, 6, and 5 respectively and Camelias being sold at sen 6 for 20. To these prices about 20 per cent has been added in consequence of the war outlays. We note that the Monopoly cannot cope with the demand, for the market has extended from Korea and Manchuria to the Straits Settlements. New brands have been issued and others are undergoing trial.

The manufacture of cut tobacco was entered upon as the second stage of the Monopoly's operations, and is now carried on by the Tokyo Third Manufactory and thirty-one other factories, besides branches in connection with these. There are six brands of cut tobacco which is sold, as under the old system, in packages of 5 to 40 mommie. In May last the manufacture of cigars from Manila leaf was begun and five brands are now on sale at the following prices: Perfectos, yen 12; Regalias, yen 10; Orientales, yen 8; Londres, yen 5; and Senioritas, yen 2.50, and we read that the Monopoly finds it possible to produce these at less than the price of the imported articles.

It may be noted in passing that on June 1st, 1905, there were 1,786 wholesale and 235,414 retail dealers in the empire. As to the future of the Monopoly's working the following table shows the estimated profits as set down in the first year of its operation:

Fiscal Year.	Yen.	Fiscal Year.	Yen.
37th	26,000,000	43rd	38,000,000
38th	32,500,000	44th	38,600,000
39th	33,200,000	45th	42,300,000
40th	33,800,000	46th	42,950,000
41st	35,100,000	47th	47,000,000
42nd	35,700,000

For the 37th fiscal year the net profit actually realised was yen 27,510,927, which shows an excess of yen 1,474,357 over the estimate—yen 26,036,570.

It is claimed for the Monopoly that its operations have produced, among other satisfactory results, uniformity of quality and a fixed number of brands; fixity of price; readiness and ease of control; the introduction of improvements in manufacture and consequent reduction in cost of production; and as the result of the above conditions a daily increasing export. China, Korea, the Maritime Provinces of Siberia, the Straits Settlements, Siam, and Australia are all of great promise as markets for Japanese tobacco.

One of the tables in the appendix shows the quantity of leaf tobacco collected in each year by the Government—110,033,696 lbs. in 1900-01, 71,315,325 lbs. in 1901-02, 69,691,397 lbs. in 1902-03, 94,857,616 lbs. in 1903-04, and 95,853,997 lbs. in 1904-05. The decrease in 1901-03 is accounted for by the fact that a large quantity of leaf was brought over to those years. The import of leaf tobacco has risen steadily (with the exception of 1902-03) from 2,254,612 lbs. in 1900-01 to 5,779,471 lbs. in 1904-05, while the export, rising from 120,231 lbs. in 1900-01 to 693,810 lbs. in 1902-03, stood at 324,471 lbs. in 1904-05. Of foreign style cigarettes the Lily seems to be the favourite brand, the output in July, 1904—March, 1905 having been 847,746,620 pieces, Cherry coming next with 492,460,340 pieces, Dragon third with 83,001,420, Star fourth with 66,638,360, and Phoenix last among mouthpiece-less cigarettes with 17,876,232. Of those with mouthpieces Asahi is most in vogue, 1,663,748,100 pieces having been produced (presumably to meet a demand), Yamazakura comes second with 1,484,434,440 pieces, Yamato third with 421,977,660, Shikishima fourth with 124,146,740, and Camelia last with 53,302,500 pieces. Readers may learn with interest that in the course of the fiscal year 12,100 pieces were specially manufactured for Imperial use. Of course a large quantity of cigarettes made by private firms was in the market when the Monopoly began its operations, otherwise the above figures would undoubtedly be greater. We note that during the same period 1,725,581,600 foreign style cigarettes were sold at home and 493,380,000 were exported, while of mouthpiece cigarettes 3,965,958,900 were sold at home and 409,710,400 were exported, the totals being: sold at home 5,691,540,500; exported 983,090,400; grand total, 6,674,630,900. The import of cigars amounted to 1,191,434 pieces, valued at $3,418. Finally the following table gives the profit from the Tobacco Monopoly:

Fiscal year.	Profit.	Fiscal year.	Profit.
1900-01	742,001	1903-04	1,525,995
1901-02	1,113,049	1904-05	2,817,876
1902-03	1,269,852

The figures for 1900-04 represent profit derived from the leaf tobacco monopoly; and as the Tobacco Monopoly Law was only put into force from July, 1904; three months after the beginning of the fiscal year the figures for 1904-05 include the profit derived from the leaf-tobacco monopoly.

A DISTINGUISHED VISITOR.

As noted in a previous issue of the Japan Mail, the distinguished American philosopher, Professor Borden P. Bowne, of Boston University, accompanied by his wife and his wife's sister, is making a visit in Japan. The party were in Yokohama and vicinity two weeks after their arrival, and then went to Niihko and on to Sendai.

In the latter city they received that wonderful welcome peculiar to Sendai in its relation to foreign guests. A reception was given to them by the city, at which the Governor was present and which was participated in by the military. Some choice presents were given the Professor and the ladies, details of which will be found elsewhere in this issue. They were entertained at various Japanese and Foreign homes. The Professor visited the schools and lectured at the Second High School and the Tohoku Gakuin, and preached at the laying of the corner stone of the new Methodist Episcopal Church.

The party arrived in Tokyo on Friday, the 29th ult., and are being entertained at the home of Dr. and Mrs. Soper at Aoyama Gakuin. A brilliant reception was given them by the Aoyama schools on Saturday afternoon in the form of a garden party on the grounds of Bishop Harris' residence at Aoyama. The spacious grounds were finely decorated with Japanese and American flags. The Marine Band furnished music. About two hundred and fifty guests were present, an equal proportion of Japanese and foreigners. Among the guests were Count Okuma, Baron Kikuchi, the President of the Imperial University, and many other members of the various faculties of Tokyo.

Dr. Bowne preached at the Aoyama Gakuin Chapel on Sunday morning, and will preach at the Union Church Service on Sunday afternoon, the 8th.

Professor and Mrs. Bowne, with Miss Morrison, reached Sendai on the 23rd September. They were astonished at the welcome given them at the station, where Mayor Hayakawa, and other distinguished gentlemen, including lawyers, heads of schools, and heads of the city wards, together with many ladies, native and foreign, met the party. Prof. Bowne was at once invited by the Governor, president of the Educational Society of the Province, and by the Mayor, head of the City Educational Society, to deliver two lectures in the hall of the Government College on the 26th and 27th September. This gave time for him to preach twice on Sunday to the Christians and missionaries of the city.

The large hall of the College was packed with over 1,000 students on the 26th, who listened to the Professor's able lecture on the aim of Philosophy. On the following day an audience of distinguished citizens assembled in the same place and heard him on Pantheism and Personality. After the address, the audience adjourned to another building where a warm and enthusiastic welcome meeting was held. The Mayor heartily thanked the Professor for his illuminating lectures and alluded in sincere terms to the most valuable assistance and sympathy the United States had freely given from the days of Commodore Perry. Then in the name of the ladies and gentlemen of the city he presented Professor Bowne with a splendid bronze vase made by a well known artist of Tokyo, Mr. Suzuki Chokichi, while to Mrs. Bowne and Miss Morrison were given by the ladies handkerchiefs, and a centrepiece such as only ladies in this land of cherry blossoms and chrysanthemums know how to embroider in silk.

Perhaps what Professor A. C. Knudson, a former pupil of Professor Bowne's, says of his teacher in a Pennsylvania paper, may be of interest to our readers:—

He was born in Monmouth county, New Jersey, in 1847. He graduated with highest honors from New York University in 1871, devoted the next two years to teaching and preaching, and then spent two years at the universities of Halle, Paris and Göttingen. While in Germany he made the acquaintance of Lotze, and was deeply influenced by him. He returned to the United States in 1875, and for a year carried on the double work of assistant professor in New York University and assistant editor of The Independent. In the fall of 1879 he accepted the position of professor of philosophy in Boston University, which he has held ever since. Yale and Chicago Universities too have offered him important positions.

Doctor Bowne is, first of all, a teacher. His professional chair is his throne. He exercises a magnetic influence over those who sit at his feet. To an almost unprecedented degree he possesses the power of excitation over his students. He frequently sends them forth from the lecture-room so stimulated by his profundity and brilliancy that they feel, as one of them said, as though their "heads were expanding to the bursting-point." The secret of this wonderful power lies, no doubt, in its ultimate analysis, in the indefinable personality of the man. There are, however, some conspicuous qualities which contribute towards it. Perhaps the first thing about him that impresses one is his marvellously clear insight into the problems of thought and life. He penetrates at once to the heart of every question, brushing aside what is superficial and irrelevant. There is, he often says, a good deal of blind staggers in philosophy. But there is none in him. His discussions are always to the point, and as son-clear as human speech can make them. He is altogether free from the pedantry of the merely professional philosopher. His interests are those of life. His method in every problem is to single out the essential and vital point, and relate it to the living thought of man. Possessed of an amazing dialectical skill, he never cultivates it for its own sake. For the purely formal he has no taste. It doesn't pay expenses, he says. With methodology as such, both in philosophy and in pedagogy, he has very little sympathy. Genuine-ness and clear-headedness are his sole guides. The result is a realism and freshness in his teaching which are exceedingly stimulating.

Along with this clearness of mental vision he possesses an equally remarkable gift of expression. Had he devoted himself to polite literature instead of to philosophy, he would certainly have attained high distinction as an essayist. As it is, his writings have a marked literary flavour. The same finish and taste for words are characteristic also of his ordinary conversation. His speech has a classic quality. There are few living men who have so completely mastered the terminology of their subject as to be able to express themselves with the freedom, precision and grace that he does. His classroom lectures are models from the standpoint of form, as well as from that of matter. What he chiefly aims at in his style is lucidity and incisiveness. "The brilliance of Professor Bowne," says a recent writer, "is that of a clear and searching beam of white light. All the colors of the spectrum are there in combination, but clearness is never sacrificed to color, nor are rigid argumentation and critical analysis subordinated to rainbow rhetoric."

But there is a yet deeper fact concerning him which needs to be mentioned in order to explain his remarkable hold on his students. He has a system. He has not been content with simply historical and critical studies; he has worked out a comprehensive theory of reality and of the intellectual, moral and religious life. His conclusions are essentially those of Lotze, but they all have the stamp of his own individuality. In the preface to one of his earliest books he quotes the saying that "there are many echoes, but few voices," and classes himself with the "echoes." But that has now long ceased to be the case. He is one of the very few voices in the philosophic world of to-day. He has a message. In his speech there is an unconscious tone of authority and finality. Those who come to hear him usually know beforehand very little of his idealism. They have imbibed the transfigured realism of current scientific speculation, and are more or less confused and disturbed by the contradictions and inconsistencies in their fundamental notions of things. They soon learn from him the relative character of what they supposed were the absolute truths of science, and this affords them some relief. But as he expounds to them his own conception of the world, a genuine enthusiasm lays hold of them. Nature takes on a different look. It ceases to be mere being and becomes speech. The power, not ourselves, is changed from blind force to personal will. The whole universe comes to be charged with meaning and purpose. The old contradictions and discords are removed. The ideal and real are united in one consistent view. Behold, all things are made new. It would be difficult adequately to describe the emotions with which these students are stirred as they are ushered into this new "Weltanschauung." They find in it a gospel. Hundreds of them feel an everlasting debt of gratitude to their teacher for it, and for the release it has given them from the mechanical type of thought. He has come as near as any American philosopher to founding a school. In the faculties of many colleges and universities, in the ministry and in the other professions, there are a large number of men who look up to him as master, and who may properly be called Bownites.

His first book was published in 1874, having been begun while he was yet a student in college. It was entitled, "The Philosophy of Herbert Spencer," and was devoted to an examination of the first principles of the English thinker with a clearness and raciness which has never been excelled. Although written by a mere youth, it has maintained itself for over thirty years as one of the most thorough and decisive criticisms of the Spencerian philosophy. In 1879 a larger book appeared from his pen, entitled "Studies in Theism." This gave way in 1887 to a more systematic and more compact work on the same subject, called "The Philosophy of Theism." This in turn was revised in 1902, and published under the title, "Theism." No more masterly presentation of the theistic argument has ever been made than is to be found in these three books, especially the last. This is the common verdict of all who are qualified to judge. W. T. Harris, the commissioner of education in the United States, declares that the contributions they make to the solution of the difficult problems with which they deal are simply invaluable, and commends them to the attention of "thoughtful people, not only in America, but also in all countries where natural science and mechanical invention have aroused people to thinking, and more or less broken the bonds of the authority of the church."

Professor Bowne's chief works in the department of pure philosophy are his "Theory of Thought and Knowledge," and his "Metaphysics." "Metaphysics" was originally published in 1882. A part of the material in it was later made the basis of the "Theory of Thought and Knowledge," which appeared in 1897. The remainder was revised in 1898, and published under the old title. These two volumes furnish us with a comprehensive exposition of his philosophical system. They also serve as a most admirable introduction to the general problems of philosophy. For clarifying the field of thought, and marking out the permissible lines of sound speculation, there are no better works. In 1886 he gave to the public an "Introduction to Psychological Theory," in which he applied his philosophical principles to the more important problems of psychology. He laid bare the inconsistencies and confusion in much of the so-called "new psychology," and pointed out the highways of every sound psychological theory. His "Principles of Ethics," was published in 1892. In this book his firm grasp on life and reality is specially evident. He exposes with relentless rigor the inadequacy of the theories of the past, insists on the necessity of uniting the intuitive and the experience schools of ethics in order to reach any working system, and finds the aim of conduct, not in abstract virtue, but in fullness and richness of life."

"PALMAN QUI MERUIT."

So far as we have hitherto had an opportunity of judging to San Francisco belongs the palm for unqualified lying in connexion with the recent outbreak in Tokyo. A special cablegram to the Manila American from San Francisco, dated the 8th September, said:—

The Tokio rioters, while kept in order by the military are not appeased and trouble is expected every moment. A fierce hatred of all foreigners is being engendered and found expression, yesterday, in the mob assaulting a party of Americans, including E. H. Harriman, the railroad magnate, and General Manager R. P. Schwerin, upon leaving the Imperial Hotel.

Missiles were thrown at them and the most insulting language was used by the rioters. The prompt interference of the police saved the Americans from being roughly handled. So savage was the mob that had they gotten to the members of the party, they would have been torn limb from limb.

Even Marquis Ito, who has long been the idol of the Japanese people, was subjected to insult and an attempt was made to seize him, yesterday, when he made his appearance on the streets.

At first the police attempted to cope with the mass of excited fanatics but in many instances they were overpowered and severely injured.

When the attack on the party of Americans was frustrated, the frenzied mob rushed the police stations, all of which were burned to the ground. Maddened with their success in the destruction of the police buildings the residences of foreigners became their objective and it seemed as if Tokio would soon be at the mercy of the mob.

At this juncture martial law was declared and the military cleared the streets. Some opposition was made by the rioters and several hundred were injured but the rioting was stopped and the military are in complete control.

An order has been issued by the Tokio government urging foreigners to remain off the streets for the present, unless strongly guarded. The police have made over a thousand arrests and these will be summarily dealt with.

There has been no news received from Tokio regarding the attitude of the soldiers at the front and it is feared that conditions in Oyama's army are far from reassuring.

These falsehoods, stupendous as they are, need not surprise any one. We all know what may be expected of the American Yellow journal, which is the world's prince of liars. But what does surprise us is that the Japanese censor should have allowed such wild falsehoods to be cabled from Tokyo. The date shows that there can not have been time to send the false news by post to Shanghai whence it could have been despatched over the wires without any interference from censors. It must have been handed in at Tokyo, and the censor who allowed it to be forwarded is only a degree less blameworthy than the unscrupulous romancist who manufactured the story.

NOTES ON CURRENT EVENTS.

The poem entitled "Ichinohe's Charge," which appear in our columns to-day, is from the pen of Master William Maxwell Evarts, grandson of the great American statesman, and son of the Rev. Prescott Evarts of Cambridge, Mass. Master Evarts is only 14 years of age.

The Directors of the Nippon-Yusen Kaisha have presented to Captain Johan Wilhelm Eckstrand, on the occasion of his retirement from their employment, a gratuity of twenty thousand yen in recognition of his long, faithful and efficient services, which date from the time of the Company's formation.

Mr. Ogawa has now in preparation an album of some 24 views of Fuji, the most beautiful and characteristic we have ever seen. The photographer is Mr. Herbert G. Ponting, who has spent the past eighteen months visiting all parts of Japan and taking scenic pictures. Mr. Ponting seems to have quite exceptional skill. These Fujiyama landscapes are incomparably the best hitherto produced, and it may be confidently predicted that the album will at once obtain a high place in public favour.

There is a prospect that Hokkaido may become financially independent. Ever since the days of the Kaitakushi it has been a burden on the central Treasury, its income being only some 3 million yen and its outlays aggregating 6 millions. We do not gather that there has been any marked development of revenue, but the Government seems to think that the time has come when Hokkaido, like Formosa, should pay its own way; or, in other words, cut its coat according to its cloth. Development of its timber resources seems to be one of the income-raising projects that are in contemplation, but as to the financial scheme no details are yet obtainable. The Chief of the Administration, Mr. Sonoda, is said to be busily elaborating a programme which will save the Treasury an outlay of some 3 millions annually.

Reuter's intelligence, quoted from the Standard, as to the formation of a large Anglo-Japanese shipping combination with a capital of five millions sterling, is not fully credited in Japan. No news of such a project has been received from sources which might have been expected to convey an item so important, and in the absence of such confirmation doubt is inevitable.

Mr. Sugawara Naonosuke of Kyoto has made a signal innovation in embroidery by using hemp instead of silk. The work thus produced, though is some respects harsher than that done in silk, is much more realistic, being free from the sheen which lends an artificial aspect to so many pictures otherwise exquisitely wrought according to the methods hitherto in vogue. We are not aware that any special difficulties attend the use of hemp for this purpose, but there can be no doubt about the merits of the result. A design of a lion and a lioness embroidered in hemp, which has just been sent to Tokyo by Mr. Sugawara, is certainly the finest thing of its kind we have ever seen.

Speaking of the Encyclopedia Britannica and the system of deferred payments, it is an interesting fact that the Japanese subscribers have met their obligations with even greater regularity than subscribers in England. What explanation of that will be given by those whose constant habit it is to denounce the Japanese as wholly lacking in commercial morality? We recollect that when the Agent for the sale of the Encyclopedia came to Japan in the autumn of 1902 he was warned by several of the settlement residents that the installment system would never work in this country; as the dishonesty of the Japanese constituted a fatal block. When he sought our opinion we gave it in quite the opposite sense, being convinced that the Japanese could be trusted in such a matter as fully as any other people. The event goes to indicate that the pessimistic forecast was very erroneous.

It is stated that the Directors of the Kwansei Railway Company have virtually arranged for a loan of from 10 to 22 million yen from British capitalists, the rate of interest to be 4½ per cent. and the price paid to the Company for each bond, 92 yen. The loan will remain unredeemed for 10 years, and will be thereafter redeemed in 20 years. The railways concerned are a number of lines in the neighbourhood of Kyoto, which, having combined into one system, are about to build connecting roads and to make many changes demanding a large expenditure of capital.

The news is repeated that the Novik will very soon be raised. She is not in herself of much value, her displacement being only 3,080 tons, but special interest attaches to her as she embodies the results of the late Admiral Makaroff's experiences and theories.

The Kokumin Shinbun has a telegram from Vancouver saying that Baron Komura and his party arrived there at 1 p.m. on the 2nd instant, and were met by about 100 persons at the station. They proceeded through the rain to their hotel. Baron Komura has nearly quite recovered. He was to embark that evening on the Empress of India.

The late Baron Sannomiya adopted a plan which has come much into vogue in Japan during the past few years. He inserted a clause in his will providing that instead of following the usual custom, that is to say, making returns in kind to donors of flowers and "incense" at his funeral, sums of money should be given for charitable purposes. The gifts bequeathed by him in this class were 200 yen to the poor of Shiba in Tokyo, one hundred to Dr. Takagi's Charity Hospital, one hundred to the primary school of Mano-mura in Shiga (the Baron's birth-place), three hundred to the German Red Cross Hospital in Sendagaya, thirty to the Ladies Charity Society of Omi, and fifty to the Dai Nihon Jissen Zaidan.

A telegram to the Nichi Nichi Shinbun says that on the 2nd instant there was opened in Formosa a railway from Taihoku (Taipei) to Kussaku (in the Shinko jurisdiction) and Harisha (in the Gilan jurisdiction). The construction of this line had been attended with great difficulties. It runs through the disaffected region and will serve as a valuable instrument for preserving order.

The latest estimates of the Department of Agriculture and Commerce, made on the 26th of September, put this year's rice crop at 19.9 per cent. less than last year's, and 7.2 per cent. below the average. Thus:—

Crop of 1904	51,430,221 koku.
Average Crop	44,388,016 "
Crop of 1905	41,174,380 "

The Foreign Office publishes a telegram that Baron Komura left Vancouver for Yokohama at 7 p.m. on the 2nd.

It is stated that the movement by the Bengalese against the purchase of foreign goods is gaining strength, but it is not directed at all against Japanese goods: on the contrary the demand for these is increasing.

Fame, remarks the Globe, has blown with a chill breath of late upon the name of Gen. Stoessel, but seems to have left his material fortunes unscathed. His wife, "the angel of the defence," as she was being called about this time last year by the garrison of Port Arthur, has just completed the purchase of a house in St. Petersburg, for which she has paid the handsome price of £24,000.

The Fiji says that the Japanese Government has paid over eight hundred thousand yen as expenses in connexion with the peace negotiations, since the first proposal of President Roosevelt up to the conclusion of the negotiations. After the conclusion of peace, a further large amount must also be expended.

LADIES' ADVISORY COMMITTEE.

The annual meeting of the Ladies Advisory Committee took place in the Public Hall on Wednesday morning at 10.30 a.m.

Mrs. J. CAREY HALL addressed the meeting as follows:—

LADIES.—I think it will not be necessary to go through the formality of having the minutes of our last public meeting read over, as a report was published in full in the papers at the time. The main business before us to-day is to receive the Hon. Treasurer's Report, and to elect a new Committee for the coming year. Before doing so, however, it may be well that I should recount briefly, such changes as have occurred in the position of affairs since then, and the work, slight as it is, which has fallen on your Committee to perform.

My predecessor, Mrs. Bellows, had been so indefatigable in working in the interests of the Hospital, that it left very little to be done by us. As you may remember Mrs. Williamson Jones was elected Hon. Treasurer, but having to leave for home shortly after, her post was kindly taken by Mrs. Irving Bell. Mrs. Marshall Martin also left for home early in the spring for a short visit, in the meantime Mrs. Dearing kindly consenting to act in her stead as Honorary Secretary, also as visiting lady to the Hospital in conjunction with Mesdames Lowder and Manley.

A sum of 100 yen was subscribed from the friends in hand, to go towards furnishing a sitting and bedroom for the Head Nurse, Miss Gray, who up till November last, owing to repairs being still in course of completion, had had to put up with rather inadequate accommodation. In May last, when the Hospital was released from the hands of the workmen it was thought an appropriate occasion for allowing the public to see the results of the work to which they had so liberally subscribed, and your committee issued invitations for an "At Home" to be held in the grounds of the Hospital. Fine weather favoured the project and a large number were present. The Hospital was thrown open for inspection, and every opportunity given to all who wished to inspect the building and the numerous improvements that had been made for the comfort of patients. A new stock of linen has lately been procured.

We were also asked to furnish a room, the funds being provided by the General Committee, for Nurse Pencock, who took up her work here as Assistant Nurse last July. Everything at the Hospital seems to be in good working order, the Matron, Miss Gray, and the Assistant Nurse giving general satisfaction, and working harmoniously together.

Best thanks are due to those ladies who have so kindly sent flowers—and in thanking present subscribers for their kind donations which have secured for the Hospital the services of a competent Head Nurse, we trust that if in the future the necessity should arise for a further appeal they will respond as liberally as heretofore.

I will now call on the Honorary Treasurer to read the Report.

The Hon. Treasurer's report was as follows:—

LADIES.—In March last I took over the books of the Ladies Increased Nursing Fund from Mrs. Williamson Jones. Each month Miss Gray has received a salary of yen 100. An addition of 50 yen was paid in June for outfitting allowance.

The fixed deposit of yen 1,075 fell due on the 12th June last; yen 900 was put on deposit for 6 months only, the balance put to current account.

The present accounts stand as follows:—

On fixed Deposit with Hongkong and Shanghai Bank	Yen. 900.00
Current Account	302.05
" Cash in hand	1.80
Total available funds	1,203.85

Signed J. I. BELL,
Hon. Treasurer,
Ladies Increased Nursing Fund.

Yokohama, October 4th, 1905.

The retiring Committee were unanimously re-elected by the ladies present: President Mrs. J. Carey Hall; Vice-President Mrs. E. J. Moss; Hon. Sec. Mrs. Marshall Martin; Hon. Treas. Mrs. Irving Bell; Committee Mrs. Lowder, Mrs. Blake, Mrs. Dearing, and Mrs. Manley.

Mrs. Harman proposed a vote of thanks to Mrs. Hall and the other ladies of the Committee for their year's work, and the meeting was then adjourned.

The Russian transport Tsitshar, which was recently floated at Port Arthur, was renamed the Yumthari Maru on Oct. 4th by the Minister for the Navy.

GERMANY AND THE ALLIANCE.

IT is difficult to believe in the accuracy of the telegram which ascribes to German journals, with a few weighty exceptions, a mood of hostility to the Anglo-Japanese Alliance. Reuter would have done better had he wired the names of the newspapers taking the latter line, for the public would have then been in a position to estimate how far the objecting journals represent the German nation. A telegram to a Japanese newspaper quotes the Tageblatt as saying that the Alliance in its extended form menaces the position of Germany in Shantung, but how such a view can be taken it is difficult to understand. A conspicuous feature of the Alliance convention is the exceeding clearness of its phraseology. The drafters seem to have devoted their energies to choosing language incapable of confusing or misleading. So far as China is concerned the terms employed are absolutely explicit. One of the objects of the compact, we are told, is "the preservation of the common interests of all Powers in China by insuring the independence and integrity of the Chinese Empire and the principle of equal opportunities for the commerce and industry of all nations in China." The French press, according to Reuter, considers that the safety of Indo-China is strengthened by the alliance. Why should Germany take a different view? Is it conceivable that she contemplates such an expansion of her position in Shantung as would be inconsistent with the maintenance of China's independence or integrity, or would be inimical to the principle of equal opportunities for the commerce and industry of all nations in the Middle Kingdom? The truth is that any Power which finds its interests menaced by the alliance constructively announces itself as harbouring designs against China's integrity or independence and against the principle of the open door. Germany can not assume any such character—even supposing that she were willing to do so, which we do not believe—for there already exists between her and Great Britain a convention by which the contracting parties pledge themselves to uphold the very principles forming the basis of the Alliance so far as China is concerned. Fuller information must be awaited, therefore, before arriving at any definite conclusion as to Germany's attitude.

St. Petersburg, however, is doubtless right when it ascribes to the 4th article capability of wide interpretation. The 4th article recognises England's right to take such measures in the proximity of the Indian frontier as she may find necessary for safeguarding her Indian possessions. Burmah, Tibet, East Turkestan, Afghanistan, Baluchistan, and even Persia under certain circumstances, may be regarded as in the proximity of the Indian frontier. If Russia contemplates aggressive expansion in any of those regions, she may find herself confronted by the Alliance. But here again we arrive at the conclusion that by admitting such designs she acknowledges herself a deliberate enemy to the peace of Asia. It may be greatly doubted whether she is prepared to make any such acknowledgment. The fact is that the Alliance is so drafted as to preclude open objection on the part of any State which desires to avoid the imputation of entertaining disreputable projects.

KOREA.

IN view of the numerous criticisms, overt and covert, published with reference to the acquisition of land by the Japanese Authorities in Korea for military purposes, we have made inquiries in official quarters, and we learn that the facts are these:—

In accordance with the 4th Article of the Japanese-Korean Convention of February 23rd, 1904, which empowers the Government of Japan to occupy, under certain circumstances, any places necessary from strategical points of view, it is obvious, that the Korean Government lies under the obligation to hand over such places to Japan. Further it is plainly inevitable that these places should be of considerable extent, since they have to serve Japanese troops stationed in Korea as sites for barracks, warehouses and parade-grounds. Again, when we observe that the explicitly avowed object of stationing Japanese forces in Korea is, according to the Convention, to secure the welfare of the Imperial House of Korea or the territorial integrity of the peninsular empire against danger from a third Power's aggressions or from internal disturbances, it becomes equally obvious that Japan is under no sort of obligation to pay for the lands thus utilized, any more than England or France was under obligation to purchase the lands taken over in early days for the uses of troops quartered on the hills above Yokohama. Nevertheless, it being the desire of the Japanese Authorities to make things as easy as possible for Koreans occupying the selected lands, it was decided to grant a sum of 200,000 yen by way of solatium, over and above the sums which the Korean Treasury would disburse in accordance with conventional obligations. This 200,000 yen is not to be regarded as purchase money. It is nothing of the kind. That is a conspicuous mistake into which certain critics have been betrayed through the too common error of failing to inform themselves fully. The 200,000 yen is quite independent of the purchase money, which is a matter for the Korean Government's consideration and settlement. What the Japanese Authorities have done is to come voluntarily to the assistance of the expropriated tenants so as to mitigate their inconvenience in being obliged to move. Moreover, every effort has been made to avoid anything like needless precipitancy or wholesale eviction. The process has been rendered as gradual as possible, and the system pursued has been to give to the owners of a tiled house, however frail its construction, an allowance of 17 yen per tsubo—20,400 yen per acre—and to the owner of a thatched house an allowance of 10 yen per tsubo. The simplest plan would have been to hand over this gratuity to the Korean authorities, entrusting its distribution to their discretion. But it was felt that such a course could not be pursued with any confidence, and therefore the appropriation of the fund has been supervised by the Japanese. Their plan was to lodge it in the first place at a high rate of interest and to employ the accruing sum to surveys and investigations preliminary to the distribution of the principal, the whole arrangement being under the direction of the Financial Adviser. The Korean Government, too, has not been left to shirk all its obligations in the matter. It has been urged to make adequate provision for the expropriated owners, and although we can not learn that it has yet displayed any practical sense of this duty, there is no reason to suppose that evasion will be permanently permitted. The sum of the matter would seem to be that the Japanese Authorities, while going out of their way to render things easy for the Korean people, have treated the Korean Government as a responsible and more or less trustworthy body of officials, which they are not and never will be so long as they remain depositories of the discretionary powers now wielded by them. Possibly it would have been wiser, though much less charitable, on the part of the Japanese had they refrained from any exercise of generosity and insisted that the Korean Government must make ample provision to discharge its treaty obligations, for their gratuitous disbursement of monies has only exposed them to misrepresentation instead of bringing them applause.

There is another point worth noting in this context. It relates to the dimensions of the land. The original accusation preferred against the Japanese by a foreign critic was that they had virtually confiscated a space of three miles square in the most important suburb of Seoul. We draw attention to the almost incredible size of this area and traversed the whole story as a probable exaggeration. Thereupon a second critic affirmed the truth of his predecessor's charge, and quoted in support of it an independent statement that 12,000 square metres had been taken over. Then we called attention to the stupendous difference between this new area and the former one, the difference between twelve thousand square metres and twenty-three millions. Whereat a third critic pooh-poohed the whole question of dimensions as petty and irrelevant, though the very gravamen of the original accusation had been based on the extent of the expropriation. It now appears from the Japanese official statement that, since a solatium varying from 10 to 17 yen per tsubo and aggregating 200,000 yen was granted, the area of the land must lie between twenty thousand tsubo and twelve thousand tsubo approximately; that it to say, between 10 and 17 acres. Compare this with the original allegation of 3 miles square, namely, 5,760 acres.

PERSISTENT SLANDER.

WITH due apologies for devoting editorial space to such matters we ask our readers consider the following facts.

On and after December 12th, 1902, there appeared in certain foreign and vernacular journals in Japan an advertisement offering at a largely reduced price and by the installment system of payments "The Times' reprint of the ninth edition" of the Encyclopaedia Britannica. The advertisement stated further that the reprinting had been done three years previously; that 44,000 copies had been disposed of since the reprinting; that the reprint now offered was of the authoritative Edinburgh edition, "not the mutilated pirated American edition," and that a few copies had already been sold in Japan but for a much higher price than that at which the work was now offered. It is plain that nothing could have been more explicit. The work offered was explicitly described as a reprint of the original Edinburgh edition of the Encyclopaedia. No one could possibly have been misled into imagining that it was anything else.

Moreover, simultaneously with the publication of this advertisement, the Agent of the book circulated by post in Japan twenty thousand copies of a circular from which we make an extract, italicizing some portions:—

But The Times did not undertake merely the reprinting of this unrivalled work. A new and in some respects a more important undertaking was soon begun. In order to keep pace with the extraordinary advances in science which have been made during the last decade and a half of the nineteenth century, supplementary volumes were planned, the object of which was to record all that has resulted from the multiplied experiments of scientific men in Europe and America, during a period which has witnessed perhaps greater scientific, industrial and mechanical progress than any other. These new volumes with the 25 volumes of the Ninth Edition, will constitute the Tenth Edition of the Encyclopaedia Britannica. The first of the new volumes are already in the hands of subscribers in England, but owing to the difficulty we have found in supplying the wants of our new and old subscribers at home, we can not promise delivery of the new volumes in Japan before the first of May next.

The Times' new offer is this:—

- (1.) To despatch to all responsible persons the 25 volumes of the Encyclopaedia Britannica (Ninth Edition) on receipt of a preliminary payment of 5 yen. Subscribers who prefer may pay for the work in full, realizing a discount from instalment prices of about 10 per cent.
- (2.) To extend the period of payment to nineteen months from the date of delivery.
- (3.) To accept as monthly payments 10 yen, payable regularly on a given day each month.
- (4.) To permit subscribers to purchase not only the 25 volumes of the Ninth Edition at the London price (which is half the publishers' price,) but to enjoy the right to purchase the supplementary volumes, as they shall be issued, also at the London price, which is 40 per cent. less than the nett catalogue price at which the same volumes will hereafter be supplied.

This circular, together with a Japanese translation, was despatched through the post to 20,000 persons, including about 1,000 foreign residents. It may be said to have accompanied the advertisement.

Again, in the middle of January, 1903, another circular was issued. It contained, in English and Japanese, a leading article taken from The Times with reference to the banquet given in London on November 21st, 1902, to celebrate the completion of the Encyclopaedia Supplement. Of this circular 22,000 copies were sent out through the post. We make an extract:—

To those who already possess the Ninth Edition, we offer the eleven new Supplementary volumes at 40 per cent. less than the catalogue price hereafter to prevail in Japan. These new volumes are now in course of distribution in England and will arrive in Japan about 60 days from now.

These circulars were sent to the editor of the Kobe Chronicle and the members of his staff among others. Therefore by the 20th of January he knew that advertisements had appeared which could not possibly mislead anyone, and he knew that tens of thousands of circulars had been distributed explaining all about the ninth edition of the Encyclopaedia and the supplementary volumes.

On February 4th a new form of advertisement was sent to four foreign and nine vernacular journals in Japan. Again we extract:—

The edition of the Encyclopaedia Britannica now offered is the latest Edinburgh 9th Edition, printed from the original plates and containing all the original illustrations, maps, plans and diagrams. It constitutes, in itself, an admirable, and always valuable, library of reference. It is the best and without doubt the most comprehensive reference work in the world. The last volume was issued by the publishers, Messrs. A. & C. Black, in 1889. In order to bring up to date those subjects to which scientific discovery and experiment during the closing years of the 19th century had added new knowledge, "The Times" three years ago began to prepare supplementary volumes. These new volumes in no sense supplant or supersede the 9th Edition. The volumes of the 9th Edition, for another generation at least, must remain unrivalled and unassailable. But the new volumes will supplement the old by adding to the history of the past truths of the present. The two sets of volumes—the 25 volumes of the 9th Edition and the 11 volumes of the Supplement—will constitute the Tenth Edition. As the Supplement is not yet complete, delivery cannot be promised in Japan until May next. All purchasers of the 9th Edition will be entitled to purchase the Supplement at 40 per cent. less than the future net catalogue price.

We invite our readers' attention to these dates—the first advertisement on December 12th, 1902; the first circular simultaneously; the second circular in the middle of January, 1903; and the second advertisement on the 4th of February in the same year.

Now on the 22nd or 23rd of June, 1903, the Kobe Chronicle published the following:—

When the Chronicle was asked for terms for an advertisement of the Times reprint of the Encyclopaedia Britannica, we informed the agent in Japan that no such advertisement could appear in our columns unless it was clearly stated therein that the volumes then being sold were the ninth edition and must be supplemented by eleven new volumes in order to bring the information contained therein up to date. Needless to say we heard no more of the matter. But if an English literary man describes the advertisements in the Times, for consumption by the English-speaking public, as "fraud," it would be interesting to know how he would characterize advertisements in Japan pushing the ninth edition without making it clear that a further eleven volumes had to be purchased to bring the work up to date.

The communication referred to in this paragraph as having been made to the agent of the Encyclopaedia was dated February 5th, 1903, namely, the day after the second advertisement referred to above had been sent to 13 journals.

Now observe what this comes to. On the 22nd or 23rd of June, 1903, the editor of the Kobe Chronicle publicly charged that, owing to a remonstrance of his the agent of the Encyclopaedia had been deterred from advertising in the Chronicle because, to gain admittance to that journal's columns, he must have amended his advertisement in such a manner as to defeat his fraudulent purpose of deceiving the public by omitting details essential to prevent deception. Yet, when he made that charge, the editor of the Kobe Chronicle knew, and had known for several months, not only that the original advertisement had been incapable of misleading any one, but also that prior to his own remonstrance a second advertisement had appeared containing all the details in question. He also knew, and had known for many months, that simultaneously with the first advertisement and previously to the second, circulars had been scattered broadcast in Japan explicitly and emphatically informing the Japanese and foreign public of the facts that a supplement to the Encyclopaedia was in preparation in England, that it would be offered at a later time than the 25 volumes of the ninth edition now offered, and that it would bring the work up to date.

All these facts were clearly set forth in the columns of the Japan Weekly Mail of July 25th. Yet the Kobe Chronicle has now repeated the charge and pretends that no reply whatever was made to its original accusations of misrepresentation "for the very good reason that they were unanswerable." We have called the charge "unscrupulous and lying" and we now repeat the adjectives. The Kobe Chronicle hints that they are ungentlemanlike. In describing such an outrage as this which the Kobe journal has perpetrated, words taken from the vocabulary of polite intercourse would be quite out of place.

MISS ROOSEVELT.

Miss Alice Roosevelt arrived in Yokohama on the afternoon of Oct. 4th by the steamer Minnesota on her way home from China and Korea. The ship reached quarantine at 2.10 p.m., and came inside the breakwater and anchored at 3.15 p.m. On the arrival of the ship, Governor Sufu, Mr. Nagasaki, Grand Master of the Board of Ceremonies, Mayor Ichihara, Mr. Miller, American Consul-General, Mr. Inouye, Chief of the Police, and other American and Japanese notables proceeded to the Minnesota by the steam-launch Hinode and welcomed Miss Roosevelt and her party. Subsequently she left the steamer and landed at the English hatoba at 3.45 p.m. At the Wharf, Mrs. Griscom and the American Minister and staff, with leading Japanese traders were awaiting. Many members of the Ladies Patriotic Society, the Japan Red Cross Society, and several other public bodies were also present carrying the usual flags identifying the various societies. Enthusiastic hansais were raised as Miss Roosevelt left together with Mr. and Mrs. Griscom and the Grand Master of Ceremonies, for the Oriental Palace Hotel. The carriage was escorted by two gendarmes.

Miss Roosevelt on Oct. 5th left for Kamakura where she will pass the night at the villa of Mr. Griscom, American Minister. On the 6th, she will go to Hakone and return on Saturday to Yokohama. She is expected to pay a visit to Nikko and to return to Yokohama on Oct. 10th. About the 13th she will leave by the Siberia for home.

Apropos of the visit of Miss Roosevelt to Seoul the following paragraph, says the Scout Press Weekly, may be of special interest to our readers:—"Your pity is requested for Miss Alice Roosevelt. During the past fifteen months she has been present at 403 dinners, 350 balls, and 300 small dances. Her five-o'clock teas number 680, and she has paid 1,700 calls. She has been six times a bridesmaid and shaken hands 32,000 times. Thus it is to have a father who believes in the strenuous life."

ICHINOHE'S CHARGE.

By WILLIAM MAXWELL EVARTS, JUNE 1905.

I.

To tired-eyed men that in the trenches lay
Prostrate, huddled close, behind the wall of mould,
All night, the night before, the livelong day
They'd lain—the order came in accents cold
To charge the works; and they though ne'er so bold
Felt the dark qualms of worrying despair,
The useless death for which they'd needs prepare.

II.

Though in the trenches for so long they'd lain
Wet by the dew of heaven, scorched by the sun
Bearing unflinchingly the bullet's pain,
The shrieking death of shot and shell, not one
At the command complained, wished death to shun.
Tight-mouthed, hard-faced, prepared they to obey;
Neither too willed to live nor die were they.

III.

Three times before a regiment had failed
To take the earth-works that these wished to take.
They had charged unflinchingly; man must sure have paled
To see the awful death that man can make
For fellow man; the leaden blasts that rake
The air, the ground! How possibly had passed
A living thing through such and lived at last!

IV.

Three times they had failed, three times not one remained
To live and conquer, or returning creep
Wounded and dying, dusty all, blood-stained Back to the trenches that from harm might keep
His wearied carcass, till in endless sleep
His eyes might close. No wonder that with face
Hard-set, the fourth prepared to run their race.

V.

In little valiant bands of twelve they crossed
The one divide protecting them from death.
Running ahead a space, then dropped, as lost
From sight, flat on the ground a spell of breath
To gain; then darting up from underneath
A slight space more they rushed, then dropped again.
Yielding to 'scape the pitiless leaden rain.

VI.

The Russian guns on left side and on right,
In front, belched forth their horrid fill of flame,
And smoke and shot and shell; the earth in fright
Trembled beneath, the firm hills shook, and came
From them returning echoes that in shame
Called out and swelled the cannonading din
Into a roar. Thus did the charge begin.

VII.

And when the first outburst rumbled away
A while, above the roar, the spiteful crack
Of Gatling and of rifle spoke their say,
Soon to be drowned again—a yelping pack
Of smaller guns—by the resumed attack
Of canonry. Though earth was shook and sky
Was darkened, men were not afraid to die.

VIII.

Thus 'twas advanced across the open field
With firing, running, dropping to the ground,
A moment's respite and a scanty shield
— So scanty that the dead lay all around
Beside them—and it was only Fate profound
That saved some living on that death-swept plain
To hurl them fated to new death again.

IX.

Behold three of the twelve who led the charge
Have gained the slope! Barbed wire now thickly twined

On posts, a spider's web of steel so large
As to snare human prey, against them combined
With bursting shells and mines in front, behind,
Joined the unequal fight to o'erwhelm the few
That staggered blindly 'gainst this barrier new.

X.

And as the Northern shriek, rapacious bird,
Starting from high tree-top swoops swiftly down
Upon some luckless victim all unheard,
Fixes his talons in his captive's crown,

And wanton decks some thorn with its body
brown,
So on the thorny wire hung there impaled
Like sparrows, the men who almost winning, failed.

XI.

The colonel, Ichinohe, who had served
In many a weary march and hard-fought fight,
Seeing the death of his brave men, unnerved
Stood for a moment; then with a motion slight Turned back his head and with his arm clenched tight
Brushed it across his face in grief distraught;
Then turning looked through eyes by grief untaught.

XII.

"Forward!" he cried, his voice unshaken cold
Sounded adown the line; a regiment
Of veterans o'er whom stern time had rolled
The fortieth year, (and yet with one assent
They had left their fatherland with stern intent
To fight—and die if need be), heard the call
Of surest death that to their lot would fall.

XIII.

"Colonel," they cried, "We came to fight indeed
For old Japan; and we are not afraid
To die in glorious battle, and no heed
We'd pay to life if only we had made
Some gain against the foe. But dearly paid
With flesh and blood already is the soil
And vain and useless has been war's turmoil.

XIV.

"At home our wives and children are; we love
Their lives much dearer than our dearest thing
And if we live, for them we live and move;
But if we fight and die to them we bring
Hardship and famine, tears and sorrowing.
Yet if this charge could be our country's gain
Eager we'd be to be our country's slain."

XV.

Into the colonel's eyes there came a look
Thoughtful, far-off. There came before his sight
His home, his wife, and in some shady nook
Under a tree, two children played in bright
Apparel wrought by mother's dear foresight.
"Forward!" he cried again, but no man moved.
For once their hearts shrank from the test unproved.

XVI.

Turning his scornful back upon the throng
He clambered o'er the rampart, sword in hand
Uplifted, pointing foe-wards, and along
Its steely length, for a time, a shining band
Of sunlight flashed; but as it vaulting fanned
The lead-filled air, it burst into pell-mell
Of shattered, shimmering stars that shaming fell.

XVII.

Full thirty steps he advanced into the jaws
Of merciless death, the waving stump of sword
Held in his hand; when, like a sea with flaws
Of wind disturbed, the hesitating horde
Of men, faltering away; then with accord
Of headlong, wild emotions, bursting large,
Poured o'er the works and followed to the charge.

XVIII.

Like a great wave that towering o'er the sea
Comes to the land, and sweeping all before
Swishes along the beach o'erwhelmingly,
But as it rolls it slackens gets and lower,
And sinking in the sands is seen no more;
So swept the human tide along the plain
Faintly, to lap the hillside with its slain.

XIX.

Thus Ichinohe charged and thus all died.
A bootless charge, a bootless death indeed
For him and for the brave men at his side.
And yet not half so bootless, for the seed
Of glorious victory was planted by the deed.
And when the sun returned to grace the day,
Japan had won the works in fierce affray.

XX.

Ye widows of Japan with purest tears
That are welled up from mortal eyes and brake
Down mortal cheeks; with trembling lip that fears
To ope lest it some cowardly outcry make,
Weep not, mourn not, your husbands' joy partake
For now their spirits freed from earthly care
Have homeward flown to hover round you there.

YOKOHAMA AMATEUR ROWING CLUB.

An unofficial Regatta was held inside the harbour by members of the above Club on Saturday afternoon. The weather was cool and somewhat unpropitious and the water decidedly lumpy for rowing. The usual diversions of music and dancing at the Boathouse being missing on this occasion, the attendance of visitors was naturally small.
Mr. A. L. Mottu officiated as Judge and Mr. F.
J. Hall as Starter. The events follow:—

SKIFF RACE (Handicap) HEAT 1.

W. B. Mason, Jr.	15 seconds 1
D. Weed	Scratch 0
W. Graham	15 seconds 0

Mason got to the front before half the distance was covered and gradually increasing his lead even easily.

HEAT 2.

E. A. Wiedemann	15 seconds 1
R. G. Holmes	15 seconds 2
L. Stornebrink, Jr.	5 seconds 0

Wiedemann won by about 3 lengths, Holmes second.

FINAL.

Wiedemann scratched for the final, which was won easily by Holmes from Mason by 4 lengths.

"FOURS"— $\frac{1}{4}$ Mile.

Bow.	R. G. Holmes	139
2	L. Stornebrink	138
3	N. G. Brunn	171
Str.	B. J. Jackson	198
Cox	J. Abbey	220

"SEAMEW."

Bow.	W. B. Mason, Jr.	131
2	E. A. Wiedemann	165
3	O. Strone	203
Str.	D. Weed	139
Cox	L. Mottu	140

"DARTER."

Bow.	A. Casati	125
2	L. Wilson	146
3	A. W. Talbot	145
Str.	C. L. Timm	156
Cox	G. Kenderdine	138

"FLAMINGO."

Bow.	A. W. S. Austen	145
2	F. S. Booth	138
3	A. J. Coyne	145
Str.	G. R. Totton	148
Cox	E. J. Moss	140

Flamingo was scratched and the race between the other three resulted in a win for the Swan, stroked by Jackson, by about 4 lengths. Time
6m. 15s.

"PAIRS" (New Boats)— $\frac{1}{4}$ Mile.

Bow.	A. J. Coyne	158
Str.	L. Stornebrink, Jr.	132
Cox.	J. Abbey	115

"Sheldrake."

Bow.	A. Casati	125
Str.	A. W. S. Austen	144
Cox.	E. J. Moss	140

"Scamp."

Bow.	H. J. Hearne	150
Str.	A. W. Talbot	145
Cox.	G. Kenderdine	138

Scoter won after a good race by a little over a length from Sheldrake, in 5 min. 18 $\frac{1}{2}$ secs.

SCRATCH FOURS—P.M. Wharf.

Bow.	Eagling	138
2	Stornebrink	138
3	Hearne	138
Str.	Talbot	138

"FLAMINGO."

Bow.	Wilson	138
2	Mason	138
3	Brunn	138
Str.	Charlesworth	138

"SEAMEW."

Bow.	Weill	138
3	Coyne	138
Str.	Timm	138

"DARTER."

Bow.	Bagnal	138
2	Casati	138
3	Holmes	138
Str.	Mottu	138

Swan pulled to the front about half-way home and won by a couple of lengths, Flamingo finishing second, half a length ahead of Seamew.

THE KING'S DAUGHTERS.

On Saturday afternoon a large reception was given to the lady members of the Sho-rei-gikwai, an association for helping the families of soldiers, by the King's Daughters Circle at No. 1 Bund, the residence of Mrs. H. Irving Bell, who had kindly thrown her house open for the occasion. The entrance and interior of the house were decorated with the flags of England, Japan and America, and at the end of the main room the motto of the Circle was written in silver letters on a purple background.

The leader of the Circle, Mrs. Manley, the Vice-leader, Mrs. Lowder, and the Directress, Mrs. Swain, assisted the hostess in welcoming the guests, over a hundred in number. The town band played selections at intervals during the afternoon and the following programme of music was also rendered:—

- 1.—Piano.....Polonaise Militaire.....Chopin.
Mrs. Swift.
- 2.—Song....."Answer".....Robyn.
Mrs. Walter.
- 3.—Song....."The Year's at the Spring".....Hartog.
Miss Thomas.
- 4.—Piano....."Cascade du Chaudron".....Bendel.
Mrs. Swift.

The two last items were deservedly encored and each performer received a tasteful floral tribute. A beautiful basket of flowers was also presented to Mrs. Watanabe, head of the Ladies Committee of the Sho-rei-gikwai, by Mrs. Irving Bell's little daughter.

The company then partook of tea and light refreshments: tables decorated with the colours of the Circle, purple and silver, being laid in two large rooms and the wide verandah, the young ladies of the "King's Daughters" attending to the refreshment of their guests. Mrs. Irving Bell presided at one end of the principal table, having Mrs. Watanabe on her right hand, Mrs. Manley taking the other end. During tea the hostess addressed those assembled in the following words, which were listened to with profound attention:—

Madame Watanabe.—Friends and fellow workers: I have asked you here to-day to meet the Japanese ladies who like ourselves are interested in the work of our Society. I would first draw your attention to the beautiful and appropriate words of the motto of the "King's Daughters' Circle."

Look up and not down,
Look forward and not back,
Look out and not in,
And lead a hand.

With stirring words like these before us, free from doctrine, dogma, or creed, can we not grasp their full meaning, and try to live up to them in our daily lives? Each one of us can do much to aid the sufferings of our fellow creatures, not through warfare only, but in peace alike. This country has just passed through a great war, which has redounded to its prestige and credit, but which has left in its train (as all wars do) much distress amongst the families of its soldiers at the front. It is now the time to give these a helping hand, and do something in our power to enable them to earn their living. It is the endeavour of the Society to give employment to those who are without means, so as to make them self-supporting; and by giving the labour we strengthen the character of the people, and help them to lead independent and useful lives. Each one of us has her appointed aim in life but we are all striving for the same good. I do ask you to think earnestly of the aims of this Society. We must not imagine that by merely becoming members or putting our names to subscription lists, we are doing all that is necessary. It is not so, we are to be workers who will stand together and wholeheartedly work without ostentation, giving as much of our time as we can to further our plans, and to realize our hopes for the future: the older members giving us the benefit of their advice and experience. Now there is started in the Society a "King's Little Daughters Circle," some of them are present to-day, and I would ask them to help us also; they can do much through unselfishness and by interesting themselves in their poorer little sisters, who are not placed so happily in this world as they are. I take this opportunity of thanking you, one and all, for your kind attention, and I close wishing every success to our united efforts.

A faithful Japanese translation was then given by a bright young girl, a pupil of the school at No. 178, Bluff. Mrs. Manley, for many years leader of the Yokohama Circle of King's Daughters, replied, thanking Mrs. Bell for her kind hospitality and saying that it gave all the members of the Circle much pleasure to meet so many Japanese ladies, whose devoted labours had been so constant throughout the war, and they all hoped and desired that the foreign ladies would not be behindhand in their efforts to relieve the unfortunate. Mrs. Manley's speech was also translated and a Japanese lady rose to reply on behalf of Mrs. Watanabe, thanking the King's Daughters for their kindness and hospitality and expressing appreciation of the golden motto they had just heard; Mrs. Lowder acting as interpreter.

Some music and impromptu dancing by four little girls was much appreciated by the Japanese guests and the party broke up after the band had rendered the well known strains of "Kimi-ga-yo" and "God save the King" or "America," all feeling that the afternoon had been most enjoyable and had fulfilled its purpose of establishing cordial relations between the workers of the two co-operating Societies.

YOKOHAMA LITERARY SOCIETY.

We take the following extracts from the twentieth report to be presented at the annual general meeting of the Yokohama Literary Society, to be held in Van Schaick Hall on Friday, Oct. 13th, at 8.30 p.m., precisely:—

The Society has now upon its Roll some 317 members, besides 18 family ticket holders; 68 new members were enrolled during the past year, and 3 family tickets issued.

During the twentieth session the programmes in interest and variety have been quite up to the average. Ten excellent original papers were read, and six illustrated readings given. The uniformly large attendances at the meetings, and the enthusiasm evinced by members in its affairs, give ample proof of the healthy state of the Society. The musical programmes, in which many members as well as friends outside the Society took part, were all exceptionally good. The Committee desire now to thank all, who by their ready services, contributed so much to the success of these programmes.

The Society closed the season with a balance in hand of yen 476.55.

The Lantern has once again done yeoman service, and our heartiest thanks are due to Mr. Griffin for his unflinching and willing help in superintending the working of it.

Musical Competition.—In accordance with the resolution passed at the last Annual General Meeting, to continue the musical competitions, a competitive examination was held in April. Although the number of entries was nearly double that of the previous year, there is still room for much improvement in this direction, should the Society see fit to continue these competitions. There were in all 13 competitors. The judges were Mrs. A. Bellamy Brown, Miss Orth, Mr. W. K. E. Vincent and Mr. W. S. Argent, and their awards were as follows:—

- Division 1.—(No competitors).
Division 2.—1st. Muriel Cain.
2nd. Georgie Kenderdine.
Division 3.—1st. Bertie Cahusac.
2nd. Georgie Treize.
3rd. Iris Irwine (certificate).
Division 4.—1st. Jocelyn Beart.
2nd. Norah Tipple.

Essay Competition.—As only one essay was sent in this competition had to be abandoned, but it is hoped that the incoming Committee will be able to carry the project to a successful issue in the new session.

Coming of Age.—It will be noticed that this year the Yokohama Literary Society comes of age. We read in "Mo Hitotsu," an illustrated magazine published in May, 1889, that "the Yokohama Reading Circle was formed by a joint resolution of eight ladies and gentlemen—seven ladies and one gentleman in fact—who met at No. 221, Bluff, for that purpose on the 24th November, 1885." It was decided to hold regular fortnightly meetings at the houses of the different members, to have a session extending from October to May, and "to ensure one hour (more or less) being devoted to solid reading, the balance of the time to be taken up with music, comic readings, etc." In October 1887 bye-laws were drawn up. Starting with an average attendance of 27 at the meetings held during the first session, the Society grew each year till at length it became too large for the accommodation provided in the houses of members, and a move was made to Van Schaick Hall in 1889, in which year also the constitution was revised, and the title under which we are known was adopted. The growth of the Society has been continuous ever since, until even the Van Schaick Hall became too small to hold all who wished to attend its meetings, and several times a temporary migration has had to be made to the Public Hall. Fortunately the Trustees of the Van Schaick Hall have now enlarged their building, and we think the ample floor space now at our disposal will suffice for the needs of the Yokohama Literary Society for many years to come. The outgoing Committee are of the opinion that a special effort should be made to commemorate the 24th of November by a "Coming of Age" programme, and they commend the suggestion to the consideration of the Annual Meeting.

YOKOHAMA CHESS CLUB.

The annual general meeting of the Yokohama Chess Club was held at 5.15 p.m. on Monday at the Yokohama Men's Reading Room, 82 Main Street. Mr. John Griffin, President, occupied the chair and there was a good attendance.

The report and accounts, which have already been published, were adopted on the motion of Mr. W. B. Mason, seconded by Rev. W. T. Austen.

The chief subject of discussion before the meeting was a proposal that the quarters of the Club should be removed from the Club Hotel to the Reading Room, in which the meeting was held. It appeared that 21 members had intimated their desire to change while 7 were for remaining at the Club Hotel, and that since these opinions were elicited three or four others had expressed themselves as against the change. After some discussion, in the course of which appreciation was generally expressed of the treatment which the Chess Club had been accorded by the Club Hotel, it was proposed by Mr. E. C. Fox that the quarters should not be changed, and Mr. Bruce Milford seconded. Mr. W. B. Mason proposed that a change should be made to the Reading Room, and Mr. Pearson seconded. The Hon. Secretary (Mr. A. E. Pawsey) explained the conditions under which the Club would work in the Reading Room should a change be made.

A show of hands was taken, which resulted in 8 voting for the amendment (that a change be made to the Reading Room) and 6 against it. The amendment was therefore carried.

The ballot for officers and committee resulted as follows: President—John Griffin; Hon. Secretary, A. E. Pawsey; Committee, M. Beart, E. C. Fox, and E. Mendelson.

The PRESIDENT thanked the members for re-electing him but said he should have been glad of a holiday. He had been President, with the exception of one year, ever since the Club was founded, in 1890, and should have liked to see a more worthy man in the chair.

On the motion of the Hon. Secretary, seconded by Mr. Fox, a vote of thanks was passed to the President for his handsome prize.

The President briefly acknowledged the vote and the proceedings terminated.

YOKOHAMA ST. ANDREW'S SOCIETY.

The 17th annual meeting of the Yokohama St. Andrew's Society was held at 5.30 p.m. on Monday in the Club Hotel. Mr. A. J. McClure, President, was in the chair, and there was a large attendance.

The report of the President and Hon. Secretary (Mr. W. B. White) and the statement of accounts by the Hon. Treasurer pro tem (Mr. White) were adopted.

The following officers and Committee were elected: President, A. J. McClure; Vice-President, R. B. McKinnell; Hon. Treasurer, C. A. Fraser; Hon. Secretary, W. B. White; Committee: T. C. Anderson, F. O. Stuart, E. Coutts, H. C. Gulland, and H. V. Summers. It was decided to celebrate St. Andrew's Day by giving a ball, and the necessary arrangements to that end were agreed on after some discussion. A vote of thanks to the President brought the proceedings to a close.

A Russian soldier at Toyohashi died on Oct. 2nd. He had been suffering from consumption since the beginning of September.

CRICKET.

The Probable Interport Cricket Eleven had a chance on Saturday, of showing the stuff they are made of when they met a team of "The Rest," comprising fourteen players. As usual in Yokohama a late start was made, and only three wickets had been disposed of when the adjournment for tiffin was made. After the interval, however, the Probables were seen to great advantage. The bowling was stronger and the fielding decidedly smarter than the verandah Captains had expected, and altogether the prospects for the Interport Week seem brighter than before. The XIV. were dismissed for 85, Brady alone making any stand. On the Probables going in to bat some first class cricket was shown, though at first the run-getting was very slow, the extra hands in the field bothering the players a bit. The first two wickets fell for 26, Dr. Emerson being run out at 18, and H. W. Kilby caught by Samuel soon after. On Dixon and Moon being partnered the game brightened considerably, runs piling up in merry style; Dixon, however, being the largest contributor to the score. By 5 o'clock the light was failing rapidly and ten minutes later it was decided to declare. Four wickets had then fallen and the runs totalled 173. Scores:—

O. Strome, b. W. D. S. Edwards	2
E. N. Lambert, c. Duff, b. Mollison	13
A. Kingdon, b. Dixon	1
W. H. Sammel, b. W. D. S. Edwards	14
J. McClure, b. Moon	1
V. A. Hearne, c. Mollison, b. Moon	4
W. S. Moss, b. Moon	0
F. G. Correa, c. Mollison, b. W. D. S. Edwards	4
W. E. Detmold, c. Figgott, b. W. D. S. Edwards	2
G. G. Brady, c. Piggott, b. Mollison	21
H. S. Goddard, b. Mollison	1
G. W. Hawkins, not out	5
H. Goddard, b. Piggott	0
C. T. Mayes, b. Figgott	2
Extras	9
Total	85

BOWLING ANALYSIS.

	B.	R.	M.	W.
Dr. Moon	66	29	4	3
W. D. S. Edwards	78	12	8	4
J. M. Mollison	24	11	1	3
J. T. Dixon	36	20	2	1
F. S. G. Piggott	18	4	1	1
E. B. S. Edwards	13	2	1	—

INTERPORT PROBABLES.

Dr. Emerson, run out	10
H. W. Kilby, c. Samuel b. McClure	9
J. T. Dixon, c. H. Goddard b. Lambert	70
Dr. Moon, c. Kingdon b. Lambert	21
F. S. G. Piggott, not out	28
J. M. Mollison, not out	25
W. D. S. Edwards	—
E. W. Maitland	—
C. M. Duff	—
B. C. Foster	—
E. B. S. Edwards	—
Extras	10
Total	173

BOWLING ANALYSIS.

	B.	R.	M.	W.
J. McClure	66	34	3	1
A. Kingdon	60	37	—	—
W. E. J. Detmold	6	14	—	—
G. G. Brady	36	40	—	—
E. N. Lambert	42	26	—	2
O. Strome	12	12	—	—

YACHTING.

There was a fine sailing breeze blowing from East-North-East on Saturday. Maid Marion's broken mast not having been replaced, there were only two starters in the first race, for the 39 raters. Kingfisher crossed the line just ahead of Mary, and showing better speed than she has ever done before in any of her races, had a lead of about half a minute at the Harbour Entrance. They had a close fetch on the port tack to the Quarantine ship, where Mary was still a trifle more to the bad. Easing off sheets, they had the wind on the port quarter on the leg to the Widow Buoy, and when about half the distance had been covered, Kingfisher seemed to be increasing her lead steadily, but as they approached the buoy, Mary pulled up a trifle on the leader, being, however, just one minute behind as they hauled on the wind for the return. There was a considerable sea running off the spit, and it evidently interfered with Kingfisher more than with her opponent, as Mary began to gain at once, eating out to windward, as well as outfooting the bigger boat. Kingfisher tacked across Mary's bows with the evident intention of getting on her weather bow, but Mary was ramped along a good full, and avoided the delicate attention, getting clear with Kingfisher dead abeam to windward. Captain Weston then sailed his boat along full and hard to catch Mary's wind, but just as he seemed about to succeed, Mary was nipped out across his bows, and the positions were reversed, the Kingfisher safe in Chancery. Mary was 45 seconds ahead at the Quarantine Ship, and making a smarter gybe at the Harbour Entrance, crossed the finishing line 2 minutes, 10 seconds ahead. By the arbitrary handicap the two boats were sailing level, and Mary takes the prize. In this race, the new boat made a much better showing than she has done hitherto, and had the wind not lightened slightly on the return journey, Mary might not have caught her.

Five boats of the 21 Rating Class started at 2.15 p.m., their course being round the Widow Buoy, via the Lightship. Atnee soon assumed the lead, and increasing her distance, was several minutes ahead, when close by the outer mark her rudder head broke, and she had to give up the race. The other four completed the course, Edna finishing first and taking first prize; Pele getting the second. Times at the finish:—

	Finish.	Club time.	Corrected Club time.	Handicap.	H'cap.
Edna	3.59.58	scratch	3.59.58	3m. 20s.	3.56.38
Pele	4.21.0	do	4.21.0	3m. 20s.	3.58.50
Winsome	4.6.35	do	4.6.35	6m. 40s.	3.59.55
Lily	4.14.58	8m. 24s.	4.6.34	13m. 20s.	4.1.38

In the Lark Class, one boat only started, but returned without completing the course.

CHRIST CHURCH, YOKOHAMA.

The dedication festival of Christ Church, Yokohama, was held on Sunday and despite the cold, miserable, rainy weather attracted large congregations. At the early service some 45 communicants were present, while at Mattins the attendance was far above the average. The prayers were read by the Incumbent, the Rev. W. P. G. Field, M. A.; the Rt. Rev. Bishop Awdry read the lessons (earlier in the day he had addressed the 1st Yokohama Company of the Boys' Brigade at their opening Sunday morning service for the new session); and the Ven. Archdeacon Jeffries preached. In the course of the service the Rev. W. Field announced the receipt of gifts to the Church during the year. These comprised a brass reading desk for the Pulpit; a lump of silver (a member of the Church who was an athlete, just before leaving Yokohama, took all the first prizes which he had won in various competitions and had them melted down; the proceeds he had presented to the Church to make a vessel to be used during the Holy Communion Service: it was decided to have the lump of silver made into one if not two flagons); fittings for the electric light installation in the Nave and the side aisles, and yen 100 from another party to defray the cost of such installation.

The Jiji has a telegram from Shanghai to the effect that the report and accounts which were submitted by the directors to the shareholders of the Russo-Chinese Bank at the general meeting on July 8th have been published. According to the accounts, during 1904 the net income was three million roubles in round figures. Out of this sum, roubles 100,500 was set apart as a special reserve to meet losses sustained as a result of the war; roubles 114,486 as ordinary reserve; roubles 364,517 as a reserve for pensions to employees, etc.; and a dividend to shareholders of 4 per cent. A balance remains of roubles 160,217, which was carried forward to next account.

THE LAW COURTS.

CLAIM ON SHORT-DELIVERY OF CARGO.

A case instituted by Messrs. Mendelson Bros., No. 273, Yokohama, against the Ocean Steamship Co., and the China Mutual Steam Navigation Co., (whose Yokohama agents are Messrs. Butterfield and Swire), claiming yen 1,200 with interest at the rate of 11 per cent. per annum from August 2nd this year to the execution of judgment, came up on Oct. 3rd in the Yokohama District Court before Judge Nakanishi.

Plaintiffs were represented by Mr. H. Sato and defendants by Mr. Ideura.

Plaintiffs' Counsel stated that the two shipping companies are carrying on their business jointly in England, and their representatives in Yokohama are Messrs. Butterfield and Swire. In January this year, the F. R. Southerly Tinplate Co. shipped 249 cases containing tin-plates with the mark of "M.B.P." in rhombus—the weight of each case being 216 lbs.—by the Kaisou, one of the steamers owned by the defendants. In February they shipped 257 cases containing similar material, with the mark of "M.B." in triangle—each case weighing 170 lbs.—by the Dioneda. These goods were consigned to the plaintiffs. Bills of lading were duly issued by the shipping firm. In June and July, the ships arrived at Yokohama. After the landing of the cargoes, the plaintiffs found that the number of cases was short. Two hundred and one cases only out of the lot shipped by the Kaisou were delivered, leaving a shortage of 48 cases, and 233 cases only were delivered by the Dioneda, leaving a shortage of 24 cases. The two short-deliveries amounted in value to yen 840 and yen 360 respectively, the sum claimed. Plaintiffs conducted negotiations with Messrs. Butterfield and Swire up to Aug. 2nd for the delivery of all the cases. The agents, however, did not give delivery or state a definite reason.

Defendants' counsel contended that the 48 cases and 24 cases alleged by the plaintiffs to be short were detained in a warehouse in the Customs compound and the defendants very often asked plaintiffs to take delivery. The latter, however, refused to do so, and the goods are still lying there untouched. At this stage, defendants' Counsel asked the Court to ascertain the nature of the packing of the tin-plates in dispute. The plaintiffs' Counsel, producing two Bills of Lading, said that the cases were perfectly made of wood planks and were all in "good condition" as certified by the shipping documents. Defendants' counsel added that he had not seen the cases personally, he could not give further explanation as to the nature of the packing.

Referring to the copies of the Bills of Lading, the defendant's Counsel stated that tin-plate is a special kind of cargo. Consequently a special clause is arranged in the Bills of Lading providing that each case is lined with tin and its outside protected with iron hoop. This arrangement had been agreed upon between defendants and shippers in accordance with the British shipping laws. If not contrary to any of the Japanese laws, the contract between the parties must be held valid in Japan. Now all the cases in dispute were not made as stipulated in the contract so that any damage arising from imperfect packing should not be laid upon defendants.

Plaintiffs' Counsel said that the insistence of the defendants upon the nature of the packing of the cases did not enter into the present case. Messrs. Mendelson Bros., were not claiming for damage, but asking for the delivery of all the goods bearing the shipping marks described in the Bills of Lading.

Defendants' Counsel asked the Court for leave to examine as a witness, Kobayashi, an employee of Capt. Weston, the landing agent patronized by Messrs. Butterfield and Swire. Counsel added that this Japanese was always attending to landing and shipping work at the hatoba.

The Court decided to summon him on Oct. 12th. The hearing was then adjourned.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

The explorer Berrozza is dead.

Count Kawamura left Shimonoseki on Oct. 4th for Korea and Manchuria.

Prince Fushimi left Shimbashi on Oct. 3rd by the 6 p.m. train for Kyoto.

Prince Fushimi has gone to Kyoto to conduct religious rites for his ancestors.

The Crown Prince of Siam will pay a visit to Japan in March or April next year.

Prince Fushimi, the younger, vice-commander of a warship, is reported to have arrived at Nagasaki.

An official telegram from Vancouver says that Baron Komura has entirely recovered but that he is still weak.

Colonels Y. Sena of the Artillery and A. Nakamura of the Engineers were promoted to Major-General on Oct. 3rd.

On the morning of Oct. 2nd, Prince Kan-in paid a visit to the Yokosuka Naval station. He then proceeded to Hayama and had audience of the Empress.

Mr. E. C. Jeffrey has won the Captain's Cup on the links of the Kobe Golf Club. Mr. H. E. Daunt on Oct. 1st broke the record for Kobe with a score of 73.

At 10.54 a.m. on October 2nd, a sluggish shock of earthquake was felt in Yokohama. The duration was 3 minutes and 25 seconds, and the direction west to east.

The Stuttgart and another German steamer left Shimonoseki on Oct. 3rd for Kobe. They have been chartered by the Russian Government to carry prisoners to Odessa.

The equipment of the new destroyer Nenohi at Kure having been completed, Commander Suzuki was appointed to her on Oct. 3rd. She was attached to the standing squadron.

A Maidzuru telegram reports that the repairs of the Tango, formerly Pollawa, have been completed. She will participate in the grand naval review to take place in Tokyo bay.

Marquis Ito on Oct. 3rd returned from Oiso arriving at Shimbashi by the 2.10 p.m. train. Subsequently, Marquis Tokudaiji, Grand Chamberlain, paid a visit to him at his official residence.

At 2.10 a.m. on October 4th, fire broke out in an unoccupied house belonging to Marquis Maeda in Shin-sakamoto-cho, Shitaya, Tokyo. Two buildings were burned down and one was partially damaged.

A lighter with 20 tons of coal, which left Yokohama on Oct. 3rd, was capsized off Haneda owing to a sudden gale. Three sendoes were saved by a junk from Tokyo and brought to Yokohama the following day.

Mr. J. Ogaki, the proprietor of the Sakura Shimbu, Tokyo, was arrested on Oct. 4th, and removed to the District Court. The Fiji says the charge seems to be in connexion with the recent disturbance.

A Chinese paper says that an American syndicate intends to purchase the coal mines of Fushun and Yentai, Manchuria, for which purpose a representative is conducting negotiations with the Japanese authorities.

The Palamotta, arriving at Hongkong from Calcutta, reported passing the Shantung bound south off Macclesfield Bank; she signalled that she had had her boiler burst, but no one was seriously hurt on board.

A few hours later, another outbreak occurred in Shinmachi, Akasaka, destroying thirty-seven houses including the residence of Mr. Nabeshima, one of the Masters of the Board of Ceremonies, and a tobacco factory. Nine buildings were damaged. The cause is not yet known. The accident originated in the tobacco factory where many female workers were employed.

A Moji telegram to the Hochi reports that the combined squadron passed the straits on the morning of Oct. 4th in an easterly direction. The correspondent adds that the fleet is on its way to Tokyo for the grand naval review.

Commander Funakoshi, of the Naval Staff Office, left Tokyo on Oct. 3rd for Kobe to meet the British squadron under Admiral Sir Gerard Noel, which will shortly arrive there from Wei-hai-wei on its way to Yokohama.

A Shidzuoka telegram says that K. Wada, one of the employees of the Shidzuoka Commercial Bank, has absconded with a hundred thousand yen belonging to the bank. The institution consequently stopped payment on Oct. 4th.

T. Okahashi, a wealthy merchant of Osaka, murdered his wife on Oct. 3rd, with a revolver. Subsequently he tried to commit suicide with the same weapon but was prevented by employees. The cause is reported to be temporary insanity.

The final in the singles handicap of the K. R. & A. C. tennis tournament was played on Sept. 24th and resulted, after some good and close play, in a win for S. Wheeler (owe $\frac{1}{2}$ 30), who defeated S. Stephens (owe $\frac{1}{2}$ 30), the figures being 6-1, 6-2, 6-0.

The Emperor, at noon on Monday, entertained Lieut.-General Haraguchi, Commander-in-Chief of the Saghalien army and his staff. On the occasion, Princes Fushimi and Yamashina, and high officers of the army and navy now in Tokyo were present.

The construction of the Yokohama Electric railway's circuitous line—through Satsuma-cho, the street in front of the Customs, and Asahi-cho—will be completed within a week. The railway intends to open the line to traffic before the Emperor's Birthday, November 3rd.

The death of Mr. George Palmer, for 23 years P. & O. gunner in Yokohama, removes another old and worthy resident. Entering the P. & O. service in 1853, when a boy of 12, he remained faithful to the flag until the day of his death. He will be greatly missed.

While the launch conveying Messrs. Yamaza and Denison of the Foreign Office was coming ashore on Thursday from the Dakota it collided with a torpedo-boat. The launch had its bow damaged, the torpedo-boat its side. A harbour official was thrown into the water but was at once rescued.

A Moji telegram says that the American cruiser Cincinnati, which left Yokohama on Sept. 30th for Shanghai, went ashore north of Himejima, Bungo province, at 1 a.m. on Oct. 2nd. She floated the same morning at 9 o'clock, after having removed coal and water. Some hours later she arrived safely at Moji.

On the afternoon of Sept. 28th, the Ministers of State held a meeting in the official residence of the Premier, when Count Inouye and other elder statesmen, Marquis Yamagata, Chief of the Staff Office, and Mr. Matsuo, President of the Bank of Japan, were present. The Nichi Nichi believes that they discussed the new loan proposed to be raised abroad.

It is reported that Sir C. MacDonald will give a dinner party at 7.30 p.m. on October 16th at the British Legation in honour of Admiral Sir Gerard Noel who will shortly arrive at Yokohama. Prince and Princess Arisugawa, and others of the Imperial Family, the elder statesmen, Ministers of State, foreign ministers and their staffs, and Japanese high officers of the Army and Navy will be present. The invitations were issued on Oct. 4th.

Telegraphic advices received on Thursday morning announce the arrival in New York on the 4th instant of the raw silk and silk goods which left Yokohama on the 17th of September by the steamer Korea, which is the fastest time ever made. Considering the great distance between the two points it is a matter of some consideration that freight can be handled so expeditiously, and it is safe to say that this is a feat that has never been done anywhere before.

In the Kobe Ku Saibansho on Saturday morning, says the Kobe Herald, the hearing took place of an action brought by Mr. Hashimoto Jirohichi, dealer in bicycles and machinery, Sannomiya-cho, Kobe, against Frank N. Shea, of the American Trading Company, Kobe, for the payment of yen 76.50, with interest at the rate of 6 per cent. from June 6, 1905, until date of judgment, together with the costs of the proceedings. Plaintiff was represented by Mr. Hiyama, but Defendant sent an employe named Hiyoshi Riukichi to present him. The Court declined to allow this person to appear on behalf of the Defendant, and the proceedings were treated as undefended, with the result that, after Plaintiff's Counsel had given particulars of the supply of automobile tyres to Defendant, the Court gave judgment for the Plaintiff for the full amount claimed, with permission for provisional execution on deposit of yen 50.

OJI ORPHANAGE FUND.

Since the yen 3,785 already announced, the following subscriptions to the Oji Orphanage Fund have been received and are gratefully acknowledged by the Committee:—

	Yen.
Nagatane Soma, Esq.	100
Mrs. Robert Graham Dun	200
Count Miniscalchi	15
Romulo Castaneda, Esq.	15
Anonymous	25
Mrs. Momosuke Fukuzawa	100
Shogo Ohashi, Esq.	100
Dr. Tatsukichi Irizawa	150
Mrs. Koike	20
Mrs. Sato Kawamura	50
Miss A. C. Hartsborne	25
Lieutenant & Mrs. Marble	10
Viscountess Nagaoka	30
Baroness Hanabusa	30
Mrs. Kichibei Murai	10

Total to date4,665

Further subscriptions are earnestly requested and may be sent to Mrs. Huntington Wilson, Treasurer, at the American Legation, or to any of the other ladies of the Committee, who are Viscountess Nagaoka, Viscountess Okabe, Baroness Hanabusa, Mrs. Chinda, Mrs. Yamawaki, Mrs. Kusaka, and Miss Tsuda.

CORRESPONDENCE.

JAPANESE PUBLIC COMPANIES' ACCOUNTING.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—Referring to the editorial appearing in your paper of this date entitled "Not founded on facts," based on a letter I wrote to the Advertiser under date of September 27th., I beg to state that I have read it over with the greatest care and it seems to me that you have made the matter of the Seoul-Fusan Railway dividend even worse than I thought it was.

You state the accounts as follows:

	Yen.
Net profits	8,696
Government guarantee fund.....	316,738
Total	325,424
To legal reserve.....	424
To dividend	325,000

Here is an example of a company earning yen 8,696 and paying a dividend of yen 325,000. The Government subsidy has nothing to do with this view of the accounts. A subsidy is given to help along a company of national importance to make it self-supporting in time and not for the personal enrichment of the shareholders. The Government has given this sum to the Railway Company yet the company has not received a dollar's benefit from the amount. It has been calmly transferred to the pockets of the individual shareholders.

The time will come when the Government will expect something besides the satisfied air of the shareholders to show for its money and if it should withdraw its subsidy what would become of the company?

The common reply I hear out here when speaking of high dividends is:—"Anything the company earns belongs to the shareholders and should be paid to them." What false financial premises could be imagined? A corporation has certain moral responsibilities; it must be honest with the Government it operates under, the general public, the holders of its securities, and lastly its shareholders who are part and parcel of the corporation and who should feel their responsibility.

It goes into a foreign market and borrows money on its prospects of a successful business. Now is it right for the company to pay out everything it earns in dividends to the present shareholders, who probably soon get their money back and then sell out at the high quotations the dividends cause? The company has a period of depression; dividends and interest cease and when the bondholders take charge they find the plant run down and at a forced sale the bonds realize little and the stock nothing. Who is to blame for such a situation except the directors who declared the false dividends?

If Japanese corporations wish to borrow money abroad have not the lenders a right to demand that their interests should be looked after as well as those of the stockholders? And how can the bonds be looked after except by keeping the plant in the highest state of efficiency and building up a surplus and sinking fund?

Very respectfully, An AMERICAN.
Yokohama, September 30, 1905.

[There are other questions. The point we made was that our correspondent had been misled into lumping the Government's guarantee fund, into the same total with the company's actual earnings.—Ed. J. M.]

THE KEI-FU RAILWAY.

(To the Editor of the "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—For the benefit of the travelling public I beg you to give space to the following statement of the condition of the Kei-Fu Railway between Fusan and Seoul. I passed over the line on the 21st and 22nd September, having been given to understand at the Company's offices in Tokyo that communication would be uninterrupted and that the regular train schedule published by the company was in force.

The express train advertised to leave Fusan at 8 a.m. to arrive at Seoul at 9.45 the same day is not running. The Company's steamer, an excellent new boat, from Shimonoseki to Fusan, crosses the straits every alternate day, leaving Shimonoseki about 7 in the evening and arriving at Fusan after a run of eleven or twelve hours. The first practicable train leaves Fusan at noon, and one is obliged to pass the night at Taikyū, five hours north, under the present running schedule. There are two very comfortable Japanese hotels at the last named place. The journey is continued, leaving Taikyū at 6 a.m. and arriving at Seoul at 10 o'clock the same evening. There are two breaks in the line in this day's journey, the bridges between I-in and Yokusen, and Heison and Shimanshin having been carried away by recent heavy rains. There are no first class carriages on the line between Yokusen and Heison, a two or three hours run, though the company sells a through first class ticket without giving notice of this.

It is well to carry a supply of food for the meals to be taken on the train. I found that the Company's advertised dining-cars provided nothing but a few tins of inferior preserved meats and tea, in the way of European food; and the hours when these scanty supplies could be obtained were very strange.

In my judgment the railway will not be in condition to make the run between Seoul and Fusan without interruption for several months to come. The Company surely owes this information to intending travellers who make inquiries at their offices, for, while the journey can be made with reasonable comfort if one is forewarned as to the conditions, it is both uncomfortable and annoying to undertake it in the belief that normal conditions prevail.

I am, Sir, yours faithfully, "ATTACHÉ."
Seoul, September 24th, 1905.

"KINJO MARU" RELIEF FUND.

To the Editor of the "JAPAN MAIL."

SIR,—I feel some hesitation in asking you to publish in your columns the long list of the subscriptions received by me for the above fund, which is now closed with a total of 3,370 yen; but it is only right that public acknowledgement should be made of the generous contributions received locally. It was my intention to personally distribute relief in the nearer localities—in Shikoku alone there are living some seventy-five families of the victims of the Kinjo Maru disaster. As I have, however, been furnished with complete details of all the families connected with victims of the disaster, I believe that relief will reach the needy ones in a practical way by money remittance sent direct through the authorities of the localities where they reside. Several urgent cases have already been attended to in that way. I fear that the names of several contributors, whose subscriptions have been received, have by an oversight been left out of the list; I apologise for the omissions, also for any other errors that may have occurred.

I am, Sir, yours faithfully,

HENRY BONAR.

Kobe, October 2nd, 1905.

THE "KINJO MARU" RELIEF FUND.

Total: Yen 3,370.00.

H. Bonar	50	Mrs. Aparcar	5
J. B. Renties	30	Mrs. Katsura	10
W. M. Royds	15	Officers S.S. Barotse	50
A. MacDonald	5	Whymark & Thomp-	25
E. H. Hunter	50	son	25
"Japan Chronicle"	10	Great Eastern Hotel	5
H. Lucas	20	W. H. B.	2
P. H. McKay	5	Capt. Bee (S. S.	5
R. Ross-Reid	5	Bengloe)	5
A. Madella	10	A. H. Groom	10
A. Drewell	10	Capt. Eden	10
J. Scrymgeour	5	W. A. Bradley	5
M. Scudamore	2	Capt. A. Murray	10
J. Adamson	10	C. P. R.	10
W. Sutherland	5	H. Pelteri	2
E. W. Noell	10	H. B. Blehr	5
G. M. Spence	2	A. German	2
W. Campbell	25	H. E. Cooke	1
A. R.	5	S. S. Skipworth	1
Samuel Samuel &	100	S. Fiedler	5
Co.	100	M. G. Shea	5
Pax Vohiscum	50	J. Baiss	5
E. D. Jenkins	50	G. Felkins	1
J. Hodgson	25	C. Cox	2
H. D. Tarver	25	A. D. Moody	1
F. S. Guiston	25	G. W. Ehrig	1
Alan V. Coules	15	J. W. Franklin	10
E. L. Fitch	25	Seth and Co.	25
J. W. Henderson	20	J. E. Raymond	1
R. J. Tillet	15	Oriental Hotel, Ltd.	25
O. Johnstone	15	G. A. Adam	5
T. Yatsu	25	H. Russell	5
A. H. Dare	25	Capt. Wright	5
J. MacLennan	25	W. H. Price	10
J. Ellerton	20	Geo. A. Derby	5
G. J. Penney	20	P. Fenwick	5
Matthew Brown	25	H. D. James	10
E. D. Sassoon & Co.	25	Capt. Kreiderer	10
C. N. Crosse	25	F. Devenish	10
Agents E. A. S.S. &	25	K. Sakai	5
Co., Ltd.	25	S. J. David and Co.	15
Agents for Ben Line	25	E. A. Hillel	1
of Steamers	25	Capt. Thompson	5
P. L. Spence	5	Beworthick	5
A. J. Cornes	25	Capt. Grimes, Seneca	5
Butterfield & Swire	50	"A Friend"	5
W. W. Campbell	10	T. W. Hellyer	50
T. Longmire	5	Dr. Thornicraft	25
F. E. White	10	H. A. Xavier	1
Louis Tartars	10	"Kobe Herald"	10
G. E. Wisen	3	J. Sutor	25
G. Hultgren	3	J. Lyons & Co.	10
W. Thompson	3	Owners of the Banza-	1,000
D. Thompson	3	long	1,000
S. C. Sebastiany	3	Captain, Officers and	3
A. Fraesgaard	3	Men of H.B.M.S.	3
W. H. Lambelle	2	Andromeda	130
Gan. Marchant	2	M. B.	10
E. Mollenson	5	A. H.	25
A. Georgeon	5	W. H. P.	25
H. Muius	5	E. Fabaney	50
A. Hawthorne	15	K. R. Dandawala	10
H. Fitzgerald	5	President of the Nip-	100
A. Gadd	3	pon Yusen Kaisha	100
T. Stotter	3	A. H. Seaver	5
H. H. Terry	2	G. D. Morgan	5
Chinese Friend	20	"A Friend"	5
Katsura Yensaburo	30	G. Sale	25
J. Sinclair	10	Dr. Fowler	10
H. J. Marshall	25	A. J. Buckley	1
J. Clifford-Wilkinson	25	Strome & Co.	5
A. W. Crombie	25	Capt. Steeves, Jason	5
Dodwell & Co., Ltd.	25	A. Parkhill	2
A. N. Hansell	5	Pilot	10
Geo. J. Melhuish	10	S. Saito	5
H. V. Henson	10	Arthur Fisher	5
E. des Vieux	2	J. Officer	1
Captain Kettle	10	S. S. Oro	5

"SNIPE ON TOAST."

(To the Editor of the "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—Will you kindly allow me to call the attention of the police authorities, or whoever is entrusted with the enforcement of the game laws in this country, to the fact that game birds have for several days past been offered for sale in Yokohama, although the game season does not open before the 15th inst. I am informed that prior to October last year the local hotel proprietors and restaurant keepers were cautioned by the police not to include game in their menus prior to the legal date; but I presume this caution has not been repeated, as it is currently reported that "Snipe on Toast" was one of the items offered to the guests at a recent complimentary tiffin given at one of the principal hotels in this town to some Japanese officials. I have also heard that a bundle of snipe was offered for sale to the proprietor of another hotel, but he, being a sportsman, became so angry that he threw the birds on to the kitchen fire and challenged the person who brought them to report the occurrence to the police. Needless to say this was not done.

If all hotel proprietors and heads of households would uphold the law and refuse to purchase game before the lawful date, the trapping and netting would soon cease, and sportsmen who have to pay a heavy license fee would have a chance at seeing a few birds when the season opens. All who are fond of birds will be glad to hear that an extensive movement is under weigh to bring the question of the exportation of bird skins before the Diet at its next meeting.

Yours faithfully,

FAIR PLAY.

THE INCARNATION.

[A Sermon delivered in the chapel of North Japan College, Sendai, on Sept. 24th, by Professor Borden P. Bowne, LL.D.]

For ye know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, that, though he was rich, yet for your sakes he became poor, that ye through his poverty might become rich. II. Corinthians viii: 9.

This statement of doctrine occurs incidentally in an appeal to the church at Corinth for a collection in behalf of the persecuted Christians of Judea. The Apostle first mentions the liberality of the Macedonian churches; but with his delicacy of feeling and his belief in freedom he declines to lay down any rule for their gifts. The Corinthian brethren must decide for themselves. Still, in making their decision, he would have them remember the grace of the Lord Jesus and his divine sacrifice for them. To the Christian, ancient or modern, there could be no higher appeal. It is the sufficient rule and argument for all collections in His name. But our concern is not with the collection, but with the doctrine this incidentally set forth.

This doctrine, you will notice, is not presented as something new, but is assumed as something known: "For ye know the grace," etc. Our Lord had existed before His incarnation. He had been rich in the ineffable divine fellowship of the Father with the Son, rich in the glory which he had with the Father before the world was. As Paul declares in another passage, our Lord had originally been in the form of God, yet had not thought equality with God a thing to be insisted on, but emptied Himself, taking the form of a bond-servant and becoming obedient unto death, even the death of the cross. And all this had been done for our sakes. For us He became poor. For us He laid aside the glory which He had with the Father, and became subject to human limitations and conditions. And all was done in order that by this infinite love and sacrifice we might be lifted up to God. No one who allows any authority whatever to Paul can read these passages and suppose that our Lord's existence began in the stable at Bethlehem.

The doctrine I wish to consider is the incarnation of the divine Son for the revelation of God and the blessing of men. This is the aspect of the many-sided text to which I call attention.

And, first, a word as to what the Incarnation means. We are often tempted to interpret the doctrine by the imagination, and to conceive of our Lord as specially enclosed within the limits of a human form. Of course difficulties at once arise as to how He could be thus limited and confined, and superficial thought hastens to conclude that the doctrine is absurd and the fact impossible. But this results from a mistaken appeal to the imagination, which has no jurisdiction in the matter. We ourselves are not in the body as something that contains us. Being in the body means simply and only having a type of experience which is physically conditioned. Being in this world means only having a certain type of experience with certain forms and laws. Passing out of this world would mean only passing from one type and condition of experience to another. And being a man in general means only existence under certain conditions and laws. And if any being should become subject to the conditions, laws and limitations of human life, that being would by that fact and so far forth become in the only intelligible sense of the phrase a human being. Hence by the incarnation of our Lord, we mean that He became subject to the conditions, laws and limitations of human life, and thus became in the truer sense of the word a man. In this sense He assumed and lived our life. This is intelligible, at least in its meaning, and this is enough. When we say more than this we soon lose ourselves in words and bad metaphysics.

If now we ask how this limitation is possible, the answer must be that we do not know; but just as little do we know how it is impossible. The progress of both scientific and philosophic reflection is making the problems of fundamental existence more and more mysterious, and, by revealing the limitations and relativity of our thought, is making thoughtful men more and more careful of pronouncing on what is possible or impossible apart from the indications of experience. The net result of theological study is that, while God in His absolute existence must always remain a fathomless mystery to us, we come nearest to the truth when we think of God as the Father, the Son, and the Spirit. This is the doctrine of the Trinity, a doctrine mysterious enough no doubt, yet after all the line of least resistance, both from the biblical and from the philosophical standpoint. There is no view that is not attended with great difficulty when we try to think it through. The conception of a community of persons in the unity of the divine existence is no worse off in this respect than the conception of a single and lonely personality without the eternal fellowship which moral life demands. Likewise, the net result of Christological thought is that Jesus was not merely the Son of Mary, but was also the Son of God, who took upon Him the laws and limitations of the human lot and thus became man in order that He might lift us to God. This is the doctrine of the Incarnation, which depends for its possibility on the other doctrine of the Trinity.

With this word on the meaning and the metaphysics of the doctrine, let us pass to consider its religious and practical significance. For it is not, as many have fancied, a barren curiosity of theological speculation if not a grievous affront to reason; it is rather the power of God unto salvation, and the central truth of Christianity. Of course in the limits of a sermon only hints and suggestions can be given.

And, first, the Incarnation contains the highest revelation of God. We have no call to consider what might be possible in worlds of which we know nothing; but in our human world God's highest manifestation of Himself is made in the incarnation of His Son. The revelation of power and intelligence is simple enough. A certain measure of goodness also may be shown in the beneficent arrangements of the natural world; but the highest revelation, the revelation of moral love in the highest degree, lies far beyond all these things and involves another order of manifestation altogether. Theology has said many things about the divine holiness, but it has been largely a negative and abstract thing. God has been conceived as governor, as promulgating and executing righteous law; and His holiness would seem to be exhausted in these things. The old philosophies hardly conceived God as ethical at all. They thought of Him as a kind of metaphysical perfection and were careful to free Him from much care or thought for His creatures as beneath His notice. God was made on the Epicurean model and sat apart.

"Where never falls the least white star of snow,
Where never lowest sound of thunder rolls,
Nor sigh or human sorrow mounts to mar
His sacred everlasting calm."

And this philosophy, which was little but a reflection of human vulgarity and selfishness, infected theology. Again, a great deal of our theology was written when men believed in the divine right and irresponsibility of kings, and this conception also crept into and corrupted theological thinking, so that God was conceived less as a truly moral being than as a magnified and irresponsible despot; while the thought of affirming that God is under any kind of moral obligation His creatures would have been shuddered at as absurd, if not blasphemous. The God of that theology could not have been imitated by man without infamy. But Christian thought has moved far away from this notion; and we have come to see that God is the most deeply obligated being in existence, and moral principles are as binding for Him as for us. In particular the attempt to conceive God as love has compelled the giving up of those absolutist notions of divine sovereignty which formed the foundation of theology a hundred years ago. We that are strong ought to bear the burdens of the weak, is seen to be a principle of universal application. A God of love must do works of love and all that love implies. Else love is not love.

We return now to the claim that the Incarnation is the highest revelation of God. If God had filled space and time with inanimate worlds, that would have revealed only power and skill. If He had filled the world with pleasure-giving contrivances, that would have revealed benevolence. If He had sent us prophets and teachers at no real cost to Himself, that too would be something; but it would not greatly stir our hearts toward God. Our love would go out to the prophets and teachers themselves, for the toil and the pain would fall on them. In all beneficence of this sort God would appear simply as a rich man who out of his abundance scatters bounty to the needy, but at no cost to himself. A certain gratitude would indeed be possible, and along this line God would for ever remain morally below the moral heroes of our race. Their gifts cost. They put themselves and their heart into their work. They attain to the morality of self-sacrifice, and this is infinitely beyond the morality of any giving that does not cost. And there must ever be a higher moral possibility until we reach the revelation of God in self-sacrifice, until God becomes the chief of burden-bearers and the leader of all in self-abnegation. Then the possibilities of grace are filled up. There is nothing beyond this. The heroic, the self-sacrificing God stands revealed, and God makes the highest revelation of Himself.

And this is made possible in the Incarnation. The Father loved the world and gave His Son for its redemption. The Son leaves the glory which He had with the Father and enters into the human lot and becomes obedient unto death that He may reveal the Father and reconcile men to God. There is great mystery here, but through it all we get the impression of boundless love issuing in mysterious self-sacrifice, a work of love at boundless cost and pain for the salvation of a perverse and sinful world.

Let me put the matter in another way. Suppose there were anywhere a human being who sat down to enjoy himself in the face of the world's misery and pain and sorrow, and looked indifferently on woe and suffering which he might relieve, yet did nothing. What should we think of him? And suppose we magnify the human being until he becomes very great and wise and powerful, would not his selfishness become all the more horrible? And suppose we enlarge the conception until the being becomes all-wise and all-powerful, what then? Plainly such a being would be the monster of the moral universe. His greatness in all other respects would but emphasize the awful wickedness of his selfishness; and every act of self-sacrificing love on the part of men would be his condemnation. Nor would it help the matter if we called this being God. We that are strong ought to bear the burdens of the weak; and the strongest ought to be the greatest burden-bearer. In the moral world he that is greatest of all should be servant of all. There is no exception from this rule, not even for God Himself. Of course it is not a matter of legal obligation but of moral goodness. The courts know nothing of this matter, but love understands it. And love with all that love implies, is the highest and supreme duty on a moral system. Moral goodness, whether in man or God, does not consist in doing things beyond requirement, but in meeting for love's sake love's highest and supreme requirement. In the highest sense there is no such thing possible as transcending requirement; but there is such a thing as divinely doing what divinely should be done.

I know something of the arguments whereby we keep up our faith in the divine goodness in the presence of the world's pain and sorrow and the manifold sinister aspects of existence. I do not disparage them; upon occasion I use them; but I always feel that at best they are only palliatives and leave the great depths of the problem untouched. There is only one argument that touches bottom and that is Paul's question: "He that spared not His own Son, but delivered Him up for us all, how shall He not with Him also freely give us all things?" We look on the woes of the world. We hear the whole creation, to use Paul's language, groaning and laboring in pain. We see a few good men vainly striving to help the world into life and light; and in our sense of the awful magnitude of the problem and of our inability to do much, we cry out: "Where's God? How can He bear this? Why doesn't He do something?" And there is but one answer that satisfies and that is the Incarnation and the Cross. God could not bear it. He has done something. He has done the utmost compatible with moral wisdom. He has entered into the fellowship of our suffering and misery and at infinite cost has taken the world upon His heart that He might raise it to Himself. This is the highest revelation. Of course the order of life is still mysterious. The mystery of pain is not yet solved. But in the presence of this revelation we say, with the Apostle: What shall separate us from the love of God? For He that spared not His own Son for our sakes must with Him give us all things; so that against all evils and distresses whatsoever we are more than conquerors through Him that hath loved us.

In such a world as ours the Incarnation contains the highest revelation of God. It is only a further specification of the same thought when I add that the Incarnation is the great source of the power of Christianity. In illustration of this claim consider the following facts: The chief value of the Christian revelation consists in its being a revelation of God. It is not primarily and essentially a series of verbal statements about God, but rather a description of what God has done and intends for men. And the things said and done get their chief significance from the one who said and did them. Apply this to Christ Himself. He went far beyond Moses and the prophets in His insight into divine things; and if He were only a man like them, this would be all. He would reveal God as they did, by word only; and God Himself would not come near enough for self-revelation. But assume that the Incarnation is true, and the meaning and power of the whole are infinitely changed. Now we see God in act, in self-revelation. The divine Son is living the ideal human life before men to reveal the heart of God, to show us God's thought of humanity, and the way God would have us live. The Divine Son is bearing the sins and sorrows of men, and is faithful unto death; that He may know the love and righteousness of God and redeem the world unto Himself. The Divine Son identifies Himself with the least of these His human brethren, so that whatever is done to them is done to Him. These things are the essence of Christianity; but what becomes of them apart from the Incarnation? It is one thing if only a Jewish peasant uttered these words; it is quite another if the speaker was the Lord of life and glory. It is one thing if He who hung on the cross was only a good Jew of Nazareth, meeting an undeserved and shameful death—such things have happened before and since; but it is quite another if He was the Son of God who might have summoned twelve legions of angels, but who for love's sake endured the cross and the contradiction of sinners against Himself. The power is gone if we are dealing with Jesus the carpenter's son; for the power depends not on the words and deeds themselves, but on Him who said and did them. The infinite poverty appears only as we contrast it with the infinite riches; and only in this contrast is the infinite love revealed. The life and character of Jesus acquire their supreme importance only through the Incarnation.

The boldness of Christian thought at this point is a constant amazement and astonishment. Having ventured the great thought that God is love, it draws the appropriate conclusion. What shall a God of love do but works of love? And where shall love be found so surely as there where it is most needed? And where is the Divine help so much needed as here in our human lives? And where so Christianity, with sublime audacity and sublime logic recalls God from that far-off throne where our vulgar thought had placed him and finds him present to every soul and to every need. In the exercise of his love God has sent us rain from heaven and fruitful seasons and daily bread. But this was not enough. He also sent us prophets and teachers to reveal his will. But this also was not enough. There was a still higher thought, and Christianity dared to think it. It was that God himself should come into humanity for his supreme self-manifestation and for the redemption of man. And when the way had been prepared, the Divine Son appears as the Divine Redeemer. There is nothing beyond this. The possibilities of grace are exhausted. God has made the highest moral revelation of himself. He is seen at the head of all those who love, and for love's sake bear burdens and sacrifice themselves.

A Divine person working for love's sake a divine work for man's redemption is the centre of the Christian faith and the source of its power. Drop it out of our teaching, and though the external form and facts may remain unchanged, the life is gone nevertheless. Men wonder that Christian faith should cling so pertinaciously to this mysterious doctrine—mysterious to speculation, but clear to love—but the reason is that it contains all that is distinctively Christian. The self-sacrificing love of God, and even the ethical perfection and moral grandeur of God, are all bound up in this doctrine. That which stirs men's hearts has always been the condescension, the grace of the Lord Jesus, the cross, that is the self-renunciation, of Christ. Herein is love, not that we loved God, but that he first loved us and sent his Son to be the propitiation for our sins. He loved us and gave himself for us. Now the revelation of love and righteousness is complete. And now not merely gratitude, but adoring love and absolute self-surrender, becomes possible on our part. Now intellect and conscience and heart and will alike can come to God and say, "Thy Kingdom come, Thy will be done." No wonder that Paul cries out: "God forbid that I should glory save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ." No wonder that Peter declares that the angels desire to look into this grace of God. For surely in earth or Heaven there is nothing great or Divine besides. Thus the power of God's revelation has its chief source in the Incarnation. And we may be perfectly sure that no lower conception of God will permanently command the minds and hearts of men. We should not have reached the conception ourselves, but now that it has been revealed to us we see that something of the kind is a moral necessity if we are to think the highest thought of God. And there is a peculiar dialectic in human thought whereby we are compelled to think of God as perfect or not at all. An imperfect God is none. As soon as a higher conception emerges we must adopt it into our thought of God, or see our faith in Him fade out until it vanishes altogether. A fairly good God we cannot abide. We can be satisfied with nothing less than the Supreme and Perfect. Hence it is that the Christian thought of God wins its way. It is the only one worthy of God or man. So far as speculation goes it is as thinkable as any other; and it is the only one that is able to inspire and perfect our human life. History is sufficient criticism of all others.

The disciple cannot dwell too much on this grace of God. It is our great source of hope and comfort. If God be any less than the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, I cannot see how He can have patience with us. Our best work is so poor, our wills so weak, our affections so wayward, that it is only as we consider God's infinite love revealed in the gift of His Son that we are encouraged to hope in Him. We look away from ourselves and all our work to the infinite grace above us in which alone we trust and by which alone we stand. Likewise this grace of the Lord Jesus is the perpetual motive and standard. No law, no mechanical measure, no fixed programme of rules, may be laid down for the Christian; that is mechanical religion. Neither may we prescribe for one another. Every one must be fully persuaded in his own mind and have his conscience unto himself. But let love rule. Let us not ask how little we may do, but how much. In all determinations of duty, of sacrifice, of devotion, let us remember the grace of the Lord Jesus that though He was rich yet for our sakes He became poor that we through His poverty might become rich. Finally, the Church must rely on the preaching of this grace for winning the hearts of men. The cross of Christ is what draws men. The cross of Christ is what reveals men to themselves. The sins and sinfulness of the world came out into clear consciousness only in the face of His cross. Constantine's legendary dream contains the truth for the Christian Church: In this sign thou shalt conquer.

And now we have considered the moral fitness and necessity and religious importance of the doctrine, what shall we say more, except to pray that God will give us some sense of the amazing grace of our Lord, and some sense of our obligation and some answering love on our part. Of course we shall never adequately appreciate the grace of the Lord Jesus; that is possible only to God himself.

"For none of the ransomed ever knew
How deep were the waters crossed,
Nor how dark was the night that the Lord passed through
Ere he found his sheep that was lost."

But even to our inadequate apprehension it is clear that our eyes are sadly holden and our hearts strangely cold in this matter. May God in his mercy enlarge and enlighten us, lest we be overwhelmed with shame when in the light of Heaven we first compare the grace of the Lord Jesus with the selfishness of our response.

TELEGRAMS.

(REUTER'S SPECIAL SERVICE.)

THE HUNGARIAN SITUATION.

London, September 28.

The refusal of the Emperor Francis Joseph to listen to any changes in the Hungarian Army unites all parties in Hungary against the Crown. The leaders of the coalition have issued a manifesto denouncing the Sovereign's attempt to cripple the nation's control of its own affairs.

Reuter further telegraphs 37 words correcting the 237 word summary of the Anglo-Japanese treaty which his Shanghai agent so kindly sent us on Thursday. Surely this is a case of sending coals to Newcastle with a vengeance.

CONTINENTAL VIEWS ON THE ANGLO-JAPANESE ALLIANCE.

London, September 28.

The French Press has received the Treaty favourably. The papers state there is no reason why the Alliance should cause ill-feeling between England and Russia. They consider the safety of Indo-China is strengthened by the Alliance, as Japan is a Power with which France is in excellent relations.

Article 4 is viewed with alarm at St.

Petersburg, where this article is considered to be open to the widest interpretation.

A few weighty German papers consider the Treaty unobjectionable, but the rest declare it is most menacing. They urge a Russo-German counter-alliance, whereof they believe the visit of M. de Witte is the precursor, and advocate the inclusion of France.

ANGLO-JAPANESE SHIPPING COMBINE.

The Standard states that an Anglo-Japanese shipping combine has been formed, with a capital of five millions sterling, with offices in London and Liverpool. The latter will be partly staffed by Japanese. The combine is buying forty of Japan's purchased transports and several huge cargo-boats.

THE DESTRUCTION OF THE "CHATHAM."

London, September 29.

The explosion carried out on the sunken steamer Chatham in the Suez Canal burst the vessel into pieces. There were three huge columns of water, sand and debris 2,000 feet high. The east bank was destroyed for a distance of 600 feet, but the left bank is undamaged. Dredgers and divers are already working and clearing away the debris. The railway and salt-water canal are intact.

THE MOROCCO AGREEMENT.

The French-German Morocco Agreement has been signed at Paris.

NELSON'S CENTENARY.

Later.

The Nelson centenary meeting will be held at the Albert Hall on the 21st October, when the British and Foreign Sailors' Society will hand to the Japanese representative a bust of Nelson, mounted on a pedestal made from oak from the Victory, for presentation to Admiral Togo.

BLOWING UP THE "CHATHAM."

London, October 1.

A further explosion is required to complete the demolition of the steamer Chatham in the Suez Canal. Traffic will probably be restored in ten days.

THE HUNGARIAN CRISIS.

Baron Fejervary has been reappointed Hungarian Premier. A later telegram says that in the Reichstag it was proposed that the respective parliaments should appoint deputations to meet in the spring to discuss revision of the laws of 1867 regulating the affairs of the two countries. The conviction was expressed that such revision would benefit both, as well as the Monarchy.

RUSSO GERMAN RAPPROCHEMENT.

Later.

There is much talk in Russian and German papers about a close rapprochement between the two empires as a rejoinder to the Anglo-Japanese Alliance, an attempt being made to connect Witte's meeting with Buelow at Baden-Baden with a plan to reconstitute the balance of power.

AUSTRO-HUNGARIAN POLITICS.

The proprietary utterances of the Austrian Premier and other influences are contributing to appeal to more moderate Hungarians and to separate them from the Coalition.

SPEEDY RESUMPTION OF CANAL TRAFFIC.

Traffic will be resumed by all ships through the Canal about the 3rd instant.

THE KAISER AND M. WITTE.

London, October 2.

The Kaiser has personally decorated M. Witte with the Grand Cross of the Red Eagle.

THE HUNGARIAN CRISIS.

The Hungarian Coalition are arranging a grand torch-light procession on the 3rd instant past the Kossuth Club. The Socialists are arranging a simultaneous counter demonstration. The police are taking extensive precautions to prevent a fight.

THE SUGGESTED RUSSO-GERMAN ALLIANCE.

The suggestion of a Russo-German Alliance is received coolly in Russia. Many prominent papers, including the Novosti and the Russ, advocate an understanding with England in preference to an alliance with Germany, which would involve Russia in fresh difficulties.

LOSS OF THE "SULLY."

London, October 3.

The French cruiser Sully, which went ashore last February in the Bay of Tongking, has broken in two. She cost a million sterling.

(Her cost is given by Brassey as £954,536.—Ed. J. M.)

STORM DEVASTATES AMERICAN COASTS.

A terrific storm has visited the coasts of the Gulf of Mexico, devastating large areas of cotton crop.

THE SUEZ CANAL CONGESTION.

Later.

The mails of thirty ships have been sent from Suez to Port Said by tugs.

PRESIDENTS RECEPTION IN WASHINGTON.

President Roosevelt has returned to Washington for the first time since the peace. He was greeted by 100,000 people, the demonstration being unequalled since the time of President Lincoln.

TUBERCULOSIS CONGRESS.

President Loubet has opened in Paris a most important congress on tuberculosis.

RUSSIA AND TIBET.

London, October 3.

Kosloff, a Russian General Staff officer, has returned to St. Petersburg from Tibet, having visited Urga and seen the Dalai Lama, whose sole aim, he says, is to secure the independence of Tibet and remove British influence.

GERMAN TRADE IN THE FAR EAST.

A glowing account of the development of German trade in the Far East has been published in Berlin. The report emphasizes the successful competition of German with British shipping and declares that the Germans are ousting the British even at Hongkong and Singapore and in the Yangtze Valley.

CHINESE RAIDERS IN THE RAND.

London, October 4.

Repeated night attacks by wandering bands of Chinese miners against isolated houses in the Rand are causing grave uneasiness.

RUSSIAN NATIONAL ASSEMBLY.

Air Ukase has been issued ordering immediate preparation of the regulations for the election of a National Assembly.

BARON KOMURA.

Baron Komura and Mr. Sato sailed from Vancouver by the Empress of India.

INDUSTRIAL DEVELOPMENT IN THE FAR EAST.

Subscriptions are invited for one million sterling of debentures for the Japanese and Eastern Corporation formed in London to invest capital in Japan and the Far East in order to assist industrial development.

GERMANY AND MOROCCO.

London, October 5.

Prince Buelow, interviewed by a Paris newspaper, says that German action in Morocco is purely unaggressive and defensive. Germany could not afford to see Morocco become a second Tunis. She advocates the abandonment of the idea that France and Germany are traditional enemies. Both Governments desire to increase the confidence between the two nations. He affirms that the existence of the Russo-German friendship must please France, who now knows that her ally has one friend more.

NEW RUSSIAN LOAN.

Later.

It is reported that Paris bankers are negotiating the simultaneous issue in France, Germany, Great Britain and America of a Russian 4 per cent. loan of seventy million sterling at about 90. The loan will probably be issued at the end of the month.

AMERICA AND THE CHINESE.

The United States Cabinet has discussed the Chinese boycott of American goods and the Chinese complaint against the American Exclusion Laws. It has been practically decided that changes must be introduced in the present regulations.

THE SUEZ CANAL.

Twenty-seven ships at Port Said are awaiting the re-opening of traffic.

(Received by the Naval Department.)

THE BRITISH SQUADRON.

The British naval squadron left Weihaiwei on the 2nd, and will arrive at Kobe on the 5th, remaining there two days, so that their arrival in Yokohama will be about the 9th. Commander Funakoshi has been sent to Kobe to meet the squadron.

(RECEIVED AT THE FOREIGN OFFICE.)

BARON KOMURA.

Baron Komura's health is greatly improved. He was to leave Ottawa on the 27th inst.

FOREIGN PRESS ON THE ALLIANCE.

The Vossische Zeitung, editorially traversing Sir Charles Dilke's statement that the Anglo-Japanese Alliance will excite the feeling of the German nation, argues as follows:—"There is no cause why we should feel alarmed about the present new Agreement, for we have not acquired any interests in Shantung such that their realization will be rendered difficult or impossible by the Anglo-Japanese Alliance. What is cardinal to us in Shantung is our economic interest only, and since the Agreement guarantees equal rights for all Powers, there is no reason why it should impair our position in Shantung. The interests of our country, like those of England, do not require any special confirmation; the more so that the Anglo-German Convention still remains valid which was concluded on the 16th of October, 1900, with the object of preserving the interests and treaty rights of each of the two countries in China. We see no reason why the forming of this compact between Japan and England should inspire us with any umbrage."

The other principal German papers also take the view that the Agreement is not directed against Germany, but the Berlin Tageblatt says:—"The great conventional importance of the new Agreement is like that of the Triple Alliance or the Dual Alliance, and whereas the two alliances on the European continent are now more or less in their decline, the Anglo-Japanese Alliance is plainly flourishing. It has correspondingly great force, and the limits to which its influence extends are not to be classed with those of the former Alliance. The Agreement is directed against Russia, but at the same time it is directed against Germany, and to deny the fact would be an error. For there is no assurance whether the Agreement guarantees Germany's territorial rights in China, and consequently the blow that it gives to the interests of the European Powers in China is like that of the Anglo-French entente in Morocco, only that in importance and magnitude of aim the two can not be spoken of simultaneously. It is a natural and necessary consequence that the Great States whose Asiatic interests are thus trespassed upon should unite to restore the balance as against this agreement."

Up to the present the French newspapers are unanimous in their approval of the Anglo-Japanese Agreement. The Temps says that a special change has been effected in the relations between Japan and England, and that even for Russia's sake the agreement is advantageous. The Debats takes the same view, and adds that the agreement is a guarantee of France's territorial rights in the Far East. Other French journals almost without exception adopt a similar tone.

The London newspapers are almost unanimous in their applause of the agreement. In its issue of September 27th The Times says:—"This agreement is altogether in accordance with our country's wishes and expectations; and its basis is the proper and strong policy of the previous compact, namely, that the contracting Powers mutually guarantee the interests they have in common. The spirit of the Agreement is conservative and pacific. It menaces no country nor does injury to any proper sentiment. There can be no hesitation in writing down in capital letters that to secure peace is its genuine aim. That its provisions are of high importance admits of no doubt, but if our country has taken a course not in accordance with its traditional policy, we may assert that it has been done after the greatest reflection and that it is in accordance with the fundamental principles of statesmanship." The Times concludes its argument thus:—"The Anglo-Japanese Alliance does not in the slightest degree diminish the necessity under which our country lies to protect its own rights. This Empire would injure its prestige if it attempted to shift any part of its burdens to other shoulders, and would be incurring danger. That is not the object of the Anglo-Japanese Agreement nor could it be effected by any alliance. What we hope and are persuaded is that the present Agreement will do away with the necessity of drawing the sword for several years to come. But we recognise it to be a duty which must not be neglected, a duty to ourselves and to our ally, to keep our sword sharp and to neglect no preparations for standing forth should occasion arise."

The arguments of the Standard, the Daily Telegraph and Morning Post are identical in essentials though differing in details from that of The Times. The Daily Telegraph winds up its article by saying:—"Our plain duty towards our strong ally is to be ourselves strong."

The Daily Mail regards the conclusion of the Agreement as an excellent thing, and explains that it meets with applause and welcome from the whole nation.

The Tageblatt publishes the gist of the Novoye Vremya's arguments about the new Anglo-Japanese agreement, as telegraphed from St. Petersburg:—"The Anglo-Japanese agreement will provoke an extreme feeling among the countries that have interests in Asia. But that feeling will disappear when a new coalition is formed to confront the Anglo-Japanese Alliance. The question that must be decided in the near future is at what time and under the leadership of what country this coalition is to be effected. If the Anglo-Japanese Alliance guarantees peace, the new alliance intended to face it will be a still greater guarantee of peace. We imagine that this view is held in London also. We trust that by the formation of a new coalition satisfaction will be given to the British and Japanese Governments, who truly and sincerely unite for pacific objects."

The Birshemyia Wedomosti says that the Anglo-Japanese Agreement will soon place the whole of Asia under the guidance of the two allies.

Mr. Witte has had the rank of Count conferred on him.

The Vienna journals agree that the new Anglo-Japanese Alliance will preserve the peace of the Far East. The Fremdenblatt says that the treaty is a success for British diplomacy, and is at the same time an advantage for Japan. Thus in the event of any one strong State becoming paramount on land and on sea, or in the event of a number of strong states interfering with the balance of power, and in the event of Japan being unable to look on unconcernedly, this alliance will guarantee the status quo on the north-east. In return for such an advantage Japan has undertaken the responsibility of guarding India. It is not within the bounds of conjecture that such an occasion will ever arise, but the reflex influence of this alliance will be clear before long. The world remembers how France and Russia replied to the first Anglo-Japanese alliance by a special manifesto.

The Neue Freie Presse says that the new agreement is a result of the Russo-Japanese war and that it is easy to see that the alliance is directed against Russia. The fact that India has been added to the compact is a clear proof. Thus it may be said that the benefit of the war has accrued first to England. As for its efficacy to preserve the peace of the Far East the new treaty may be said to surpass the old, but whether the extension of Japan's political influence to Central Asia will finally make for the preservation of peace, is not yet clear. People who hold an opposite view of the question, and who consider that England's policy is habitually egoistic, may have their want of confidence in her strengthened. At all events the warning that the treaty conveys to Russia to keep the peace will be far more efficacious than any agreement come to at the approaching peace conference.

Another journal also says that Russia is the objective of the new treaty, and that it will at least have the result of strengthening the relations between Germany and Russia against their united enemies.

The New York Tribune says that Japan and England have concluded this new treaty for a special purpose. That purpose is in the first place to maintain the peace of East Asia. It is certain that no country whatever can object to that. After witnessing a breach of the peace which involved great calamities, Russia who is now rejoicing in the re-establishment of tranquillity, and America who took the lead in proposing its re-establishment, can not of course have any objection to the Alliance neither can any of the countries that have signified their assent to another opening of the Hague Peace Tribunal. The second object of the agreement is to maintain the integrity of China and the policy of the open door. With regard to this we can not imagine that any Power whatever will depart from the position of approval which each avowed openly at the instance of America several years ago. Nor do we think that any Power whatever, because it wishes to aggress in China, or because it desires not to allow other States to enjoy equality of opportunities in the Chinese markets, will declare itself opposed to the Alliance. The third and last object is to preserve the status quo with regard to the territories and the political interests of the two contracting States. It is undoubtedly right and proper that the two Powers, desiring to prevent any disturbance of their dominions, should enter into a compact for that purpose. The Tribune then points out that the most thorough care has been exercised to eliminate from the document anything capable of being interpreted as a sense aggressive or injurious to other Powers, and winds up its argument thus:—"We fully expect that this Alliance will be acclaimed by the whole world. It is not the custom of the United States to contract such alliances, but we can not but feel pleased that our two neighbours have concluded an agreement so calculated to promote the purposes of peace, of international justice and of general civilization."

The New York Times says that the Anglo-Japanese agreement was unquestionably concluded for the purpose of insuring peace, but that there is great reason to fear lest it should bring about war. For whether from the point of view of human nature, or from that of political systems or national sentiment, it is impossible that two Powers, concluding an agreement which enables them to obtain control of one half of the biggest continent in the world, should at the same time succeed in not hurting the feelings of other Powers or obstructing their policy and designs. It amounts to this that the two allies regard as within their political sphere the whole of the Asiatic continent south of a straight line drawn from the Sea of Japan to the Caspian, and have issued orders for the erection of a notice warning off all poachers. This notice will be respected and tolerated by the world so far as regards Korea and India, for India is part of England's dominions, and Japan's right of supervision in Korea has now obtained recognition by the peace treaty. But it is not one Power only that by stretching out its hand towards China's dominions or fixing its eyes on them, has betrayed its ambition, and although the new defensive alliance will restrain the territorial lust of the Powers, there is no doubt that it can not completely eradicate it.

The New York Times then proceeds to discuss the interests of the United States:—"Hereafter the Japanese will have to show us how they preserve the open door. If Japan apply herself to peaceful enterprises with the same earnestness, industry and success that she showed in her conflict with Russia, and if she pushes her industry and commerce, it is not American goods that will enter the door opened in China and Korea but for the most part Japanese goods."

The same journal discusses the position of Germany at Kiaochow:—"We find great difficulty in answering the question whether Germany will be able to continue making Kiaochow Bay a base, and in accordance with the policy of equal opportunities for all countries in China, will be able at the same time to avoid collision with this Agreement, which guarantees the independence and integrity of China. * * * We shall probably see a proposal for an alliance between Germany and Russia, or between Germany, Russia and France as a set-off to the Anglo-Japanese alliance, and the Powers that retain a lust for territory will seek some means of achieving their purpose even though they encounter the necessity of having to break the united strength of Japan and England."

The Novoye Vremya says:—"The compact just concluded has for object to secure the preëminent position of Japan and England on the continent of Asia. It is therefore opposed to any countries having interests on that continent or about to have interests there. Hence it is opposed to Russia. The balance of power has not merely been disturbed by this alliance but may be said to have been actually overthrown. The compact is explained as not hostile to any third Power, especially Russia, nor does its text contain any expression of hostility, but in spirit it gives a heavy blow and seeks to dominate any State having interests in Asia. The only way to correct this domination is to oppose to it a political combination. What steps towards that end should be taken, what countries should compose the alliance, what form it will assume—these are questions of the near future. If the Anglo-Japanese Alliance really promotes peace, the new alliance to which it gives rise will still further promote peace. If England and Japan really desire peace in Asia, they should welcome this new alliance."

The Russ, which has of late advocated an Anglo-Russian rapprochement says:—"This Anglo-Japanese alliance is a new political work. Compared with the former alliance the limits of its applicability are different and it embodies great danger for Powers having interests in the Far East. Nevertheless Russia desires peace alike in the Far East, in Central Asia and in the Near East."

The Slava, reputed to be an official organ, takes the same view as the Berlin Tageblatt. It says also:—"This new compact is opposed to Russia and to all the civilized States of Europe. It means the extension of the Monroe Doctrine to the whole of Asia, and it thus gives a heavy blow to the countries of Europe." The same journal attacks England's procedure in the matter, and accuses the Japanese Plenipotentiaries of having had cognisance of the alliance during the Portsmouth Conference.

LATEST SHIPPING.

ARRIVALS.

Pera, British steamer, 4,916, A. L. Valentini, 29th Sept.—London via ports Kobe 28th Sept., Mails and General.—P. & O. S. N. Co.
Esikdale, British steamer, 1,926, G. W. Duff, 29th Sept.—Rangoon, Rice.—Dodwell & Co., Ltd.
Selan, Norwegian steamer, 865, E. Fingalsen, 29th Sept.—Newchwang, General.—Yamagata-ya.
Chenani, British steamer, 1,350, H. E. Laver, 30th Sept.—Shanghai via ports, Mails and General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.
Lyra, American steamer, 3,516, G. V. Williams, 30th Sept.—Hongkong via ports, and Kobe, 28th Sept., Mails and General.—Dodwell & Co., Ltd.

Caledonian, French steamer, 2,100, Gregory, 30th Sept.—Marseilles via ports, and Kobe 29th Sept., Mails and General.—M. M. S. S. Co.
America Maru, Japanese steamer, 3,460, P. H. Going, 30th Sept.—Kobe, 29th Sept., Mails and General.—Toyo Kisen Kaisha.
Belgian King, British steamer, 2,153, J. Hayton, 30th Sept.—Yokkaichi, 29th Sept., General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.
Pocasset, British steamer, 1,726, W. N. James, 30th Sept.—Kobe, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.
Macduff, British steamer, 1,882, John B. Muir, 30th Sept.—Kobe, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.
Ella, Norwegian steamer, 912, Weibust, 1st Oct.—Wakamatsu, Coal.—Drabble & Co.
Kilburn, British steamer, 2,111, E. Le Templeir, 1st Oct.—Otaru via ports, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.
Sikh, British steamer, 3,216, J. Rowley, 1st Oct.—Middlesbrough and Liverpool via ports, and Kobe, 30th Sept., General.—Dodwell & Co., Ltd.
Hydra, British steamer, 2,625, Kent, 2nd Oct.—Samaring, Java, Sugar.—Ed. L. van Nierop & Co.
Woodford, British steamer, 1,860, Jas. Seddon, 2nd Oct.—Muroan, Coal.—Hokkaido Tanko Kaisha.
Ragnar, Norwegian steamer, 1,220, H. G. Nielsen, 2nd Oct.—Kobe, Ballast.—Drabble & Co.
Diomed, British steamer, 3,005, J. Young, 2nd Oct.—Glasgow and Liverpool via ports, and Kobe, 1st Oct., General.—Butterfield & Swire.
Kanjo Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,041, M. Honda, 2nd Oct.—Yokkaichi, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.
Ganges, British steamer, 2,721, W. Sihbald, 2nd Oct.—Kobe, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.
Andalusia, German steamer, 3,477, Filler, 3rd Oct.—Hamburg via ports, and Shanghai, 28th Sept., General.—C. Illies & Co.
Chungtu, British steamer, 1,459, J. M. D. Howie, 3rd Oct.—Sydney via ports, and Hongkong, 26th Sept., Mails and General.—Butterfield & Swire.
Samara, British steamer, 1,790, W. Lewis, 3rd Oct.—Mojji, Coal.—Japanese.
J. B. Ang Kessler, Dutch tank steamer, 3,197, Van Der Biesen, 3rd Oct.—Singapore via Taketojo, Oil.—Samuel Samuel & Co.
Kumamoto Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,237, T. Suga, 3rd Oct.—Ujina, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.
Sorobra, British steamer, 3,896, W. R. F. Hickey, 4th Oct.—London via ports, and Kobe, 2nd Oct., Mails and General.—P. & O. S. N. Co.
Wakanoura Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,556, T. Sakai, 4th Oct.—Kobe, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.
Minnesota, American steamer, 13,323, J. H. Rinder, 4th Oct.—Hongkong via ports, and Kobe, 3rd Oct., Mails and General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.
Opland, Norwegian steamer, 843, T. W. Schlyoter, 4th Oct.—Kobe, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.
Decima, German steamer, 794, H. E. Schelker, 4th Oct.—Newchwang, General.—Yamagata-ya.
Ohio II, American steamer, 755, Gundersen, 4th Oct.—Yokosuka, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.
Victoria, Swedish steamer, 989, J. Hellberg, 4th Oct.—Kobe, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.
Silesia, Austrian steamer, 3,340, L. de Stabile, 5th Oct.—Trieste via ports, Mails and General.—Heller Bros.
Prinz Waldemar, German steamer, 1,737, C. Wolmas, 5th Oct.—Sydney via ports, and Hongkong, 28th Sept., Mails and General.—H. Ahrens & Co., Nachf.
Den of Mains, British steamer, 2,971, Singer, 5th Oct.—Middlesbrough via ports, and Kobe, 3rd Oct., General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.
Hounslow, British steamer, 1,860, H. Adhead, 5th Oct.—Otaru, General.—Taninichi & Co.
Richmond, British steamer, 2,059, F. T. Nicolle, 5th Oct.—Muroan, Coal.—Hokkaido Tanko Kaisha.
Dakota, American steamer, 13,305, E. Francke, 5th Oct.—Seattle, Wash., 20th Sept., Mails and General.—G. N. S. S. Co.

DEPARTURES.

Empress of Japan, British steamer, 3,003, H. Pybus, 29th Sept.—Vancouver, B.C., Mails and General.—C. P. R. Co.
Agamemnon, British steamer, 4,462, Robert Day, 29th Sept.—Marseilles and Liverpool via ports, General.—Butterfield & Swire.
Benverlich, British steamer, 2,164, W. Thomson, 29th Sept.—Shanghai via ports, Mails and General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.
Braemar, British steamer, 2,316, S. L. Saxby, 30th Sept.—Otaru via ports, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.
Breconskire, British steamer, 2,323, G. E. Elliott, 30th Sept.—Kobe, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.
Bayern, German steamer, 3,158, H. Formes, 30th Sept.—Dremen and Hamburg via ports, Mails and General.—H. Ahrens & Co., Nachf.

Zornaster, British steamer, 2,384. John Ewan, 30th Sept.—Kobe, Phosphate Rock.—Cormes & Co.
